> I do wish we could learn the truth about Russia; some say one thing about it and others say differently; we get one report and it is contradicted; we get another report and it is contradicted; maybe some day we will get the truth.

To my mind it was apparent where his sympathies were.

A man named Martens has been in this country for many months representing this horrible government of Russia. His professed objects are to open negotiations with our Government, to create sympathy in this country for the Russian Soviet Government, to carry on propaganda for it. His suspected object, of which there is much evidence, is to scatter in this country the poisonous seeds of sedition and disloyalty, to raise all sorts of trouble, and to cause an uprising in this country. By order of the United States Senate his activities were recently investigated by a subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations.

At the hearing, which was conducted by the subcommittee in the course of its investigation, Martens testified or, more properly speaking, I would say he squirmed and adroitly endeavored to keep from giving any testimony. Apparently it was hard for the subcommittee to elicit much from him. He did, however, make many damaging admissions. He admitted that he was in close touch with and had attended and addressed secret meetings of the Communist Party of this country, known to be an anarchistic organization, having for its object the overthrow of this Government. There is plenty of evidence that Martens is and has been conducting extensive bolshevistic propaganda in this country, plotting and scheming with those who desire the overthrow of this Government, associating with anarchists, and generally scattering in this country seeds of sedition, disloyalty, and bolshevism.

I consider it an outrage that Martens has been allowed to remain in this country as long as he has. His presence here is an act of effrontery, an insult to the people of this country. In my opinion, he should have been long ago deported, and I think he should now be deported without delay or ado. If I had my way he would be given punishment much more severe than deportation. I think the least he merits is imprisonment at hard labor for life. Such creatures should be made to work instead of being allowed to scatter broadcast insidious poison. The Department of Justice started deportation proceedings against him, but I understand they are held up by the Department of Labor, and that meantime Martens has been by the last-named department released on his own recognizance.

I am not satisfied with the handling of the matter by the Department of Labor, but know of no remedy. I think it flagrant. I do not believe, however, Martens will be deported. I think the Department of Labor will permit him to remain here and brazenly continue his nefarious work. The despots of Russia are doing their best to spread their vile system of anarchy to the entire world. They boast of it. Their minions have invaded this fair country and their seed sown here is bearing fruit.

In the last few months 3,000 arrests of radical Reds, agitators, and undesirable aliens have been made by agents of the Department of Justice, with a view to their deportation. I have no doubt all of them are highly undesirable and are guilty of disloyal activities. I have no doubt this country would be better off if all of them were deported to the countries from which they came or tied in bags and dumped into the middle of the ocean. The Department of Justice claims to have adequate evidence against all of them and claims all of them are just subjects of deportation. A recent statement issued by the Department of Labor, which by an anomalous arrangement of law is given the power of passing judgment in deportation cases, shows that of the 3,000 persons arrested only 390 have been ordered deported, while 933 have been dismissed. The remainder doubtless are out on bail or have had their cases otherwise disposed of without any penalty. That less than 400 of 3,000 have been ordered deported, after months of investigation and resistance of the processes of the law, it seems to me is an unsatisfactory condition of affairs. That the Department of Justice would cause to be arrested twenty-six hundred people in a few months, with a view to their deportation, with no adequate evidence against them, is to me unbelievable. The Department of Justice gets the evidence before making arrests. There appears to be in the Department of Labor a marked reluctance to deport these disturbers of the Government which I think lamentable and alarming.

The activities of those who would undermine and overturn our Government are undoubtedly increasing. They appear to go on with little check or hindrance. In my opinion the country is honeycombed underneath the surface with the vicious activities of hydraheaded monsters and cunning plotters, who are scattering the poison of their malignant virus and working day and night for the overthrow of the best Government which the world has ever seen, where more liberty is given to the masses, more freedom to its citizens, more rights to its workingmen, more privileges to the whole populace than in any other Government under the sun. In my opinion this country is reeking and seething with the machinations of disloyalty, sedition, and bolshevism. Their proponents are becoming bold. They have defenders and sympathizers in high places.

What is the remedy? The Attorney General of the United States says there is not sufficient law to combat these conditions, to prevent their growth, to punish such deadly malefactors. He says the country is in need of more efficient and drastic laws to enable the Government to fight its insidious foes and preserve its safety. Very well; I say, then, let us enact more law. Let us have laws that are adequate and sufficiently drastic. Self-preservation is the first law of nature as applied to nations as well as individuals. Months ago the Senate passed a bill known as the Sterling sedition bill, to give the officials of the Government more power in suppressing and punishing sedition and disloyality, intended to save us from those in our midst who are, with safety to themselves, "boring from within." The House of Representatives has not yet passed that bill nor any other of its kind. I hope it may yet do so, but time is fleeting and the danger grows. What the Congress of the United States needs is some of the backbone evinced by the New York Legislature when it expelled from its membership five men who had been proven to the satisfaction of the legislature disloyal to their country. I honor the New York Legislature for its brave and patriotic act.

There is very much opposition to the enactment by Congress of the additional legislation upon this subject asked for by the Attorney General of the United States. It is opposed from many quarters. Some college professors, journalists, theorists, and exponents of the liberty which is license to say or do anything short of outright treason oppose it. High-brow Socialists and parlor Bolshevists oppose it. Some German-Americans and other hyphenated Americans oppose it. Colonies and bodies of foreign-born voters oppose it.

Unfortunately the leaders of organized labor generally oppose it. Why they should do so is beyond my comprehension. The proposed legislation is only aimed at those who advocate the overthrow of our Government by violence or force. It is not intended to suppress the opinions of peaceful, law-abiding citizens, be they workingmen or anybody else. Nevertheless Samuel Gompers has said this proposed legislation must not be enacted, nor anything like it, and I believe that probably ends it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DIAL in the chair). Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. MYERS. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Is the Senator aware of the fact that the Attorney General, before the House committee, opposed the bill which the Senate passed?

Mr. MYERS. I understand that the Attorney General opposed the Sterling sedition bill and favored the Davey sedition bill introduced in the House by Representative DAVEY, of Ohio. I understand the Attorney General says he thinks some of the provisions of the Sterling bill are rather too drastic and are objectionable, but that the Davey bill will furnish all the instrumentality of law which he needs to enforce the law in the matters upon which I have been speaking.

But the House has not passed either bill, and I do not believe it will pass either one, or any like bill on the subject. I would be satisfied with either the Davey bill or the Sterling bill. I want some law on the subject which will give the Attorney General the power which he says is needed, and I am not particular who is the author of it, nor what it is, so long as it betters the deplorable condition in which we now find ourselves.

It is said by some who oppose the proposed legislation that it would be a blow at liberty; that it would invade the right of free speech and the right of freedom of the press. I believe in liberty and in freedom of speech and press, but I do not believe in that liberty or that freedom of speech or press which is license to advocate the overthrow by force or violence, plotting or scheming, of the best and freest Government ever established by man.

However, with this combined class opposition, with the very pronounced opposition of leaders of organized labor, and with the great masses of the American people lethargic and indifferent, I regard it exceedingly doubtful if the Attorney General of the United States will be given the power and the legislation which he says is necessary to protect this Government from its enemies within. The Congress of the United States is too subservient to the decrees of organized labor. Some people say we should placate these enemies of our Government, these disturbers of the peace, these radical agitators, and reds by giving them what they want and removing the cause of their unrest. Some people in high places advocate this. Well, that is one way of removing unrest. Of course, if a man is going to rob a bank you can keep him from robbing it by giving him all the money there is in the bank. That would temporarily remove the unrest of the would-be robber, but it would not give a very restful feeling to the depositors and stockholders of the bank. If a man wants possession of my house and home and threatens to burn it down and kill me unless he gets it, I can placate him by moving out and letting him move in. I suppose that would temporarily remove his unrest, but it would be paying a pretty high price for the cure. It would be pretty hard on me and my family. There has been too much yielding to the demands of this element. It was largely instrumental in procuring commutation of the death sentence of Tom Mooney, one of its number.

The truth is, for Bolshevism there is neither cause nor justification. It can not be remedied by human agencies. Bolshevism is simply hell in the hearts of men and women; it is hell in the hearts of people who are natural criminals. It can not be removed from their hearts by human means. The only effective eradicator of the seeds of Bolshevism in the hearts of people there can be is by act of God. What this country needs and what the world needs more than anything else is a great revival of religion. If men and women everywhere had in their hearts the spirit of the Savior of mankind, there would be no Bolshevism.

That, though, can not be brought about by legislation. However, legislation can, by gripping the situation and providing drastic laws for prevention and punishment, deter people from acts of Bolshevism, disloyalty, and sedition, and from teaching their vile doctrines, or punish them after committing such acts or teaching such doctrines, and thereby keep within the bounds of safety this criminal spirit. Many people are kept good only through fear of the law. Many a man would commit acts of robbery or other lawlessness if not deterred by fear of punishment at the hands of the law. Nobody but God can take out of a wicked man's heart the criminal instinct, but the law can prevent him from exercising it, or, as a deterrent to others, punish him if he does exercise it.

Congress should take hold of this situation firmly, without fear or favor. It can remedy it. The conditions of which I speak will continue and will increase unless our Government takes hold of them with a firm hand and adopts stern repressive measures for its own protection, especially the legislative branch of the Government. We whipped the redskins to obtain possession of this country, we whipped the Red Coats to achieve its independence, and we must not let the red-hearted and red-handed overthrow it. "Down the reds" has been our practice. It should now be our motto. These red malefactors and enemies of good government should be made to feel the stripes and see the stars—the stripes and stars of the glorious American flag.

Some of these insidious foes have wormed their way into the ranks of organized labor and are attempting to use labor as a means to their nefarious ends. Some of them are "boring from within" the ranks of organized labor. Undoubtedly some of them who profess to be friends of labor are continually endeavoring to foment strikes and all manner of industrial disturbances. They are using every specious pretext to mislead and prey upon the minds of workingmen. They are mingling among factory hands, miners, smelter men, and other industrial workers and poisoning their minds. They are doing everything they can to bring about continual increases of wages, shorter hours of labor, and curtailment of production, in the hope that that course may bring about industrial ruin and enable them to seize the industries of the country. Their object undoubtedly is to place on industry greater burdens than it can bear and cause a breakdown of industry, with resultant chaos, hoping at the time of such a crisis to seize the industries of the country and ultimately the Government. Seeds of dissatisfaction are continually sown among workingmen. Strikes, with or without cause, are encouraged.

According to the old common law of England, there was a criminal punishment known as peine et forte. It consisted of putting the victim in prison and placing him on his back, upon a stone floor, and then putting upon his breast, by means of iron or stones, all the weight he could bear and a little more, and keeping it there. The aim of some radical agitators, some of the red element, seems to be to put upon industry and upon the people of the country all the weight that can be borne and a little more, in hope of bringing about chaos and anarchy and thereby an opportunity to seize everything. Designing men seem to have spread everywhere the spirit of demand for exorbitant wages. I am told that last fall farmers in Virginia had to pay negro men $12 a day to cut corn. A friend of mine, who is a farmer in Missouri, recently told me that last summer he had to pay boys $6.50 a day to pile bundles of wheat for shocking. Recently I read an article in a newspaper which stated that two coal miners in Pennsylvania, in a workday of eight hours, had each earned $23.40. In my State farm laborers are getting $100 a month and board. Most farmers can not afford to pay it and are putting in only such crops as they can attend to without hired help, resulting in greatly decreased acreage.

This sort of thing can not go on without disaster. The farm production of the country will be greatly curtailed this year. This will inevitably increase still further the already high cost of living. Every strike curtails production some and increases a little the high cost of living. Every day workers are out on a strike helps to curtail production and increase the high cost of living. I know the greatly inflated condition of our currency and credits, which the Government appears to be making no effort to reduce, has much to do with the high cost of living and with our industrial unrest, and is a just cause of complaint, but the prevailing orgy of strikes and curtailment of production only makes matters worse, and, I think, is encouraged by some designing agitators for the purpose of making matters worse.

I know that many well-meaning and law-abiding workingmen are demanding increases of wages. Perhaps some of them should have some increase, when overly high wages paid to others are considered, but I believe that some of the demands, under cover, are instigated by designing men who are taking advantage of conditions and who have ulterior purposes, not good for workingmen, which would destroy government and society and benefit none save criminals such as now rule Russia. The avowed object of these men is to foment strike after strike until there is the one big union and the universal strike, resulting in the seizure of industry and the annihilation of all government.

One of these is William Z. Foster. He boasts of his object. Recently there was a country-wide strike of the steel workers of the country. Undoubtedly it was, in its origin, largely instigated by Foster and his coconspirators. Foster quickly appeared upon the surface as a leader and director of the strike. He had wormed himself into it in such a manner as to be one of its principal factors. This man Foster has written and published a book entitled "Syndicalism." In it he boldly sets forth his aims and his defiance of government and society. He tells what he is aiming at in all his agitation and promotion of strikes and industrial disturbance. I quote some passages from it:

> The wages system of robbery is responsible for the great extremes of poverty and wealth to be found in modern society. It has existed ever since the very beginning of industrialism and its effects grow worse daily. Every invention of a labor-saving device, by increasing the army of the unemployed and making the competition for jobs keener, enables the owners of the industries to more thoroughly exploit their slaves. Thus the wages system has the effect of making inventions of labor-saving devices curses to the bulk of society, instead of blessings as they should be.
> The wages system is the most brazen and gigantic robbery ever perpetrated since the world began. So disastrous are its consequences on the vast armies of slaves within its toils that it is threatening the very existence of society. If society is even to be perpetuated—to say nothing of being organized upon an equitable basis—the wages system must be abolished. The thieves at present in control of the industries must be stripped of their booty, and society so reorganized that every individual shall have free access to the social means of production. This social reorganization will be a revolution. Only after such a revolution will the great inequalities of modern society disappear.
> For years progressive workers have realized the necessity for this revolution. They have also realized that it must be brought about by the workers themselves.
> The wages system has divided the immense bulk of society into two classes—the capitalist class and the working class. The interests of these two classes are radically opposed to each other. It is the interest of the capitalist class to rob the workers of as much of their product as possible and the interest of the workers to prevent this robbery as far as they can. A guerrilla warfare—known as the class struggle and evidenced by the many strikes, working class political eruptions, and the many acts of oppression committed by capitalists upon their workers—constantly goes on between these opposing classes. The capitalists, who are heartlessness and cupidity personified, being the dominant class of society and the shapers of its institutions, have organized the whole fabric of society with a view to keeping the working class in slavery. It is, therefore, evident that if the workers are to become free it must be through their own efforts and directly against those of the capitalists.
> The syndicalist movement is a labor-union movement, which, in addition to fighting the every-day battles of the working class, intends to overthrow capitalism and reorganize society in such a manner that exploitation of man by man through the wages system shall cease. The latter phase of this triple task—the establishment of a society worthy of the human race—is the real goal of syndicalism and the end for which all its efforts are finally spent. Consequently, an understanding of the manner in which the new society shall be organized is a matter of first importance to syndicalists and they have given it much thought.

At this early date, though many of the minor details of the organization plan of the new society can only be guessed at, many of its larger outlines are fairly clear. One of these is that there will be no State. The syndicalist sees in the State only an instrument of oppression and a bungling administrator of industry, and proposes to exclude it from the future society. He sees no need for any general supervising governmental body, and intends that the workers in each industry shall manage the affairs of their particular industry; the miners shall manage the mines; the railroaders manage the railroads, and so on through all the lines of human activity.

Just how the workers shall be organized to manage their industries has been a matter of much speculation. The current syndicalist theory is that the labor unions in the various industries will each take over the management of their particular industry; that "the fighting groups of to-day will be the producing and distributing groups of to-morrow."

In the future society the shop organizations will be perfectly autonomous—each automatically regulating its own affairs and requiring no interference from without. The producing force of society will be composed of autonomous units, each industry constituting a unit. The beginnings of this industrial autonomy are seen in the more highly monopolized industries of to-day. These industries are becoming automatic in their operation. Chance and arbitrary industrial dictatorship are being eliminated from them. The whole industrial process is becoming a matter of obeying facts and figures. In a monopolized industry the national demand for its product flows inevitably to it, and it regulates its production automatically to conform to this demand. In the future society all industries will be monopolized, and each will regulate its production according to the demands placed upon it by the rest of society. Their relations between the various industries will be simply the filling of each other's orders for commodities.

As the activities of the autonomous shop organizations will extend over all social production, including education, medicine, criminology, etc., there will be no need for a general supervising body to administer industry—be it the State or the labor unions. And as there will be no slave class in society and no ownership in the social means of livelihood, the State will have lost the only other reasons for its existence—the keeping of the working class in subjection and the regulation of the quarrels between the owners of the industries.

The question of the system for the division of the social product in the new society has not been the subject of much discussion by syndicalists. However, they very generally accept the anarchist formula: "From each according to his ability; to each according to his needs." They will abolish all ownership in the social means of livelihood and make them free for each to take what he needs.

They believe that when all are free to help themselves from the all-sufficing products of society they will no more misuse their opportunity than people now misuse the many enterprises under capitalism—streets, roads, bridges, libraries, parks, etc.—which are managed according to the anarchistic principle of each taking what he needs. The prevailing code of ethics will prevent would-be idlers from taking advantage of this system.

The syndicalist is characterized by the harmony that exists between his theories and his tactics. He realizes that the capitalist class is his mortal enemy; that it must be overthrown, the wages system abolished, and the new society he has outlined established if he is to live; and he is proceeding to the accomplishment of these tasks with unparalleled directness. He allows nothing to swerve him from his course and lead him in an indirection.

The syndicalist knows that capitalism is organized robbery, and he consistently considers and treats capitalists as thieves plying their trade. He knows they have no more "right" to the wealth they have amassed than a burglar has to his loot, and the idea of expropriating them without remuneration seems as natural to him as for the footpad's victim to take back his stolen property without paying the footpad for it. From long experience he has learned that the so-called legal and inalienable "rights" of man are but pretenses with which to deceive workingmen; that in reality "rights" are only enjoyed by those capable of enforcing them. He knows that in modern society, as in all ages, might is right, and that the capitalists hold the industries they have stolen and daily perpetrate the robbery of the wages system simply because they have the economic power to do so. He has fathomed the current system of ethics and morals, and knows them to be just so many auxiliaries to the capitalist class. Consequently, he has cast them aside and has placed his relations with the capitalists upon a basis of naked power.

In his choice of weapons to fight his capitalist enemies the syndicalist is no more careful to select those that are "fair," "just," or "civilized" than is a householder attacked in the night by a burglar. He knows he is engaged in a life and death struggle with an absolutely lawless and unscrupulous enemy, and considers his tactics only from the standpoint of their effectiveness. With him the end justifies the means. Whether his tactics be "legal" and "moral" or not does not concern him, so long as they are effective. He knows that the laws, as well as the current code of morals, are made by his mortal enemies, and considers himself about as much bound by them as a householder would himself by regulations regarding burglary adopted by an association of housebreakers. Consequently, he ignores them in so far as he is able and it suits his purposes. He proposes to develop, regardless of capitalist conceptions of "legality," "fairness," "right," etc., a greater power than his capitalist enemies have, and then to wrest from them by force the industries they have stolen from him by force and duplicity, and to put an end forever to the wages system. He proposes to bring about the revolution by the general strike.

By the term "general strike," used in a revolutionary sense, is meant the period of more or less general cessation of labor by the workers, during which period the workers, by disorganizing the mechanism of capitalist society, will expose its weakness and their own strength; whereupon, perceiving themselves possessed of the power to do so, they will seize control of the social means of production and proceed to operate them in their own interest, instead of in the interest of a handful of parasites, as heretofore. The general strike is the first stage of the revolution proper.

There is nothing strained or abnormal in the general strike theory, neither in the supposition that the workers can so disorganize capitalist society as to be able to seize the industries, nor in the supposition that they will do so once they realize they have the power. Both conclusions flow naturally from the everyday experiences of the workers.

The everyday tactics of the workers strongly indicate the truth of the conclusion that they will expropriate the capitalists as soon as they learn they have the power to do so. In their daily strikes they pit their strength against that of their employers and wring from them whatever concessions they can. They don't remain long content with these concessions, and as soon as they are able they proceed to win more. They are insatiable, and, when the general strike proves their ability to do so, they will have no scruples against expropriating the capitalists. This expropriation will seem the more natural to them then, as they will be fortified by the syndicalist conception that the capitalists are thieves and have no "right" to their property.

The partial strike of to-day, in which a comparatively few workers disorganize an industry and force concessions from their employers, is but a miniature of the general strike of the future, in which the whole working class will disorganize all the industries and force the whole capitalist class to give up its ownership of them.

Once the general strike is in active operation, the greatest obstacle to its success will be the armed forces of capitalism—soldiers, police, detectives, etc. This formidable force will be used energetically by the capitalists to break the general strike. The syndicalists have given much study to the problem presented by this force and have found the solution for it. Their proposed tactics are very different from those used by rebels in former revolutions. They are not going to mass themselves and allow themselves to be slaughtered by capitalism's trained murderers in the orthodox way. Theirs is a safer, more effective, and more modern method. They are going to defeat the armed forces by disorganizing and demoralizing them.

A fruitful source of this disorganization will be the extreme difficulty the armed forces will experience in securing supplies and transportation. Modern armies, to be effective, must have immense arsenals, powder works, and other industrial establishments behind them to furnish them their supplies of ammunition, arms, food, and clothing. They also must have the railroads constantly at their disposal for transportation. When the general strike has halted these industries the army will be stricken with paralysis.

Syndicalists in every country are already actively preparing this disorganization of the armed forces by carrying on a double educational campaign amongst the workers. On the one hand they are destroying their illusions about the sacredness of capitalist property and encouraging them to seize this property wherever they have the opportunity. On the other they are teaching working-class soldiers not to shoot their brothers and sisters who are in revolt, but, if need be, to shoot their own officers and to desert the army when the crucial moment arrives. This double propaganda of contempt for capitalist property "rights" and antimilitarism are inseparable from the propagation of the general strike.

In all probability the general strike, at least in its incipient stages, will follow the course that any number of modern great strikes have taken. Only a small part of the workers will be organized; this organized fraction, under some strong stimulus, will provoke a great strike; vast masses of unorganized workers, seeing an opportunity to better their conditions and caught in the general contagion of revolt, will join the strike, organizing themselves meanwhile; the strike will spread; society will be paralyzed; and the revolutionary workers, perceiving their power, will proceed to put an end to capitalism.

The success of the general strike does not necessitate the voluntary striking of every worker. Modern industry is so delicately adjusted and the division of labor so complete that if the bulk of the workers in a few of the so-called strategic industries—transportation, coal mining, steel making, etc.—quit work, the rest of the workers would be forced to do likewise through lack of materials and markets for their products. No doubt the workers forced to quit thus, who would be mostly unorganized, unskilled, and the oppressed of the oppressed, would readily fall in with the program of the revolutionists once the general strike was well under way.

The objection that universal preliminary organization is necessary to the success of the general strike is a shallow one. It serves as a convenient excuse for designing politicians and labor leaders to keep labor unions from striking.

The general strike will not be broken by the workers being starved into submission, as is often objected. The general strike will be so devastating in its effects that it can last only a few days, during which period, if need be, the workers, accustomed as they are to starvation, and sustained by the enthusiasm of the revolution, could live on the most meager rations. To get these rations, the syndicalists intend to confiscate, as far as possible, all provisions found in the cities. They will also encourage the numerous poor farmers, tenants, and agricultural wage workers to cast their fortunes with them, to revolt against the State, their landlords, and employers, and to seize the land they occupy. Until production is normally resumed, the syndicalists will trade to these farmers the amassed wealth of the cities for their foodstuffs. More than one revolution has been starved out by the farmers refusing to part with their products in exchange for worthless paper money. The syndicalists have learned this lesson well, and intend to give the farmers the substantial commodities they desire in exchange for their products. The Army will be so busy protecting capitalist property and so permeated with rebellion that it will be at once incapable and unwilling to prevent this method of provisioning the revolution.

The syndicalist is a possibilist. While attending the time he will be strong enough to dispossess his masters by the general strike, he carries on a continual guerrilla warfare with them, winning whatever concessions he can from them. In this daily warfare he uses a variety of tactics—chosen solely because of their effectiveness. Of these, the one most commonly used is the partial strike.

The syndicalist is opposed, on principle, to the partial strike, as he would much rather settle with capitalism by the general strike. But realizing the impossibility of accomplishing the general strike at present, owing to the uneducated and unorganized state of the working class, and knowing also that strikes offer the workers the best opportunities to secure this education and organization, he does the next best thing by provoking strikes wherever they have a reasonable chance for success. He makes these strikes as large, as revolutionary, and as nearly approaching his general strike idea as possible.

The result of this policy is that in countries where the syndicalist movement is strong strikes are taking on an extent and revolutionary character, and achieving a success unknown in countries with conservative labor movements.

A large portion of the syndicalists' success in their strikes is due to their energetic treatment of the strike breaker. According to syndicalist ethics, a poverty-stricken workingman, in his predicament, can do anything save scab. He may beg, borrow, steal, starve, or commit suicide, and still retain the friendship and esteem of his fellow workers, but let him take the place of a striker and he immediately outlaws himself. He becomes so much vermin, to be ruthlessly exterminated. The French syndicalists are especially merciless toward scabs. They are making strike breaking such a dangerous profession that scabs are becoming pleasingly scarce and expensive. They literally hunt scabs as they would wild animals. This war on scabs is popularly known as "la chasse aux renards" (the fox chase).

The syndicalist is as "unscrupulous" in his choice of weapons to fight his everyday battles as for his final struggle with capitalism. He allows no considerations of "legality," religion, patriotism, "honor," "duty," etc., to stand in the way of his adoption of effective tactics. The only sentiment he knows is loyalty to the interests of the working class. He is in utter revolt against capitalism in all its phases. His lawless course often lands him in jail, but he is so fired by revolutionary enthusiasm that jails, or even death, have no terrors for him. He glories in martyrdom, consoling himself with the knowledge that he is a terror to his enemies, and that his movement, to-day sending chills along the spine of international capitalism, to-morrow will put an end to this monstrosity.

The syndicalist takes no cognizance of society. He is interested only in the welfare of the working class and consistently defends it. He leaves the rag-tag mass of parasites that make up the nonworking class part of society to look after their own interests. It is immaterial to him what becomes of them so long as the working class advances. He is not afraid of "turning the wheels of progress backward" in thus constantly confining himself to the interests of the working class, as he knows that by freeing the working class entirely he will give social development the greatest stimulus it has ever known.

The syndicalist is strictly an antistatist. He considers the State a meddling capitalist institution. He resists its tyrannical interference in his affairs as much as possible and proposes to exclude it from the future society. He is a radical opponent of "law and order," as he knows that for his unions to be "legal" in their tactics would be for them to become impotent. He recognizes no rights of the capitalists to their property, and is going to strip them of it, law or no law.

The syndicalist is a radical antipatriot. He is a true internationalist, knowing no country. He opposes patriotism because it creates feelings of nationalism among the workers of the various countries and prevents cooperation between them, and also because of the militarism it inevitably breeds. He views all forms of militarism with a deadly hatred, because he knows from bitter experience that the chief function of modern armies is to break strikes, and that wars of any kind are fatal to the labor movement. He depends solely on his labor unions for protection from foreign and domestic foes alike and proposes to put an end to war between the nations by having the workers in the belligerent countries go on a general strike and thus make it impossible to conduct wars.

The anarchist is an individualist. He is an antidemocrat, having a supreme contempt for majority rule. He opposes authoritarianism in all its manifestations. He is an inveterate enemy of the State and its laws, and would establish a society in which they will not exist. In his tactics he is a direct actionist.

Syndicalism has placed the anarchist movement upon a practical, effective basis. It has at once given it a clear-cut aim—the emancipation of the working class—and the most powerful organizations in modern society—the labor unions—to achieve this aim. Before the advent of syndicalism the anarchist movement confusedly and ineffectively appealed to all society and was destitute of organization. Like the socialist movement, the anarchist movement has also become possibilist.

I will not quote further from this seditious and dangerous publication. There is much more of it, but this is enough to show the character of it. This stuff is admitted to the United States mail and scattered broadcast over the country. The book is widely circulated. The harm it does among the ignorant and prejudiced is incalculable.

People who advocate this sort of thing should be dealt with by law, and if there is no law for it one should be supplied. It is a sad spectacle to see such a man as this man leading and directing a great strike. Foster was defeated in the steel strike, but he will plan and cause further strikes. He will come back. If allowed his liberty, he will continue his nefarious work. This man should be imprisoned at hard labor for life. If there be no law for it, one should be enacted. Unless the honest leaders of honest labor can be separated from the influence of such men, and unless such men can be dealt with as they deserve to be dealt with, the whole social and industrial fabric of this country is in grave danger.

I know the disposition of many excellent people and true Americans is to pooh-pooh at these things and at such warnings as I am giving. I see it almost daily. I hear people say: "Oh, the great majority of the American people are all right; the great body of our citizenship is loyal and truly American; the American people will take care of themselves; they will not permit anything of that kind to prevail; they will take hold of it when they get ready and throttle it; you can depend on the good sense of the American people; this will pass away; there is no danger; American institutions are not in danger; trust the people." That is what some people said about secession in 1861 and preceding years. That is what some people said about the threats of Germany to torpedo neutral vessels. That is what was said by people who opposed preparedness on our part when Germany threatened to defy us and to draw us into the great World War. Well-meaning people thus discourage action. They would lull the people into a sense of security when the world is afire with incendiarism and sparks have long been falling in this country and starting sporadic fires. The fire is amongst us. The danger is here. We should not be lulled into a false sense of security. When one is aroused from his slumber in the middle of the night by the sound of the fire gong, he might as well say, "Oh, the firemen will put out the fire; it will be attended to; there is no danger," and turn over and resume his slumber.

The people are asleep. They need to be aroused to action. There is need of preparedness and action. The trouble is that people who oppose preparedness and action in this grave danger are organized and have votes, and the one thing of which Congress most stands in awe is organized votes. Congress will quail before organizations controlling votes. The great masses of the people are not organized.

They divide their votes along political lines. Those who are Republicans generally vote the Republican ticket. Those who are Democrats generally vote the Democratic ticket. They are not organized and drilled to cast their votes in a block, regardless of party. Hence, who cares for them? They will vote according to party. They receive little consideration. In this respect both of the great political parties are alike. The chief end of each appears to be to get votes. "Get votes" seems to be their motto. In such matters as this, where threats are made by large bodies of organized voters, I would not give a pinch of snuff for the difference between the Democratic and Republican Parties. Each party bids for the organized vote, and so long as that unwholesome condition may prevail the people of the country will have no chance to register their judgment in such matters as that I am discussing. The people will have to awaken and by concerted action hold political parties and public men of both parties responsible to their concerted will before there can be any improvement.

Unless there is a marvelous awakening of the people I fear that in a very few years the industries of this country will be sovietized and then the next step would be to sovietize the Government, and then we would have in this country what there is to-day in Russia. There is in this country a wave of radicalism, encouraged by many well-meaning people, which is giving the reds and radical agitators a golden opportunity. If I can say or do anything to arouse the people I deem it my duty to do it, and shall do it regardless of consequences. I hope the people may take heed. I hope the Government in all of its branches may take heed and that there may be adequate and efficient action before it is too late to avert a great catastrophe.

Some may say I am an alarmist. Paul Revere was an alarmist. Patrick Henry was an alarmist. I am not a Paul Revere nor a Patrick Henry, but when there is danger some one must be an alarmist to prevent a catastrophe. The danger is here; it is around us, upon us. I hope some one may be sufficient of an alarmist to arouse the people and to arouse the Government to action and thus avert dire consequence. It is time for all good citizens of this country to stand together. If they do not stand together, undoubtedly they shall fall separately!

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13108) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHEPPARD in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the committee, on page 5, which was passed over, will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 5, in line 7, after "$30,000," insert:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy is directed to take possession of all properties within the naval petroleum reserves as are or may become vested in the United States; to conserve, develop, use, and operate the same in his discretion, directly or by contract, lease or otherwise, and to use, store, exchange, refine, sell, or otherwise dispose of the oil and gas products thereof, and those from all royalty oil, for the benefit of the United States: And provided further, That such sums as have been or may be turned into the Treasury of the United States from royalties on lands within the naval petroleum reserves prior to July 1, 1921, not to exceed $500,000, are hereby made available for this purpose until July 1, 1922: Provided further, That this appropriation shall be reimbursed from the proper appropriations on account of the oil and gas products from said properties used by the United States at such rate, not in excess of the market value of the oil, as the Secretary of the Navy may direct.

Mr. SMOOT. To that amendment I desire to offer the following amendment: On page 5, line 10, strike out the words "vested in the United States" and insert the following:

Subject to the control and use by the United States for naval purposes, and on which there are no pending claims or applications for permits or leases under the provisions of an act of Congress approved February 25, 1920, entitled "An act to provide for the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, oil shale, gas, and sodium on the public domain," or pending applications for United States patent under any law.

The words "vested in the United States" would take in all of the withdrawn lands not only within the naval reserves but the withdrawn lands of every kind and character. I am quite sure there is no objection to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. I also offer the following amendment to the amendment. On page 5, line 14, after the words "United States," insert the following additional proviso:

And provided further, That the rights of any claimant under said act of February 25, 1920, are not affected adversely thereby.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. I offer a further amendment. On page 5, in the committee amendment, line 12, after the word "exchange," I move to insert the word "or," and strike out the word "refine," and in the same line to strike out the words "or otherwise disposed of," so that it would read:

To conserve, develop, use, and operate the same in his discretion, directly or by contract, lease or otherwise, and to use, store, exchange, or sell the oil and gas products thereof.

And so forth.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Before the amendment is agreed to, I want to just emphasize what has already been called to the attention of the Senate from time to time with reference to the oil situation. I remember that the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] quite a little while ago called very clearly to the attention of the Senate and of the country the very serious situation, especially concerning this country, in connection with the oil supply.

We hope to have developed an American merchant marine which will be commensurate with out wealth, our power, and our interest in the world trade. The success of that merchant marine and its maintenance depend very largely upon our fuel supply, and especially our oil supply. The Senator from California called attention to the control which is being secured over the oil supply of the world by the citizens of other nations, and I simply want to emphasize that at this time, in the hope that our administrative officers will look into the matter very carefully, and do anything and everything they possibly can to encourage our people to secure concessions and rights along these lines. They may be doing that now; I hope they are. If they are not, they ought to be doing it, and they ought to be looking at the situation with the idea of calling on Congress for any help or aid they think they ought to have through legislation.

I know that Congress is blamed for a great many sins of omission, as well as commission, but there are some things which must be initiated by the administration. There are facts which administrative officers must gather and acquaint themselves with in the administration of their duties, which Congress could not get except through the administrative officers, and legislation ought to be had many times which can be had only upon the suggestion or recommendation of the administrative officers. I trust that the administrative officers who are brought in contact with this situation will give it their very careful consideration, with a view to ascertaining whether there is any legislation they need in order to protect, so far as possible, the rights and interests of the country, not only in the present but in the future.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an inquiry?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I did not hear all the Senator's statement. Does it carry the implication that the Government of the United States should encourage American citizens to secure oil concessions and the acquisition of oil properties in other countries, as Great Britain has encouraged her citizens? If so, then, of course, the duty would rest upon the Government to protect them where they have acquired, honestly and legitimately, oil lands. In Mexico some American citizens are the owners of oil lands; they have paid for them; they have developed them and made them productive. Nevertheless, in some instances such citizens have been assaulted, their representatives have been killed, they have been robbed, some of their property has been expropriated, and for many years there has been no disposition, apparently, upon the part of some executive officials to properly protect Americans who honestly and legitimately have acquired property in Mexico.

Diaz, as the Senator recalls, invited Americans to invest in Mexico. They went there; they spent their time, their energy, and millions and tens of millions of dollars of American capital, not for the purpose of exploiting Mexico or the Mexicans, but for the purpose of developing Mexico and advancing her interests and improving the condition of the Mexican people themselves.

Notwithstanding that fact, that they went there pursuant to the invitation of Mexico and in good faith spent their money, developed property, built smelters, opened mines, and plantations, built railroads, and did much for the material development of the country, their property, both real and personal, has been damaged or destroyed. Their mines and smelters have been closed down, their employees have been murdered, and thousands of them have been driven from Mexico.

I might say in passing that this condition has existed for many years—indeed, for more than 60 years. As a matter of fact, in the time of Andrew Jackson Americans who went there in good faith and tried to develop the country, under treaties existing between our country and Mexico, having a right to go there, were subjected to similar depredations and wrongs, perhaps not to the same extent, not differing perhaps in kind, but only in degree. The Mexican Governments and the Mexican people for more than three-quarters of a century have failed to respect at times American rights, rights secured by treaty but in behalf of American citizens as well as the Government of the United States itself.

If we expect American trade and commerce to be extended and American citizens to acquire oil concessions and oil properties in other countries, the United States must protect them and see that they are not despoiled of their property, that they are not murdered, and that their employees are not driven from the work in which they are engaged.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I agree fully with the Senator from Utah. We ought to see to it that Americans are protected in their rights in other countries, just as other Governments see that their citizens are protected and preserved in their rights and are treated fairly and justly under the laws of the country in which they are. As the Senator said, until we do that, of course we can not expect American citizens to go into other countries, initiate rights there, and put in their money and efforts to develop resources which may be of great benefit to our own country. They must feel assured that this Government will see that they are protected in their rights under the laws of the country to which they go.

Of course, I do not think we should make the laws for the country to which our citizens go, and our citizens should take into account, of course, the conditions in those various countries, but they should understand that behind them there is the Government of the United States to protect them in their rights wherever they may go. If we will just take a leaf out of Great Britain's book in that respect, we will not only protect our citizens in their rights, but we will gain the respect of the people of other nations.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. PHELAN. The Senator from Washington, in his position as chairman of the Committee on Commerce, has particular facilities for ascertaining the importance of oil for our merchant marine, and he doubtless agrees with me that it is vital for the success of the merchant marine that this country shall be in a position to command the necessary fuel oil.

But what are the conditions? To-day the United States, as the Senator is well aware, is consuming a great deal more oil than it is producing, and therefore it must look to other lands. As the Senator has observed, Great Britain has shown a great deal of foresight in looking after oil supplies in other lands. In the allotment of territory after the war she was very careful to make arrangements with Persia, and assumed, I believe, a mandate for Mesopotamia, where there are extensive oil properties. In other words, she is perhaps as much concerned in the production of oil as in the protection of the inhabitants.

The United States, as the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] has just observed, has not given protection to the men of this country who have gone into foreign lands for the purposes of exploitation and development. A remedy or a way out has occurred to me, and I want to submit it to the Senator from Washington, the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, for his judgment.

For a long time the merchant marine was without support from the Government, and it languished. It was a constant political cry to restore the merchant marine, and it was not accomplished until, due to the exigencies of the war, the Government organized a corporation known as the Emergency Fleet Corporation, appropriating for its use large sums of money. Ships were constructed and put upon the seven seas, and the success has been phenominal. I will not say how much more than $100,000,000 were earned last year by the Shipping Corporation. Our trade has been restored to the sea, and we are the dominant commercial power to-day.

As the Government did not in the past support the merchant marine by giving subsidies or otherwise to the ships, as it has not given aid and encouragement to the men who go to foreign lands, as Mexico, instanced by the Senator from Utah, why would it not be good policy to organize an oil-development corporation, incorporated by Congress, and provide it with funds? It has proved no loss to the Government in providing a fund for the Shipping Board, which is really a revolving fund, neither would it involve any loss to the Government should a corporation be formed for the purpose of going into other lands and developing oil and acquiring property. That is the alternative.

If the Government does not give charter and protection to individuals to successfully engage in such enterprises, why should it engage in the enterprise itself? There is no reason, because of the precedent of the Shipping Board, why we should not do such a thing. We can not, because gentlemen do not like municipal trading, as it is called, or the Government engage in business, see our merchant marine fail by reason of inability to get oil, and, furthermore, see our Navy fail in competition with the navies of the world by reason of its inability to get oil.

It may be distasteful to gentlemen to put the Government in business, but put it in another way. Great Britain does not act in the name of Great Britain. When she goes into Colombia, Mexico, and Mesopotamia she goes in the name of the Royal Dutch Shell Corporation. It is a perfect camouflage; it is Great Britain masquerading in the name of the Dutch. I am not criticizing Great Britain. I admire the foresight of the men who, at the helm of State, are steering the State so that her ships and her navy will be always provided with the essential fuel. But if Great Britain for some reason enters into the field under the name of the Royal Dutch Shell, why should not the United States enter into the field as long as individuals are apparently disqualified and lack equipment or protection? Why should not the United States, under an anonymous name, under a company, such as the Shipping Board, undertake this?

The French always call their corporations anonymous associations. It is more particularly, I suppose, to conceal the names of the men behind it, but here there is nothing to conceal. We would organize what would be a public corporation, as the Shipping Board is a public corporation, and the Government of the United States would be the sole owner of the stock, and in the name of that corporation it could sue and be sued, and enjoy such flexibility that it could manage its business. That is the reason why we have not created a department, that we have organized a fleet corporation where it could freely buy and sell without let or hindrance, giving it discretion, power, and means.

I have interrupted the Senator already too long, but I want to say that I submitted such a plan to the Secretary of the Interior within the week, and he politely replied that he would be very glad to cooperate. What he means by that I do not know. He said he would be very glad to cooperate in the suggestion of organizing a corporation to meet what I believe to be a vital and critical need for the welfare of this country, its Navy, and its merchant marine.

With the permission of the Senator from Washington, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD my letter of April 21 to the Secretary of the Interior on the subject of the organization of a United States public corporation to take care of the oil interests of the country abroad and his answer thereto.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A Federal oil corporation.

APRIL 21, 1920.

Hon. JOHN BARTON PAYNE,
Secretary of the Interior.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: The oil situation to-day is substantially as follows:

That while the United States is the greatest producer of oil, it is consuming more than it produces. Its stocks are being diminished rapidly. In the State of California foreigners can organize corporations and acquire the oil lands and properties of the State without let or hindrance.

The Royal Dutch Shell, and other agents, have already acquired valuable holdings there, and, I understand, in Texas and Oklahoma. Now, the Royal Dutch Shell is, I am credibly informed, controlled by the British Government. That is to say, the British Government is for its uses, naval and maritime, acquiring the control of the oil lands and production of the world.

I beg to call your attention to the report of Mr. Van Manning, Director of the Bureau of Mines.

American and other foreigners are barred by England, for instance, in her possessions and protectorates, and furthermore our Government has never encouraged exploitation and exploration in foreign territory which, in view of the facts, is probably a mistaken policy.

If we are not prepared to back up our nationals in the world field, it has occurred to me that there is but one thing to do, and that is to organize a corporation on the lines of the Shipping Board and properly finance it so that this Government can secure, by or through exploration and exploitation, purchase, or lease, oil properties outside the territory of the United States.

I have in mind the preparation of a bill of this kind and desire by this letter to advise you of it in advance, seeking at the same time, in the public interest, your valuable suggestions and, perhaps, cooperation. Your experience in the Emergency Fleet Corporation will doubtless confirm my view that such a corporation as I propose is practicable. The serious situation which confronts the country is my justification for trespassing upon your time.

Yours, very truly, JAMES D. PHELAN.

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, April 22, 1920.

Hon. JAMES D. PHELAN,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR PHELAN: Acknowledging your kind letter of the 21st re the oil situation, I will be glad, indeed, to cooperate with you along the line of your suggestions.

My kindest personal regards.

Cordially, yours, JOHN BARTON PAYNE.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I am not prepared at this time to pass upon the merits of the suggestion of the Senator from California, but I am prepared to say that I have reached a point where I am willing to support any proposition that will insure or tend to insure an adequate merchant marine for this country. I believe that the matter of oil for fuel is extremely important, almost vital, as the Senator said. If it is necessary that the Government, through a corporation or otherwise, should put forth activities toward the securing of oil concessions and the development of oil lands, I will support it.

It is my judgment that Great Britain is not acting so much through governmental agencies, either camouflaged or otherwise, as she is through her private citizens. I think possibly largely, as the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] suggested, when the British subject goes to a foreign country to live there and to invest in property and engage in business, he knows that his Government is behind him for the protection of his rights, and he has no hesitation in investing his money and in developing industries under that condition.

Furthermore, there may be this difference between our country and Great Britain. There is no serious question made in Great Britain as to an official of the Government engaging in private activities with which he may be officially connected; and yet in this country we think it heinous for a shipping man for instance to be interested in the Shipping Board or connected officially with the Shipping Board. We put an express provision in our statute that a man interested in the shipping industry should not be a member of the board. We seem to want to get men to run it who are just as little informed about the business as we possibly can find.

What is the British policy in that respect? As an example, it was shown in the testimony taken before the committee investigating the merchant marine situation that many of the officials of the great shipping syndicates of Great Britain are members of Parliament, who have to do with legislation under which they operate and work. Why? I think it is because they made shipping one of the great national essentials, and they are willing to do whatever is necessary to maintain it and upbuild it. So it is with reference to the oil development and oil concessions and the acquirement of oil properties throughout the country.

I have not any doubt, and I am going to read a statement about it directly, that possibly the British Government, as a Government, is behind some of the oil companies. It will not hesitate a moment to get behind those companies if they deem it necessary in order to secure ample oil for the future. It probably has not done it in many cases, because it was not necessary, and yet it is true that it gives to its private people every possible encouragement and every possible incentive to develop along these lines.

I simply rose to emphasize the situation as it is developed throughout the world, and especially with reference to Great Britain. As the Senator said, I am not finding fault with Great Britain; I admire Great Britain for what she is doing, how she stands behind her citizens, how she stands behind her industries, and I would like, as I said awhile ago, to take a leaf out of her book. Let us stand behind our people as she stands behind hers. Let us encourage our people as she encourages hers. Let us do what is necessary for our interests as she does whatever is necessary for her interests.

I have here a clipping from the Public Ledger of Philadelphia under date of April 9, dated at London, a special cable dispatch:

Writing in the Times, Sir E. Mackay Edgar, in explaining Great Britain's control of the oil resources of the world, says that within a few years the United States will be paying British oil interests $1,000,000,000 annually for oil for the American Navy and for American home consumption.

With the exception of Mexico and to a lesser extent of Central America, the outer world is securely barricaded against an American invasion in force, he said. There may be small, isolated sallies, but there can never by a massed attack. The British position is impregnable.

If our administrative officers, if our State Department, who should know more about this situation than we can know or than anyone else in the country can know, are satisfied that the only way we can protect our interests in the acquirement of oil concessions and in securing oil to meet our future needs, is through a corporation or company, as suggested by the Senator from California, it seems to me that it is the duty of those administrative officers to say so, and to recommend to Congress legislation along those lines. If they will come to Congress and do that, I, for one, will stand by them.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator permit an interruption right there?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; although I had not expected to take so much time.

Mr. KING. I will wait until the Senator concludes the article and then I will propound the question.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It is rather lengthy, and the Senator can proceed.

Mr. KING. Very well. I have thought for some time, particularly in view of the information which the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] furnished to the Senate several months ago, that it is the duty of the Navy Department of the Government to acquire oil lands for naval purposes and uses in remote parts of the earth where our fleet will be called, and I should be glad to see an appropriation made, to be placed in the hands of the President, for the purpose of acquiring oil lands in those countries to which our fleet may go and when oil might be needed for our Navy.

I should be very glad if the Committee on Naval Affairs would consider that question, or if some other committee of the Senate would take up the matter. If it is not done I shall offer an amendment to the pending bill or introduce an independent bill, so that the whole subject may be considered by the Senate.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I would welcome something along that line, but I want to emphasize the statement I made. I am not criticizing the administration or the department, but it seems to me that, they being more familiar with the details of the needs and the difficulties that they face, it is their duty to recommend to Congress what they think ought to be done. We can not know these facts and the details except as we get them in a general way. They run right up against them in the conduct of their affairs.

Just as the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] has said, the Secretary of the Navy and the officials of the Navy know exactly what are the needs of the Navy; they know the difficulties that they have in supplying those needs; they know the facts at the different points of the compass in the world that we do not know, and about the only way that we can get the information is that they call them to our attention and make recommendations to us, based upon their knowledge of the situation and the facts.

Reading further from this article:

Sir Mackay declares that all known oil fields and all likely or probable oil fields outside the United States are in British hands or under British management or control or financed by British capital.

"We shall have to wait a few years before the full advantages of the situation shall begin to be reaped," he said, "but that that harvest eventually will be a great one there can be no manner of doubt. To the tune of many millions of pounds a year America before very long will have to purchase from British companies and to pay for in dollar currency in progressively increasing proportion the oil she can not do without and is no longer able to furnish from her own store. I estimate that, if their present curve of consumption, especially of high-grade products, is maintained, Americans in 10 years will be under the necessity of importing 500,000,000 barrels of oil yearly at $2 a barrel, a very low figure, and that means an annual payment of $1,000,000,000 per annum, most, if not all, of which will find its way into British pockets. If there are pessimists left in the United Kingdom, I confidently invite them to put that in their pipes and smoke it."

And, Mr. President, in this connection I desire to suggest that now is the time for us to begin to lay our plans to meet any such situation as that. There are different ways by which we can meet it.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, does the Senator understand that the Mexican oil fields are in control of the British?

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; I do not understand that they are entirely so.

Mr. WATSON. The all-sweeping declaration the Senator has read would lead one to conclude that such was the case.

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; just preceding that statement—probably the Senator from Indiana did not notice it—I think he says that, outside of Mexico and one other field, the British practically control the oil of all the world.

However, what I want to suggest is this: This is the time for us to unshackle ourselves so that we can do whatever we think along different lines will be for the protection of our interests. We may in a few years be dependent upon the British Empire for oil, as Sir Mackay Edgar says; but, Mr. President, they are dependent upon us in this country for many things, and we ought to prepare ourselves so that we can use their needs to secure just treatment in the satisfaction of our needs. There ought to be some reciprocity in these matters to our advantage as well as to theirs. Concessions ought not to go always from this country to other people; and we are in a position, in my judgment, to insist that when we make concessions along certain lines or when our needs must be supplied from other countries we shall also get concessions because of needs of theirs which we must meet.

There are treaties now that prevent us from doing what we ought to do for ourselves and for our own interests. Those treaties ought to be abrogated, so that we shall be in a position to look after our own interests. Our administrative officers—and I am not saying that they are not doing it—ought to see to it when advantages and concessions are secured by other countries, especially along commercial lines, that we also get concessions and advantages for our benefit.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield.

Mr. PHELAN. The Senator has observed that the United States has been asked to take the mandate for Armenia?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I hope we shall not get the League of Nations up to-day.

Mr. PHELAN. I will spare the Senator, because I was about to observe that if we had a representative in that body we might make terms, but now——

Mr. JONES of Washington. We do not have to have such a representative. I can not yield to the Senator for that, because I do not want to go into its discussion. However, Mr. President, we have administrative representatives and diplomatic agents abroad who can look after the interests of this country, and it is not necessary to make the excuse that we need some representative on the council of the League of Nations to deal with mandatories or anything like that to look after the interests of this country, and the Senator from California knows that as well as I do.

UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT ON QUI VIVE.

That this view is not exaggerated is indicated by the fact that four departments of the American Government—War, Navy, State, and Commerce—have instructed their representatives throughout the world to watch all oil developments with the greatest care and report to Washington fully.

Mr. President, I am glad that that has been done. What use is being made of these reports? This is right in line with what I suggested a while ago, that they get information which we can not get unless they give it to us. If there is information which they have secured or that they shall secure, that shows the need of action by Congress, it is their duty to come to Congress and tell us what they want and then ask us to enact the legislation.

Mr. SMOOT. We are locking the stable door after the horse is stolen.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The quotation continues:

During the last week several important conferences have taken place both in Paris and London, between American officials, when the oil situation was discussed because of the persistent reports that British interests are about to close big oil deals in Mexico and Peru with companies now operating there or owning concessions.

Mr. President, if there are companies and corporations, for instance, in Peru, that hold great oil concessions there, why is not our Government trying to get similar concessions or to get an interest in them? If they need authority, if they need legislation that is important to enable them to do so, let them ask Congress and the authority will be granted.

If this deal goes through, Britain's control of the oil resources of the world will be equal to a strangle hold.

"Apart from Mexico," Sir Mackay Edgar continues, "it is almost a case of the British first and the rest of the world nowhere. I should say that two-thirds of the improved fields of Central and South America are in British hands. In Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua, Costa Rica, Panama, Colombia, Venezuela, and Ecuador a decisive and really overwhelming majority of the petroleum concessions are held by British subjects. They will be developed by British capital."

Why is it, Mr. President, that American citizens can not get oil concessions in South American countries? In my judgment, they can if our Government will take the proper steps, diplomatic and otherwise, with those countries. Quoting further:

EXTENT OF BRITISH CONTROL.

The Alves group, whose holdings encircle practically two-thirds of the Caribbean Sea, is wholly British, working under arrangements which insure that perpetual control of its undertakings shall remain in British hands. No American citizen and no American group has acquired or ever could acquire any such position in Central America as that which enterprise and personality have secured for Mr. Alves.

I believe, Mr. President, that we have men in this country who have just as fine personality and just as much enterprise as has any British subject or citizen, and, with the encouragement that our Government ought to give them, I believe we could accomplish just as much as the British citizens have accomplished.

Or, take again that greatest of all oil organizations, the Shell group. It owns exclusive or controls interests in every important oil field in the world, including the United States, Russia, Mexico, the Dutch East Indies, Roumania, Egypt, Venezuela, Trinidad, India, Ceylon, the Malay States, North and South China, Siam, the Straits Settlements, and the Philippines.

It looks to me as though we ought to be able to have some little control at least over the Philippines and the interests of the United States there.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, as the Senator knows, there is to-day no law which prevents a foreigner from acquiring all the oil lands in Texas, Oklahoma, and California. The Shell oil interests have actually purchased valuable property in California, known as Coalinga, and other properties, and are acquiring our own oil as well as the oil of the world.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Certainly; that is what Sir Edgar says.

Mr. PHELAN. There is no power in Congress to stop it; it must be done by the States.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Then, the States ought to act.

Mr. PHELAN. I have urged in my State that action be taken to limit the power of foreigners to organize corporations and acquire lands and mineral properties. The legislature will not meet, however, for eight months, and in the meantime our entire oil investment in California may pass into foreign hands.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have not looked into this phase of the subject to any considerable extent, but I am inclined to believe that in a matter of this kind, which is of such vital importance to the Nation as a nation, the Government could, at any rate, control the sending out from this country of this vital necessity. We could, if necessary, condemn it, as the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] suggests. I am satisfied that we could do that. I have some other facts here which I wish to lay before the Senate in a moment, but I desired to call attention to or suggest the consideration of the question, at any rate, of an embargo upon the exportation of oil from this country, in order to preserve and maintain for the future our supply of that which is so necessary in national undertakings.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, the Senator will recall that I introduced an amendment to the oil-leasing bill when it was before this body giving the President the power to impose an embargo upon the exportation of all oil. It was considered at that time dangerous because it might excite retaliation; but I could not see then, nor do I see now, why there is any danger of that kind, and, if there is, it is insignificant in the face of the greater danger of losing all our oil.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Washington allow me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. In answer to the Senator from California, I wish to say that the mere suggestion upon the part of Congress to place an embargo on the exportation of American oil did bring retaliation. The question has been discussed many times in Congress, and, outside of the war power, I take it for granted many Congressmen have already decided that such action would be unconstitutional; that there is no power granted by the Constitution for Congress to place an embargo upon the exportation of the products of the different States.

Mr. PHELAN. Except as a war power?

Mr. SMOOT. Except as a war power.

Now, Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator that the Senate did put in the oil-leasing bill a provision giving the President of the United States certain control over oil produced upon the public domain—that is, upon public lands and reservations in the United States—but it was impossible to affect the privately owned lands. The great bulk, however, of the oil lands in the United States are on lands within reservations. We did put what I consider a power in the hands of the President that would have acted as a deterrent, at least, to foreign investors controlling the oil produced in this country, for, as the Senator will remember, we struck out the House provision and put in the provision to which I have referred. When, however, the bill reached conference, the Senate conferees had to yield and agree to the House provision, and the provision I am about to read is what resulted from our endeavors:

And provided further, That citizens of another country, the laws, customs, or regulations of which deny similar or like privileges to citizens or corporations of this country, shall not, by stock ownership, stock holding, or stock control, own any interest in any lease acquired under the provisions of this act.

That is what we obtained in the effort to control the oil of this country. That provision, however, does not affect England; she is exempt from its provisions, because she does not impose restriction upon citizens of the United States owning stock in companies in British possessions.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I think the Senator is in error in that respect. I do not think that any foreigner can own more than one-fourth of the shares of a British corporation operating in foreign lands.

Mr. SMOOT. I think in the case of one of the British dependencies there is a provision of law to that effect, but the laws of Great Britain, and the laws of most of her dependencies, make no mention of the subject at all. We recognized that, in order to accomplish anything whatever, we had to prevent the English oil interests from obtaining a foothold in the United States, for if such a foothold were acquired, and British interests should grow in the future as they have grown elsewhere in the last few years, they would control a great percentage of the oil produced in this country.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, for the Senator's information, I am also informed—in fact, I know from a communication I have received from the State Department in answer to one of my own—that in the Orient, where English law controls, as in Hongkong, all foreigners have been eliminated from the British service in any capacity where there is superintendency or control. No longer can a foreigner serve a British corporation in any such capacity. A great many Americans have complained that, without fault of their own or complaint by their employers as to their efficiency or honesty or capability, they are summarily dismissed because they are Americans; and so Great Britain is going into the world now to protect her interests, or the interests of her nationals, even in matters of employment.

Mr. SMOOT. The American people ought to realize the fact that a British subject has every advantage in the world over an American citizen in investing in foreign lands. Wherever a Britisher goes, no matter in what part of the earth he invests, the British Government stands back of him and protects him in that investment, just as it has done with investors in Mexico in the past four years. Britishers were not murdered in Mexico, as Americans have been. Their interests were protected, as far as it was possible for what government there was in Mexico to protect them; and whenever any outrage was committed against a British subject or his interest in Mexico an apology was immediately made and the matter was righted. Not so with the American citizen; and it seems to me that that is one reason why a British subject to-day is willing to risk his money in hunting for oil anywhere in the world; because he feels that his investment is safe, for when an Englishman invests his money in a foreign land the British Government is back of him, and sees that his money is protected and all the interests that he may have in a foreign land.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, one word. The Senator, then, will agree with me that he is in error when he says that Great Britain does not discriminate against foreigners.

Mr. SMOOT. That is not a discrimination against foreigners. That is just protecting her own citizens, which America ought to do.

Mr. PHELAN. If they deny Americans, for instance, the right to own stock in their corporations, and look to their dismissal from service in which they have distinguished themselves for British corporations, it is certainly a discrimination against Americans, as it is a discrimination against all foreigners.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, if that is the case, the provision in the oil-leasing bill would apply to England.

Mr. PHELAN. It certainly does, I think.

Mr. SMOOT. Then British subjects, in the language of that act, could not—

By stock ownership, stock holding, or stock control own any interest in any lease acquired under the provisions of this act.

I recognize the fact, as I said before, that that applies only to oil produced on reservations and upon Government-owned lands. As to privately owned lands, of course, there is no law and, in my opinion, there could be no law that would prevent it.

Mr. PHELAN. Lest there be confusion, it is understood that the law the Senator has just read applies only to acquisitions on the public domain?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, with reference to the suggestion about an embargo, I looked into this matter somewhat in connection with the merchant marine bill that our committee is preparing. I felt very much like trying to have inserted in that bill a provision authorizing the President to issue an embargo, in case he deemed it necessary, with reference to oil. We were rather forced, however, to the conclusion which the Senator from Utah has just stated, that probably in time of peace that would be unconstitutional; that we could not invest him with that power. I am not absolutely sure of that. It does seem to me that where the interests of the Nation are so vitally concerned, where the very life of the Government itself is at stake, as well as the interests of individuals, we can find the power somewhere, even along that line; but I do not think we need to be driven to an embargo proposition.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, at the time when the potash situation was so threatened, when Germany undertook to control the potash fields of this country, I thought it was proper to introduce a bill placing an embargo upon the shipment of all potash from this country. I had that bill referred to the Department of Justice for an opinion, and the opinion that was given at that time was that under the Constitution it could not be done.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of Washington. Of course, the Department of Justice sometimes is in error on legal propositions, just as other legal experts sometimes commit errors.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I was going to ask the Senator from Washington if he does not think perhaps it would be more conducive to proper protection if we would not consider so much placing an embargo on exportation in this trade, but rather prepare in every possible way to protect American interests in other countries in order to increase the supply there, particularly in Mexico, where American interests for many years have had no protection, with the result that the oil supply from Mexico has been greatly reduced.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have affirmed that two or three times during the discussion to-day, and other Senators have taken the same position; and I think there is hardly anybody on the floor who does not stand for a position of that kind.

I do believe, Mr. President, that it will not be very long until we have a tariff bill passed by Congress under which provision will be made for the proper protection of the interests of this Government, and a method provided under which, when we make certain concessions, we will also receive concessions that are of benefit to us; and I believe that in that way we can pretty well take care of the oil situation, if it is not cared for in any other way.

But, continuing with this interview:

Sir Mackay stated that the most important development of the week was the Washington report that the United States Government was alarmed by the oil situation.

"That is not a new discovery," he writes. "Oil men of the United States have been aware of the situation for a good deal more than a year, but Congress and the country have slumbered. The average man was vaguely aware that America was a huge oil tank, and never being troubled by any scarcity of motor spirits, has taken it for granted that oil was as inexhaustible a product as apples. Unhappily for him, but happily for us, his eyes have been opened too late."

It may be too late for us to get direct possession of oil resources or of a supply of oil throughout the country, but Great Britain and the other nations of the world are not absolutely independent of the United States. They must have many things that we alone can furnish them, and that is—well, call it a club if you want to—that is a club that we have in our hands, and I am in favor of using it.

Now, Mr. President, I want to call attention to the production of oil in the country since 1913.

The crude petroleum production in 1913 was, in round numbers, 248,000,000 barrels.

In 1914 it was 265,000,000 barrels.

In 1915, 281,000,000 barrels.

In 1916, 300,000,000 barrels.

In 1917, 335,000,000 barrels, of a value of $522,000,000.

But, Mr. President, in 1918 we exported from this country, sent abroad to other countries, took from our own supply for the future and preserved for the future supply of their country, refined oil of the value of $289,000,000, or one-half the total value of all the crude petroleum produced in this country in 1917.

Mr. President, it seems to me that those simple facts should make us study and see what we can do with reference to keeping at home the supply we have for the future. It is something, of course, to have this product in the world trade at the present time; but, Mr. President, we must look to the future as well as the present, and if we exhaust our own supply now it will cost us far more in the future to make it up.

Mr. President, in this morning's Post I find an article headed:

French fear grip of oil combines. Nation's serious situation is revealed in warm debate by deputies. Seek to control imports—

And so forth. I shall not take the time to read this article, but I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post of Wednesday, Apr. 28, 1920.]

FRENCH FEAR GRIP OF OIL COMBINES—NATION'S SERIOUS SITUATION IS REVEALED IN WARM DEBATE BY DEPUTIES—SEEK TO CONTROL IMPORTS—SPEECHES REVEAL VIRTUAL ULTIMATUM TO UNITED STATES DURING THE WAR—DEAL WITH STANDARD CO. ASSAILED.

PARIS, April 27.

Developments in the San Remo conference and elsewhere showing that oil is steadily becoming an increasingly important factor in world politics provoked a debate in the French Chamber of Deputies regarding France's position in the face of this new weapon.

The charge was made by several deputies that France, without her own supply of oil, is at the mercy of a private oil pool of 10 French firms affiliated with two "oil mastodons" which control the world's oil supply—the Standard Oil Co. and the Royal Dutch Co., the latter being controlled by the English trust, in which it has been reported the British Government is buying an interest.

BROUGHT UP IN BUDGET.

The oil question is brought up in an article of the new budget which would give the Government control of the sale and distribution of oil in France, but not its importation, which it was charged, would be again in the hands of the oil pool.

A demand by Socialist deputies for Government control of importation, as well, led to the declaration by the Government that if this were adopted the trusts would refuse to deliver their products. The Government announced, however, that its experts would start immediately studying ways to "free the nation from the grip of foreign oil companies," and added that oil is now being sought in the French colonial possessions of Algeria, Madagascar, and Indo-China, and a little had been found already at some places.

The debate brought out that oil was becoming more important than coal and that the French supply was only a tenth of the nation's needs. The gravity of France's situation was emphasized in heated debate when it was disclosed that Clemenceau in December, 1917, cabled a virtual ultimatum to President Wilson demanding that America send oil to France immediately. The appeal had to be renewed two weeks later, it was charged, after Andre Tardieu, then French high commissioner to the United States, who had been negotiating with the Standard and Royal Dutch companies, complained of secret maneuvers to prevent him from buying oil.

ACCUSES FRENCH POOL.

M. Barthe charged that the French oil pool had inspired these maneuvers and that their profits a year ago were 50 per cent of their capitalization. M. Tardieu confirmed the fact that he had met with resistance from the refiners.

M. Barthe charged that the budget proposed by M. Francois-Marsal, minister of finance, would deliver France to the American oil trust. In answer to the direct question whether it was impossible for the Government to buy oil from the Standard and Royal Dutch companies and fix the price, the finance minister said it was not utterly impossible but that one of these two companies would probably refuse the Government oil. It was intimated that the Government had information which it could not make public concerning this situation, and at its request this article in the budget was postponed.

WAR PROFIT REALIZED.

During the war the Government did the importing under the allied economic pool arrangement and realized a profit despite the attempt to sell at cost, which is now adduced as showing how the oil trusts are again to profit through the control of oil importation.

Commenting on the debate, Humanite, the Socialist organ, credits the socialists with having exposed the Standard Oil trick and prevented the adoption of the Government's proposal, which now goes over for further debate.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I just want to call attention, however, to this statement, which refers to the debate in the French Chamber of Deputies:

The debate brought out that oil was becoming more important than coal and that the French supply was only a tenth of the nation's needs. The gravity of France's situation was emphasized in heated debate when it was disclosed that Clemenceau in December, 1917, cabled a virtual ultimatum to President Wilson demanding that America send oil to France immediately. The appeal had to be renewed two weeks later, it was charged, after Andre Tardieu, then French high commissioner to the United States, who had been negotiating with the Standard and Royal Dutch companies, complained of secret maneuvers to prevent him from buying oil.

Mr. President, if we can not control these great corporations, that would really endanger the safety of the world in order to promote their own welfare and their own interests, then, indeed, have we come to a dangerous pass. I believe that the Government has the power, somewhere and somehow, to do it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am compelled to leave the Chamber for a few moments on official business. I have an amendment which I intended to offer to the bill. It authorizes the President of the United States to make an investigation with a view to acquiring oil lands in other countries for the use of the Navy. Upon further consideration I have determined not to offer that amendment, but I offer the following resolution and ask that it be read and lie upon the table. To-morrow morning I shall invite the attention of the Senate to it and ask for its adoption.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 354) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be directed to report to the Senate whether or not it is necessary or would be advantageous for the United States to acquire oil lands in foreign countries for naval purposes; and if so, what steps should be taken to acquire such lands.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie on the table. The question is on the committee amendment on page 5 as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the next amendment passed over.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 5, line 6, after the word "assistants," insert the words "at Washington, D. C., and elsewhere."

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On the same page, line 7, strike out "$30,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$50,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is in Committee of the Whole and open to further amendment.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to an amendment which was adopted yesterday. Yesterday there was offered and adopted an amendment to give officers and enlisted men in the Navy six months' pay as a gratuity, as is provided for in the Army, in cases of death from wounds, and so forth, in the military service, not the result of their own misconduct. We left out the word "nurses." The Army act included nurses, and it seems to me that the nurses in the Navy should have the same privilege as the enlisted men. The department called my attention to it.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the amendment be stated, Mr. President.

Mr. SWANSON. In the amendment we adopted yesterday there is given to the estate of a man who dies from wounds in the naval service six months' pay, the same as is given in the Army. The word "nurse" was left out. I ask unanimous consent that the word "nurse" be inserted. It was an oversight when the department sent it in.

Mr. LODGE. It should go in.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there is no objection, the vote whereby the amendment was agreed to will be reconsidered. The Secretary will state the amendment of the Senator from Virginia to the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 32, in the amendment to follow line 13, insert the words "or nurse" after the words "enlisted man," so as to make the amendment read:

That hereafter, immediately upon official notification of the death from wounds or disease, not the result of his own misconduct, of any officer, enlisted man, or nurse on the active list of the Regular Navy or Regular Marine Corps, or on the retired list when on active duty, the Paymaster General of the Navy shall cause to be paid to the widow, and if there be no widow to the child or children, and if there be no widow or child to any other dependent relative of such officer, enlisted man, or nurse previously designated by him, an amount equal to six months' pay at the rate received by such officer, enlisted man, or nurse at the date of his or her death. The Secretary of the Navy shall establish regulations requiring each officer and enlisted man or nurse having no wife or child to designate the proper dependent relative to whom this amount shall be paid in case of his death. Said amount shall be paid from funds appropriated for the pay of the Navy and Marine Corps: Provided, That nothing in this section or in other existing legislation shall be construed as making the provisions of this section applicable to officers or enlisted men of any forces of the Navy of the United States other than those of the Regular Navy and Marine Corps, and nothing in this section shall be construed to apply in commissioned grades to any officers except those holding permanent or provisional appointments in the Regular Navy or Marine Corps.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. Under "Pay of the Navy," on page 32, insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey shall have the rank, pay, and emoluments of a captain in the Navy, and that hereafter he shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, from the list of commissioned officers of the Coast and Geodetic Survey not below the rank of commander for a term of four years, and he may be reappointed for further periods of four years each.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, a moment ago the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] offered an amendment to include nurses in the amendment adopted by the Senate yesterday in relation to the six months' allowance for enlisted men and officers who die in service. The same provision is carried for the enlisted men in the Army, and I have an amendment adding a proviso to the amendment adopted yesterday, to include enlisted men in the Coast Guard Service. If it is in order, I offer it as a proviso to the amendment adopted yesterday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The vote by which the amendment was agreed to will have to be reconsidered.

Mr. CALDER. I move that the vote be reconsidered for the purpose of adding the proviso which I send to the desk.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment to the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. Add at the end of the amendment the following proviso:

Provided, That the provision of this section shall apply to the officers and enlisted men of the Coast Guard, and the Secretary of the Treasury will cause payment to be made accordingly.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. KING. I offer the following amendment, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. Add a new section at the end of the bill, as follows:

SEC. —. The President may, in his discretion, direct the sale in such manner, at such price, not less than the original cost price, and upon such terms as he may deem proper, of torpedo-boat destroyers, built for the prosecution of the war, not to exceed 50 in number. All moneys received from the sale of said vessels shall be deposited by the Secretary of the Navy in the Treasury.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. THOMAS. I should like to have some explanation of the amendment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, as I understand the facts, we have more than 250 of the boats of the character described in the amendment. The greater portion of them are unnecessary. They are in the docks, unmanned and unneeded, many of them rusting and suffering material deterioration. There is a market for some of these boats. England is selling some of hers of the same character, I am advised. There was talk a few weeks ago of the United States selling some of the boats of this type, and it is alleged that there was objection made, or intimation of objection, by some of the South American Republics to a disposition by the United States of these boats. But thereupon Great Britain began disposing of the same type boats to South American Republics.

Mr. McCORMICK. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Mr. McCORMICK. To what sale by Great Britain to South American Republics does the Senator allude?

Mr. KING. My information is that sales were made to Argentina, if not to Brazil, of a number of torpedo-boat destroyers.

Mr. McCORMICK. Does not the Senator refer to the transfer of a number of ships under the British flag to Chile?

Mr. KING. No; I do not have that in mind, although I am familiar with the statements respecting that matter. But, Mr. President, my information is that the United States have a large number of these torpedo-boat destroyers which are not necessary. They are rapidly becoming unfit for service and will within a comparatively short time be junked. The announcement merely authorizes the President to make disposition of not exceeding 50 in number of these unnecessary boats. Of course, he would not dispose of them unless it met with the approval of the naval authorities, the naval strategists, and those who are familiar with the subject and charged with the naval defense of our country.

This amendment is in the interest of the Navy. We are advised that the only way to maintain a navy in proper form, to keep it up to the highest standard of efficiency, is to get rid of all obsolete types of boats and any not required, to keep a proper balance and relation. England has scrapped hundreds of war vessels. It has been said that the German ships sunk at Scapa Flow were of no particular value, though they cost millions. The types of war vessels rapidly change. We should dispose of the old types—those not necessary for a properly balanced war fleet. My information is that we have absolutely no use for many of the torpedo-boat destroyers and that they can be sold for cost, if we will act promptly. I might add that under continuing contracts made during the war we are receiving torpedo-boat destroyers, several being added to the Navy each month.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, we have had no recommendation from the department whatever, no suggestion of it from the department, so far as I know, and it seems to me that with almost no knowledge of the situation—except that we have a very large number of torpedo-boat destroyers, owing to that being the ship chiefly demanded in the war—to enter on it by a general provision at the end of the bill is not the way to deal with a matter of such importance. If it is thought well for the Secretary to do it, he is certain to let us know, and then he could get the authority very easily. This, of course, is a change in general law, because the Secretary has no authority to sell the ships of the United States, and I think it had better go over. I make the point of order that the amendment is general legislation.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator withhold his point of order just a moment?

Mr. LODGE. I will withhold it.

Mr. KING. I am entirely willing, if it meets the approval of the chairman of the committee, to have the amendment agreed to with the understanding that in conference, if the Secretary of the Navy or other naval authorities do not deem it wise, proper, and necessary, the conferees may disagree.

Mr. LODGE. I do not see how we can make an agreement of that sort with the House conferees. We can not possibly bind them, and it seems to me wiser to let the amendment go over. We shall have another bill in December, and I think it is much wiser to let it go over until we get the recommendation of the department.

Mr. KING. I appreciate that it is subject to a point of order. Of course, if the Senator insists upon it, I have nothing further to say; but I am sure that an investigation will reveal the fact that we have more of these boats than are necessary, and that we ought to dispose of them, and dispose of them now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I move to strike out that part of the bill beginning with line 3, on page 55, down to and including the word "and," in line 15, and upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 55, line 3, strike out that line and all down to and including the word "and" in line 15 in the following words:

That no part of the appropriations made in this act shall be available for the salary or pay of any officer, manager, superintendent, foreman, or other person having charge of the work of any employee of the United States Government while making or causing to be made with a stop watch or other time-measuring device a time study of any job of any such employee between the starting and completion thereof, or of the movements of any such employee while engaged upon such work; nor shall any part of the appropriations made in this act be available to pay any premiums or bonus or cash reward to any employee in addition to his regular wages, except for suggestions resulting in improvements or economy in the operation of any Government plant and

The VICE PRESIDENT. On this amendment the Senator from Colorado asks for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Reading Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. EDGE (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN], and in his absence I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I observe that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN], with whom I have a pair, is not present. I transfer my pair to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and vote "yea."

Mr. NEW (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH]. Not knowing how he would vote on this proposition, I withhold my vote.

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG]. I transfer my pair to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] and vote "nay."

While I am on my feet I wish to announce that the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] is detained from the Senate on official business.

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] to the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] and vote "yea."

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. UNDERWOOD (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] to the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. KENDRICK. I have a general pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], which I transfer to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and vote "nay."

Mr. MCCORMICK (after having voted in the negative). I ask if the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. MCCORMICK. I have a standing pair with the junior Senator from Nevada and therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. GLASS. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN], which I transfer to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] and vote "nay."

Mr. LODGE (after having voted in the negative). I observe that my pair, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], is not present. I transfer my pair with that Senator to the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. NEW. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] to the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] and vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM]. He is absent and I therefore withdraw my vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. ASHURST. I rise to announce that my colleague, the junior Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH], is unavoidably detained, and if present he would vote "nay."

The roll call resulted—yeas 8, nays 33, as follows:

YEAS—8.

Brandegee	New	Thomas	Wadsworth

The VICE PRESIDENT. On the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], the yeas are 8 and the nays are 33. There is not a quorum voting. Let the roll be called for a quorum.

The Reading Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Harris	Nelson	Smith, Ga.
Brandegee	Jones, Wash.	New	Smith, Md.
Capper	Kendrick	Nugent	Smoot
Chamberlain	Keyes	Overman	Sterling

Hale	Myers	Simmons	Warren

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-four Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The roll of absentees will be called.

The Reading Clerk called the names of the absent Senators.

Mr. COMER, Mr. CALDER, Mr. GRONNA, Mr. GAY, and Mr. WADSWORTH entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS].

The Reading Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. EDGE (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as previously, I withhold my vote.

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to the transfer of my pair which I previously made, I vote "nay."

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement of the transfer of my pair as I did on the last vote, I vote "yea."

Mr. NEW (when his name was called). I am paired for the day with the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH]. Being unable to obtain a transfer of my pair, and not knowing how that Senator if present would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM]. He being absent, I am unable to vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement concerning my pair and its transfer as heretofore, I vote "yea."

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] to the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. UNDERWOOD (when his name was called). Making the same announcement with reference to my pair that I made a few moments ago, I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. McCORMICK. In the absence of the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON], with whom I have a general pair, I withhold my vote.

Mr. GAY. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES], and therefore withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]. I am unable to obtain a transfer, and therefore withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. KNOX (after having voted in the negative). I notice on this roll call that the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] has not voted. I am paired with that Senator, and therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER];

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE];

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK];

The Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON];

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY];

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS];

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES];

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT];

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]; and

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Robinson].

The roll call resulted—yeas 9, nays 32, as follows:

The VICE PRESIDENT. On the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] the yeas are 9 and the nays are 32. The junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE], the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCORMICK], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GAY], the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN], and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] being present and not voting, but making a quorum, the amendment is rejected.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, when the motion of the Senator from Colorado was first made I voted against striking the provision out of the bill and to sustain it, and on the second roll call I voted to strike it out. I misunderstood the purport of the amendment at the time I cast my first vote.

I think this legislation is ill advised. I can see no reason why the Government should not be allowed to test the skill, the efficiency, and the competency of its employees in any way it sees proper. Neither can I see any reason why it should not be allowed to give a bonus to a faithful and a more efficient employee.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I notice that there is no provision in this bill for the completion of submarine stations. There is at my home city in Connecticut a station known as the New London Submarine Station. It is one of the most important in the country, and the Government has heretofore appropriated large sums of money for that station. It is not, however, completed. As I am informed by members of the committee, the department made no estimate for the completion of that station; but I do not know why an estimate for its completion was not submitted. The Representative from the district where the station is located inquired of the department and was informed by the Secretary that he did not intend to make any recommendation for the completion of the New London station, although I understand from constituents at home that it can not be completed without an additional appropriation.

Of course, I know it would be useless to present an amendment providing for its completion, because the amount has not been estimated for, and such an amendment would, therefore, be subject to a point of order; but I wish to say in this connection that when the next appropriation bill comes up in December—and the Senator from Massachusetts has just stated that there will be another appropriation bill at about that time—if the department can not give some reason why the appropriation which is needed for the completion of the station is not recommended, I shall urge the committee to make an appropriation on its own motion for that purpose.

There appears in the hearings just shown by one of the clerks of the committee a list of the contracts outstanding for that station; but, as I understand, there are many things needed which are not provided by the contracts, such as roads and walks, and other improvements necessary to make the station available.

I simply want to say, the station having been perfected to its present state and being of such vital necessity, that I shall insist that a proper appropriation be made for it in the next naval appropriation bill.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I do not know to what extent the Senator desires an appropriation to complete the submarine station to which he has referred. During the war appropriations were made for that station to make it effective—and it is a very effective station—and in the appropriation for ordnance and maintenance and repair there is carried an item of $30,000 to keep that station in repair. It is not so stated in specific language, but the Ordnance Department in submitting the items covering the entire sum needed for the different stations, submarine stations and others, made an estimate of $30,000 for repairs and to take care of the station at New London during the coming year.

I do not know to what the Senator from Connecticut refers when he speaks of his desire to secure an appropriation for the completion of the station. We made appropriations during the war—and they are continuing appropriations—and contracts were let to complete it in accordance with what was asked at that time; and the appropriations made in the pending bill for repairs, and so forth, will, I think, be sufficient to keep it in a good condition during the coming year.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I have no doubt that a proper estimate has been made for keeping the station in repair, but I doubt very much if an appropriation for maintenance could be used for the construction of new roads and sidewalks, which are a necessary part of the equipment of the station. While I can not speak authoritatively, I have been informed by the chamber of commerce of my home city that the station, which is of considerable extent, needs for the purpose of moving material from one part to another some roads, sidewalks, and so forth.

Mr. President, I find myself in a more or less embarrassing position on this question. Although the naval station is located in my home city and I have had representations made to me by the board of trade of that city that some appropriation is needed, I can not definitely state how much is required for the building of the roads and walks. So I shall ask the Senator from Vermont, the chairman of the committee, and the Senator from Virginia, if, for the purpose of getting information from the Secretary—for I have had no opportunity to procure it—they will consent to let the amendment I am about to suggest go to conference, and then eliminate it if the Secretary of the Navy is opposed to it or if the House does not agree to it?

Mr. SWANSON. What is the amendment?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. On page 26, line 16, there is a provision, beginning:

Submarine base, San Pedro, Calif.: Toward the development of a submarine base, $500,000.

I suggest that after line 24, at the bottom of page 26, the following be added:

Submarine base, New London, Conn.: Toward the completion of a submarine base at New London, Conn., $50,000.

I suggest that merely for the purpose of bringing it before the conference committee.

Mr. SWANSON. I have no objection to such an amendment going to conference, because it is one of the most important bases on the coast—it is the main base for submarines, which have proven a great factor in the recent war—with the assurance that if upon investigation we find that it is not needed the Senator would not feel that it should be insisted upon.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Oh, I shall have no complaint at all. I simply want it given some consideration.

Mr. SWANSON. I have no objection to its going into conference, so far as I am concerned.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. PAGE. I ask unanimous consent that the Secretary be authorized to correct all totals requiring correction.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. PAGE. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives upon the bill and amendments, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. PAGE, Mr. BALL, Mr. MCCORMICK, Mr. SWANSON, and Mr. SMITH of Maryland conferees on the part of the Senate.

THE BUILDING SITUATION.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the provisions of Senate resolution 350, authorizing the appointment of a committee of five Senators, consisting of three members of the majority party and two members of the minority party, to inquire into the general building situation and to report to the Senate before December 1, 1920, such measures as may be deemed necessary to stimulate and foster the development of construction work in all its forms, the Chair appoints the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT], and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GAY].

NATIONAL BUDGET SYSTEM.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, in order that it may be the unfinished business of the Senate at the conclusion of the morning hour to-morrow, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of H. R. 9783, being the so-called budget bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 9783) to provide a national budget system and an independent audit of Government accounts, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Special Committee on the National Budget with an amendment.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Illinois if he desires to proceed with the bill at this time?

Mr. McCORMICK. I do not. I moved that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill merely in order that it might be the unfinished business to-morrow.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 10 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, April 29, 1920, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, April 28, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, draw near to us, we beseech Thee, as we draw near to Thee, in faith, hope, and confidence in the overruling of Thy providence to the eternal good of Thy children.

The world is in sorrow and distress because of the waywardness of Thy children, and we pray that Thy spirit may dominate our hearts, that the lowering clouds which have settled down upon us may be dispersed by the light of heaven, and Thy kingdom come in all our hearts and Thy will be done in earth as in heaven through the glorious example of Thy son, Jesus Christ our Lord and Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, I am in receipt of a letter from Mr. E. O. Perry, a very prominent business man of Springfield, Ill., in which he suggests a way by which we might raise money to pay bonuses to the soldier boys. I believe it is worthy of consideration, and I ask unanimous consent that it be inserted in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the letter referred to. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object, has the gentleman transmitted the letter to the Ways and Means Committee?

Mr. WHEELER. I have not.

Mr. GARD. Is not that the proper place for it to go?

Mr. WHEELER. That is probably true.

Mr. GARD. The Ways and Means Committee is the committee that passes on this matter of bonus legislation.

Mr. WHEELER. I do not think it has any jurisdiction over the proposition suggested in this letter.

Mr. GARD. I do not believe that we should cumber the RECORD with a lot of letters, especially when the Ways and Means Committee is here and the gentleman who represents the steering committee.

Mr. WHEELER. It should go before another committee if it comes up at all.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. MCARTHUR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing the text of an address I delivered before the Advertising Club of the city of Baltimore last Wednesday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting an address which he delivered before the Advertising Club in the city of Baltimore last Wednesday. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 13266, being the District appropriation bill, disagree to all the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the District appropriation bill, disagree to all the Senate amendments, and asks for a conference. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman whether or not if, by action in another body for about the fifth time the almost unanimous action of this House on various occasions has been set aside and ignored and done away with, we are going to have the right to vote in this House on the half-and-half proposition before the Senate action is agreed to by the conferees?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I will state to the gentleman this, that I agree with all he has said. There have been a very great number of votes on this proposition. And I now, as a conferee, will state, furthermore, that before I consent to the restoration of the half-and-half this House will have to direct me by a vote to do so.

Mr. GARNER. Reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman if he has consulted with the probable conferee on this side of the House as to his action in this matter?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I presume the gentleman refers to Mr. BUCHANAN?

Mr. GARNER. Yes, sir.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I have not since this bill came from the Senate, but I think our previous conferences warrant me in saying that Mr. BUCHANAN and myself are virtually in accord on most of the items in this bill.

Mr. GARNER. It ought to be the custom, I think, in the House of Representatives, where a gentleman gets up and asks unanimous consent to take certain action in reference to bills that go to conference, to consult the minority side of the House, especially the man who is likely to be his conferee, in order that there might be some unanimity of action. We do not know—at least I do not know—but what the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN] might have some motion that he would want to make, or some suggestion, or some agreement, or something of that kind before he would wish to let this go to conference.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I can not say positively, but I am quite certain that Mr. BUCHANAN, if he were present, would give unanimous consent to a conference on this bill. However, if the gentleman wishes to make objection until the gentleman from Texas comes in, I will withdraw my request for the present.

Mr. GARNER. I wish you would.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I will.

EQUALIZATION OF PENSIONS.

Mr. FULLER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 9369, with Senate amendments, and ask that the House agree to all the amendments of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table and agree to the Senate amendments to a bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9369) to revise and equalize rates of pensions to certain soldiers, sailors, and marines of the Civil War, to certain widows, former widows, dependent parents and children of such soldiers, sailors, and marines, and to certain Army nurses, and granting pensions and increase of pensions in certain cases.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I recall that my colleague [Mr. BLACK] raised some objection to the consideration of this agreement the other day, and I do not see him at the moment on the floor of the House. I wonder if Mr. BLACK has withdrawn his objection?

Mr. FULLER of Illinois. I supposed he understood that the matter simply went over until this morning. The objection he made was to a matter that is not involved in the amendments at all.

Mr. GARNER. But he did not withdraw his objection yesterday.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say as to his colleague from Texas that he suggested that this bill go over until this morning.

Mr. GARNER. He did, and I thought the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FULLER] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHBROOK] would have sufficient interest in the bill to consult with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] in order to get him to withdraw his objection. Whether they did that or not I do not know.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I had a short conference with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] yesterday, and he said he would look into this bill. He did not say whether he would withdraw his objection or not. I want to say while I am on my feet that I think the objections he raised to this bill were very ill founded. He contended that the widows of the soldiers of the late war ought to have the same pension as the widows of the soldiers of the Civil War, while the widows of the late war are 18 or 20 year old girls and the widows of the Civil War are 75 to 80 years old. There is no justice in such a contention.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, that is simply a mere matter of opinion, and I am sure the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHBROOK] will never get together on the question or the policy of pensions. I shall object until they see the gentleman from Texas.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

The SPEAKER. To-day is Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it may be in order to-morrow to call up Senate bill 1699, providing for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service and to consider the same.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that to-morrow it may in order to call up the Senate retirement bill and consider it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Are you going to consider it under the general rules of the House?

Mr. MONDELL. My request was simply to bring it up for consideration.

Mr. GARNER. That will enable you to have an hour's debate and then move the previous question.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It is a Union Calendar bill, and the House will have to go into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MONDELL. At that time I suppose there will be some arrangement made satisfactory to both sides as to the time of general debate. My request saves the necessity of getting a rule and taking up time on the rule.

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the committee, Mr. LEHLBACH, who has this matter in charge, stated to me yesterday morning that he was going to have a rule brought in that was going to prescribe the amount of debate and limit it, and that it was going to be limited entirely to the bill, and so forth. Probably that rule is now resting peacefully in the hip pocket of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] and this is merely a preliminary.

Mr. MONDELL. No. There is no necessity for having a rule, providing unanimous consent is given to take up the matter in the usual way, and when that is determined the House can determine as to the general debate.

Mr. GARRETT rose.

Mr. MCARTHUR. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. MONDELL. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

Mr. GARRETT. I have an impression, obtained from somewhere, somehow, that there has been a ruling by the Chair that when a bill is taken up by unanimous consent it is considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Have I the correct impression about that? Does that apply only to private bills?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I assumed in making my request that the bill would be considered in the ordinary way. Unless unanimous consent is given at the time by the House, it will be necessary to go into Committee of the Whole on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will so interpret it.

Mr. GARRETT. While I am on my feet, may I make an inquiry of the Chair?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, it has been suggested that perhaps gentlemen will understand the request better if I put it in the form of a request that it may be in order to move to go into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of this bill to-morrow morning.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that it may be in order to move to go into Committee of the Whole to-morrow morning for the consideration of the retirement bill. Is there objection?

Mr. MCARTHUR. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman if his intention or plan is to dispose of this bill to-morrow? Does he consider it reasonable and possible?

Mr. MONDELL. I think we probably will be able to dispose of it to-morrow, although I do not know. No one can tell.

Mr. SIMS. May I suggest to the gentleman that I think his request is absolutely for the benefit of the legislation itself?

Mr. MONDELL. I think so.

Mr. SIMS. I had the honor of reporting such a bill the last time, and I know it will be better to report it under the general rules of the House than to abrogate or set aside those general rules. I hope there will be no objection to the gentleman's request.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The request being that it shall be in order to-morrow to move to go into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of this bill, if the bill should not be passed to-morrow will this order continue?

Mr. MONDELL. I assume that the bill would be the unfinished business if it were not disposed of to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would think that would depend upon whether the previous question had been ordered or not. If the previous question were not ordered, it would not be considered as unfinished business.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I think the gentleman should make the request that the bill should have a privileged status, so that it would be in order to take it up at any time, and give notice that it will be taken up to-morrow.

Mr. MONDELL. That is what I had in mind. That is my view of the rule.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. There have been rulings to the contrary.

Mr. MONDELL. If there is any question about it, it should be understood that we would take the bill up and it would be unfinished business until it was disposed of.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It seems to me if that bill is taken up to-morrow, it ought to be finished to-morrow. There is nothing in it that is difficult to understand, whether you are for it or against it. If everybody talked about that who wants to talk about it, they would be talking about it next week. I do hope it will be finished to-morrow.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. You can never tell about it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The gentleman knows as well as I do that 50 men will want to speak about this simply in order to get their names in the newspapers.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That would be a good reason, then, for not finishing it to-morrow, in the event we take it up to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wyoming?

There was no objection.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW—11 O'CLOCK A. M.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-night it adjourn until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-night it adjourn until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. MONDELL. I make that request in order that there may be that much more time for the consideration of the bill. If we get through, we can adjourn early.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I object; and I will tell you about this 11 o'clock business. If the House would go to work and clean up the business in this House that ought to be cleaned up, I am willing to agree to meet at 11 o'clock every day until we get through with it, and when we get through with it go home. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN of Illinois. May I make a suggestion to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It was a very frequent practice while the gentleman from Missouri was occupying the position of Speaker for the majority leader, Mr. UNDERWOOD, and afterwards the majority leader, Mr. KITCHIN, to ask that the House meet at 11 o'clock. I never objected——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Well, you were very kind——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I never objected on this side of the House, although frequently it was very inconvenient, and I refrained from objecting on the theory that the majority of the House ought to have the right to say without compulsion when the House should meet in order to get through with the business of the House.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, I have no criticism to make of the gentleman's objection. It is more or less inconvenient to meet at 11 o'clock; I realize that, and I will not quarrel with the gentleman if he persists in his view of the matter. But I think we are, all of us, anxious to dispose of this bill, if possible, to-morrow.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If you will agree to dispose of this bill to-morrow, I will withdraw the objection.

Mr. MONDELL. I can not promise the gentleman that. I hope that that is what will happen.

Mr. QUIN. I will not agree to it at all. For that reason I will object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLACK. I object, Mr. Speaker.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

On April 24, 1920:

H. R. 11578. An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 12581. An act granting the consent of Congress to the village and township of Shelly, Norman County, Minn., and the township of Caledonia, Traill County, N. Dak., and their successors and assigns, to construct a bridge across the Red River of the North on the boundary line between the said States.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 12956. An act extending the time for constructing a bridge across the Bayou Bartholomew, in the State of Arkansas;

H. R. 13253. An act to grant the consent of Congress to the Elmer Red River Bridge Co. to construct a bridge across the Red River;

H. R. 10917. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the National Education Association of the United States"; and

H. J. Res. 301. Joint resolution to authorize the Secretary of War to grant revocable licenses for the removal of sand and gravel from Fort Douglas Military Reservation for industrial purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 13677. An act making appropriations to supply a deficiency in the appropriations for the Federal control of transportation systems and to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 13266. An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2448) for relief of certain officers of the United States Army, and for other purposes, had requested a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN, Mr. CAPPER, and Mr. MYERS as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

EQUALIZATION OF PENSIONS.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] is present, and he informs me that he will not object to the consideration of the Fuller pension bill.

Mr. FULLER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request to take from the Speaker's table H. R. 9369, with Senate amendments, and that the House agree to all of the amendments of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table a House bill with Senate amendments, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill (H. R. 9369) to revise and equalize rates of pension to certain soldiers, sailors, and marines of the Civil War, to certain widows, former widows, dependent parents and children of such soldiers, sailors, and marines, and to certain Army nurses, and granting pensions and increase of pensions in certain cases.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLACK. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I want it made clear that I am opposed to this bill, but I withdraw my objection to the request for present consideration, because I realize that I can not by my opposition to the bill prevent its passage and consideration at a later date. I realize that no substantial gain could be made by delaying the vote.

Mr. FULLER of Illinois. I thank the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FULLER] included the proposition that the House agree to the amendments of the Senate. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Let the amendments be reported.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, the Journal ought not to show that unanimous consent was given to agree to these amendments. Why not let the Journal and RECORD show that the gentleman moved to concur in the Senate amendments?

Mr. FULLER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I think that is the proper course, and I move to agree to the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the amendments ought to be reported. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The amendments of the Senate were read.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. FULLER of Illinois, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendments were agreed to was laid on the table.

BILLS ON THE UNION CALENDAR.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I want to submit a parliamentary inquiry. I have gotten the impression that there has been a ruling that where unanimous consent is given for the consideration of a bill on the Union Calendar it will be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Am I correct about that?

The SPEAKER. The Chair, on unanimous-consent day, or else on Private Calendar day, made that ruling. It reverted to a practice that was formerly prevalent in the House, the Chair thinking that it saved the time that it took to make one motion.

Mr. GARRETT. I am not quarreling with the decision of the Chair, but it was made at a time when I was necessarily away, and I simply desired to get clear in my own mind the scope of the ruling for future guidance. Do I understand that the rule goes no further than bills upon the Unanimous Consent Calendar and the Private Calendar?

The SPEAKER. The Chair had that in mind. It was on one of those days when the Chair made the ruling, and he had that exclusively in mind. Whether to extend it to any such request as was made this morning, the Chair will reflect on that.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

The SPEAKER. To-day is Calendar Wednesday, and the call rests with the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures. When the House adjourned on last Calendar Wednesday there was pending a bill which the Clerk will report.

STANDARDS FOR HAMPERS, ETC.

The Clerk read the title of the bill (H. R. 12350) to fix standards for hampers, round stave baskets, and splint baskets for fruits and vegetables, to establish a standard box for apples, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar, and the House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL] will take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 12350) to fix standards for hampers, round stave baskets, and splint baskets for fruits and vegetables, to establish a standard box for apples, and for other purposes, with Mr. DOWELL in the chair.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, we ought to have a quorum here to consider this bill, and I make the point of no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman makes the point of no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and twelve Members present, a quorum.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Chairman, at the time the House adjourned on last Calendar Wednesday I think there was pending an amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

The CHAIRMAN. When the House adjourned on last Calendar Wednesday the pending question was on the adoption of the committee amendment at the top of page 3, with an amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer a substitute to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers a substitute, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the amendment offered by myself be again reported, so that Members can understand what it was.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection, the Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GARRETT to the committee amendment: Page 3, line 2, after the word "inches," strike out the remainder of the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now report the substitute offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. VESTAL].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VESTAL as a substitute to the amendment offered by Mr. GARRETT: Page 3, line 7, after the word "inches," strike out the remainder of the line, and all of lines 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Chairman, I offer this substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] because I believe we ought to keep the general contour or style of the baskets or hampers sought to be standardized. The amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] simply strikes out the remainder of the paragraph after line 2 and leaves in the paragraph the standardization of the capacity of the hamper or basket. I think it is well not only to do that, but that the style of the hamper should also be included in this paragraph. The evidence before the committee was to the effect that in the Bureau of Markets an investigation has been going on for a year and a half or two years with the manufacturers and with the transportation lines, and that it was practically agreed between them that it was necessary really to have uniformity in the shape of these baskets so as to be more economically transported. It is for that reason that I believe a uniformity ought to be established in the style of these baskets because it is worth something to keep that as well as to keep the size down in number.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VESTAL. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT. The objection which I undertook to suggest to the House was predicated very largely on whether we had the legal power under the Constitution to do what is sought to be done. I do not know that there is any particular objection, assuming that we have the power, to retaining the provision about the diameter. I do not know whether we have the power or not. I do not know that there is any objection if the other parts of the bill, as I assume they do, properly safeguard the ordinary everyday use of these things in the homes and local markets.

But there were gentlemen whose objection went further than any objection that I suggested, and that was that the effect of this would be to determine the material out of which the receptacles were made. The gentleman's amendment proposes to strike that out. But may I call the attention of the gentleman and ask his opinion about the language that does remain in, namely, "the inside diameter between the staves at the upper edge of the top inside hoop," and so on? Will not the effect of that be to in a way restrict the material out of which the receptacles are made? In other words, would it not virtually compel wood? I think it was the gentleman from New York [Mr. MACGREGOR] who stated that there were now in use receptacles made of a composition of some kind.

Mr. VESTAL. It was the purpose of my substitute, I will say, to try to correct that very proposition. I thought that this substitute would take care of that.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VESTAL. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. If the measure is left in the way the gentleman proposes, would not the construction of the container be confined to wood? Is it not entirely possible that containers may be made hereafter otherwise than from wood? Possibly they may be made of wire or of some other substance than wood, such as hard, corrugated strawboard capable of carrying vegetables. One criticism I have is that the basket or hamper, if the gentleman's idea is carried out, must be constructed of wood, and that to use anything else would be penalized by section 7.

Mr. VESTAL. I will say that that is not the purpose.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. But I submit to my friend that that would be the construction if the bill was adopted with the section under consideration as it now stands.

Mr. GARRETT. It has occurred to me from a hasty reading that if the gentleman would further agree to strike out the words, in line 4, "between staves," and also the words "inside hoop," that the situation he desires to create will have been reached.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Chairman, I will agree to that further amendment. I think that would be all right.

Mr. MONTAGUE. If you agree to that amendment, the gentleman will realize that a similar correction should be made in other portions of the bill.

Mr. VESTAL. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as modified by the gentleman from Indiana.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VESTAL as a substitute for the amendment offered by Mr. GARRETT: Page 3, line 4, after the word "diameter," strike out the words "between staves," and in line 4, after the word "top," strike out the words "inside hoop." And after the word "inches," in line 7, strike out the remainder of the paragraph.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, the amendment does not obviate the objection that instead of prescribing a standard of measure you are prescribing a style of container. I think that when you look at the justification for this in the Constitution you will see that you are without power to enact it in that form. It says that they shall have the right to fix the standard of weights and measures. You fix that by saying how many cubic inches there shall be in five-eighths of a bushel hamper. When you have done that you have exhausted your power; you can not go on and say that that hamper shall be of a certain shape, so many inches in diameter on the bottom and so many at the top. You are probably doing something that may be desirable, but something that the Constitution has not conferred upon Congress the power to do. It is a matter that will certainly be questioned.

I know of a gentleman who manufactures his own crates for shipping peaches. He has enough manufactured already to last for two years. Now, you say to him you have got to have so many inches at the bottom and so many at the top. That means that he has got to throw away everything he has on hand. Not only that, but hereafter he has got to manufacture in a certain way, and if his mechanics—who are not supposed to be skilled mechanics—should make a mistake he is penalized for using it. Not only that, but you might just as well, and it would be just as desirable, to put a clause in that they have got to be honestly and faithfully filled—no holes in the packing; that they have to be filled to the top; and everybody realizes that you can not do that. I submit that the whole proposition is beyond the power of Congress, and that it is going to cause a great deal of confusion. I am opposed to the substitute, and I think the Garrett amendment ought to be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the modification of the amendment by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. VESTAL]? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question now is upon the substitute of the gentleman from Indiana to the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment reported?

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection, the amendment will be again reported as modified.

Mr. PARRISH. Mr. Chairman, at the same time may we not have the Garrett amendment reported?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the Garrett amendment and the Vestal amendment as modified.

There was no objection, and the Clerk again reported the Garrett amendment and the Vestal amendment.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a practical suggestion before the vote is taken. If this measure is adopted, then the containers will have to be used for the transportation of the commodities named. That I suppose is conceded. Has the committee taken into consideration the fact that transportation is very different under different conditions? The distinction I now have in mind is between the movement by freight and the movement by express. Looking at the thing from a practical point of view, one sort of container might be necessary or desirable in shipping by freight and another kind of container might be desirable in shipping by express. The Interstate Commerce Commission has stressed that point. In considering this matter of standardization, I submit that fact to the consideration of the gentleman from Indiana.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the substitute.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TILLMAN) there were—ayes 35, noes 40.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and seven Members present; a quorum.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers on the vote.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the request for tellers comes too late.

The CHAIRMAN. It does not come too late. Those in favor of ordering tellers will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Forty-three gentlemen have risen, a sufficient number.

The Chair appointed Mr. VESTAL and Mr. GARRETT to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 67, noes 59.

So the substitute was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment as amended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the committee amendment as amended.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 13, within the parentheses, strike out the letter "c" and insert the letter "d."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, this bill as reported by the committee is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the standard hampers for fruits and vegetables shall be 1-peck hamper, ½-bushel hamper, 1-bushel hamper, and 1½-bushel hamper, which, respectively, shall be of the capacity and conform to the specifications set forth in this section.

(a) The standard 1-peck hamper shall contain 537.6 cubic inches, and conform to the following specifications: The inside diameter between staves at the upper edge of the top inside hoop shall be 10⅜ inches; the inside diameter of the bottom shall be 6½ inches; the inside length of the staves shall be 9⅜ inches; the inside top hoop shall be one-tenth of an inch thick and set with its upper edge even with the upper ends of the staves; each stave shall be not less than one-tenth of an inch thick and 10½ inches long; and the bottom piece shall be one-half of an inch thick.

(b) The standard one-half bushel hamper shall contain 1,075.21 cubic inches, and conform to the following specifications: The inside diameter between staves at the upper edge of the top inside hoop shall be 13 inches; the inside diameter of the bottom shall be 8½ inches; the inside length of the staves shall be 12 inches; the inside top hoop shall be one-ninth of an inch thick and set with its upper edge even with the upper ends of the staves; each stave shall be not less than one-tenth of an inch thick and 12⅝ inches long; and the bottom piece shall be five-eighths of an inch thick.

(c) The standard 1-bushel hamper shall contain 2,150.42 cubic inches, and conform to the following specifications: The inside diameter between staves at the upper edge of the top inside hoop shall be 15½ inches; the inside diameter of the bottom shall be 9 inches; the inside length of the staves to the upper edge of the top inside hoop shall be 19 inches; the inside hoop shall be one-eighth of an inch thick and set with its upper edge three-eighths of an inch below the upper ends of the staves; each stave shall be not less than one-eighth of an inch thick and 20 inches long; and the bottom piece shall be five-eighths of an inch thick.

(d) The standard 1½-bushel hamper shall contain 3,225.63 cubic inches and conform to either of the following specifications:

(1) The inside diameter between staves at the upper edge of the top inside hoop shall be 16¾ inches; the inside diameter of the bottom shall be 9 inches; the inside length of the staves to the upper edge of the top inside hoop shall be 26 inches; the inside top hoop shall be one-eighth of an inch thick and set with its upper edge three-eighths of an inch below the upper ends of the staves; each stave shall be not less than one-sixth of an inch thick and 27 inches long; and the bottom piece shall be five-eighths of an inch thick.

(2) The inside diameter between staves at the upper edge of the top inside hoop shall be 16⅜ inches; the inside diameter of the bottom shall be 10 inches; the inside length of the staves to the upper edge of the top inside hoop shall be 23 inches; the inside top hoop shall be one-eighth of an inch thick and set with its upper edge three-eighths of an inch below the upper ends of the staves; each stave shall be not less than one-eighth of an inch thick and 24 inches long; and the bottom piece shall be five-eighths of an inch thick.

SEC. 2. That the standard round stave basket for fruits and vegetables shall be the one-half bushel basket, 1-bushel basket, 1½-bushel basket, and 2-bushel basket, which, respectively, shall be of the capacity and conform to the specifications set forth in this section.

(a) The one-half bushel round stave basket shall contain 1,075.21 cubic inches and conform to the following specifications: The inside diameter at the upper inner edge of the top inside hoop shall be 13⅜ inches; the average inside depth shall be not less than 8½ inches; the web shall consist of 20 intersecting staves, each not less than one-eighteenth of an inch thick and of such length that they will form the sides and bottom of a basket which shall contain 16 quarts, standard dry measure.

(b) The 1-bushel round stave basket shall contain 2,150.42 cubic inches and conform to the following specifications: The inside diameter at the upper inner edge of the top inside hoop shall be 17 inches; the average inside depth shall be not less than 10⅜ inches; the web shall consist of 20 intersecting staves, each not less than one-eighteenth of an inch thick and of such length that they will form the sides and bottom of a basket which shall contain 32 quarts, standard dry measure.

(c) The 1½-bushel round stave basket shall contain 3,225.63 cubic inches and conform to the following specifications: The inside diameter at the upper inner edge of the top inside hoop shall be 19⅝ inches; the average inside depth shall be not less than 12⅝ inches; the web shall consist of 24 intersecting staves, each not less than one-sixteenth of an inch thick and of such length that they will form the sides and bottom of a basket which shall contain 48 quarts, standard dry measure.

(d) The 2-bushel round stave basket shall contain 4,300.84 cubic inches and conform to the following specifications: The inside diameter at the upper inner edge of the top inside hoop shall be 21 inches; the average inside depth shall be not less than 14 inches; the web shall consist of 24 intersecting staves, each not less than one-sixteenth of an inch thick and of such length that they will form the sides and bottom of a basket which shall contain 64 quarts, standard dry measure.

SEC. 3. That the standard splint baskets for fruits and vegetables shall be the 4-quart basket, 8-quart basket, 12-quart basket, 16-quart basket, and 24-quart basket, standard dry measure.

(a) The 4-quart splint basket shall contain 268.8 cubic inches and conform to the specifications in one of the two following numbered subdivisions:

(1) The approximate inside dimensions of the top across the center shall be 7 inches by 12 inches. The approximate inside dimensions of the bottom at the corners shall be 5⅜ inches by 10½ inches. The inside depth at the corners shall be 4 inches.

(2) The inside dimensions of the square-cornered splint basket at the top shall be 6 inches by 12 inches. The inside dimensions of the bottom shall be 5½ inches by 11½ inches. The inside depth at the corners shall be 4 inches.

(b) The 8-quart splint basket shall contain 537.6 cubic inches and conform to the specifications in one of the three following numbered subdivisions:

(1) The approximate inside dimensions of the top across the center shall be 8 inches by 14 inches. The approximate inside dimensions of the bottom at the corners shall be 7 inches by 12 inches. The inside depth at the corners shall be 5 inches.

(2) The approximate inside dimensions of the top across the center shall be 9⅛ inches by 16½ inches. The approximate inside dimensions of the bottom at the corners shall be 7⅛ inches by 14½ inches. The inside depth at the corners shall be 4 inches.

(3) The inside dimensions of the square-cornered splint basket at the top shall be 7⅞ inches by 15½ inches. The inside dimensions of the bottom shall be 7 inches by 14⅛ inches. The inside depth at the corners shall be 5 inches.

(c) The 12-quart splint basket shall contain 806.4 cubic inches and conform to the specifications in one of the three following numbered subdivisions:

(1) The approximate inside dimensions of the top across the center shall be 9⅛ inches by 16 inches. The approximate inside dimensions of the bottom at the corners shall be 8⅛ inches by 14 inches. The inside depth at the corners shall be 5½ inches.

(2) The approximate inside dimensions of the top across the center shall be 11⅛ inches by 17⅛ inches. The approximate inside dimensions of the bottom at the corners shall be 8⅛ inches by 14½ inches. The inside depth of the basket at the corners shall be 5 inches.

(3) The inside dimensions of the square-cornered splint basket at the top shall be 8⅝ inches by 17½ inches. The inside dimensions of the bottom shall be 8 inches by 16⅜ inches. The inside depth at the corners shall be 5⅜ inches.

(d) The 16-quart splint basket shall contain 1,075.21 cubic inches, and conform to the specifications in one of the three following numbered subdivisions:

(1) The approximate inside dimensons of the top across the center shall be 10⅛ inches by 18⅛ inches. The approximate inside dimensions of the bottom at the corners shall be 8½ inches by 16 inches. The inside depth at the corners shall be 6½ inches.

(2) The approximate inside dimensions of the top across the center shall be 11⅛ inches by 19⅛ inches. The approximate inside dimensions of the bottom at the corners shall be 8¼ inches by 16½ inches. The inside depth at the corners shall be 6 inches.

(3) The inside dimensions of the square-cornered splint basket at the top shall be 9 inches by 19 inches. The inside dimensions of the bottom shall be 8¼ inches by 18 inches. The inside depth at the corners shall be 6⅝ inches.

(e) The 24-quart splint basket shall contain 1,612.8 cubic inches, and conform to the specifications in the three following numbered subdivisions:

(1) The approximate inside dimensions of the top across the center shall be 12 inches by 20 inches. The approximate inside dimensions of the bottom at the corners shall be 10 inches by 17½ inches. The inside depth of the basket at the corners shall be 7½ inches.

(2) The approximate inside dimensions of the top across the center shall be 12 inches by 23 inches. The approximate inside dimensions of the bottom at the corners shall be 9 inches by 19 inches. The inside depth of the basket at the corners shall be 7 inches.

(3) The inside dimensions of the square-cornered splint basket at the top shall be 10⅝ inches by 22¼ inches. The inside dimensions of the bottom shall be 9⅝ inches by 20¼ inches. The inside depth of the basket at the corners shall be 7½ inches.

SEC. 4. That the standard box for apples shall contain 2,173.5 cubic inches when measured without distention of its parts, and conform to the following dimensions: The length of the box shall be 18 inches, its width shall be 11¼ inches, and its depth shall be 10½ inches, all inside measurements.

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of Agriculture shall in his regulations under this act prescribe such tolerances as he may find necessary to allow in the capacities and specifications for hampers, round-stave baskets, splint baskets, and the standard apple box, and parts thereof set forth in sections 1, 2, 3, and 4 of this act, in order to provide for reasonable variations occurring in the course of manufacture and handling, and shall also prescribe such tolerances as he may find necessary to allow for the purposes of section 7 of this act in the quantities of fruits or vegetables in hampers, round-stave baskets, splint baskets, and the standard apple box, in order to provide for the natural shrinkage of such contents after packing. If a cover be used upon any hamper, basket, or box mentioned in said section, it shall be securely fastened or attached in such a manner, subject to the regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture, as not to reduce the capacity of such hamper, basket, or box below that prescribed therefor.

SEC. 6. That in order to provide for the more economical use of space in packing or transportation, or for the greater conservation of material or labor in manufacture or handling, or of the contents in course of shipment, of hampers, round-stave baskets, and splint baskets for fruits or vegetables, or apple boxes, or parts thereof, the Secretary of Agriculture, whenever he finds necessary, may, in his regulations, prescribe specifications with respect to the material used, or the dimensions thereof, for such hampers, round-stave baskets, splint baskets, or apple boxes, or parts thereof in addition to, differing from, or superseding those set forth in sections 1, 2, 3, or 4 of this act, but not departing from the respective capacities therein prescribed. Such specifications shall not supersede any specifications set forth in this act until a period of at least six months shall have elapsed after public notice shall have been given following an opportunity afforded the interested public for a hearing.

SEC. 7. That it shall be unlawful to manufacture for sale or shipment, offer for sale, or ship, or to import or cause to be imported into the continental United States, hampers, round stave baskets, or splint baskets for fruits or vegetables, or apple boxes, either filled or unfilled, or parts of such hampers, round stave baskets, splint baskets, apple boxes that do not comply with this act; or fruits or vegetables not sold or offered for sale by standard net weight or by numerical count, in hampers, round stave baskets, splint baskets, or apple boxes that at the time of such offer for sale, shipment, or importation are not filled to the full capacity thereof, stricken measure, subject to such tolerances as may be prescribed in the regulations under this act: Provided, That this act shall not apply to baskets or other containers having capacities less than 4 quarts which comply with the provisions of the act approved August 31, 1916, entitled "An act to fix standards for Climax baskets for grapes and other fruits and vegetables, and to fix standards for baskets and other containers for small fruits, berries, and vegetables, and for other purposes" (39 U. S. Stat. L., p. 673), and the regulations thereunder. Any individual, partnership, association, or corporation that willfully violates this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $100 or imprisonment not exceeding 60 days, or both.

SEC. 8. That any hamper, round stave basket, or splint basket for fruits or vegetables, or any apple box, whether filled or unfilled, or parts of such hampers, round stave baskets, splint baskets, or apple boxes, not complying with this act, which shall be manufactured for sale or shipment, offered for sale, sold, shipped, or imported, may be proceeded against in any district court of the United States within the district where the same shall be found and may be seized for confiscation by a process of libel for condemnation. Upon request, the person entitled shall be permitted to retain or take possession of the contents of such hampers, baskets, or boxes, but, in the absence of such request or when the perishable nature of such contents makes such action immediately necessary, the same shall be disposed of by destruction or sale as the court or a judge thereof may direct. If such hampers, round stave baskets, splint baskets, or apple boxes, or parts thereof be found in such proceeding to be contrary to this act, the same shall be disposed of by destruction, except that the court may by order direct that such hampers, baskets, or boxes, or parts be returned to the owner thereof, or sold, upon the payment of the costs of such proceeding and the execution and delivery of a good and sufficient bond to the effect that such hampers, baskets, or boxes, or parts shall not be sold or otherwise disposed of or used contrary to law. The proceeds of any sale under this section, less legal costs and charges, shall be paid over to the person entitled thereto. The proceedings in such seizure cases shall conform as near as may be to the proceedings in admiralty, except that either party may demand trial by jury of any issue of fact joined in such cases and all such proceedings shall be at the suit and in the name of the United States.

SEC. 9. That this act shall not prohibit the manufacture for sale or shipment, offer for sale, sale, or shipment of hampers, round stave baskets, splint baskets, apple boxes, or parts thereof to any foreign country in accordance with the specifications of a foreign consignee or customer not contrary to the law of such foreign country; nor shall this act apply to hampers having a capacity of 1⅔ bushels or more, or to hampers for bananas of the shape now in commercial use having less than such capacity, if any, or to round stave baskets having a capacity of 2¼ bushels or more, or to apple boxes having a capacity of 1½ bushels or more.

SEC. 10. That this act shall not be understood or construed as in any way repealing the act of July 28, 1866 (Rev. Stats. U. S., secs. 3569, 3570), legalizing the use of the weights and measures of the metric system.

SEC. 11. That it shall be the duty of each United States district attorney to whom satisfactory evidence of any violation of this act is presented to cause appropriate proceedings to be commenced and prosecuted in the proper courts of the United States in his district for the enforcement of the provisions of this act.

SEC. 12. That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to prescribe such regulations as he may find necessary for carrying into effect the provisions of this act, and to cause such examinations and tests to be made as may be necessary in order to determine whether hampers, round stave baskets, splint baskets, and apple boxes, or parts thereof, subject to this act, meet its requirements. For said purpose the authorized officers and agents of the Department of Agriculture may visit factories, stock rooms, and other places of business where such hampers, baskets, and boxes, or parts thereof, are manufactured or held for sale or shipment or offered for sale, may enter cars, vessels, other vehicles, and places under the control of carriers engaged in the transportation of such hampers, baskets, and boxes, or parts thereof, and may take samples of such hampers, baskets, and boxes, or parts, the cost of which samples, upon request, shall be paid to the person entitled.

SEC. 13. That for carrying out the purposes of this act the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to cooperate with State, county, and municipal authorities, manufacturers, dealers, and shippers, to employ such persons and means, and to pay such expenses, including rent, printing, publications, and the purchase of supplies and equipment, in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, as he shall find to be necessary, for which purposes the sum of $10,000 is appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, available immediately and until expended.

SEC. 14. That sections 7 and 8 of this act shall become effective, at but not before the expiration of one year following the 1st day of November next succeeding the passage of this act.

By reference to lines 4 and 5 on page 3, even with the committee amendment adopted, gentlemen will see that the standard container must be 14½ inches across the top. Of course, that means a measurement which they have taken of a certain kind of basket manufactured out of a certain kind of material. It is true, and I concede it for the sake of argument, that the measurement of most of the baskets manufactured out of a certain material will be very properly so fixed, if you are going to go that far and if you think you have the constitutional authority to go that far. It would be very proper under such circumstances to fix that as the top measurement, but you will immediately outlaw the use of other materials which are thinner and which tests show are as strong or stronger than the material you figured on when you established this particular standard.

Here is another thing which has been overlooked: I have had certain tests made during the last week since this bill was taken up for consideration. I desire to state that I have no basket factory in my district that I know of. We import our baskets from elsewhere. I have the largest peach orchard in the world in my district. I do not know whether Mr. Johnson, the peach king, is for or against this measure, and it makes no difference, because, although he is one of the closest friends I have in the world, if he were to favor it I would oppose it, because it is vicious in principle. These baskets, I would state for the benefit of those who are not familiar with the subject, are put up in "nests" at the factory. They are manufactured not only out of "green" material but out of damp material. They are jammed together and stacked up, and by actual tests of a nest of baskets that was carried over from last season, in a warehouse in my district, the bottom basket of the nest into which all of the other baskets are crushed down was nearly 1 inch wider on the top measurement than the top basket. It was more nearly three-quarters of an inch than anything else. The gentleman from Indiana says that we are going to provide for differentials by authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to provide tolerances. Of course, you have to do that. You recognize the silliness of undertaking to say that if a basket happens to be a quarter of an inch or half an inch out of line, the man who used it would be a criminal. Therefore you must provide for differentials. What do you do? You refer that matter to an administrative officer. What differential is he going to establish? If he establishes three-quarters of an inch, so as to make allowance for the "crush" of the "nest," then you defeat the very object you have in mind, because it would be possible then for manufacturers to make the differential in the beginning and insist, if one of their baskets is found beyond the differential, that it was correct at the time of manufacture when it left him in the "green" material. If you are going to pass this bill, you ought to say when that measurement shall be fixed, and I suggest to the committee in all seriousness that it would be best to fix it at the time of manufacture. If you do not do that, you will have confusion. That calls attention to the real viciousness of the bill. Aside from the constitutional question, the American people submitted very willingly during the war to all kinds of supervision and all kinds of control of their business.

They are very rightfully sick and disgusted with Federal interference with their business. If you pass a bill like this you affect the small fruit grower, and there are many of them scattered over this whole country, who puts up a small amount of his produce, not for interstate shipment, but maybe he is selling to some local merchant, or he may be sending it to some local canning factory, or something or another. He knows—and he knows it because you will have your Federal inspector snooping around—if he makes a mistake in the size of his basket or hamper he is to be haled into a Federal court to establish the bona fides of his intent and defend a basket which he did not manufacture, and I venture the assertion that there are not a half dozen men in this House who can take the dimensions of a basket 1 inch off one way from its standard dimensions and figure out the cubic contents of a basket that is circular at the top and has a curve at the bottom. It takes a skillful mathematician to do that. I can not do it.

Mr. KELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. I will.

Mr. KELLER. Does the gentleman know that the small fruit growers are in favor of this bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WINGO. I will ask for five minutes additional.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KELLER. And they want to furnish the public honest measurement, and the reason for this bill is because the big man does not want to furnish an honest bushel, but the small growers, the small fruit growers, are for this bill.

Mr. WINGO. Well, I do not think the large fruit growers or the small fruit growers want to furnish a dishonest measure.

Mr. KELLER. There are certain men——

Mr. WINGO. I deny it—I challenge it.

The gentleman could not make that statement in any fruit growers' association in the United States. Bert Johnson is the largest fruit grower in the world, he is the peach king, and as his personal friend I resent the imputation placed upon his integrity. He is as honest as the gentleman. I will take Bert Johnson's word as against the gentleman's solemn oath. No man who has had any dealings with him or any of the other large growers can say that they are trying to furnish a dishonest basket. Here is what the public is protesting against. It is against the retailer, the commission merchant selling them something for a bushel or two bushels that are not that. That is what they are protesting against. They are protesting against partially filled and deceptively packed containers. They are not protesting against the size of the container. Why should any fruit grower undertake to defraud the ultimate consumer when he gets no benefit out of it?

It is the commission man who gets the benefit. It is he who suggests to the fruit grower that he fill his basket of peaches a little less; do not fill them quite so full. He is the man who suggests it to the fruit grower; the peach grower does not do it. He undertakes to comply with the requirements of the trade. The packers undertake to comply with the standard requirements recognized by the market, and if you want to prevent fraud I am with you. Under the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution you can bar from interstate commerce a fraudulent package; but you can have a container, one of these baskets, and comply with the standard under this bill, and what can he do? He can fill the contents of the container three-fourths, or leave 2 inches off the top if he wants to, or by packing it in such a manner, and any gentleman who has consulted an expert packer knows that if you pack peaches one way you can reduce the cubic contents of the basket about 13 or 14 per cent. But that is regarded as dishonest packing, and the larger fruit orchard growers refuse to pack that way. Yet if you had even your standard basket, if you wanted to pack fraudulently so as to deceive the public, you could still do it. But to go back to the proposition. You will depress the small fruit grower. He will say, "I am afraid of this Federal interference, this new governmental inspection agency." Every Member of this House—and this is serious—knows you have men every week writing in complaining that some Federal inspector is inspecting their business and interfering. Why, gentlemen, I have had a man who carried one load of passengers over a mountain road in an automobile have a Federal inspector representing the Revenue Department call him to account and scare him nearly to death and force him to pay a Federal tax. It was over one of the highest mountains between the Appalachian Mountains and the Rocky Mountains, and the only way to get passengers over was to go around by rail, a 24-hour trip. Of course, when it was called to the attention of the department they made a refund.

Mr. MADDEN. What did the man want with the revenue?

Mr. WINGO. Wanted to make a showing as a revenue officer. If the citizen had been a standard carrier in competition with the railroads, he would be liable. But what did they care; they wanted to make a good showing. Now, when an inspection starts—and you have started out with $10,000—before you get through you will have another inspection service "snooping around" the small orchard not alone in my district but in every district of the United States with this kind of a bill, and very soon you will have men afraid to kiss their wives, because it will, they fear, violate some Federal regulation. I called attention once before on this floor that there were some men advocating a thermometer that will deceive people in the wintertime by registering 70 when, as a matter of fact, it was only 60. I called attention at that time that the first thing you know you will have some bill regulating the period of gestation. I made that remark as a piece of wit, and much to my surprise I received communications from several people that they were in favor of it, and that the Grecian people proved by practice such a thing feasible.

Mr. MADDEN. Col. Sellers used to do that with a tallow candle and a stove.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 4, line 1, strike out the letter "d" and insert in lieu thereof the letter "e."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment: On page 2, line 4, after the word "diameter," strike out the words "between staves," and after the word "top," in the same line, strike out the words "inside hoop," and after the word "inches," in line 7, strike out the remainder of the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. VESTAL: Page 2, line 4, after the word "diameter," strike out the words "between staves," and in the same line, after the word "top," strike out the words "inside hoop." And in line 7, after the word "inches," strike out the remainder of the paragraph.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the gentleman from Indiana explain the meaning of the amendment.

Mr. VESTAL. It is to make the bill conform to the amendment passed a few moments ago, on page 3, under section "c."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment as a substitute to strike out all of the paragraph after the word "inches," in line 7.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas offers an amendment as a substitute, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute offered by Mr. WINGO for the amendment offered by Mr. VESTAL: Page 2, line 7, after the word "inches," strike out the remainder of the paragraph.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is not a substitute.

Mr. WINGO. I may be in error as to where the gentleman's amendment comes in.

Mr. MADDEN. It came in after "staves" and "inside hoop."

Mr. WINGO. No; you have knocked the staves and hoops out, though that is all there is to a basket. Where was the gentleman's amendment offered?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the original amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. WINGO. My amendment was, on page 2, after the word "inches," to cut out the rest of the paragraph. What I am trying to do is to offer the Garrett amendment that was agreed to on the other paragraph, in line 2, page 2, and strike out all after the word "inches."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Modified amendment by Mr. WINGO to the amendment offered by Mr. VESTAL: Page 2, line 2, after the word "inches," strike out the remainder of the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the modification of the amendment as indicated? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, so that the House may understand, I wish to say that this is the same proposition that was involved in the Garrett amendment. In other words, it is proposed for the provision to read as follows, if my amendment is adopted:

The standard 1-peck hamper shall contain 537.6 cubic inches.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Your amendment is identical with the amendment offered by Mr. GARRETT?

Mr. WINGO. Yes; identical. I deny that you have the authority to go that far. I think every lawyer in the House will recognize certainly that you have no right to go further than to say that the standard measure shall be pecks, half bushels, and so forth, and give the cubic contents of each. Now, there is some practical reason back of that, but the gentleman says, and the explanation of the chairman of the committee—which is the only justification he has—is this: If you do not undertake to standardize the style of the basket, then you will not economize in the space in shipping. I think if you want to do that, and if you think the situation has arisen where you should do it, you should not do it by penal statute under the constitutional provision authorizing you to fix the standard of weights and measures. You should undertake to regulate shipments in interstate commerce if you want to bar and penalize those who do not conform to the most economical shape of container. You would have perfect constitutional authority to do that, and then the question would be as to the wisdom of doing it. But you would not have the right to come under the "standard of weights and measures" clause of the Constitution and undertake to say that the shape of a basket or the material of a basket should be so and so. You would have no more authority to do that than to say it shall be ringed, streaked, and speckled, or that one should be blue and another should be yellow. Now, if you want to really standardize these containers all you want to say is that the standard for peach hampers shall be a peck, a half bushel, or a bushel, or a bushel and a half, and so forth, and each one containing so many cubic contents. There is some common sense in that.

If you want to go that far, then adopt my amendment. I will be frank and say that even with the adoption of my amendment I am against the bill. But I am trying to bring it down approximately to a basis of reason. I do not believe there is a gentleman that believes that you can ever get a bill through Congress unless you do that, or, if you did, that the Supreme Court would uphold it.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. If the gentleman will permit, I would like to ask a question for information. I wondered if we have ever adopted any general standard of measures. If we have, would it not be just as well to strike out the entire section?

Mr. WINGO. I see the gentleman's point, and I thank him. If the cubic contents you give here are the present cubic contents of a standard dry peck, then this language is nothing but a statement of the present existing law. If you are going to change the dry measure, what reason will they give for changing the standard peck? You remember the other day the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BROOKS], when I asked him what was the object, and if it was a statement of the present existing standard, said it was, and I am assuming that it is. Now, it would simply mean this: You say that the standard contents shall be half pecks, pecks, five-eighths bushel, one bushel, and so forth.

Mr. PLATT. Do I understand the gentleman to say that this depended on the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution?

Mr. WINGO. No. I say that they justify it on the ground of the constitutional provision in regard to weights and measures. If we do not make some such provision as I have suggested, I believe it would certainly be an abuse of power.

Mr. PLATT. I misunderstood the gentleman.

Mr. WINGO. Oh, no. I understand what the Constitution provides as to standards of weights and measures.

Mr. PLATT. The gentleman says it would be a difficult mathematical problem to calculate the contents of one of these baskets. The gentleman does not mean to say there is any difficulty in finding the cubic contents?

Mr. WINGO. During the past week I have had seven university graduates working on the problem. I gave them the shape of a basket that was sent to me from one orchard in my district, and I got seven different answers as to the cubic contents of that basket. I challenge any gentleman in this House, except the gentleman from Illinois, to tell me the actual contents of a basket such as is described in this bill. In my State the standard basket has 21 staves. The basket prescribed in this bill is to have 20 staves.

What is the differential? It requires an intricate mathematical calculation to determine the difference between a 20-stave basket and a 21-stave basket. I am not a sufficient mathematician to do that, and I had seven university graduates, as I say, figure on it, and I got seven different answers, and I fancy that if you were to submit the question to the Members of the House you would get 435 different answers. A peach raiser is not necessarily supposed to be a graduate of a university, and he may have never heard of a truncated cone. I venture to say that few men here could give you a correct statement of what a truncated cone is. I challenge the chairman of the committee to tell me that. [Laughter.]

Mr. PLATT. It is simply a peach basket turned upside down. [Laughter.]

Mr. WINGO. What kind of a peach basket?

Mr. PLATT. Any one that has a surface at the top and at the bottom.

Mr. WINGO. You talk about determining the size and shape and pattern of a farmer's peach basket, and yet you go out and accuse the Socialists of wishing to have meddlesome, paternalistic legislation enacted. I would have to apologize to Meyer London and even to Victor Berger if I were to vote for this legislation. If you want to penalize fraud, I am with you. Provide what the measure shall be, and say it shall be fraudulent to expose for sale a half-filled container or a deceptively filled basket, and I am with you on that. Base it on the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution. But it is monstrous to come along here and say that if a farmer does not happen to use the right kind or shape of container or the right kind of basket you will have him haled before a Federal judge. Some people have a great and inordinate fear of a Federal judge; they fear him worse than they fear judgment day. I have had some dealings with some of them, and I understand their viewpoint. Gentlemen, I ask you to adopt this amendment. It is identical with the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. VESTAL].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is called for.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 30, noes 45.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of no quorum. The vote just taken shows that we have not got a quorum here to consider this important bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi makes the point that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and eight Members are present, a quorum. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. VESTAL].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment: Page 2, line 16, after the word "diameter," strike out the words "between staves"; and, on line 17, after the word "top," strike out the words "inside hoop"; and strike out all of lines 20, 21, 22, 23, and 24.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The Clerk read as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment. On page 3, line 16, after the word "diameter," strike out the words "between staves"; and on line 17, after the word "top," strike out the words "inside hoop"; and on line 20, after the word "inches," strike out the remainder of the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VESTAL: Page 3, line 16, after the word "diameter," strike out the words "between staves." On page 2, line 17, after the word "top," strike out the words "inside hoop." On page 2, line 20, after the word "inches," strike out the remainder of the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman intend to revert to section 1?

Mr. VESTAL. We are still on section 1, I will say to the gentleman from Mississippi. These are all subdivisions of section 1.

Mr. QUIN. Oh, yes; I understand. Then we shall have a chance after the committee amendments are offered?

Mr. VESTAL. Yes. On page 4, line 5, Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, after the word "diameter," the words "between staves"; and on line 6, after the word "top," strike out the words "inside hoop"; and on line 9, after the word "inches," strike out the remainder of the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VESTAL: Page 4, line 5, after the word "diameter," strike out the words "between staves"; page 4, line 6, after the word "top," strike out the words "inside hoop"; page 4, line 9, after the word "inches," strike out the remainder of the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VESTAL. On page 4, line 15, I offer the following amendment: After the word "diameter" strike out the words "between staves." In line 16, after the word "top," strike out the words "inside hoop"; and in line 19, after the word "inches," strike out the remainder of the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 15, after the word "diameter," strike out the words "between staves"; in line 16, after the word "top," strike out the words "inside hoop"; in line 19, after the word "inches," strike out the remainder of the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the adoption of the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GARD: Page 1, line 7, after the word "section," insert "each of the above standard hampers shall be marked with its true capacity content in legible letters and figures."

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, I wish the gentleman would withhold his amendment until I can offer one specifying the different sizes of these things.

Mr. GARD. That can come in later.

Mr. QUIN. All right.

Mr. GARD. The purpose of the amendment which I have offered is to make as sure as reasonably can be made sure what would be the beneficial effect of this act to the consumer. The amendment which I have offered provides in terms that upon each of these standard hampers there shall be placed in legible figures and letters the true capacity content, so that one who buys this hamper of 1 peck or one-half bushel or five-eighths, or whatever it is, shall have on the outside of it a statement of its true capacity content.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. Yes; very gladly.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. May we have the amendment reported again?

Mr. GARD. Yes; I shall be very glad to have it reported again.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio.

The amendment of Mr. GARD was again read.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman says it shall be marked "with its true capacity content."

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Does that mean that it shall be marked "1 peck," or "one-half bushel"?

Mr. GARD. Yes; that is the idea I tried to convey, that a 1-peck hamper should be marked "1 peck," that a one-half-bushel hamper should be marked "one-half bushel," so that when these hampers come in with their contents, the individual who buys a peck of peaches in the market will be advised of what the hamper carries, what its true content is.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. And it will be sufficient to state "1 peck," or "one-half bushel," and so forth, and will not be necessary to use the language in the bill describing the size of the hamper in cubic inches, or anything of that sort?

Mr. GARD. No; the bill provides what number of cubic inches shall constitute a standard 1-peck hamper or a half-bushel or bushel hamper, and all that, but I do not think it is necessary to state that on the outside of the hamper.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is not what the gentleman wants to accomplish?

Mr. GARD. No; it is important in the manufacture of the hamper, but to the man who is a consumer, who buys in the market, it is important, I take it, that when he pays for a half bushel he shall know whether it is a half-bushel hamper or not.

Mr. LAYTON. Does the gentleman mean to say that it will make it clearer that it is a half bushel and not a bushel?

Mr. GARD. Yes; to give its true content capacity. If you buy a peck hamper, it should state on the outside that its contents are 1 peck. If you buy a half-bushel hamper, it should state that.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I am afraid the amendment drawn by the gentleman might be susceptible of the meaning suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. It occurs to me that it might mean a statement of the cubic inches, instead of a statement of the kind of hampers designated and described by this bill.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I asked the question knowing what the gentleman's answer would be, so that the RECORD would show that the author of the amendment had in his mind a simple statement and not an involved statement of the capacity.

Mr. GARD. No; the intent of my amendment is to have marked upon each of these hamper packages exactly what its capacity is—peck, half bushel, bushel, and so forth.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I understand.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. But does not the gentleman propose to go a step beyond that, and have the marking really certify or guarantee that the contents are as described; that is to say, if it is a bushel hamper, that the marking shall state that it contains one bushel of fruit or vegetables.

Mr. GARD. No; I do not do that.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Would not that be the result?

Mr. GARD. It should be the result.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Now, should it be the result? Let us see how undesirable that is from a practical point of view. Here is a bushel hamper, shipped, we will say, from Louisiana or Mississippi. Very often it is necessary to put a quantity of ice in that hamper. I was called in question the other day for saying that is done, but the Interstate Commerce Commission recognizes that it is in fact done and necessary to be done. There may be, for instance, a bushel basket containing lettuce or cabbage shipped from some point in Louisiana. There are several pounds of ice in that container. If a certificate of actual content is required it can not be complied with when the ice is taken into account. I submit, if my friend will allow me further, that the result of the enactment of the bill will be to put in a strait-jacket a large part of an important business of the country, in which not alone fruit growers are interested but the more numerous vegetable growers.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Yes; certainly.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman recognizes that the amendment says "capacity content" not "contents."

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I am uncertain as to what the amendment would accomplish if adopted.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It seemed to me very clear after the amendment was again reported. The amendment says capacity content; that is not a guaranty of how much it contains. Anybody can see whether it is full or not. It is supposed to be a guaranty of what the size of the container is.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I can see no objection if that is clearly what is meant; that is, if it is a peck, half bushel, five-eighths of a bushel, or a bushel to so state on the container. That is all right, but we ought not to go beyond that by expression or implication.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I agree with the gentleman from Virginia, and that is all that this amendment does.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment as follows: Add to the amendment, "to wit, 1 peck, one-half bushel, five-eighths bushel, or 1½ bushels, as the case may be."

Mr. BEE. What is the difference?

Mr. DEMPSEY. It makes it susceptible of the exact meaning. I think the amendment as originally offered is susceptible of meaning that it should state the cubical contents instead of the size of the package as defined by the act.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DEMPSEY to the amendment offered by Mr. GARD: At the end of the Gard amendment add the following: "to wit, 1 peck, one-half bushel, five-eighths bushel, 1 bushel, or 1½ bushels, as the case may be."

Mr. GARD. I have no objection to that, Mr. Chairman; it may tend to clarify it.

Mr. HERSMAN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GARD. Certainly.

Mr. HERSMAN. Is it your suggestion that the cubic contents be stamped on the container?

Mr. GARD. Not the cubic contents. If it is a peck hamper, it will so state; if it is a half-bushel hamper, it will state a half bushel, and so on.

Mr. HERSMAN. It seems to me that this additional operation will add very materially to the cost of these hampers. The idea of this bill is to standardize containers and not increase the cost to the consumer. Any stamp that you put on will not last for any length of time. That was the testimony before the committee. The department was not in favor of putting any stamp on the outside of the package. It seems to me that anyone accustomed to buying in the market knows the difference between a half bushel and a bushel, or between five-eighths of a bushel and a bushel. Of course the difference between a five-eighths bushel and a half bushel is not so apparent; if a five-eighths bushel is sold for a half bushel, that will be beneficial to the buyer and it is not often used as a retail container. It seems to me that the whole idea of standardization is to protect the public. There is no probability of making a mistake to anyone accustomed to buying in the market. Any housewife knows the difference between a half bushel and a bushel, or between a peck and a half bushel.

Mr. GARD. The point I have in mind is this: Everybody knows the difference between a peck and a half bushel, but here you have a five-eighths bushel, and there will be an amendment providing for seven-eighths of a bushel, so that there will be all these different capacity containing hampers which one looking at not skilled in the trade, as the gentleman is, the ordinary buyer in the market, could not tell whether it was five-eighths of a bushel or a half bushel or seven-eighths of a bushel or a bushel. This amendment provides that when he buys, the capacity content shall be marked on the package. In other words, if he wants five-eighths of a bushel it is so marked, and if he wants seven-eighths of a bushel it is so marked. The whole idea is to protect the public. California has adopted standardized containers not only as to size but the packing. We have got to have an honest measure and we have got to have honest packing.

Mr. DEMPSEY. The gentleman suggests that there might be people who would know the difference between these packages, but there might also be people who do not know, and those who do not know should be protected as well as those who do. Second, the gentleman says that they might make a mistake between five-eighths of a bushel and a half bushel; why not make a mistake in buying a half bushel for five-eighths?

Mr. HERSMAN. I will tell the gentleman the reason why.

Mr. DEMPSEY. There can be no reason why.

Mr. HERSMAN. The testimony before the committee was that the five-eighths bushel was not used in marketing to any extent. It was used as a shipping basket and a picking basket. It is used mainly for tomatoes, but not for selling them in the market.

Mr. DEMPSEY. The gentleman has said that the stamp or marking might be erased. That may be so, but in the vast majority of cases you would have the protection of the mark which would last. I think we should protect everybody and not simply those who know. I think there is liable to be a mistake one way as much as the other. I think also the fact that you might lose the protection of the marking through erasure there is no reason why you should not give the protection which you would get in ninety-nine cases out of one hundred.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, if there is anybody likely to go to market in the United States who can not tell the difference between a peck measure and a half bushel or between a bushel and a bushel and a half, he needs a guardian and ought to be in some kind of an asylum. There is no need of marking these baskets in this way, because the fact is the baskets speak for themselves. If this bill passes they are bound to have a certain number of cubic inches in their contents. The eye can tell the difference between a peck measure and a half bushel or a half bushel and a bushel. It does not need any mark.

The idea is presented here that there is some confusion about the five-eighths basket. That is not to be considered at all in the contemplation of this bill. It is a basket that is not used for general shipping purposes. Nobody uses it for general shipping purposes, and if it is used for general shipping purposes, then the consumer will get the benefit of it, because it is in excess of the standard half bushel. You can not hurt the public by a five-eighths basket. It is used in the field, because the picker of tomatoes finds that to be the sized basket that will enable him to handle it better, and it is the sized basket in which the fruit will not crush. There is a 20 per cent loss if you make it a half-bushel basket in the fields, and if you make it more than seven-eighths, the fruit is liable to crush when put into the wagons and transported.

Another thought that I have is this: If you adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD], you are simply putting on another increased cost to the consumer. If anybody thinks that with the millions of baskets that are being made, millions in my territory, you have not got to have additional hands, and additional stamps, and additional ink, and additional time to put on the unnecessary designation proposed in the amendment, then he is mistaken. The eye alone ought to guide anyone, if he has a good pair of eyes. It costs money to do these things.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, may I suggest this further to the gentleman, that we are asked to adopt a very fine theory which it may not be possible to apply. There may be such narrow slats used in the construction of the containers as to make it almost impossible to do the marking provided by this amendment.

Mr. LAYTON. That is true.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. And we are getting to the point now when other material than wood is perhaps going to be used in the construction of baskets and hampers. Gentlemen who are much more experienced than I will tell you that it is entirely probable that there will come into common use containers for the shipment of vegetables and fruit that are constructed of wire. How are you going to mark those? The containers may be covered with bagging and there will be no place elsewhere for the desired marking.

Mr. LAYTON. Does not the gentleman think that leaving out, for the sake of argument, the five-eighths basket, a standardization in pecks, half bushels, bushels, and bushel and a half will mark the contents of each basket?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I have not the slightest doubt about that.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, I am not favorably inclined to this measure, but I think that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] is one of the best amendments that have been suggested. The purpose of the bill is to protect the public in fair measures, and one of the ways to do it is to have these packages properly marked. One of the objections urged against the indiscriminate use of different sizes of baskets is the confusion produced, it is alleged, in the minds of the public, and that enable unscrupulous dealers to sell for certain quantities packages which do not contain those quantities. It is urged here that there can be no discrimination and no advantage taken of the public by the five-eighths basket not being marked, because if the public thinks they are getting a half bushel basket when really getting a five-eighths bushel basket, then that is so much to their advantage. But the other question may be considered. They may be buying a five-eighths bushel basket and be handed out a half-bushel basket, and that is very much more likely to be the case than that the public will get a five-eighths basket for a one-half bushel basket.

It seems to me that to-day we are seeking to bring upon the people an endless amount of regulation. This bill just teems with details of regulations prohibiting the use of different character of boxes or baskets which may be particularly suited to these different communities and not suited to other communities. That fact is no better illustrated than in the arguments before the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures. The original bill made no provision for a five-eighths-bushel basket. In fact, the Bureau of Markets in the Department of Agriculture condemned the use of any such basket, but it was urged upon them by growers in New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and Delaware that that basket was in such common use, that it was used in such immense volume, that it was so costly to require them to change, and so necessary in shipment, that the bill ought to be amended so as to allow the use of the five-eighths-bushel basket; and it was even urged, according to the testimony before the committee, that trucks were built to accommodate themselves to the five-eighths basket and that other sizes could not be used with economy. Therefore, the committee permitted that amendment to be engrafted on the bill. I want to read in this connection the statement of Mr. Downing, of the Bureau of Markets, one of the strongest advocates of the passage of this measure. He said:

Now, we understand that the five-eighths basket is not a short package. It is a large package, but there is the danger of dishonest parties passing off a 16-quart for a 20-quart basket if it is standardized, just the same as the seven-eighths bushel masquerades as a bushel. There is 4 quarts difference in both instances.

If we let down the bars and admit the five-eighths basket, there are dozens of other baskets of nonstandard size that the trade may ask you to standardize that are used very extensively in certain sections. Mississippi will say, "Give us the seven-eighths bushel bean basket." Norfolk will say, "We want the 5-pecks hamper." New York will say, "The 14-quart peach basket ought to be included." For the above reasons we think if you include the five-eighths hamper that you are opening up the whole question of what shall or shall not be the standard, and certainly if you include the five-eighths hamper in the bill, there ought to be a similar provision for a five-eighths bushel round stave basket. These are our reasons.

In other words, the admission into this bill of the five-eighths basket destroys the whole symmetry and purpose of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the members of the committee that in many sections of the country they are using in great quantities the seven-eighths bushel basket, and the Bureau of Markets itself practically admits that if you make the concession of a five-eighths bushel basket you ought to allow a seven-eighths bushel basket. In my humble opinion we ought to allow any kind of basket that any farmer or shipper wants to use, provided it is properly marked and identified, so that the public may know what they are buying when they pay for certain commodities. It seems to me this bill reeks with paternalism, that it is going to mean a vast amount of inspectors, that it is going to mean a constantly increasing cost for that inspection, and that there is really no justification for any such measure. A simple statement of what certain measures or hampers or baskets shall contain to be regarded as standard, the stamping on those measures or containers in some form their capacity and contents, are all that we ought to be expected to provide, with a penalty attached for violation by misrepresentation or fraud, such as is provided in the pure-food act. This bill goes so far that if any man happens to use one of these baskets or a set of baskets sold to him by mistake for a certain size he loses all his commodity, because the Government seizes it under libel proceedings, condemns it, and may destroy it or sell it in the open market. I say that those provisions are unjust and that the purpose sought here could be easily obtained by simply providing and designating by marking in some way the standard content of any character of basket that may be used within certain limitations, and the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] as to what the size of the container is seeks to do this. Unfortunately the bill contains so much restriction upon the rights of the people that it is beyond redemption. It even goes to the extent of permitting, in section 5, on page 12, the Secretary of Agriculture to set aside the law and substitute law of his own making. It provides that he shall have the power to even outlaw any materials that the people in my district might choose or ever have to use in order to make baskets or hampers at all. He could cut out the use of pine and substitute spruce. I am opposed to any such proposed legislation and believe that this measure is more in the interest of certain large hamper and basket manufacturers than it is in the interest of the shippers or the people.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, if I may make an inquiry in reference to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio about marking these packages, do some of the gentlemen who seem to be opposed to the amendment know whether the baskets are now required to be marked under the pure-food law? My impression is that the pure-food law requires the quantity of the contents to be marked on all containers of food. I heard a couple of gentlemen argue it would be a great imposition to require these baskets to be marked, and I just asked for information if they knew whether in fact they are now marked.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. With the permission of the gentleman, who is very much more familiar with the pure-food law than I am——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I ask for information.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. My belief is that the question would have to be answered in the negative in view of the provisions of the law and decisions of the Supreme Court construing the law.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. There are no decisions of the Supreme Court or law against it. On the contrary, every little package I know you buy in the market containing food or medicine, except in the very minutest quantity, is marked with the quantity of the content, and that is in the law. Now, I do not recall, although I drew the provision, whether it would apply to containers of this kind. It is an easy matter to ascertain, and I thought some one knew.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I do not think it does.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The Supreme Court has sustained every provision of the pure-food law.

Mr. HERSMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I will.

Mr. HERSMAN. The testimony before the committee by the officials of the Government at the time the hearings were had was against marking these containers. They thought it was not necessary at all. It was very plainly brought out that the public could easily recognize by the different sizes the actual contents.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is another question. These gentlemen were from the Bureau of Markets, I take it, and I do not know whether they knew anything about the pure-food law, because the Agricultural Department is very extensive. My own impression, although I am not at all sure, is that they not only have power but exercise it and require these packages to be marked in some way showing the contents.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Chairman, I have been impressed by the statement made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BRIGGS]. It impels me to make a brief observation on this bill. I have sat for some time and listened to its discussion, and I have been especially interested because it has been fathered by my distinguished friend from Indiana [Mr. VESTAL], but I just wondered when I read this bill how we lived for 100 years in this country and ever established a reasonable reputation for honesty and fair dealing. In other words, you take a bill of this character and it seems to me to reverse the presumption; in other words, every man is presumed to be guilty until he proves his honesty. They take and require the farmers of this country, the vegetable growers, the fruit growers, to comply with measurements that the average man has no more idea what it means than what is in the Koran, and put a penalty upon him in case he does not faithfully comply with all these things, and, going further than that, bring these governmental agencies throughout the country to enter into the business houses of people in search of the baskets that they are making and confiscate them, institute libel proceedings in admiralty—why you are going to have the farmers of this country so complicated that you are going to undo the good that is intended. I have the idea, let me say to the gentleman from Indiana—I may be mistaken—but I think we have a law in this country that where a party is guilty of theft by a pretext he is just as much guilty of theft as if it is specially defined. In other words, if any concern or business systematically is robbing the public by false measures you have got the right to prosecute him under the general law of theft by a false pretext or a false pretense without putting this burden upon every farmer or fruit grower or raiser in this country of acquainting himself with that which I venture the prediction, with due respect to my associates here, not two dozen of the men of this House can absolutely explain the provision of every section of this bill. I certainly could not do that, but I do not claim any special knowledge of these sorts of things.

Mr. VESTAL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEE. I will.

Mr. VESTAL. There is no manufacturer of baskets anywhere in this country who is opposing this bill. It does not change the machinery. It does cut out in the hampers at least 30 different sizes of baskets. If a manufacturer can cut out 30 different sizes of baskets, he certainly can manufacture baskets cheaper than with all these different sizes.

Mr. BEE. I will say to the gentleman——

Mr. VESTAL. Now, the ordinary small grower is not going to get into trouble, because, if the bill becomes a law, it makes it unlawful for the manufacturer to manufacture these baskets, and there will be only these certain sized baskets on the market to be sold.

Mr. BEE. I understand that.

Mr. VESTAL. It promotes honest commerce, and I can not see any objection to the bill.

Mr. BEE. I am sure it is intended to promote honest commerce, but the point I am just making is that we are enlarging offenses in this country with such rapidity that we are not going to get volumes big enough to contain them. Let me say to the gentleman from Indiana it is a very safe rule if you will go back 2,000 years ago there is written into the fundamental law of man the real offenses necessarily that enter into the policy of human conduct, and whenever you seek to enlarge them with these artificial ones we do not create a healthy spirit and you make lawbreakers out of men who are not lawbreakers; you fill your statutes with laws; you send out into every avenue of this country governmental agents, spies you may call them, who go into each place to investigate and see whether a man complies specifically and literally with everything in this law.

I believe that this country, as I said a minute ago, has survived for a hundred years, and we did have the reputation in the past of being an honest people, and I do not believe it is necessary, in order to get what the gentleman denominates as "honest commerce," to fill our statute books with oppressive laws like this, the effect of which is to interfere with individual agency. I have listened to the discussion, and the more I have listened the more I have found myself involved in a maze of uncertainty as to what the law really contemplates or will do.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman pardon me?

Mr. BEE. Yes.

Mr. LAYTON. As a matter of fact, in the section of the country where I live and where baskets are manufactured by millions upon millions this bill meets the approval of the farmer, meets the approval of the manufacturer of the baskets, and meets the approval of the man who cans the fruit and who ships the fruit, and one of the most——

Mr. BEE. I will say to the gentleman from Delaware that that does not answer the argument that is in my mind. What I am seeking to convey by these few remarks is that we are establishing a system of repressive legislation and we are going upon the presumption that men are no longer honest in this world, but that they are dishonest.

Mr. LAYTON. Then, in order to be entirely and comprehensively complete in logic, let us repeal sweepingly every penal statute of the United States and reenact the Ten Commandments.

Mr. BEE. I want to say to the gentleman from Delaware that if this country would go back to the Ten Commandments and men and women would live up to their provisions we would come very near living, in the sight of God, correctly.

Mr. LAYTON. You would be in chaos.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi makes the point that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and one gentlemen are present—a quorum.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The question was raised a while ago as to the marking and mismarking under the pure-food act. I will call the gentleman's attention, in the first place, to the fact that that is an act based upon the power of Congress under interstate commerce. There is no attempt here to invoke the power of interstate commerce, but the attempt is merely to walk in and regulate what is done entirely within the States. The attempt on the part of the pure-food people—and it is probably an exercise of interstate-commerce regulations—was to exclude from interstate commerce all those ingredients where they were denounced as impure, and to require honesty in dealing with those matters which go into interstate commerce. They provided that in case of food if any substance had been mixed or packed so as to reduce or lower or affect its quality or strength, it was excluded, and so on. And then they provided as to what misbranding is, and provided that a reasonable variation should be permitted or should be construed as to misbranding or mismarking. So the provision that is proposed by the gentleman from Ohio is already practically met as to such articles as go into interstate commerce.

But this bill is not confined to that or based upon that. This bill intends to regulate the size of every package of the kind denominated in the bill—intrastate and every other kind—and therefore it is necessary that this amendment go on if it is to have this effect. Now, the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. LAYTON] a little bit ago said that everybody—the farmer and the manufacturer and everybody else—was in favor of this proposition.

When this clause over here—section 12—begins to be enforced, with $10,000 being expended on inspectors to go around and look in every man's packing house and in every man's shop and in every farmer's smokehouse and bring him before the United States commissioner because he has not got his containers of the right size, because he happens to have some there that are a little under measurement or that are square instead of round, it will be time then to find out whether the farmers are in favor of this or not. So far as I am concerned, I have gotten to the point where I am tired of the inspector. He is increasing. This means the institution of a new bureau in the Department of Agriculture, with a lot of men who are of no account for anything else to go around and make trouble for the honest people of this country who are trying to market the products that they raise by their own toil. And I think the gentleman from Delaware and his people will be tired of it when the inspector begins to annoy them about their personal affairs.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I would like to bring to the very especial attention of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BEE] what was said more than 4,000 years ago in regard to weights and measures. Moses introduced into Israel standard weights and measures, saying:

> Thou shalt not have in thy bag divers weights, a great and a small. Thou shalt not have in thy house divers measures, a great and a small. But thou shalt have a perfect and a just weight, a perfect and a just measure shalt thou have that thy days may be lengthened in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee. (Deuteronomy xxv, 13–15.)

Mr. Chairman, standards of value were established under this Government when the cent and the dollar were standardized.

The inch, the foot, the yard, and the mile have all been definitely fixed as standards of distance.

The avoirdupois ounce and pound are definite weights for all our produce.

We measure, judge, and weigh everything by standards.

The latest standard has been set by William Tyler Page, who has given to America a condensed standard declaration of our belief and our faith in and our duty to our country. The Congress has authoritatively recognized that American's creed, and for one I think so well of it and its standardizing, Americanizing influence on the youth of the land, that I do not hesitate to send it out as presented by Congressman JOHN W. SUMMERS.

Moses, the wise lawgiver of old, recognized the value and the necessity of definite weights and measures, and it will be to the benefit of the producer and the consumer and to the credit of this Congress if we follow his lead.

I think the chairman of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures is fully justified in all that he has undertaken, and that the committee should stand by him. [Applause.]

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I doubt, in looking at the pure-food law, whether it would apply to vegetables shipped in the ordinary course of commerce. The language of the law does not seem to warrant that construction, nor do the decisions of the Supreme Court in construing the law. I believe it may be deduced from the decisions that the law is to be taken as applying to the transportation of articles, such as drugs, that would be considered as being otherwise illicit; for example, the decision in the case of the Hippolite Co., Two hundred and twentieth United States. I will not dwell on the views expressed by the court. My idea is—and I say it in deference to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], who has a first-hand knowledge of the subject that I do not possess—that such is the construction placed upon the law as expounded by the court. It may be that there is a great deal in this bill that is commendable, but it certainly deserves much consideration before we enact it in anything like its present form.

I rather agree with my friend from Texas [Mr. BEE] that here is a palpable effort to make people good by legislation. I think of what Chief Justice Fuller said on one occasion with reference to a friend of his in Chicago, that his friend's theory seemed to be that everybody ought to be made good by law, and that the courts of equity ought to be empowered to enforce the law. We can not do that sort of thing effectively, and I believe this to be the worst time in the history of this country to attempt legislation of this character. There is confusion in business and uncertainty as to what private individuals can and can not do, and we might well postpone until a better day arrives.

This further observation: Our constant inclination is to take over the authority which the States may exercise themselves. We have done that along various lines. We have done it until we are under universal criticism for doing it. Now, nobody denies that a State has authority by police regulation to bring about standardization. That has been done in California, and it may be done everywhere else. Why should we not leave the States to act and not go on hastily and devise legislation that may be most injurious to the business interests? My own district would perhaps not be much concerned about this matter, and I am without any motive except to place a good law, if we are to put any there, upon the statute books. But I can think of people all over this country, not simply the fruit growers and fruit shippers, but shippers of perishable vegetables here and there and everywhere, all through the South and all through the North and the West, who might find great additional expense and serious additional trouble in complying with the requirements contained in this bill.

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, in the first place, I wish to state that I do not see any particular necessity for this legislation. It has been said that it is especially in the interest of the manufacturer of the containers and will also be to the advantage of the users of them. Now, they are a small percentage of our population. They number possibly thousands, while there are millions of people who will be affected by the enactment of this bill into law, and particularly they should be taken care of by marking the capacity on these containers. If the manufacturers and the users are so terribly afraid to have the capacity of these containers plainly stamped on the outside of them, I think that is the very reason why the quantity should be marked on them.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania. Yes; I will.

Mr. LAYTON. Why do you assume that the manufacturers are opposed to the marking of the capacity on the containers?

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania. From the arguments that have been advanced.

Mr. LAYTON. There have been no facts presented at all.

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania. There have been lots of statements made.

Mr. LAYTON. Oh, no.

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania. Yes; the gentleman from Delaware himself made the statement that the manufacturers of containers in his own State are favorable to this bill, and he is opposing it.

Mr. LAYTON. Of course; but if the gentleman had paid attention to what I said he would have known that my objection to the marking was because there was no necessity for it. Anybody could tell the difference between a peck and a half bushel; and, in addition, it was a matter that affected the consumer.

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania. I contend that the rank and file of the people can not tell the difference in the capacity of the container by looking at it. I know that that is a fact.

Mr. LAYTON. Between a peck and a half bushel, and between a bushel and a half bushel?

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania. A great many people do not know the difference between five-eighths of a bushel and seven-eighths of a bushel and a bushel.

I want to make this statement, that when fruits and vegetables were originally sold by measure, by the bushel, the people knew how much they were getting. Later they began to sell fruits and vegetables by baskets. The people still thought they were getting a bushel, when very often they were only getting seven-eighths of a bushel or three-fourths of a bushel, and sometimes less than that, and still they thought they were getting a bushel. For that reason I insist, as I did last Wednesday when this bill was considered, that these containers should be marked as to the quantity that they contain.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. If you have them to stamp it on there, there is no opportunity for the man who has sold it to deny, for instance, that he has sold five-eighths of a bushel for a bushel; and when you come to the contest the purchaser may swear he bought it for a bushel and the other man may say he sold it for seven-eighths of a bushel. If the contents were marked on the container there could be no such question as that.

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania. I will make this statement: If the dealer is honest he will not object to having the container marked just what it contains. I hope this amendment will be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment as amended by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken, and the amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. OSBORNE: Page 4, at the end of line 24, add the following: "Provided, That nothing in this act contained shall apply to containers of fruits or vegetables sold by weight or numbers or by other measures than the quart, peck, one-half bushel, seven-eighths bushel, one bushel, and one and one-half bushel."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, may we have that amendment reported again?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will again be reported.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OSBORNE. If the gentleman from Texas will be brief, I will.

Mr. BLANTON. Just for a question.

Mr. OSBORNE. Very well.

Mr. BLANTON. Would not this, in a measure, do away with the whole purpose of the bill?

Mr. OSBORNE. I think not; and I will explain why: The bill as drawn fixes these standards and measurements. Now, in some portions of the country, notably the State which I in part represent, the fruits are not sold by these measurements that are provided in this bill. They are sold by the pound. The pound system of trade is universal there, and even citrus fruits are sold practically by numbers. The boxes are of a standard size, and they are sold by reference to the number of units of fruit in a box. It is 80, or 100, or 120, or whatever may be the size of the fruit. It is well understood, and it is perfectly fair. When this bill was up a week ago to-day my attention was attracted to this, and I wired to various people engaged in the fruit and vegetable business in California to ascertain their views in regard thereto. I received from the California Vegetable Union, which is a large cooperative organization of raisers of vegetables, a telegram to this effect:

LOS ANGELES, CALIF., April 22, 1920.

HENRY Z. OSBORNE, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

Answering yours of to-day to Mr. Hogan relative to House bill 12350, to fix standards for hampers, round stave baskets, and split baskets for fruits and vegetables, and to establish a standard box for apples and for other purposes. We approve of your position, especially in view of the shortage of material for containers. We believe that the proposed bill would add more difficulty to an already serious situation. We thank you for calling the matter to our attention.

CALIFORNIA VEGETABLE UNION.

Now, this amendment, Mr. Chairman, will exclude from the operations of the act those fruits and vegetables which are dealt in by the pound, and it is evident that the bill itself does not in any way provide for the sale of such things by the pound. I think under the terms of the bill it might be required of our California people, who, as you all know, raise an enormous amount of fruits and vegetables, probably more than those of any other State in the Union——

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman state, for the information of the House, what vegetables are shipped east from California?

Mr. OSBORNE. Oh, an enormous quantity of vegetables, such as asparagus, and cabbages, and lettuce, and tomatoes, and almost every vegetable, in fact, that is grown, is shipped here. This is an enormous business, these vegetable shipments from California to the East. In fact, you can hardly go to a fruit or vegetable stand in this city where you will not find California fruits and vegetables that have been sold by the pound.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I think under the terms of this bill, unless this amendment should go in, you may compel these people who are selling by the pound to put that produce in a certain shape of basket, which, of course, would be nonsense.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OSBORNE. Surely.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. What provision is there in this bill which would affect the sale of any of these articles that are not sold in hampers or baskets?

Mr. OSBORNE. Section 1, I will state to the gentleman from Illinois; the first part of section 1 apparently makes the standard and fixes the measurement of a container from which all fruits and vegetables must be sold. Let me read it, if you please. It provides that "the standard hampers for fruits and vegetables shall be" so-and-so. That is, everyone must conform to those specified containers, no matter what the conditions are. They must conform to that particular standard of form and measurement. That is the way it reads.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. No. It says that the standard hamper shall be such and such a size. That does not affect barrels. It does not affect boxes or any other kind of container than the hamper.

Mr. OSBORNE. I notice that boxes have been cut out. Evidently the attention of the committee was called to the very thing to which I am calling attention now, and they cut out boxes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Boxes have been cut out of the bill, but there is nothing in the bill that excludes boxes from its scope. They have been cut out of the bill because there is a box bill that has been considered by itself; but, as I understand, the bill does not undertake to cover other kinds of containers. I ask for information if I am wrong. I understand it does not undertake to cover anything except hampers and baskets. Many things are put up in other containers than hampers and baskets. They are put up in bags. This bill does not affect the packing of fruits or vegetables in bags; but the gentleman's amendment, as it reads, would say that any other——

Mr. OSBORNE. I have only five minutes, and if the gentleman will allow me I call his attention to this fact, that this language of the bill does not preclude the idea that these fruits and vegetables must be sold in these particular hampers. Anyway, if my amendment is put in, it will make it absolutely impossible to hold to such a construction of the law, and I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. OSBORNE. I will.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I suggest to the gentleman that he will accomplish all that he designs to accomplish if he stops with the word "numbers," in the second line of his amendment, instead of leaving in the words—or by other measures than the quart, peck, one-half bushel, five-eighths bushel, one bushel, and one and one-half bushel.

If that part of his amendment prevails, it is wholly unnecessary to the purpose he wants to accomplish, and at the same time it will utterly destroy this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I ask that the gentleman be given an additional two minutes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Make it five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from California be extended two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I suggest to the gentleman, as I said, that it is totally unnecessary to include anything after the word "numbers" to accomplish his purpose, and at the same time he will utterly destroy this bill by what follows that word.

Mr. OSBORNE. I do not agree that that is a fact, but I am willing to cut that out, if the chairman will accept the amendment in its curtailed form.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That would make the assumption that it applied to other kinds of containers, but it does not.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Then I can see no harm in it.

Mr. OSBORNE. While I can see some benefit from this bill, I am very skeptical of its value as a whole.

There is another thing I want to speak of while I am on my feet. I asked the chairman of the committee on last Wednesday if the fruit growers of the Pacific States had been before the committee, and he thought that they had, or that they had been represented; but I find on looking over the hearings that those interests were not represented and did not appear before the committee, and the point that I am making was not brought up at all in the hearings before the committee. It is a very important point.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. Suppose the gentleman's California oranges should be shipped in a round-shaped basket, and not of any of the dimensions specified in the bill, or in a splint basket not of any of the dimensions mentioned in the bill, then there would be clearly a violation of the terms of the bill, and the penalty would attach.

Mr. OSBORNE. It seems to be so. How about that, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. VESTAL. I wish the gentleman would have his amendment reported as he desires to correct it.

Mr. OSBORNE. Let the Clerk report it with the modification I have suggested.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. OSBORNE: Page 4, after the end of line 24, add the folowing: "Provided, That nothing in this act contained shall apply to containers of fruits or vegetables sold by weight or numbers."

Mr. VESTAL. There is nothing in this bill that would apply to fruit or vegetables sold by numbers or by weight, and there would not be any need of this amendment, because this bill only proposes to establish the standards for certain hampers and certain baskets, and it will have no effect upon fruits and vegetables sold by weight or numbers.

Mr. BARBOUR. If you sell fruit or vegetables in hampers or baskets, you must have them of the kinds here prescribed.

Mr. OSBORNE. Certainly.

Mr. BARBOUR. But if you sell them by weight, what difference does it make?

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, replying to the suggestion just made by the chairman of the committee to the gentleman from California [Mr. OSBORNE] that there is no necessity for this, if you will look at section 6 as reported by the committee you will see that to ship or offer to ship or import anything in any other kind of package than this is a penal offense. Now, suppose the gentleman's constituents and mine desire to ship vegetables in a different sized package, and sell them by the pound or sell them by the dozen, for instance melons. They want to sell melons by the dozen. They would be penalized for offering to ship, because it says "whether filled or unfilled." It strikes me, therefore, that the reason for having this amendment put on is a very vital one.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Section 6, to which the gentleman refers, seems to me to confer what has been suggested by the chairman of the committee, instead of putting it in doubt. Section 6 says:

That it shall be unlawful to manufacture for sale or shipment, sell, offer for sale, or ship, or to import or cause to be imported into the continental United States, hampers, round stave baskets, or splint baskets for fruits or vegetables, or apple boxes, either filled or unfilled, or parts of such hampers, round stave baskets, or splint baskets, apple boxes that do not comply with this act.

Now, they do intend to limit hampers and baskets to the sizes prescribed by this act, but they do not intend to limit anything except hampers and baskets.

Mr. STEVENSON. If shipped in hampers and baskets, he has got to ship in these sizes, because it says "either filled or unfilled." Therefore, if a man undertakes to ship in hampers and baskets not of these sizes, filled with vegetables to be sold by the pound, he becomes liable to the penalties of this act.

Mr. DEMPSEY. There is no dispute between the gentleman and myself. I admit frankly that if they ship in any hamper or basket they must be of the size prescribed by this act.

Mr. STEVENSON. Well, we are at one on that. That being the case, here is a man, say, lives 25 miles from Washington. He has a contract to sell stuff to me by the pound. He ships it to me in any kind of a container that he has, in any kind of a basket; he ships in baskets not of the prescribed size, because he sells to me by the pound. Yet he becomes liable under the penalties of this act.

Mr. DEMPSEY. That is absolutely true, but if you have any act at all there must be an act of this kind.

Mr. HERSMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Mr. HERSMAN. He will not be able to ship in any other basket or hamper than the size prescribed by this act, because the manufacturers will not manufacture any other kind of basket or hamper, so there will be no other size hampers for him to ship by.

Mr. STEVENSON. He may manufacture the baskets or hampers himself.

Mr. HERSMAN. Then he can manufacture them of the standard size prescribed by this act as well as he can of any other size.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, some gentlemen have misinterpreted the scope of this bill. This bill only applies to hampers, round-stave baskets, and splint baskets. It does not affect the shipment of fruit or vegetables in any other kind of a container at all, notwithstanding the statement made by the gentleman from South Carolina, who hastily jumped at the conclusion that the first section required all fruit and vegetables to be shipped in containers named in this act.

Now, as a matter of fact, California people do not ship in hampers or baskets. At least, I never saw a hamper or basket coming from California; but if they do they can just as readily ship in hampers and baskets containing a peck, half bushel, bushel, or bushel and a half size as anybody else, whether they sell their products by weight or not.

There would be no objection, in my opinion, to the amendment offered by the gentleman from California except for this, which seems to me a vital objection. The amendment offered is to exclude a case not covered by the bill. If we say in the bill that it does not cover a certain thing which would not be covered, we imply that all other kinds of containers are covered by the bill. The bill does not cover boxes. A large share of the fruit of the country is shipped in boxes. They are not affected by the bill. A large share of fruits and vegetables is shipped in barrels; that is not affected by the bill. A considerable amount is shipped in bags. That is not affected by this bill. If we insert an amendment stating that certain other measures shall not be affected by the bill, that would seem to imply that the bill required all shipments of fruits and vegetables to be shipped under the terms of the bill. While that might not be binding on the court, and I hope it would not, it would be an indication that Congress was making the only exception that it wanted made. The bill does not affect California fruits or vegetables at all. I think it would involve the bill very much.

One word more. I have listened again to many very good speeches and arguments against the bill, which I listened to years ago when I had charge of the pure-food bill in the House. I sympathize with gentlemen who make those speeches, because I largely held the same views in reference to the proper policies of the Government, and largely held the same views concerning the pure-food legislation before I had thoroughly gone into that matter.

The pure-food legislation has been on the statute books now for a good many years. There is not a single man, in my judgment, in this House who would vote to repeal it. I doubt whether there is anyone in the country, except some who have been prosecuted, who would vote to repeal the pure-food law. And yet it goes into more homes, affects more in minute detail the manufacturers and shippers, producers and consumers in the country—four times more than this bill will. The great majority of shippers of fruits and vegetables are in favor of honest packing. All that is sought by a bill of this kind is to give the honest shippers protection against the occasional dishonest man who seeks to win out by putting in a smaller amount to deceive the purchaser and often to deceive the commission merchant. Let us give fair protection to the great body of honorable producers as well as to the great body of honorable consumers against the occasional rascal. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from California.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. OSBORNE) there were 13 ayes and 26 noes.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Chairman, I make the point that no quorum is present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California makes the point of order that no quorum is present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Eighty-three Members present, not a quorum, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Andrews, Md.	Dooling	Johnston, N. Y.	Reber

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DOWELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 12350) to fix standards for hampers, round stave baskets, and splint baskets for fruits and vegetables, to establish a standard box for apples, and for other purposes; and finding itself without a quorum, the roll was called, when 474 members responded to their names, a quorum, and he handed in the list of the absentees for printing in the RECORD.

The committee resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be again reported.

There was no objection, and the Clerk again reported the amendment of Mr. OSBORNE.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. VESTAL) there were—ayes 53, noes 77.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 5, after the word "hamper," being the second word on said line, insert "and seven-eighths bushel hampers."

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the following telegrams and letter be read in my time.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, what are they about?

Mr. QUIN. They are germane to the amendment which I have offered.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

[Telegram.]

CRYSTAL SPRINGS, MISS., April 24, 1920.

PERCY E. QUIN, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

Truck Growers' Association, Copiah County, Barron, Dees, and Eegan, and others representing practically all shippers this section united with us in protesting against elimination of seven-eighths bushel hamper from container act, and request you to endeavor to induce Congress to include that size hamper in sizes permitted. The contention of some that this size hamper is used and is desired for the purpose of deceiving the buyer is utterly without foundation. Those who buy fruits and vegetables are entirely familiar with the relative contents of the various packages or containers in general use, and are not deceived and can not be deceived thereby. The real reason this package is in general use throughout the South is that nearly all southern fruits and vegetables are shipped to distant markets either under refrigeration or ventilation, and it is self-evident that the smaller the quantity or bulk contained in a package the more readily will it yield to refrigeration or ventilation with consequent reduction in the liability to become heated, damaged, or spoiled. The proposed 1-bushel hamper adds 4 inches to the height, and as warm air ascends the liability of the contents to become heated, damaged, or spoiled is greatly increased, and therefore if shippers are compelled to use 1-bushel hampers the risk incurred and liability of loss to the shipper or the carrier will be correspondingly increased. If the Congress decides that the public interest demands the elimination of the seven-eighths bushel hamper, then the use of hampers to contain three-fourths of a bushel should be permitted, and these should be 13½ inches inside diameter at the top, 9 inches inside diameter at the bottom, and of a sufficient depth to make the contents equal three-fourths of a bushel, the diameters given being such that the hampers will properly load into standard refrigerator cars. No reasonable objection can be made to permitting the use of three-fourths bushel hampers, for a blind man could readily determine there was a marked difference between a three-fourths and a 1-bushel hamper. We respectfully submit that the best interests of not only the southern shippers but also of the northern consumers will be conserved by permitting the use of either seven-eighths or three-fourths bushel hampers, or both sizes.

Hon. PERCY E. QUIN, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

Please use best efforts to secure amendment to House resolution No. 12350 to permit use of seven-eighths bushel hampers. Years of experience have proved this most suitable size for shipping beans, peas, carrots, and other light vegetables, and is in universal use by all growers and shippers in this section. Five-eighths bushel too small; full bushel too large to secure proper refrigeration.

Hon. PERCY E. QUIN, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

House resolution No. 12350 should be amended to permit use of seven-eighths bushel hampers. After years of experience growers in this section of the South claim other sizes of hampers not suitable for shipment of beans, peas, carrots, and other light vegetables. Five-eighths bushel too small and bushel hamper does not properly refrigerate. Please use your best efforts to secure amendment.

TRUCK GROWERS' ASSOCIATION,
Crystal Springs, Miss., April 24, 1920.

Hon. PERCY E. QUIN, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your wire of the 23d was duly received and in reply will say that we are most emphatically in favor of the 30-quart hampers. We do not believe that the bushel hampers would be as good for loading, since in going four high in the car, so as to get tonnage, that it would place the perishables too close to the top of the car, which in hot weather would be in danger of getting burned up or getting so very hot that it would cause them to be in bad order on arrival.

Then, too, the larger the bulk confined in one package the more risky it would be to begin heating and "nesting," as the saying goes; and when they do that they are almost worthless and very often have to be dumped at the other end.

Trusting that your honorable body will see fit to continue the so-called seven-eighths (but in reality only 30 quarts) hamper now in use, we are,

Yours, very truly,

TRUCK GROWERS' ASSOCIATION,
I. T. RISER, Sales Manager.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, I have had these messages read because they come from men in the vegetable section who are vitally interested in this great industry. I do not believe this Congress wants to work an injury to any industry in the country. It strikes me that during the war, when the Democrats were in power, we did enough necessarily for the safety of our country in interference with the rights of our citizens, to make enough of them angry, and after the war is it possible the Republicans desire to keep the people mad?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for additional time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent for five minutes.

Mr. QUIN. Oh, give me 10 minutes, because I have a great deal I want to say.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that his time be extended for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman answer questions if he is given 10 minutes?

Mr. QUIN. Oh, yes; I will answer reasonable questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, it occurs to me that this country ought to restore itself to normal condition, and now that the Republicans are in power I think they ought to do what they can to get the people into a good humor, though they seem to be endeavoring to keep them mad. The idea of passing this bill that will hamstring a great industry in the United States! This is not only true of one section of the country, but this industry extends all the way from California to the Atlantic Ocean and from the Gulf of Mexico clear up to Canada. This one line of industry that I am speaking about, in the county that these telegrams are from, produces in actual cash about $2,000,000,000 a year. These people who cultivate the fields intensively work from daylight until dark, and lots of them into the night, and they ask that this bill be amended in a manner that I have indicated. This bill will provide Federal spies and inspectors, who will prowl around into their business. Already this Congress and the executive branches of the Government have hampered this business in such a way that every time that you jump out of the way of a tax collector you fall into the hands of a Federal spy, and now the Republican Party is endeavoring to add useless expense and a great horde of inspectors to go sticking their noses into the public business. [Applause.] The truck farmer is endeavoring to earn his living in the sweat of his brow, and in the early morning he goes to his field with his wife and his little children, after these vegetables are up, and works there from daylight until dark, and they work not only during the day, but they have torchlights in the gathering season to work in the fields at night to gather the vegetables and carry them into town, so that they may be put on the railway refrigerating trains to go to the markets of the North and the East. Who is it who is endeavoring to hamper them in their business? The American Congress, by placing on them extra burdens. They have a hamper now called the seven-eighths hamper, which fits four high into a refrigerating car that is refrigerated from ice or ventilated if the season is cool enough by being open at the top and the sides, so that the vegetables may be kept in proper condition until they reach the point of destination, where the people may buy them and eat wholesome vegetables.

Like it is, to change that hamper according to this bill to a 1-bushel hamper, you make it impossible for the beans, the English peas, and other like vegetables of the Southern States to reach their long destination to the North and East in a good condition. Is it possible that this Congress is endeavoring by this paternalistic, socialistic legislation to work hardships upon the producers and at the same time by such onerous legislation and increased burdens they have put on these producers and shippers to increase the price of these vegetables to the ultimate consumers in the North and East? Is it——

Mr. JUUL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. QUIN. If the gentleman will be quick; I have not much time.

Mr. JUUL. I want to know if the gentleman will please not harden his heart against the great number of northerners who would like to get 30 quarts of sweet potatoes for a bushel instead of 28?

Mr. QUIN. All you have to do is to weigh your potatoes. Under the law as it is to-day, the Federal Government forces every container to have stamped thereon what it contains. If it is sold by the pound, the scales weigh it accurately; if it is sold by measure, it is accurately weighed and measured. You have your food commissions in every city in the United States now that are operating. This bill, instead of being a bill for the benefit of the public, is really for the detriment of the consuming public and a serious hindrance to the producers. It occurs to me that instead of hamstringing the people who are working in the fields of this country, endeavoring to produce food sufficient to feed a hungry Nation, that the American Congress should exert every influence you have now to a greater production instead of hampering it in the way this bill proposes to do. Do you believe that the farmer who packs his stuff and ships it to the market is endeavoring to defraud anybody? Do you think that the honest man with his wife and children working all day long, and I dare say that they receive less compensation for their year's work than do any other class of laborers in the United States—you can not conceive of a whole family, of the man, his wife, and his children who work and produce and have less at the end of 12 months' work than do these truck producers who are appealing to you through these telegrams and asking that this legislation be stayed, or that you insert in this bill this amendment allowing the seven-eighths hamper which I call on you to accept. Listen: Can the chairman of this committee or anybody else advance any reason, logical or otherwise, why the seven-eighths hamper shall not be included in this bill after they have placed the five-eighths hamper in? If the five-eighths hamper is all right, why should not the seven-eighths hamper be all right in this same bill?

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. QUIN. I yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. I would like to suggest to the gentleman there is nothing in this bill to provide for standard containers for hamstrings.

Mr. QUIN. Oh, my friend does not know what a hamstring is; he is not a farmer. [Laughter.] I did not say anything about hamstrings. I do not think the gentleman knows what a hamstring is. Why, do you know that it strikes me that the man who would favor this bill, if he really understands it, is the man who if he were riding a race on a speedy horse with a competitor, and he saw that his competitor's horse was going to outstrip him, he would be mean enough to lean over and cut the hamstring of his competitor's horse. What I meant by hamstringing is this muscle in the back of the leg here. [Laughter and applause.] You are proposing to hamstring every truck producer in the United States who goes out in the fields and toils from early morning until dewy eve endeavoring to put fresh vegetables on the tables of the people in the sections where they can not raise those vegetables. Do you object to the people of the cities——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. QUIN. Can the committee give me some more time?

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Give him five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. QUIN. Can you object to the people in these cities who work in the factories, the people who work in these stores, the people who are unable to have gardens, getting fresh vegetables and having them properly cooked and put on their tables for their wives and their children to eat? Then, if you do not object to that I will say allow this seven-eighths hamper to go into this bill. Then if you do not want the seven-eighths of a bushel hamper in this bill put the three pecks or three-quarters of a bushel in this bill. You can not pretend to be honest and insert the five-eighths hamper for the benefit of those who are close to the market and cut out the seven-eighths hamper against the interest of those who live a thousand or more miles from the market.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. QUIN. I will yield.

Mr. STEVENSON. I want to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact, too, that we have already adopted an amendment requiring them if they send the seven-eighths hamper to stamp on it "seven-eighths," so there is no danger of taking it for a bushel.

Mr. QUIN. Nobody ever believed there was any danger of any fraud being perpetrated. You know it is not the farmer who is endeavoring to put up fraud. My friends, I want to say to you that it is the fellow who toils not neither does he spin who is the one who is endeavoring to rob somebody. When you come down to the guts of this bill you will find some big box manufacturer up here in the East who is busy pollyglotting around getting this bill through. You need not think it is the friend of the farmer who is trying to put this legislation through. You need not think it is any friend of the ultimate consumer who is trying to put this bill through.

It is the fellow who has got his million dollars invested in these box manufactures up here who wants a certain kind of standard box and to cut out everybody else in the United States and at the same time keep from having the overhead charges of carrying different kinds of containers and profiteer on the truck farmer who must ship his truck.

Mr. BEE. I think the gentleman from Mississippi heard the statement a while ago that the manufacturer of boxes was strongly in favor of this?

Mr. QUIN. Oh, yes; these fellows up here in the East—you know who they are—look at these hearings, all these pretended hearings here. They did not invite a single southern producer or shipper before them. You can look from one end of this hearing to the other, and you can not see where this great industry in the Southern States has even had the notice of a hearing. Would this Congress go, in the face of conditions of this kind, and do this injustice to that great wealth-producing class of this country that deserves consideration? At the same time such legislation, as every sensible man knows, would work a higher price upon those who consume these vegetables. Then, if I am stating the facts, and these telegrams are correct, can not this House accept these amendments? Can we, as representatives of all the people, sit down and say one little section of our country can have a five-eighths bushel hamper put in—and I say it is honest and it has a right to be in there—and by the same vote say we will not permit another section of this country to have a seven-eighths bushel hamper, in order that all the vegetables that are produced there can reach the market in a good and eatable conditon? Is there a man or woman anywhere in this Republic that would come up with a straight face and say that any kind of fraud or deception could be perpetrated in a seven-eighths bushel hamper, with a law requiring it to be stamped on the outside, and in the same bill have the five-eighths bushel hamper under the same conditions and circumstances and exclude the seven-eighths hamper? If that is so, is there a man who can legitimately and in good conscience vote against a seven-eighths bushel hamper? These vegetables have to go in standard refrigerator cars that the Interstate Commerce Commission has specified in order to be shipped to the markets of the United States. We can not regulate the size of the car. It is the Interstate Commerce Commission that does that. All that these wealth producers have asked for is a hamper that will enable the greatest refrigeration in order that there will be less loss for the fruits of their toil in reaching the market and being placed on the tables of the city people. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. QUIN. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 57, noes 74.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment for a three-fourths of a bushel hamper.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi submits an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. QUIN: Page 1, line 5, after the second word on line 5, insert "and three-fourths of a bushel hamper."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. QUIN. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 43, noes 68.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the standard round stave basket for fruits and vegetables shall be the one-half bushel basket, 1-bushel basket, 1½-bushel basket, and 2-bushel basket, which, respectively, shall be of the capacity and conform to the specifications set forth in this section.

(a) The one-half bushel round stave basket shall contain 1,075.21 cubic inches and conform to the following specifications: The inside diameter at the upper inner edge of the top inside hoop shall be 13¾ inches; the average inside depth shall be not less than 8¼ inches; the web shall consist of 20 intersecting staves, each not less than one-eighteenth of an inch thick and of such length that they will form the sides and bottom of a basket which shall contain 16 quarts, standard dry measure.

(b) The 1-bushel round stave basket shall contain 2,150.42 cubic inches and conform to the following specifications: The inside diameter at the upper inner edge of the top inside hoop shall be 17 inches; the average inside depth shall be not less than 10¾ inches; the web shall consist of 20 intersecting staves, each not less than one-eighteenth of an inch thick and of such length that they will form the sides and bottom of a basket which shall contain 32 quarts, standard dry measure.

(c) The 1½-bushel round stave basket shall contain 3,225.63 cubic inches and conform to the following specifications: The inside diameter at the upper inner edge of the top inside hoop shall be 19¾ inches; the average inside depth shall be not less than 12¾ inches; the web shall consist of 24 intersecting staves, each not less than one-sixteenth of an inch thick and of such length that they will form the sides and bottom of a basket which shall contain 48 quarts, standard dry measure.

(d) The 2-bushel round stave basket shall contain 4,300.84 cubic inches and conform to the following specifications: The inside diameter at the upper inner edge of the top inside hoop shall be 21 inches; the average inside depth shall be not less than 14 inches; the web shall consist of 24 intersecting staves, each not less than one-sixteenth of an inch thick and of such length that they will form the sides and bottom of a basket which shall contain 64 quarts, standard dry measure.

Also the following committee amendments were read:

Page 5, line 1, strike out the word "basket" and insert in lieu thereof the word "baskets."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

Page 5, line 3, insert the words at the beginning of the line "five-eighths bushel basket."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

(b) The five-eighths bushel round stave basket shall contain 1,344 cubic inches and conform to the following specifications: The inside diameter at the upper inner edge of the top inside hoop shall be 13¾ inches; the average inside depth shall be not less than 10¼ inches; the web shall consist of 20 intersecting staves, each not less than one-eighteenth of an inch thick and of such length that they will form the sides and bottom of a basket which shall contain 20 quarts, standard dry measure.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman, I rise to strike out the last word in order to ask the chairman of the committee a question. I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana whence are the figures we are voting for derived?

Mr. VESTAL. They are made by the Bureau of Markets.

Mr. JUUL. Is the gentleman sure that all these figures are correct? They have been checked up and verified?

Mr. VESTAL. Yes.

Mr. JUUL. That is what I would like to know. I wanted to know whence they came.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to direct the attention of the committee to the fact that their figures do not come out exactly. For instance, the figures on five-eighths bushel hamper do not conform to the figures on a half-bushel hamper. If you double the half bushel, you get a different fraction on a bushel than you get if you convert to the bushel from a five-eighths bushel hamper.

Mr. VESTAL. It is very close.

Mr. STEVENSON. The one is 2,150.40 inches, when you double the half bushel. When you get the bushel from figures that you have for the five-eighths you get only forty one-hundredths instead of forty-two one-hundredths.

If we are going into this it strikes me we ought to be accurate. I do not know which is right. It seems to me from the whole theory of the bill, when you are going to say what is in a peck hamper, a half-bushel hamper, or a bushel hamper, you are going beyond what is necessary. The thing to do is to declare how many cubic inches there are in a bushel. When you want to find out how much there is in a peck, you have got to divide the bushel by four, and all these others automatically fix themselves

Mr. JUUL. I think the gentleman's speech is a good argument for going into the decimal system.

Mr. STEVENSON. When we get into the decimal system and it is provided for in the weights and measures act, the decimal system ought to be no more in proportion in a half-bushel than in five-eighths bushel.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Does not the gentleman think his argument really goes further? If it is so difficult for a well organized bureau to get exact figures, does he not think on that question the general public would have more difficulty in solving it?

Mr. STEVENSON. Exactly.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Now, we solve it once for all.

Mr. STEVENSON. Exactly; and when you solve it once, everybody might sell a man freight who is absolutely unable to determine what it is, and can not measure it and calculate it. If the committee up here can not measure and calculate it, how could the man who provides the freight do it?

Mr. DEMPSEY. He does not have to do it. We prescribe it here.

Mr. STEVENSON. You must enforce it, and whoever enforces it must have the necessary information.

Mr. DEMPSEY. No. He enforces the law.

Mr. STEVENSON. I just call your attention to the fact that your arithmetic is not right, and you can not convict a man when he does not know that his vessel is undersize and can not make the calculation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That the standard splint baskets for fruits and vegetables shall be the 4-quart basket, 8-quart basket, 12-quart basket, 16-quart basket, and 24-quart basket, standard dry measure.

(a) The 4-quart splint basket shall contain 268.8 cubic inches and conform to the specifications in one of the two following numbered subdivisions:

(1) The approximate inside dimensions of the top across the center shall be 7 inches by 12 inches. The approximate inside dimensions of the bottom at the corners shall be 5⅞ inches by 10½ inches. The inside depth at the corners shall be 4 inches.

(2) The inside dimensions of the square-cornered splint basket at the top shall be 6 inches by 12 inches. The inside dimensions of the bottom shall be 5½ inches by 11½ inches. The inside depth at the corners shall be 4 inches.

(b) The 8-quart splint basket shall contain 537.6 cubic inches and conform to the specifications in one of the three following numbered subdivisions:

(1) The approximate inside dimensions of the top across the center shall be 8 inches by 14 inches. The approximate inside dimensions of the bottom at the corners shall be 7 inches by 12 inches. The inside depth at the corners shall be 5 inches.

(2) The approximate inside dimensions of the top across the center shall be 9½ inches by 16½ inches. The approximate inside dimensions of the bottom at the corners shall be 7½ inches by 14½ inches. The inside depth at the corners shall be 4 inches.

(3) The inside dimensions of the square-cornered splint basket at the top shall be 7⅞ inches by 15½ inches. The inside dimensions of the bottom shall be 7 inches by 14½ inches. The inside depth at the corners shall be 5 inches.

(c) The 12-quart splint basket shall contain 806⅘ cubic inches and conform to the specifications in one of the three following numbered subdivisions:

(1) The approximate inside dimensions of the top across the center shall be 9½ inches by 16 inches. The approximate inside dimensions of the bottom at the corners shall be 8½ inches by 14 inches. The inside depth at the corners shall be 5½ inches.

(2) The approximate inside dimensions of the top across the center shall be 11½ inches by 17½ inches. The approximate inside dimensions of the bottom at the corners shall be 8½ inches by 14½ inches. The inside depth of the basket at the corners shall be 5 inches.

(3) The inside dimensions of the square-cornered splint basket at the top shall be 8⅝ inches by 17½ inches. The inside dimensions of the bottom shall be 8 inches by 16⅝ inches. The inside depth at the corners shall be 5⅝ inches.

(d) The 16-quart splint basket shall contain 1,075⅘ cubic inches, and conform to the specifications in one of the three following numbered subdivisions:

(2) The approximate inside dimensions of the top across the center shall be 11½ inches by 19½ inches. The approximate inside dimensions of the bottom at the corners shall be 8½ inches by 16½ inches. The inside depth at the corners shall be 6 inches.

(3) The inside dimensions of the square-cornered splint basket at the top shall be 9 inches by 19 inches. The inside dimensions of the bottom shall be 8½ inches by 18 inches. The inside depth at the corners shall be 6⅝ inches.

(e) The 24-quart splint basket shall contain 1,612⅘ cubic inches, and conform to the specifications in the three following numbered subdivisions:

(1) The approximate inside dimensions of the top across the center shall be 12 inches by 20 inches. The approximate inside dimensions of the bottom at the corners shall be 10 inches by 17½ inches. The inside depth of the basket at the corners shall be 7½ inches.

(2) The approximate inside dimensions of the top across the center shall be 12 inches by 23 inches. The approximate inside dimensions of the bottom at the corners shall be 9 inches by 19 inches. The inside depth of the basket at the corners shall be 7 inches.

(3) The inside dimensions of the square-cornered splint basket at the top shall be 10⅝ inches by 22½ inches. The inside dimensions of the bottom shall be 9⅝ inches by 20½ inches. The inside depth of the basket at the corners shall be 7½ inches.

With a committee amendment, as follows:

On page 10, line 20, after the word "in," insert the words "one of."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That the standard box for apples shall contain 2,173.5 cubic inches when measured without distention of its parts, and conform to the following dimensions: The length of the box shall be 18 inches, its width shall be 11½ inches, and its depth shall be 10½ inches, all inside measurements.

With a committee amendment, as follows:

Strike out all of section 4.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. BLANTON. Why should you not have a standardized apple box, I will ask the chairman of the committee? Why should this be stricken out by committee amendment?

Mr. VESTAL. For the reason that there is pending before the committee now a separate bill for the standardization of apple boxes.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, if there is a bill here covering all kinds of vegetables and all kinds of fruits other than apples, would it not be much easier and less expensive to have covered the apple provision in this bill?

Mr. VESTAL. The committee thought there were a number of other things to be considered along with the apple box.

Mr. BLANTON. Did the apple producers raise an objection to this provision in the bill?

Mr. VESTAL. Oh, no.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BLANTON. That is all I wanted to know.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of Agriculture shall in his regulations under this act prescribe such tolerances as he may find necessary to allow in the capacities and specifications for hampers, round stave baskets, splint baskets, and the standard apple box, and parts thereof set forth in sections 1, 2, 3, and 4 of this act, in order to provide for reasonable variations occurring in the course of manufacture and handling, and shall also prescribe such tolerances as he may find necessary to allow for the purposes of section 7 of this act in the quantities of fruits or vegetables in hampers, round stave baskets, splint baskets, and the standard apple box, in order to provide for the natural shrinkage of such contents after packing. If a cover be used upon any hamper, basket, or box mentioned in said section, it shall be securely fastened or attached in such a manner, subject to the regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture, as not to reduce the capacity of such hamper, basket, or box below that prescribed therefor.

With a committee amendment as follows:

On page 11, line 21, strike out "5" and insert "4."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, line 24, after the word "baskets," strike out "and the standard apple box."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the next committee amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 12, line 1, after the figure "2," insert the word "and," and, after the figure "3," strike out the comma, the word "and," and the figure "4."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 12, line 3, after the word "handling," strike out the remainder of the section, down to and including the word "packing," in line 8.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, may I ask a question in reference to this?

Mr. VESTAL. Certainly.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I should say to the gentleman that I have been away and have not examined this carefully in all of its aspects. I notice this provision: "The Secretary may provide tolerances in order to cover the shrinkage of vegetables and fruits." I believe there is nothing in the bill—I am not sure—that requires these containers to be full when they are shipped.

Mr. VESTAL. There is not.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Is that the reason why this is stricken out?

Mr. VESTAL. That is the reason why it is stricken out. There is a bill now pending before this Congress, submitted by the Committee on Agriculture, to amend the pure-food act, which will cover the proposition of the filling of baskets and boxes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Of course, it is perfectly patent to anyone that there should be tolerances, either established by law or regulations prepared by the Secretary of Agriculture, in reference to the quantity of contents of fruits and vegetables which are packed as well as those which are refrigerated.

While I am on my feet I would like to say one other thing in reference to the form of this section, and I have no amendment to propose. It provides that the Secretary of Agriculture shall prescribe such tolerances. I think the bill ought to have provided that tolerances shall be allowed, and that the Secretary of Agriculture shall by regulation fix the tolerances. That is a distinction which is, in my judgment, somewhat important. I know that the Department of Agriculture has drawn a number of these bills in recent years and simply said, "the Secretary of Agriculture shall prescribe the tolerances." The legislation itself ought to say that there shall be tolerances and only leave to the Secretary of Agriculture the power of determining the quantity of the tolerance, not as to whether there shall be a tolerance. That is a principle of good legislation. I am not offering an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 12, line 9, after the word "hamper," insert the word "or," and after the word "basket" strike out "or box," and after the word "in" strike out "said section" and insert "this act."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the adoption of the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 12, line 12, after the word "hamper," insert the word "or," and after the word "basket" strike out the words "or box."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The enforcement of this law is placed in the Department of Agriculture. Some time ago we passed one of these standardizing bills—I think the flour-barrel bill. Does the gentleman recall whether that was placed under the Department of Agriculture or the Bureau of Standards?

Mr. VESTAL. The gentleman from Tennessee himself made the motion changing it from the Bureau of Standards to the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. GARRETT. I knew I offered an amendment, but whether it was to change it from the Bureau of Standards to the Department of Agriculture or vice versa I did not recall.

Mr. VESTAL. That is correct.

Mr. GARRETT. I think it is highly desirable that all of these acts should be enforced under one department.

Mr. VESTAL. Yes.

Mr. PARRISH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. VESTAL. Yes.

Mr. PARRISH. On pages 6 and 7 were paragraphs (c), (d), and (e) amended to conform with the amendment that the chairman of the committee offered to the other section?

Mr. VESTAL. There was no amendment to that.

Mr. PARRISH. The point is practically the same.

Mr. VESTAL. I do not think so. Paragraph (c) excludes the idea of any other basket than a stave basket.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That applies only to the stave basket.

Mr. VESTAL. It applies only to the stave baskets.

Mr. PARRISH. The gentleman is right about that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That in order to provide for the more economical use of space in packing or transportation, or for the greater conservation of material or labor in manufacture or handling, or of the contents in course of shipment, of hampers, round stave baskets, and splint baskets for fruits or vegetables, or apple boxes, or parts thereof, the Secretary of Agriculture, whenever he finds necessary, may, in his regulations, prescribe specifications with respect to the material used, or the dimensions thereof, for such hampers, round stave baskets, splint baskets, or apple boxes, or parts thereof in addition to, differing from, or superseding those set forth in sections 1, 2, 3, or 4 of this act, but not departing from the respective capacities therein prescribed. Such specifications shall not supersede any specifications set forth in this act until a period of at least six months shall have elapsed after public notice shall have been given following an opportunity afforded the interested public for a hearing.

With the following committee amendment:

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I suggest to the gentleman that he ask unanimous consent to strike out the section.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that section 1 was amended, striking out the sources of material, I do not think that section 5 is pertinent to the bill, and I ask unanimous consent to strike out section 5 entirely.

Mr. WINGO. Does the gentleman mean the new section 5?

Mr. VESTAL. Section 5 under the new numbering.

Mr. WINGO. The last paragraph on page 12.

Mr. VESTAL. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. That which delegates to the Secretary of Agriculture the right to change specifications?

Mr. VESTAL. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. VESTAL]?

Mr. WINGO. I suggest that the proper record would be to move to strike out that section.

Mr. VESTAL. I move to strike out the old section 6.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. That it shall be unlawful to manufacture for sale or shipment, offer for sale, or ship, or to import or cause to be imported into the continental United States, hampers, round stave baskets, or splint baskets for fruits or vegetables, or apple boxes, either filled or unfilled, or parts of such hampers, round stave baskets, splint baskets, apple boxes that do not comply with this act; or fruits or vegetables not sold or offered for sale by standard net weight or by numerical count, in hampers, round stave baskets, splint baskets, or apple boxes that at the time of such offer for sale, shipment, or importation are not filled to the full capacity thereof, stricken measure, subject to such tolerances as may be prescribed in the regulations under this act: Provided, That this act shall not apply to baskets or other containers having capacities less than 4 quarts which comply with the provisions of the act approved August 31, 1916, entitled "An act to fix standards for Climax baskets for grapes and other fruits and vegetables, and to fix standards for baskets and other containers for small fruits, berries, and vegetables, and for other purposes" (39 U. S. Stat. L., p. 673), and the regulations thereunder. Any individual, partnership, association, or corporation that willfully violates this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $100 or imprisonment not exceeding 60 days, or both.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. I suggest to the chairman of the committee that he ask unanimous consent to change the numbering of the subsequent sections, as one section has been dropped out.

Mr. WINGO. I suggest that that can be done at the end.

Mr. VESTAL. Yes.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 13, line 6, strike out the figure "7" and insert the figure "6."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It should be section 5 now, as the other section has been dropped out. I ask unanimous consent that it be changed to section 5.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it will be changed to section 5.

There was no objection.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I am against the amendment, and on reflection I do not think the committee will believe that it is necessary to include the word "sell." To sell what? To sell these baskets and hampers. In other words, if some farmer were to put some fruit into one of these old baskets for the purpose of taking it to town to sell to a local dealer to be sold out at retail, then under the law that man would be guilty of a Federal offense. I suggest to the gentleman, as a practical proposition, that if he gets his law through, which will practically stop the manufacture of these baskets after November 1, 1921, when the law becomes effective, it certainly will not destroy the practical operation of the act if you fail to penalize some man who may happen to sell an old basket. Of course, I think there ought to be another amendment to restrict the provisions of this act to interstate commerce. If that is not offered by some one else, I shall offer it. That would meet the object you have in view. I do not believe that under the provision of the Constitution authorizing Congress to fix standards of weights and measures you can undertake to do this, but I do concede that under the commerce clause of the Constitution you may prohibit the shipment and the manufacture for shipment in interstate commerce of anything that you chose to. You are the judges of that.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WINGO. I yield.

Mr. DEMPSEY. On the gentleman's first question I do not think there is any danger at all to the farmers in leaving the act as it is, because of a condition with which the gentleman must be thoroughly familiar. There is a tremendous shortage of baskets. Every basket in existence in the United States is going to be used within the time prescribed by this act.

Mr. WINGO. Let me call attention to a practical proposition. I happen to know one little local corporation, a cooperative corporation, that last year carried over $1,500 worth of baskets. Their crop has been absolutely destroyed this year. They used thousands of dollars worth of baskets last year. They bought baskets abnormally cheap and have a great surplus. They are going to carry them over and they will have more baskets than they have need for next year's crop. It is true that they could sell them at a profit, but when they go into the market next year they have no assurance at all how many they will need, because there might come a hailstorm the first few days of the harvest and destroy a part of the crop, or there might be extraordinary conditions existing where the marketable part of the crop would drop down and they would sell a great part of their product at a loss. They might be left next season if they had the same kind of a freeze next year as they had this year, and they would have to hold the surplus. I know small concerns have bought a great supply of baskets and keep them over from year to year, putting them back in the warehouse. They may have bought these baskets years ago. If you get the bill through, here is how it will be carried out: The large manufacturers will not manufacture any more nonstandard baskets; they will manufacture standards prescribed in this bill, and in course of time you will clean up and eliminate the nonstandard baskets. But if there be a small association that kept the old baskets and used them, not for the purpose that you are trying to prohibit, they will have a Federal inspector snooping around, and you know what their tendency is. This man will have to go before a commissioner and make an explanation, or go to the expense of going to the Federal court, which in some instances might be 150 miles away. I, for one, am trying to do all I can to get the people of my district, in the less productive cotton lands, into growing fruit, and I do not want them to get the impression that the Federal Government is interfering with that thing. You are going to pass this over my protest. You are going to get what you want. If you punish the manufacturer of the nonstandard baskets, you have got all that you want.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Does not the gentleman think that in nine cases out of ten in these high-priced times, when baskets have increased in price two or three times, that the vast majority of them will be used and consequently the baskets depreciated from being kept more than a reasonable time? They are not made in the most substantial way; they are made for practically present use, made of material that shrinks, and material where the shrinkage is such that it loosens the nails or whatever holds them together; and if the basket is not used within a reasonable time, everybody that deals in them and everybody who uses them knows that they deteriorate in their value.

Mr. WINGO. There is something in the statement of the gentleman from New York, but still they buy a great many of these baskets in advance.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I know, sometimes six months in advance.

Mr. WINGO. Several months ago when they ordered the baskets they thought they would have the greatest crop they ever had, and these baskets were bought by the carload lot. In a great many instances I noticed where the carload baskets came in they were carried and stored in the warehouses before the freeze, which was the coldest weather we have had since 1882. I admit that it is an abnormal year. Necessarily they buy more than they think they need. Next year they may not have more than a normal crop, so they will have to carry these baskets over until the spring or summer of 1921, after this law goes into effect in November. I am going to make the suggestion as a practical propositon, that you extend this over because of this abnormal condition of the weather.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. This does not prevent the use of baskets in shipping fruits and vegetables.

Mr. WINGO. It says specifically "sell, offer for sale, or ship," and further down it says "fruits and vegetables."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. This refers to shipping baskets and not to the sale of baskets.

Mr. WINGO. It says "manufacture, sale, or ship for fruits or vegetables, either filled or unfilled."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is descriptive of the basket. The gentleman was objecting to the word "sell."

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman from New York was asking me a question on another matter and I did make that statement, it is true. As I say, when the association finds that its crop is lighter than the normal year they are perfectly willing to sell their surplus baskets.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. They will have a year and a half in which to dispose of these matters. Whether that time is long enough I do not undertake to say.

Mr. WINGO. They will have one crop year.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. They have two crops.

Mr. WINGO. No; this year's crop is all destroyed. They have all bought their baskets for this year, and they are all in.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Their crops may have been destroyed. I do not deny that. On the question of shipment practically about the only way the Government can regulate these things is where the manufacturer ships them.

Mr. WINGO. I agree with the gentleman. I think that is true. If you will cut out the word "sell" and put in the words "ship in interstate commerce," I think it will cure the difficulty. In other words, if you want to control the shipment of nonstandard baskets in interstate commerce, I concede the constitutional power to do it, and also that there is a good deal of wisdom back of the argument.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. There is no question about the constitutional power. We have just as much constitutional power here as we have to prevent putting out counterfeit money.

Mr. WINGO. I doubt very seriously if we have the same power to regulate the size of baskets as we have to punish the circulation of counterfeit money.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. We do it under exactly the same provision of the Constitution, and they are both implied powers.

Mr. WINGO. No; you are undertaking to enact this under the express power fixing the standard of weights and measures.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That power implies the power to regulate, just as the power to coin money implies the power to forbid counterfeiting.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has again expired.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that his time be extended for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DEMPSEY. If the chairman would be willing to do this—and I do not know whether he will or not—I think the gentleman's objection could be met in this way: You can make it unlawful to manufacture for sale or shipment——

Mr. WINGO. In interstate commerce.

Mr. DEMPSEY. These baskets, and then you could limit it by saying "or to sell baskets manufactured after this act goes into effect."

Mr. WINGO. Of course, that would cure it some, but my proposition is this: If you control the shipment of this proposition, then you have control of the whole thing, for the purpose which you are really trying to reach in this bill.

Mr. DEMPSEY. The difficulty is in enforcing it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The difficulty is in making proof in any case. I think the objection of the gentleman from Arkansas is not practical. I can see the point. I do not believe in preventing the use of these baskets that they have. Whether the time ought to be extended a little bit over what it is in the bill, I do not undertake to say. Perhaps it might be. After all, if you pass a law, you have got to have a law that apparently can be enforced, so that people will voluntarily obey it.

Mr. WINGO. I agree with the gentleman on that. If you are going to have a law, it ought to be a law that can be enforced.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not think the gentleman will find, as some gentlemen have remarked this afternoon, a whole lot of inspectors running around the country looking up these matters.

Mr. WINGO. I think they will.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I am pretty sure they will not, because they will not get the money for that purpose.

Mr. WINGO. I hope the gentleman is correct about that.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. In the main, the laws now on the statute books regulating similar things are really enforced by the State officials who have to deal with them, the local authorities, who called the attention of the governmental authorities to these things. There is probably no large city that does not have some one watching weights and measures in all of the markets. I do not think inspectors will be going out except where they find men are manufacturing or attempting to manufacture in violation of the law. I agree with the gentleman that they will quit doing that when this becomes a law.

Mr. HERSMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. Yes.

Mr. HERSMAN. It seems to me that the gentleman's contention that it will be hard to dispose of these baskets is not well taken, because everyone over the whole country recognizes the great shortage of shooks of any description, and any farmer or association that has any baskets on hand which they are not likely to use in two seasons can easily get rid of them at an advanced price; and, furthermore, any law that goes into effect is bound to affect some people adversely and to be hard upon them at first, but because it does affect one association or one farmer in the country who has a few baskets on hand is no reason why we should not pass the legislation, because in the two seasons he certainly will get rid of all of the baskets that he has on hand.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has again expired.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. As a matter of fact, are not the baskets to which the gentleman refers of the sizes named in the bill?

Mr. WINGO. No; I think not. I think they are of the present standard.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The present standard is generally these sizes.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman from Illinois makes the statement, and I hope he is right about it, that we will not have these Federal inspectors. He says that the enforcement will depend upon the State authorities. I know that every time the matter has come up we have had a difficulty about it. I remember upon the Federal explosives act that a majority of the Republicans voted against my contention to have the assistance of the State authorities to enforce the act. I hope the day will come when we can, instead of increasing the number of inspectors, reduce them. Since the armistice was signed I have voted to cut down Federal employees, and I am willing to vote at any time to cut down bureaus and inspectors and the number of Federal employees. I am opposed to creating more. The gentleman from California [Mr. HERSMAN] says that these people can dispose of any surplus baskets that they have. That might be true to-day, but the man who has those baskets to-day will say, "I might have more difficulty next year than now, and next year there might be an industrial situation arise when I will necessarily need this surplus."

The gentleman knows as a practical man that the practical shipper of fruit is never content to order just what he thinks he will need for the season. He orders several months in advance by the carload lots sufficient to be sure to give him enough, and every one of them carries over from 10 to 50 and sometimes 100 per cent surplus. That is true in my country, if it may not be in the gentleman's country. As I said to you a while ago, one little corporation of only 40 acres carried over and listed as part of their assets $1,500 in baskets. I think to make unlawful the sale of baskets is not right.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Mr. Chairman, this bill presents another plain case of an undue effort upon the part of Congress to intrude itself into the private business affairs of the people of the country. Some one, I do not know who it was, has said that "the people who are the least governed are the best governed."

Government—State and National—has become too highly organized. Everything and everybody is being "regulated." The people, almost every time they turn around, commit a statutory misdemeanor. In their struggle for existence they are continually encountering some statute, penal in character, denouncing as criminal acts which from time immemorial until a date quite recent were entirely innocent.

In the States we have boards and commissions, bureaus and departments, and in the Federal Government all these are duplicated, with many thousands of unnecessary employees infesting the public—parasites upon the body politic, eating up the substance of the people. Business men lose their way in a labyrinth of law and stand bewildered in a great jungle of regulations.

Now comes this bill H. R. 12350, 17 pages in length, providing for the character of containers in which fruits and vegetables may be shipped and making it a crime, punishable by fine and imprisonment, to ship or sell such fruits or vegetables, if the container shall be different from the kinds specified in the bill. The specification for one of the kinds—I quote from the bill—reads thus:

(c) The standard five-eighths bushel hamper shall contain 1,344 cubic inches and conform to the following specifications: The inside diameter between the staves at the upper edge of the top inside hoop shall be 14½ inches; the inside diameter of the bottom shall be 9 inches; the inside length of the staves shall be 12⅝ inches; the inside top hoop shall be one-eighth of an inch thick and set with its upper edge even with the upper ends of the staves; each stave shall be not less than one-ninth of an inch thick and 13½ inches long; and the bottom piece shall be five-eighths of an inch thick.

If this bill becomes law, the average farmer would not ship, and the merchant would hardly undertake to sell, fruits and vegetables for fear of violating such most absurd but highly penal law.

Not long since a friend of mine was in a grocery store here in the city of Washington, and observing for sale a nice country ham informed the merchant he would take the ham, and requested the merchant to ship the same to his home, located in a near-by State. Whereupon the merchant informed my friend that he could not comply with his request unless the meat was inspected and stamped by an agent of the Meat Inspection Bureau.

As germane to the subject of regulating industry, may I direct your minds to a measure that may come before this body, known as Senate bill No. 4089, providing for the appointment of a Federal coal commissioner, charged with certain duties and clothed with sundry powers, and for the commissioner a nice fat salary. Relating to this proposition is a letter under date of the 25th instant to me from Mr. Samuel W. Patterson, president and general manager of the Bottom Creek Coal & Coke Co., of Vivian, in McDowell County, W. Va., operating in the celebrated Pocahontas coal field in my district. The letter reads in part as follows:

This morning's mail brings a copy of Senator FRELINGHUYSEN'S bill, S. 4089, providing for the appointment of a permanent Federal coal commissioner.

The idea that all the ills of the day can be cured by Washington seems to have a strong hold in these days, and I do hope there are enough men of good sound judgment in both the Senate and House of Representatives to realize the injustice of mischievous regulation of the business that some of your friends happen to be in, unless the plan is to upset our whole scheme of government and run the whole business life of the country in the same way—an inconceivable calamity.

It is true that with coal buyers bidding for an output curtailed in part by reason of various strikes, and more so by the vicious interference in the past with the transportation problems of the country, that coal is too high in price at this time, when the prices are reaching up to the level of other commodities.

The natural economic laws will bring about a proper adjustment and excessive prices now will bring about their own punishment, reflected later in too low prices.

This letter is self-explanatory and correctly states the situation. Mr. Patterson's views are sound and his judgment is in harmony with the conclusions arrived at by the intelligent and thinking people of the country.

The past effort of nonqualified and ill-advised Federal officials have stifled the production, retarded the transportation, and complicated the distribution of coal, to the disadvantage of the operator, whose fixed charges had to be borne by a diminished output, and to the great damage of the consumer, who suffered by reason of the reduced and irregular supply and in the increased cost of the coal.

If we allow the natural law of supply and demand freely to operate as to coal—if the legislative and executive branches of Government will cease from imposing artificial restraints upon the business—the volume of production will soon exceed the demand, and with a steady output and normal consumption the price to the consumer will fall to a lower level.

The Frelinghuysen bill I regard as most inopportune. The measure is not as radical as the socialist or syndicalist might desire it to be, yet it does contain the germ that would grow into the nationalization, not of coal alone, but of every American industry as well. If the measure be enacted into law, a precedent will have been thereby established, not likely to be overruled, but, on the other hand, consistently followed, expanded, and enlarged upon according to the changing will of future radical leaders.

Now is the time to go slow. Property rights were never more in peril, not necessarily from the specter of nationalism, which is the new name for socialism, but on account of oppressive taxation, which when carried to its limit operates a confiscation. Furthermore, business may be strangled and property rights may be destroyed and lost by the process of regulation.

The term "Federal coal commissioner" is merely a new name or alias for our late well-known friend, the "Government Fuel Administrator." Government regulation, no less than Government ownership, of a private industry in peace times is un-American and an expensive luxury that the people can ill afford. We tried out the theory during the war in relation to railroads and telephones and other industries and activities, and at what inconvenience and cost the country knows. Prof. Tousig, of the sugar board, advised the President not to buy the Cuban sugar crop when it was offered at the price of 6½ cents per pound.

What the people want and need is the repeal of the war laws; not the creation of new ones of the same tenor. The country also wants relief from the petty, but expensive, arrogances of many superfluous Government agencies, such as the Federal Trade Commission. The latter concern has arrogated to itself inquisitorial powers that could hardly have been permitted under a despotic government of the class of Prussia and Russia. Recently it became necessary for a Federal court to decree an injunction against their action upon the ground that such action was an usurped and assumed power never given them by law and was an invasion of the Constitution. The direct cost of operating the Federal Trade Commission, as shown by appropriations for the fiscal year 1920, is $1,205,000, but the indirect cost to the country runs high up into the millions.

Concerns engaged in mining, manufacturing, and commerce that have to make monthly reports to this commission find it generally necessary to employ an extra clerk of special ability to collect the data and fill out the complicated forms which these inquisitive gentlemen require, and all to very little, if any, purpose, for these reports have no value, except to be sorted, tabulated, indexed, analyzed, and forgotten. But, of course, this business affords place for the job hunter.

Better had the commission and its staff, and its lawyers, and its battery of examiners, and its experts, and its detectives, and its vast army of employees be put upon an island of the sea and allowed to shovel sand, first this way and then that way. If this were done business would be happy as the result of avoiding the waste of millions of dollars and the people grateful for some relief along the line of the cost of living.

Congress should pass an act repealing the Federal Trade Commission act. If the President should veto the measure, then Congress should refuse to appropriate money for the commission, and thereby force it to discontinue its utterly useless business.

We find all these boards and agencies grasping for more power. The Federal Trade Commission has a bill before the Committee on the Judiciary, of which I am a member, seeking an extension of its powers, which, if granted, would make the Supreme Court in comparison look like a mere police court.

The centralization of power in Federal agencies in recent years—the great majority of which is chargeable to our former State rights friends, the Democrats—is enough to make Jefferson turn in his grave and to cause Hamilton to sit up in his coffin in wonder and astonishment. We should have less of the centripetal and more of the centrifugal in the legislative, executive, and judicial branches of the Federal Government.

How long will it be until officials awaken from the state of coma in which they now rest and by courageous action turn the prow of the old ship of state away from the rocks and reefs that endanger her into the peaceful channels of national safety and good will?

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. Mr. Chairman, I was very much impressed by the splendid appeal for democracy just made in which the gentleman calls the spade a spade and says that he does not want any more officious interference with the private affairs of this country than is absolutely necessary for popular government. I was very much interested in his statement of the dire terrors of the inspectors who were being sent about all over the country to everybody, and then I was equally struck with the position that the gentleman takes, which is that he will probably vote for this bill when a provision is carried in the twelfth section to provide for inspectors for watching the farm baskets of this country. It will take an army nearly as big as it took to go to France, and yet he proposes to vote for it notwithstanding his protest against the multiplication of these instrumentalities.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. STEVENSON. To be sure.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. I admit the gentleman's argument is pretty strong. I never said that I would vote for the bill. My decision remains in abeyance.

Mr. STEVENSON. I am glad the gentleman is on the border and that he is considering coming out on the Lord's side. He talks on the right side. If he would just vote that way, we would not pass this measure in the shape it is in here.

It is true that only $10,000 is appropriated now for these activities, but they provide that this shall be available immediately and until expended, and as soon as it is all expended there will be a provision in the deficiency appropriation bill here for three or four times that amount.

The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GOODYKOONTZ] spoke awhile ago about the Democratic Party being as centralized as Alexander Hamilton himself. I call his attention to the fact that it is the Republican Party that has brought this bill in, and it is worse than Hamilton conceived could be ever brought forth under the Constitution which he helped make and adopt.

Mr. Chairman, I am prepared to join my friend from West Virginia in stopping the raid upon the rights of the private citizens of this country to regulate and manage their own business in their own way. I conceive that this measure is the product of the brain of the manufacturers of baskets in this country, who have now to maintain a large stock in their warehouses and a large amount of material and cater to a large amount of different kinds of trade, and they want to standardize it so that the stock carried will not be so large and so that the machinery for manufacturing it can be standardized, and that there will be about three kinds to be manufactured instead of eight or ten kinds. I have heard the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. LAYTON] say here that the manufacturers were absolutely in favor of this, and I believe it. Many of them live in Delaware, too, and I am not surprised that the gentleman is advocating it. But I say that this is a raid upon the rights of the common people in this country, and therefore I am not in favor of it. I do not care whether it is Hamiltonian or Jeffersonian, and I join with the gentleman from West Virginia in opposition to it. [Applause.]

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. Chairman, is there an amendment pending? I want to offer an amendment to this section.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee amendment is now pending.

The question is on the amendment of the committee, which the Clerk will now report.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Seventy-four Members are present, not a quorum. The Clerk will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Andrews, Md.	Drane	Jefferis	Reed, N. Y.

Thereupon the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DOWELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having under consideration the bill (H. R. 12350) to fix standards for hampers, round stave baskets, and splint baskets for fruits and vegetables, to establish a standard box for apples, and for other purposes, and finding itself without a quorum he had caused the roll to be called, whereupon 270 Members had responded to their names, a quorum, and he submitted a list of the absentees to be entered in the Journal and in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The committee will resume its session.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Chairman, a committee amendment is pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 13, line 10, strike out the words "or apple boxes."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 13, line 11, after the word "baskets," strike out the comma and insert the word "or."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next one.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 13, line 11, after the word "baskets," strike out the comma and the words "apple boxes."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next one.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 13, line 12, after the word "act," strike out the semicolon and all down to and including the word "act" in line 19.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I move as a substitute for the committee amendment that you strike out on line 15 the words "or apple boxes." I think the balance that is proposed to be stricken out is very beneficial to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina offers a preferential amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment to the committee amendment: Page 13, line 15, strike out the words "or apple boxes."

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, the amendment which I offer excludes any dealing with apple boxes, and seems to be in accordance with the policy of the committee. The amendment which I propose, instead of striking out all that is proposed to be stricken out there, merely strikes out that part which refers to the apple boxes, which has been stricken out all the way through.

Now, what does it leave which is beneficial? It leaves the provision "that fruits or vegetables not sold or offered for sale by standard net weight or by numerical count in hampers, round stave baskets, splint baskets," and so forth, must be contained in the standard containers. In other words, if my amendment is adopted, it provides that when they sell by the pound or by the number, they can put them in any kind of basket they see fit, and if they leave that in it is a very beneficial provision in the bill, in my judgment. In other words, in the bill as it stands, if a man undertakes to ship or deal in any kind of a basket he must do it in a basket of the kind here described. If you adopt this amendment that I propose, you allow him, when he sells by the pound or the dozen, to ship it in any kind of a hamper or basket that he sees fit. I think that is right.

Then there is another thing. You say you want to deal honestly in this matter; you say you want to enforce honesty. Now, the balance which they propose to strike out is a prohibition against selling improperly and not according to regulations. Do you propose to put the stamp of permission of dishonest filling by striking that out? I submit that that writes the word "hypocrisy" against the whole effort to pass the bill if you undertake to strike that out. [Applause.] The part to be stricken out is—or fruits or vegetables not sold or offered for sale by standard net weight or by numerical count, in hampers, round stave baskets, splint baskets, or apple boxes that at the time of such offer for sale, shipment, or importation are not filled to the full capacity thereof, stricken measure, subject to such tolerances as may be prescribed in the regulations under this act.

Now, my motion is principally intended to preserve the right of anybody, when he is going to sell his potatoes by the pound or his melons by the dozen, to ship them in a hamper of any kind, make, or conformation that he chooses. The striking of this out prevents that, although it has been asserted on the floor that will not prevent it. I submit that that privilege should not be denied to the shippers and producers of this country, and that is the only reason I have for making the motion.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If I understand correctly the language of the original section, it provides that it shall be unlawful to sell fruits or vegetables not offered for sale in hampers, round stave baskets, splint baskets, or apple boxes. That makes it unlawful to sell any of these articles in anything except the containers named in the bill.

Mr. STEVENSON. In anything except the sizes provided for in the bill.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Does the gentleman want to provide that no fruit shall be sold in boxes or barrels, for instance, and leave it so that no fruit or vegetables can be sold except in hampers or stave baskets or splint baskets? I think the gentleman has the wrong conception.

Mr. STEVENSON. If the gentleman will read the balance of it he will see what I am driving at. It says that it shall apply to hampers, baskets, or apple boxes—that at the time of such offer for sale, shipment, or importation are not filled to the full capacity thereof, stricken measure, subject to such tolerances as may be prescribed in the regulations under this act.

In other words, the bill as it originally was written provided that when they sold they had to sell in containers of this kind, and they had to sell a full basket. Now you propose to strike that out. You propose to strike out the provision that safeguards the public and provides that they must fill the baskets in an honest way, or come within the terms of this act; and you strike out that part that allows sale by weight and number without being in the containers prescribed.

Mr. WINGO. I move to strike out the last word. To illustrate the possible dangers of a bill like this I desire to call the attention of the committee to this fact, that many shippers of radishes ship them in bunches made up as we buy them in the market. They put them in containers of all kinds. In my town some of them will ship them in barrels with burlap over the top, or they will ship them in a splint hamper, or they will ship them in a peach basket, or in any kind of a basket or container that they want to use. I appreciate the force of the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois, which is that this section makes it unlawful to sell the basket, and that the part which is proposed to be stricken out is the part that made it unlawful to sell fruits and vegetables in baskets other than the standard baskets. That really is the distinction.

Mr. DEMPSEY. In containers other than those prescribed?

Mr. WINGO. Yes. The language proposed to be stricken out by the amendment is this:

Or fruits or vegetables not sold or offered for sale by standard net weight or by numerical count, in hampers, round stave baskets, splint baskets, or apple boxes that at the time of such offer for sale, shipment, or importation are not filled to the full capacity thereof, stricken measure, subject to such tolerances as may be prescribed in the regulations under this act.

Of course, that language ought to be clarified. It is not very clear. The contention of the gentleman from Illinois is correct. It is this, that the language which precedes the language I have just read is the language which says it shall be unlawful to manufacture for sale or shipment, and so forth, hampers, round stave baskets, for fruits or vegetables, either filled or unfilled, or parts of such hampers, which do not comply with this act. I can see the force of the gentleman's objection that what they intended to do by striking out this provision was to restrict the unlawful condemnation to the basket itself and not to the fruit. I presume that is the intention of the committee.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. And if the gentleman will permit, the language of the original bill was that no fruit or vegetables should be offered for sale unless they were in a hamper, round stave basket, splint basket, or apple box filled full; but that would permit the offering for sale of any fruit or vegetables in a barrel or container of any other kind, and now we have cut out the apple boxes everywhere else, it would permit the sale of apples in boxes.

Mr. WINGO. It would also prevent the sale of fruit in any basket other than where it is by numerical count.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. We have the power, I think, under the Constitution to fix the measure or container we make, and I think we have, too, the incidental powers, but we do not have the power under the Constitution to forbid the sale of articles in other kinds of containers which we do not fix the size of.

Mr. WINGO. I agree with the gentleman, and I go further: I say that we have under the Constitution the power to fix the standard of the basket, but while we have the power to fix the standard we have no right to say that if the farmer puts his fruit in any other kind of a basket he is guilty, unless it is of a deceptive character where he offers seven-eighths of a bushel for a bushel, or a bushel and a half for two bushels. I say you have no right to restrict him unless he engages in fraudulent misrepresentation. In other words, we have the power to punish fraud and deception, but we have not the other power.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Within a limited degree we have the power to punish fraud and deception. We could prevent its entering interstate commerce. But clearly we have not the power to say that no one shall sell fruit or vegetables except in certain standard containers.

Mr. WINGO. I agree with the gentleman, and that is the real object of the bill as shown by the language which it is proposed to strike out.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The object of this amendment is to strike out that provision.

Mr. WINGO. The intention of the proponents of the bill was to punish the sale of fruit in other than standard containers. That is shown by the language proposed to be stricken out and I am glad that the committee did not favor it. I think when you take the bill as a whole the effect on the shipper will be a depressing effect because he will not make the clear distinction that you and I are making. He will not see that the inhibition goes alone to the basket, but may think it goes to the sale of his fruit, because there are provisions for the Federal inspection going to the wagon of the farmer or his little Ford truck.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I think that the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from Arkansas practically overlook one of the questions that I maintain is raised here. It is unlawful to sell any fruit or vegetables unless sold or offered for sale under the standard net weight or numerical count. If we strike out the words proposed to be stricken out and leave that all in, it is not lawful to sell them in any other way unless they are sold by weight or count. That is the point I am directing my attention to.

Mr. WINGO. I agree with the gentleman, and I am perfectly willing to bar from interstate commerce the deceptively filled baskets of fruit. It is not fair to the consumer. The fruit growers are honest, and they do not want it. You will find a dishonest one here and there, as you will find a dishonest lawyer or preacher, but the major part of the fruit growers are honest and want to give good measure.

I am willing under the control of interstate commerce to bar from interstate commerce the deceptively filled basket or container of any kind, whether it be fruit, vegetables, cereals, or anything else. I would like to see some such provision put in the bill. I will vote for a bill that undertakes to say that the public shall not be deceived by the use of deceptive containers of any kind. I think it ought to be unlawful to put leaves or anything else in the bottom of the basket, making it appear to be full when it is not full. I think it ought to be unlawful to raise the bottom of the fruit container so as to make it appear to hold more than it actually does. Why? Because the person who is buying the fruit at a fruit stand can not see the false bottom, and that is a fraud, and we ought to control it in interstate commerce and see that that kind of a package shall be barred from interstate commerce.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, the question of the filling of the package is to be dealt with by another bill.

Mr. WINGO. Unless I am mistaken, I think that under present existing laws, in practically every State, it is unlawful to display these fraudulent packages, and as the prosecuting attorney of my district I can pick up any merchant who offers for sale these deceptive containers under the false pretense statutes.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate upon this section and all amendments thereto be now closed.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I desire to offer.

Mr. VESTAL. Oh, the gentleman can offer his amendment.

Mr. BRIGGS. But I want to speak to my amendment.

Mr. VESTAL. Then I will modify my motion to make it five minutes.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I desire to offer, and I want five minutes.

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to offer to section 6.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Chairman, then I ask unanimous consent to amend my motion by making it 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to modify his motion by making it 15 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana that all debate upon this section and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON] as a substitute for the committee amendment.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It is really to perfect the text.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. STEVENSON) there were—ayes 31, noes 63.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs upon the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. BRIGGS: Page 14, at the end of line 6, strike out the period, insert a semicolon, and add the following:

"Provided, That no person shall be prosecuted under the provisions of this act when he can establish a guaranty signed by the manufacturer, wholesaler, shipper, or other party residing within the United States from whom hampers, round stave baskets, splint baskets, or other containers as defined in this act were purchased to the effect that said hampers, round stave baskets, splint baskets, or other containers are correct within the meaning of this act. Said guaranty, to afford protection, shall contain the name and address of the party or parties making the sale of hampers, round stave baskets, splint baskets, or other containers to such person, and in such case such party or parties making such sale shall be amenable to prosecution, fines, and other penalties which would attach in due course to any person under the provisions of this act."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BRIGGS. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman defines the three kinds of containers named by the act. Does he think that his amendment ought to say "or other containers"?

Mr. BRIGGS. There are so many variations of those in the act——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. But they are all named by three names. It does not seem to me that we ought to endeavor to cover any other containers.

Mr. BRIGGS. Except as defined in the act. This provision that I have put in here is one that was added to or included in the standard-container act of 1916.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I understand, and I think it is a good amendment.

Mr. BRIGGS. Then I ask unanimous consent to strike out the words "or other containers" wherever they occur in the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment as the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On the fifth line of the amendment strike out the words "or other containers," and strike out, also, the same words wherever they appear in the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the modification of the amendment?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman's amendment also provided to insert a semicolon instead of a period. I think it should be a colon.

Mr. BRIGGS. I have no objection to that modification, and I ask unanimous consent to so modify the amendment as to make it a colon.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment further as indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Chairman, the committee will accept that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I desire to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 13, line 6, after the word "to," strike out "manufacture for sale or shipment," and in line 7 strike out the words "offer for sale," and after the word "ship," in line 7, insert the words "in interstate commerce."

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the authority to pass the section of this measure now before us must be based either on the clause of the Constitution authorizing the Congress to fix the standard of weights and measures or on that clause authorizing the Congress to regulate commerce between the States. I notice that the gentleman from Iowa, by the movement of his head, indicates his dissent to that proposition. In view of the Republican attitude with reference to that document—the Constitution—now regarded by the majority as almost obsolete, I am not surprised that even so eminent a constitutional lawyer as the gentleman from Iowa should indicate his dissent to that proposition. Under this section, unless you adopt the amendment which I have offered, you make it unlawful within each State of this Union to manufacture a hamper of any dimension other than that provided by this bill, and you make it unlawful to ship in intrastate commerce from one town to another wholly within the same State a hamper filled or unfilled not conforming to such measurements. You will send among the people of the individual States a horde of Federal inspectors, who have already been so accurately and amply described by the gentleman from Arkansas and the gentleman from West Virginia, who will go snooping around among the places of private business inquiring into and investigating private affairs. You would make it a crime punishable by prosecution in a Federal court for a citizen to make or offer for sale a hamper unless it fits this Procrustean standard you are setting up in this bill, irrespective of his innocent intent. The power to fix a standard of measurement does not embrace the power to prohibit the use of any character of container, and the only method by which it can be reached is through the interstate-commerce clause, to prohibit the shipment of the inhibited hampers in interstate commerce. If you are determined to adopt this bill, base your action upon some, at least, apparent authority of the Constitution. I want to congratulate the Republican Party on the product of this great measure. I wonder why this great party has waited for so many years without bringing forward this very urgent and very necessary legislation.

How the Republic has prospered and reached a state of development such as is enjoyed to-day without this great constructive measure I can hardly comprehend. I judge it must be in response to the President's message of last August, directing attention to reduction of the cost of living, that you have at last with your little miscroscope found the farmer and the truck grower and have now leveled your legislative artillery upon them to reduce the high cost of living by making criminal that which in itself may be harmless and innocent. Under this bill the farmer can not ship a hamper of tomatoes from one point to another unless that succulent and toothsome vegetable is in a hamper one-eighth of an inch thick, with 13 ribs to it, and so many staves, and with a top and bottom of prescribed diameter. That is your remedy for the high cost of living. You provide that the farmer can not ship his melons if he ships them in a hamper other than this particular kind of a hamper. You totally forget the melons that they are cutting in the stock exchanges and other places. In to-day's Star appears this notice about the Chapin-Sacks Co., that deals, so I am told, in foodstuffs in the city of Washington: "The Chapin-Sacks cuts a 200 per cent melon. Stockholders vote increase in stock and approve sale of company." I would adjure the Republican Party to pay a little more attention to melons of that kind, rather than by getting after the fellow who by the sweat of his face raises a few little melons down in a cotton patch and undertakes to ship to the local market to feed the people of the world. [Applause.] No; you have got to do something in order to consume time and create a belief that you are at work. This House has spent two days on this miserable measure; on this measly measure two Calendar Wednesdays have been spent because you have got nothing else on your legislative program of moment or importance that you care to consider. I want to say that not with my vote will this House adopt a measure of this kind, uselessly restricting the freedom of the people and adding to the burdens of the people by raising the cost of what they eat, because every time you put an additional restriction on the freedom of people to trade in commerce you add to the cost of the article in which they deal.

You are adding to the taxpayer's cost. You are providing for the appointment of a corps of inspectors under the direction of the Agricultural Department to go around the country to inspect the crates and boxes and hampers in which people may ship a few little articles of foodstuffs.

It is poor statesmanship to impose useless and irritating restrictive measures. It is only when some great evil can be removed that justification may be found for restrictive acts. It is claimed that this bill is designed to prevent fraud, but it goes much further than that. I daresay in every State there are now on the books laws making it a crime to sell false weights or measures.

You are undertaking to appoint guardians for the people who buy. You are saying that the people have not sense enough when they buy a bushel of potatoes or a bushel of any other food products to know when they are buying a bushel. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I beg the pardon of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] for my dissent when he said that the same clause that contained the provision with regard to weights and measures was the one that provided against the control of commerce generally.

Mr. CONNALLY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly.

Mr. CONNALLY. I will state to the gentleman that I did not say that. I said if this Congress enacted this measure it must be on one or the other of those clauses.

Mr. TOWNER. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I misunderstood him. The clause under which this act stands or falls is this provision of the Constitution giving power to Congress to coin money, to regulate the value thereof and the foreign coin, and fix the standard of weights and measures.

Gentlemen who are familiar with the debates, both in the constitutional convention and in the States, where the question was as to the adoption of the Constitution, are certainly aware of the fact that this provision was intended to take from the States the right to fix standards of weights and measures. It was urged as one of the objections to the Constitution that it did this. But, nevertheless, it is in the Constitution, and it has remained in the Constitution until this day. It was expected that Congress would take from the States the power to regulate weights and measures and establish standards for them. That we have not done so is merely because Congress has not exercised those powers. The reason that this power was given to Congress was because then, as now, different standards of weights and measures were adopted in different States of the Union. Then, as now, there were no uniform standards. Then, as now, whenever interstate commerce was affected it was impossible to know what was a bushel or what was any other measure, and so, for that reason, for the purpose of establishing uniformity, this provision of the Constitution was enacted.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. STEVENSON. Does the gentleman contend, however, that having fixed that a bushel hamper contains so many cubic inches, they can go on and provide a shape for that hamper? Is that fixing the standard or fixing the style of the carrier?

Mr. TOWNER. That, I will say to the gentleman, is entirely within the power of Congress. Whatever may be necessary in order to fix and establish standards of weights and measures is within the power of Congress under this provision of the Constitution.

Now, gentlemen, I can not see why gentlemen are so earnest in their opposition to this bill. It may be that some of the provisions of it are subject to criticism. That is within our power to correct by amendment. But for gentlemen to stand upon this floor arguing in opposition to the principle involved in this legislation I can not believe is justified. Gentlemen, it is not for the purpose, as suggested by men who have spoken in opposition to this bill, of aiding the manufacturers of these containers. That is an immaterial and an infinitesimal proposition. Gentlemen can hardly believe, I think, that this legislation is urged upon Congress at the instance of these manufacturers. But we now know that under existing circumstances, with the varying legislation in the different States of the Union, fraud is continually being perpetrated with regard to the sale of these articles. It is for the benefit of the producers who produce the things that are to be sold in these containers that they may know that they will not come in competition with a dishonest container and a dishonest statement of what may be a bushel or what may be any other measure under which articles may be sold and placed upon the market. It is for the benefit of the consumer that when he buys a bushel of potatoes he may know he is getting a bushel of potatoes and may know how much that may be, and not be deceived by a dishonest measure that may be foisted upon the market by some designing person. So I say, from every possible standpoint, both as to constitutional right and for the purpose of preventing fraud, both on those who produce and the ultimate consumer, I believe that this legislation is entirely justified. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. CONNALLY. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 31, noes 64.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. That any hamper, round stave basket, or splint basket for fruits or vegetables, or any apple box, whether filled or unfilled, or parts of such hampers, round stave baskets, splint baskets, or apple boxes, not complying with this act, which shall be manufactured for sale or shipment, offered for sale, sold, shipped, or imported, may be proceeded against in any district court of the United States within the district where the same shall be found and may be seized for confiscation by a process of libel for condemnation. Upon request, the person entitled shall be permitted to retain or take possession of the contents of such hampers, baskets, or boxes, but, in the absence of such request or when the perishable nature of such contents makes such action immediately necessary, the same shall be disposed of by destruction or sale as the court or a judge thereof may direct. If such hampers, round stave baskets, splint baskets, or apple boxes, or parts thereof be found in such proceeding to be contrary to this act, the same shall be disposed of by destruction, except that the court may by order direct that such hampers, baskets, or boxes, or parts be returned to the owner thereof, or sold, upon the payment of the costs of such proceeding and the execution and delivery of a good and sufficient bond to the effect that such hampers, baskets, or boxes, or parts shall not be sold or otherwise disposed of or used contrary to law. The proceeds of any sale under this section, less legal costs and charges, shall be paid over to the person entitled thereto. The proceedings in such seizure cases shall conform as near as may be to the proceedings in admiralty, except that either party may demand trial by jury of any issue of fact joined in such cases and all such proceedings shall be at the suit and in the name of the United States.

The following committee amendments were severally read and agreed to:

Page 14, line 8, strike out the words "or any apple box."
Page 14, line 10, after the word "baskets," strike out the comma and the words "or apple boxes."
Page 14, line 10, after the word "baskets," insert the word "or."
Page 14, line 17, after the word "hampers," strike out the comma and insert the word "or," and after the word "baskets," in the same line, strike out the comma and the words "or boxes."
On page 14, line 22, strike out the words "or apple boxes."
On page 14, line 25, after the word "baskets," strike out the words "or boxes."
On page 15, line 4, after the word "baskets," insert the words "or boxes."
On page 15, in the same line, after the word "parts" insert the word "thereof."

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, the amendment is at the end of line 8 of page 14, to strike out the word "whether," and at the beginning of line 9, strike out the words "filled or," and substitute the word "when," so that it will read "when unfilled."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. QUIN: Page 14, line 8, at the end of the line, strike out the word "whether," and at the beginning of line 9, strike out the words "filled or," and in place of the word "whether," in line 8, insert the word "when," so that the lines as amended will read: "That any hamper, round-stave basket, or splint basket for fruits or vegetables, when unfilled, or parts of such hampers," etc.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. QUIN. Wait one moment. I would like to explain that, Mr. Chairman.

You have put at the top of that page a section which imposes a penalty of $100 or imprisonment for 60 days, or both, for any violation of this act, and it applies to any individual, corporation, or partnership that willfully violates this section. Such violator of this law shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and so forth. Then you proceed below and provide another section, and if the bill passes with that language in it and a man is guilty of that offense of having any hamper, round-stave basket, or splint basket for fruits or vegetables, whether filled or unfilled, or parts of such hampers, round-stave baskets, or splint baskets not complying with this act, which shall be manufactured for sale or shipment, and so forth, offered for sale, sold, shipped, or imported, he may be proceeded against in any district court in the United States within the district where the same shall be found, and the basket or hamper may be seized for confiscation by a process of libel and condemnation. This language would apply to the basket whether it is filled or not. Surely Congress could not mean such a thing as that. The bill would be bad enough if it passes with all these amendments, but if you are going to pass a bill here so that you can go out and with a procedure in terrorem seize a man for an alleged offense of this kind and carry him before a Federal judge because he had such a hamper that was unfilled you will be enacting a monstrous thing.

What would the people think of such a Congress passing such an act as that? I want to say, my Republican friends, that I believe the people of this country have already got a bellyful of legislation of this kind. [Laughter.]

For my part I do not for one moment believe that the honest men engaged in the truck-farming business in the State of Mississippi should be oppressed with any such sumptuary legislation and such odious and oppressive stuff as you have placed in this bill here. You are not encouraging industry by this legislation. You are proposing to hamper the truck farmer who earns his living by the sweat of his brow——

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. They are proposing to hamper the man who has an illegal hamper. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

Mr. VESTAL. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

Mr. QUIN. Oh, yes; they do not want the farmer to have any defense here. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN].

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. QUIN) there were—ayes 38, noes 61.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer to amend, on page 15, by striking out of lines 8 and 9 the following words:

The proceedings in such seizure cases shall conform as near as may be to the proceedings in admiralty except—and change the first letter of the word "that," in line 10, to a capital "T."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STEVENSON: Page 15, line 8, after the word "thereto," strike out the words "the proceedings in such seizure cases shall conform as near as may be to the proceedings in admiralty, except"; and, in line 9, change the first letter of the word "that" to a capital "T."

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, this is simply to leave the process in the court of equity, which is the court of the United States in which all condemnation proceedings are taken, and where the rules are well defined. It leaves the right to a trial by jury to the man who has the property which it is proposed to condemn. But I should like to know what lawyer in Nevada would know how to practice law in admiralty? There are not a dozen lawyers in the State of South Carolina who know the difference between a proctor and a lictor. [Laughter.] I have practiced law 31 years, and I do not think I have ever been in a court of admiralty more than once. There are not 40 lawyers in South Carolina, where there are three great ports, who know how to proceed in admiralty. Why, out in the State of Arkansas where would a poor farmer who was yanked into court by the United States district attorney to condemn his stuff go to find a lawyer who would know how to proceed in admiralty? I submit that it ought to be left to the usual equity practice in the Federal court, with the provision that the man shall have the right to a jury trial.

I am not making this as a captious motion. I frankly admit I am opposed to the bill, but if you are going to enact this legislation make it at least so that the lawyers of the country will know how to protect the rights of their clients when they are haled into court by the officers of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, there is no proceeding now known in equity which would cover a case where the Government seizes property for the purpose of destroying it. All of the laws which we have passed in recent years providing for the seizure of property in violation of law have provided that there should be a libel for condemnation, and that the proceedings should follow the proceedings in admiralty. Admiralty proceedings are the only proceedings known to the law originally which provided for the seizure of property in this way. A condemnation suit for the purpose of taking property for public use is an entirely different proposition. Here the proposition is to seize the property and dispose of it. Admiralty proceedings are the natural proceedings in such cases. That provision was put in the pure-food law. It has been copied in various laws which have been passed since, and no Member of this House has ever heard a single complaint of the operation of that provision of the pure-food law.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Vote! Vote!

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 9. That this act shall not prohibit the manufacture for sale or shipment, offer for sale, sale, or shipment of hampers, round stave baskets, splint baskets, apple boxes, or parts thereof to any foreign country in accordance with the specifications of a foreign consignee or customer not contrary to the law of such foreign country; nor shall this act apply to hampers having a capacity of 1⅔ bushels or more, or to hampers for bananas of the shape now in commercial use having less than such capacity, if any, or to round stave baskets having a capacity of 2¼ bushels or more, or to apple boxes having a capacity of 1⅓ bushels or more.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 15, line 13, strike out the figure "9" and insert "7."

The amendment was agreed to.

Also the following committee amendment:

Page 15, line 15, strike out the words "apple boxes."

The amendment was agreed to.

Also the following committee amendment:

Page 15, beginning with line 19, strike out all down to and including the word "more," in line 24, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "prevent the manufacture or use of banana hampers of the shape and character now in commercial use as shipping containers for bananas."

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the chairman of the committee a question? Will the gentleman explain the reason for the omission of the language in lines 19 to 24, inclusive? That seems to be an important provision, and I do not know that there is anything in the hearings that gives the explanation that I am now begging the chairman to furnish.

Mr. VESTAL. The reason for the amendment is that there was no evidence before the committee of any necessity for a hamper of 1¾ bushels, or a round-stave basket having a capacity of 2¼ bushels. The evidence before the committee was that the round-stave basket, the 2-bushel basket, was the largest basket that was used of that kind, and the 1½-bushel hamper was the largest used.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. With great deference to the chairman of the committee, I wish to say that the evidence that has been taken is rather meager on many points involved in the bill. I want to ask the gentleman whether there was sufficient evidence before the committee to bring the committee to the definite view that there is no need for the provision that has been eliminated?

Mr. VESTAL. The committee was satisfied with the testimony before it and the statement made by the chief of the Bureau of Markets that in the last year and a half or two years of his travels and investigations these baskets were not needed in the general trade.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I have great confidence in the sincerity of the beliefs the gentleman has expressed about this matter, but my difficulty is that they do not seem to be supported by evidence. All through the discussion it has been assumed that there is a sort of profiteering all over the country to which the farmer, the truck grower, and the commission merchant are parties. But this is a mere unproved assumption, and yet we are undertaking to make it the basis of this legislation. At the same time there is certainly the most flagrant profiteering in many directions which we have not touched up to this time and which there is no intimation we will touch. [Applause.]

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question. This clause now to be amended, section 7, is for the purpose of excluding from this law the manufacture and sale of any hampers or baskets. I do not see why you should eliminate that language. If I understand the purpose of the clause at all, if that language is left out of the bill the hamper of the capacity of one and three-quarters of a bushel will be subject to the application of the other sections of the law, and it will be unlawful to manufacture it. For example, take the field basket that the farmer carries on his arm containing a bushel and a half or 2 bushels. I take it that that character of basket, although it might conform in appearance to a basket in which you might ship vegetables—I take it that there would be no intention on the part of this legislation to affect that sort of a hamper. Why not leave that language in the bill, because we specifically prevent any interference with the manufacture and sale of that kind of a basket. That would be specially true in view of the statement of the chairman that the Chief of the Bureau of Markets said it was not necessary to make any provision in reference to that basket. Therefore I would like to have that basket excluded from the operation of the law, and this language that is proposed to be stricken out does specifically exclude it.

Mr. VESTAL. If we needed a basket larger than a bushel and a half it should be a 2-bushel basket.

Mr. SISSON. I do not know that I make myself plain. What I want to do is not to make it a violation of law for the manufacturer to make such a basket. A man might be engaged in manufacturing baskets for sale for other purposes than shipping fruit and vegetables; and why not leave the language there? You do not want to cover anything in the bill except the hampers and baskets used for the purpose of shipping vegetables and fruits, tomatoes, and so forth. I do not know who originally prepared the bill.

Mr. VESTAL. This language is simply an elimination of the 1¾ bushels and the 2¼ bushels, and providing for the manufacture of banana hampers.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. SISSON. I ask for an additional two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. VESTAL. The purpose is to strike out the 1¾-bushel hamper and the 2¼ bushel and the hampers for bananas.

Mr. SISSON. Let me make myself plain. Suppose a basket is manufactured for sale and the purpose of the manufacturer is to sell the basket not for the shipment of fruit or vegetables. But suppose it could be used for that purpose. Do you want to make it a violation of law for him to manufacture it, as it would be in the contemplation of the law if this language was stricken out?

Mr. REED of West Virginia. You could not manufacture a laundry basket.

Mr. SISSON. No; and I do not care for what purpose the basket was manufactured.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has again expired. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 10. That this act shall not be understood or construed as in any way repealing the act of July 28, 1866 (Rev. Stats. U. S., secs. 3569 and 3570), legalizing the use of the weights and measures of the metric system.

With the following committee amendment:

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 11. That it shall be the duty of each United States district attorney to whom satisfactory evidence of any violation of this act is presented to cause appropriate proceedings to be commenced and prosecuted in the proper courts of the United States in his district for the enforcement of the provisions of this act.

With the following committee amendment:

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 12. That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to prescribe such regulations as he may find necessary for carrying into effect the provisions of this act, and to cause such examinations and tests to be made as may be necessary in order to determine whether hampers, round stave baskets, splint baskets, and apple boxes, or parts thereof, subject to this act, meet its requirements. For said purpose the authorized officers and agents of the Department of Agriculture may visit factories, stock rooms, and other places of business where such hampers, baskets, and boxes, or parts thereof, are manufactured or held for sale or shipment or offered for sale, may enter cars, vessels, other vehicles, and places under the control of carries engaged in the transportation of such hampers, baskets, and boxes, or parts thereof, and may take samples of such hampers, baskets, and boxes, or parts, the cost of which samples, upon request, shall be paid to the person entitled.

With the following committee amendments, which were severally reported and severally agreed to:

Page 16, line 14, strike out the figures "12" and insert "10."

Page 16, line 14, after the word "Agriculture," strike out the words "is authorized to" and insert the word "shall."

Page 16, line 16, strike out the word "to" and insert the word "shall."

Page 16, line 19, after the word "baskets," strike out the words "and apple boxes."

Page 16, line 23, after the word "baskets," strike out the words "and boxes."

Page 17, line 1, strike out the word "carries" and insert the word "carriers."

Page 17, line 2, after the word "baskets," strike out the words "and boxes."

Page 17, line 3, after the word "baskets," strike out the words "and boxes."

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 17, after the word "parts," insert the word "thereof."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Indiana yield?

Mr. VESTAL. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Will the chairman of the committee state what the idea was of placing this under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of Agriculture?

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Chairman, the jurisdiction would have to be placed under either the Secretary of Agriculture or the Bureau of Standards. The pure-food act comes under the Department of Agriculture, and the bill passed by the House here last fall in the standardization of flour barrels was put under the Department of Agriculture. We believe that it was better to have them all under that department rather than to have part of them under one and part of them under the other.

Mr. WALSH. What is the Bureau of Standards doing?

Mr. VESTAL. Nothing with this bill.

Mr. WALSH. Nothing along similar lines?

Mr. ANDERSON. It has no powers of enforcement at all.

Mr. WALSH. Under no laws? They just make investigations and tests and report to the Secretary of the Department in which they are?

Mr. ANDERSON. I think so, with some very unimportant exceptions.

Mr. WALSH. And the chairman states that all of these various acts that have been passed establishing standards are now being administered by the Secretary of Agriculture?

Mr. VESTAL. By the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. WALSH. Whether they deal with agricultural products or not?

Mr. VESTAL. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CONNALLY: Page 16, line 14, strike out all of section 10.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. Chairman, and gentlemen of the committee, I shall not delude myself by entertaining any hope that this amendment will be adopted, but I want to take this occasion to enter my very vigorous protest against the provisions of this section. Gentlemen on the committee, evidently for fear that they had forgotten some restrictions, for fear some little provision had escaped their vigilant eye, through an apprehension that somewhere a great crime might be committed by some individual possessing a hamper which did not fit to the nicety of the thousandth of an inch the measurements and details prescribed by this bill have dragged in section 11, by which they authorize the Secretary of Agriculture, a purely administrative officer, to exercise inquisitorial powers, almost, if not quite, legislative powers, and they put into the hands of this Secretary of Agriculture the power to do what?

Let us see what this Draconian Code provides. He shall be authorized—no; they are not content with authorizing him to do it, but he "shall prescribe such regulations." As Congress sees fit? No; as he in his wisdom may find necessary. For doing what? "For carrying into effect the provisions of this act." In other words, they give him plenary power to carry into effect the harassing and annoying and unnecessary proscriptions of this bill. Not that he is authorized, but he "shall." "He shall cause such examinations and tests to be made as may be necessary in order to determine whether hampers," and so on, meet the different requirements. What else? You are not content with that. "For said purposes the authorized officers and agents of the Department of Agriculture may visit factories, stock rooms, and other places of business—" Without warrant? Yes. Without any writ or process? Yes. Let these little inspectors, these Federal subofficials, go into your factory or your place of business without warrant or without written authority in search not of an anarchist with a bomb but of a dangerous criminal with a harmless hamper in his hand.

And is that all? Oh, no. That is not sufficient. "Where such hampers, baskets, or parts thereof are manufactured or held for sale or shipment." What else may they do? "They may enter cars, vessels, other vehicles, and places under the control of carriers engaged in the transportation of such hampers, baskets, and take samples," and so forth. Now, gentlemen of the committee, by reason of this section you put into the hands of a minor official of the Department of Agriculture a power that under a free government ought to be vested nowhere. To invade property or to violate its possession ought not be permitted except by warrant or writ. You put it into the power of this subofficial of the Department of Agriculture to enter the sealed cars in which the goods of citizens of the United States may be transported in interstate or intrastate commerce, in charge of a carrier responsible under the statute and under the common law with the custody and the transportation of such goods, and you violate that custody by permitting some Government employee to break the seals of those cars without a warrant and without any written authority except the certificate of his appointment; to violate the sanctity of that shipment, and to violate the sanctity of private property which, under the Constitution, ought at least yet to have some respect at the hands of this Congress and at the hands of the majority of this House.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. [Cries of "Vote!"] The question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I want to suggest to the committee an amendment to which I just called the attention of the chairman of the committee and that is, in line 25, page 16, after the word "sale," there should be inserted the word "and." If you do not insert this word "and" you are going to restrict investigation to warehouses and factories that are owned by carriers, and that is not what it is intended to do.

Mr. VESTAL. The committee accepts the amendment.

Mr. WINGO. I will offer that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WINGO: Page 16, line 25, after the word "sale," insert the word "and."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 13. That for carrying out the purposes of this act the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to cooperate with State, county, and municipal authorities, manufacturers, dealers, and shippers to employ such persons and means, and to pay such expenses, including rent, printing, publications, and the purchase of supplies and equipment, in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, as he shall find to be necessary, for which purposes the sum of $10,000 is appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, available immediately and until expended.

The committee amendments were read as follows:

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Page 17, line 9, correct the spelling of the word "shippers."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman, Is it contemplated that this act shall apply to other than the continental United States?

Mr. VESTAL. I think not.

Mr. GARRETT. Well, of course, this is not an interstate-commerce act; this is an act defining a standard of measurement and of dimensions to all parts of the United States and in intrastate commerce as well as interstate commerce. Now, the question in my mind is whether this will apply to Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands.

Mr. VESTAL. I do not think so. I do not know whether the section 6 on page 13——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman will notice on page 13——

Mr. GARRETT. It says:

That it shall be unlawful to manufacture for sale or shipment, sell, offer for sale, or ship, or to import or cause to be imported into the continental United States—

And so on. That is a clause making it unlawful; but will the standard set down in the other sections apply?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It would apply to Hawaii, of course, and ought to apply.

Mr. GARRETT. Would it apply to Porto Rico and the Virgin Islands and the Philippines?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It would not apply to the Philippines.

Mr. GARRETT. Probably not.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Our legislation does not apply to the Philippines unless we so provide.

Mr. GARRETT. Well, I am not quite sure the gentleman is correct about that.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, yes.

Mr. GARRETT. What does the gentleman think about the Porto Rican matter?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I am not sure about that.

Mr. GARRETT. Here is the difficulty about it: We have usually——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. None of them are Territories.

Mr. GARRETT. We have usually been accustomed to dealing with bills of an interstate-commerce character, and in the beginning of those bills defining what should constitute interstate commerce, and have excluded the insular possessions. In this bill we are not dealing with an interstate matter, but with a standard.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. We have not excluded the insular possessions in the interstate-commerce bill, but of course we have described it so that it covers Territories and Districts or commerce among the States, and of course that would not apply to these outlying possessions.

Mr. GARRETT. Exclusive of the operation of the language we used, whatever you may term it, I think it is a question of some consideration as to whether or not it applies to the insular possessions. I do not wish to delay the matter in any respect, but I suggest this in order that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. VESTAL] may give it consideration with a view to a conference which may be held upon this act.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment after the word "shippers," in line 9, by inserting a comma and the word "and."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WINGO: Page 17, line 19, after the word "shippers," insert a comma and the word "and."

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I take it the committee wants that amendment. It is obviously necessary. I want to ask the gentleman what is his idea of authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to cooperate with the State, county, or municipal authorities? What cooperation can they give? You have not given them any authority under this bill. If a sheriff, for instance, were to go out to inspect, unless he was designated as an individual he would be a trespasser and could be held liable on his State bond as sheriff if he undertook to go out and exercise any authority under this bill as an official, because you nowhere in the bill give the Secretary authority to designate a State official as an official of the Federal Government for the purposes of the act.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I think the word "and" ought to go in there.

Mr. WINGO. That is obvious. I was talking about another proposition. If you use the State officers—and I am in favor of it—I think you ought to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture not only to cooperate but employ such persons and authorize them to act for the department. He can not designate the "sheriff of Sevier County," because if he did, that sheriff would be acting in his official capacity, and under the State law he would have no authority, and if he acted he would be a trespasser and might be sued on his bond. We ought to authorize them to designate them as agents of the department. That would protect the sheriff then.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If the gentleman will permit, I think this language is for the purpose of covering the case as in the pure-food act and in the insecticide act and the various other acts of that sort, where a large share of the work is done in cooperation with the officials of the States who are appointed for the purpose of enforcing similar laws and regulations in the States.

Mr. WINGO. There is a distinction, if the gentleman will permit. Most of the States have a pure-food act. The police officers of most of the States have police authority to do most of the things the Federal officers would request them to do in cooperation. But very few of the States will have a standard fruit-basket law, so that they will have no authority to go as State officers and make inspection of fruit baskets.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. In most cases in the markets they have officials for the purpose of enforcing weights and measures. All an official has to do if he finds a basket, is to notify the General Government, if it is in violation of the law.

Mr. WINGO. He can not exercise the authority provided in section 11 without laying himself liable, unless he acts as an individual, but he could not act as a State police official.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. No. He would have to act, if he acted at all, in an official capacity, as an agent.

Mr. WINGO. That is the point. You only authorize us to use him as a State official. You ought to authorize the Secretary to designate the State official as an agent of the department, because you do not speak of him except in his official State capacity.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. We only authorize here the cooperation; that is all.

Now, as a matter of fact I could not say, but there was quite a controversy here at one time as to whether under the pure-food law the Agricultural Department had the right, or if it had the right, whether it was advisable, to employ local officials whose duty it was to enforce the local law. I think a good many of them were on the rolls of the Agricultural Department nominally, at nominal pay. Now, of course, if they seized something under their authority and nominal pay, they did it as agents of the Government. But so far as notifying the department and calling things to their attention, they could do that under cooperation.

Mr. WINGO. I am just offering this as a suggestion. I do not care much about it myself.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Would not the authority to employ such persons cover what the gentleman has in mind?

Mr. WINGO. It might do it, but you do not refer to them as persons, but as officials. It might do it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do so for the purpose of asking a question. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] suggested that it might be advisable to insert in this bill a provision like this as a new section:

And this act shall not apply to the insular possessions of the United States.

Would there be any objection to that? That would make the act still apply to Hawaii and Alaska, as it ought to.

Mr. GARRETT. I should say offhand that insular possessions have no definite status in any law, except the rules of the House.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I think it is a term that we have frequently used in legislation.

Mr. GARRETT. I think not. I think we have denominated the Territories that are included in what is commonly understood as "insular possessions."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman may be correct. I am not particular about it. The matter can be considered later, of course.

Mr. GARRETT. Well, can it? It can be considered in another body; but how can it be considered here?

Mr. TOWNER. It would be very easy to say that it should not apply to the Philippine Islands, Porto Rico, and the Virgin Islands.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. And the islands of Samoa and Tutuila and several others that we still own.

Mr. GARRETT. I believe Guam is still owned.

Mr. WINGO. How about the island of Yap?

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, there is an industry in the mountain regions of eastern Pennsylvania, and in my district, that I am afraid might be entirely destroyed by this bill. That industry is the manufacture of hickory baskets during the frozen winter months by the poor mountaineers. These baskets are a splint product, but not in the sense of this particular bill, as I understand it. The hickory blocks are split up, drawn through irons that regulate the thickness of them, and from these hickory strips or withes baskets are woven.

Now, this bill provides for hampers and other styles of containers. I would like to know whether or not this bill will allow the continuation of that industry, or whether it will destroy it; whether these hickory baskets will be considered as hampers and included in the definition of hampers. I would like the chairman of the committee having this bill in charge to answer that question for me.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Why should this bill destroy the industry?

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania. These poor people might not be able to conform in the manufacture of their baskets to the technical requirements of this bill. They make these baskets by hand and do not have forms to make them over, consequently can not all be the same size, and these baskets are made in very large quantities and sold to wholesale dealers.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. LAYTON. For what purpose are the baskets used?

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania. For what purpose?

Mr. LAYTON. Yes.

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania. They are used for gathering fruits and vegetables, and also for conveying fruits and vegetables from the farm to the market or to the consumers or dealers.

Mr. WINGO. If the gentleman will permit me, I do not think there is any question but that this bill will destroy that industry. As a matter of fact, the prime object of this bill is to destroy or hamper infant industries.

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania. If this will destroy this particular industry, then it ought to be amended.

Mr. WINGO. In all seriousness, I think it will. I have one such factory in my district. They will be penalized and their baskets will be driven out of the market.

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania. If that is the interpretation of the chairman of the committee in charge of the bill, I will offer an amendment to preserve that industry. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment on page 17, in line 5, after the word "entitled," to strike out the period and insert:

This act shall not forbid the storing or conveying of fruits or vegetables in any kind or style of containers except when sold or offered for sale by the hamper, round-stave basket, or splint basket.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania: On page 17, in line 5, after the word "entitled" insert the following:

"This act shall not forbid the storing or conveying of fruits or vegetables in any kind or style of containers except when sold or offered for sale by the hamper, round stave basket, or splint basket."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania) there were—ayes 29, noes 46.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 14. That sections 7 and 8 of this act shall become effective, at but not before the expiration of one year following the 1st day of November next succeeding the passage of this act.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 17, line 16, strike out the figure "14" and insert the figure "12."

The amendment was agreed to.

Also the following committee amendment:

Page 17, line 16, strike out the figures "7" and "8" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "5" and "6."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to make a suggestion to the committee. I think they will agree to this kind of an amendment. I think we ought to amend this provision so that these sections shall become effective at the expiration of two years from the passage of this act. I will give the gentleman a reason.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If the gentleman will make it brief, maybe we will vote with him.

Mr. WINGO. I will make it brief. I am just as hungry as the gentleman is.

I think the committee ought to frame the language. I suggest as an amendment to change the word "one" to the word "two" and make the word "year" plural—"years." Then strike out the words "following the 1st day of November next succeeding" and insert the word "from." That would make it read:

That sections 5 and 6 of this act shall become effective at but not before the expiration of two years from the passage of this act.

I call the attention of gentlemen to the fact that the large fruit associations, the peach association and others, order an extraordinary amount of these containers so as to be sure that they will not get caught short.

Mr. VESTAL. I will accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WINGO: Page 17, line 17, after the word "of," strike out "one" and insert "two," and strike out the word "year" and insert the word "years." Strike out, in line 18, the words "following the 1st day of November next succeeding" and insert in lieu thereof the word "from," so that it will read: "That sections 5 and 6 of this act shall become effective at but not before the expiration of two years from the passage of this act."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to section 1 of the bill for the purpose of offering an amendment on page 2, line 7, by striking out the words "of the staves." I do that in view of the amendments that we have adopted to the section. Also to strike out the same words wherever they occur in the section and subdivisions thereof.

Mr. WINGO. Reserving the right to object, and I do not think I shall object, did we strike out the language that required these words?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. We struck out all the provisions that required this language.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to return to section 1 for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VESTAL: Section 1, strike out the words "of the staves" wherever they occur.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is lines 7 and 19, page 2; lines 6 and 7, page 3; line 19, page 3; lines 8 and 18, on page 4.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was considered, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DOWELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 12350) to fix standards for hampers, round stave baskets, and splint baskets for fruits and vegetables, to establish a standard box for apples, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. It is clear that there is no quorum present.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves a call of the House and the gentleman from Kentucky makes the preferential motion that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BARKLEY) there were 46 ayes and 66 noes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 78, nays 120, answered "present" 8, not voting 220, as follows:

YEAS—78.

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote "no."

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman present, listening, when his name was called?

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. No; I was not.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not bring himself within the rule.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote "no."

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman present, listening, when his name was called?

Mr. BURDICK. I was not.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not qualify.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote "no." I was not present and listening when my name was called, however.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not qualify.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Speaker, may I be recorded "present"? I had just left the Chamber and upon my return the Clerk was calling the roll and had just passed my name on the call.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no authority to do that.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, are we not trying to develop a quorum?

The SPEAKER. A quorum is not required on a motion to adjourn.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, the roll call developed that there is no quorum present.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. The gentleman from Mississippi makes the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the point of no quorum is pending, and that gentlemen who desire to vote, whom the Chair refused to recognize for that purpose, may be recognized to vote "present."

Mr. WINGO. That was the matter I had in mind when I suggested that we were trying to develop a quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair had taken it for granted that a quorum was present. Gentlemen who desire to vote, but who were not recognized for that purpose, may be recorded present.

The names of Mr. CANDLER, Mr. RUBEY, Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON, and Mr. BURDICK were called, and they answered "Present."

The SPEAKER. Two hundred and three Members are present, not a quorum.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to procure the attendance of absent Members.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that that motion is dilatory.

The SPEAKER. No business has been transacted since the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Speaker, is not the previous question pending?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, no business can be transacted when there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can move a call of the House, of course.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, does the Chair hold that a motion to direct the Sergeant at Arms to bring in absent Members is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not passed on that.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I had made a motion for a call of the House before the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] made the motion to adjourn.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order that where the House develops no quorum a motion to adjourn is not dilatory, as claimed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. It is in order at any time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it can not be made immediately after a motion to adjourn has been voted down. The motion before the House is the motion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] that a call of the House be ordered.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WINGO. Does the Chair think that, immediately upon a roll call developing the absence of a quorum, it is in order to move a call of the House to develop a quorum?

The SPEAKER. The motion for a call of the House is pending. The Chair will state the parliamentary situation. A point of no quorum was made by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON]. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] then moved the call of the House. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] moved that the House adjourn. That motion was rejected on a yea-and-nay vote. Therefore the motion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] for a call of the House is pending. The Chair was under a misapprehension, and supposed that a quorum developed on the motion to adjourn, and, therefore, he did not put the motion of the gentleman from Iowa, because he did not think it necessary.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WALSH. Is not the motion to direct the Sergeant at Arms to bring in absentees a preferential motion over a call of the House, even though that motion be pending and no quorum is developed?

The SPEAKER. A call of the House would bring in the absentees.

Mr. WALSH. I will ask the Chair this question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. WALSH. The rules provide that when the House finds itself without a quorum it shall be in order either to move to adjourn or to provide for the procuring of a quorum. Now, the motion for the call of the House does not come within either class, particularly when the roll call has developed the absence of a quorum.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, the proposition of the gentleman from Massachusetts is only used in the aid of a call of the House. The Chair is entirely correct about it; there is a motion for a call of the House pending here now. Now, when we start in to have a call of the House and call the roll and you can not find a quorum around here anywhere, then the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts is in order.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BLANTON. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 96, noes 92.

So the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 202 Members have answered to their names, not a quorum.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 7 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, April 29, 1920, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. RAYBURN, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 13590) granting the consent of Congress to Sid Smith, of Bonham, Tex., for the construction of a bridge across Red River between the counties of Fannin, Tex., and Bryan, Okla., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 896), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. GLYNN, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6171) to authorize the refund of duties collected on field kitchens imported during the year 1916, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 897), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HASTINGS, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6221) conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment in the Osage civilization-fund claim of the Osage Nation of Indians against the United States, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 899), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. PLATT, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 11918) to amend section 9 of the Federal reserve act, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 900), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. MAYS, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 3016) to authorize the disposition of certain grazing lands in the State of Utah, and for other purposes, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 901), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HAUGEN, from the Committee on Agriculture, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 13402) for the purchase of lands occupied by experiment vineyards near Fresno and Oakville, Calif., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 902), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. BABKA, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 10570) for the relief of Mary Flinn, reported the same with an amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 898), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Pensions was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13238) granting a pension to Anna Lowe, and the same was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. TINCHER: A bill (H. R. 13824) to provide for the storage of certain grain under Federal custody, the issue of receipts therefor, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13825) to provide for taxing all the beneficiaries of the cost-plus contracts and beneficiaries of contracts made by the Government with members of the Council of National Defense during the war; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. FLOOD: A bill (H. R. 13826) authorizing the Postmaster General to investigate and adjust claims arising out of contracts in star route, screen wagon, and other vehicle service entered into prior to June 30, 1919; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. EVANS of Montana: A bill (H. R. 13827) to repeal certain war-time legislation; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. PHELAN: A bill (H. R. 13828) to authorize the Secretary of War to loan Army rifles to posts of the Grand Army of the Republic and Spanish War Veteran camps; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LITTLE: Resolution (H. Res. 537) instructing the Attorney General to institute proceedings against certain corporations and others, restraining them from distributing surplus war profits, and instructing the Committee on Ways and Means to draft a bill for taxing the same for the benefit of soldiers; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. QUIN: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 345) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan, issue, or use quartermaster's and medical supplies for the relief of destitute persons in the districts overflowed by the Mississippi River and its tributaries; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SINCLAIR: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 346) extending the time for payment of purchase money on homestead entries in the former Standing Rock Indian Reservation, in the States of North and South Dakota; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

3293. By Mr. STEENERSON: Petition of Emir Erickson and other citizens of Bear Park Township, Minn., against universal military training, etc.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

3294. By Mr. TAGUE: Petition of Robert J. Mitchell and others, Washington, D. C., urging that the railroad men be taken back without prejudice, etc.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

3295. Also, petition of the Penn Metal Co., Boston, Mass., George A. Sagendorph, president, urging bonus for only disabled soldiers; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

3296. Also, petition of the Civil Engineers' Association, of Boston and vicinity, urging the passage of the Jones-Reavis bill, etc.; to the Committee on Labor.

3297. Also, petition of H. C. Hoskins, Everett, Mass., and the National Association of Supervisory Post Office Employees, Los Angeles, Calif., relative to adjusted compensation for the postal employees, etc.; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

3298. Also, petition of the Alpine Press, Boston, Mass., against the passage of House bill 12976; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

3299. Also, petition of the Washington Press, Boston, Mass., and the John W. Schaeffer & Co., of Boston, Mass., urging the defeat of House bill 12976; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

3300. By Mr. TEMPLE: Petition of Donora Woman's Christian Temperance Union, favoring the passage of House bill 8063; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

3301. By Mr. THOMPSON: Petitions of Farmer Grange No. 2101, of Farmer, Ohio, urging the passage of the "truth-in-fabrics" bill, House bill 11641; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

3302. Also, petition of Middleport (Ohio) Lodge 676, International Association of Machinists, urging support of Senate joint resolution 171 for amnesty and Senate bill 1233, repealing the espionage law; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

3303. By Mr. TINKHAM: Petition of the Civil Engineers' Association, of Boston and vicinity, urging the passage of the Jones-Reavis bill, etc.; to the Committee on Labor.

3304. Also, petition of International Association of Machinists, Springfield, Mass., urging the release of all political prisoners in American civil and military prisons, etc.; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

3305. Also, petition of Bernard F. Fahy, secretary, County Galway Men's Benevolent Association, of Greater Boston, Mass., urging that the United States sever diplomatic relations with Great Britain on account of treatment of the Irish people, etc.; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, April 29, 1920.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Thou art the author of truth and grace; and in the vast work committed to the hands of Thy servants in this Senate they need Thy guidance, not only to discern the truth but to transcribe the thoughts of Thy heart, the purposes of God, into the forms of human law. We pray Thee to guide the work of this day, that Thy servants may discharge their duties, in the fear of God, with a sense of Thy leadership. We ask it for Christ's sake. Amen.

The Reading Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

ACTIVITIES OF THE FOURTH ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL (S. DOC. NO. 268).

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Postmaster General in response to Senate resolution 309. It will lie on the table until it is determined what is desired to be done with it.

Mr. KING subsequently said: In response to a resolution which I offered a few days ago, and which was adopted April 23, 1920, the Postmaster General has transmitted to the Senate certain information. I may say in passing that, in my opinion, the communication does not answer the resolution at all. However, I ask for the reference of the communication and accompanying papers to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads in order that the matter may there receive attention.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The communication and accompanying papers will be referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House agrees to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9369) to revise and equalize rates of pension to certain soldiers, sailors, and marines of the Civil War, to certain widows, former widows, dependent parents and children of such soldiers, sailors, and marines, and to certain Army nurses, and granting pensions and increase of pensions in certain cases.

The message also announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13266) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota, Mr. CRAMTON, and Mr. BUCHANAN managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 9629. An act for the relief of the Merritt & Chapman Derrick & Wrecking Co.; and

H. R. 13387. An act to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the St. Louis River between the States of Minnesota and Wisconsin.

PETITIONS.

Mr. LODGE presented a petition of Local Lodge No. 214, International Association of Machinists, of Springfield, Mass., praying for the parole of Federal prisoners, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PHELAN presented a petition of the Northern California Milk Producers' Association (Inc.), of Sacramento, Calif., praying for the enactment of legislation granting to farmers the right of collective bargaining, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

CALLING THE ROLL.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Reading Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Calder	Harris	McNary	Smoot
Capper	Harrison	Moses	Sterling
Chamberlain	Jones, N. Mex.	Nelson	Sutherland
Colt	Jones, Wash.	New	Swanson
Comer	Kellogg	Nugent	Thomas
Culberson	Kendrick	Overman	Townsend
Cummins	King	Page	Trammell
Curtis	Knox	Phelan	Underwood
Dial	Lenroot	Phipps	Wadsworth
Dillingham	Lodge	Pomerene	Walsh, Mass.
Edge	McCormick	Ransdell	Warren
Fall	McCumber	Sheppard	Watson
Gay	McKellar	Smith, Ariz.
Gronna	McLean	Smith, S. C.

Mr. GRONNA. I was requested to announce that the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is absent, due to illness. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the absence of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES], who are detained at a meeting of the subcommittee of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. MCKELLAR. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] is necessarily detained from the Senate.

I wish also to announce that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] are absent on official business.

Mr. SWANSON. I wish to announce that my colleague, the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], is absent on official business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-four Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SMOOT. From the Committee on Appropriations I report back favorably with amendments the bill (H. R. 13555) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, and for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 562) thereon. I desire to give notice that later in the day I hope to be able to call up the bill for consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

Mr. McLEAN, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, to which was referred bill (H. R. 13138) to amend section 8 of an act entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914, as amended May 15, 1916, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 565) thereon.

LAKE SUPERIOR COAST GUARD STATION.

Mr. NELSON. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 9228) to authorize the establishment of a Coast Guard station on the coast of Lake Superior, in Cook County, Minn. This is a local bill recommended by the Treasury Department, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to establish a Coast Guard station on the coast of Lake Superior, in Cook County, Minn., in such locality as the captain commandant of the Coast Guard may recommend.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LANDS IN NEW MEXICO.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. From the Committee on Public Lands I report back favorably with an amendment in the nature of a substitute the bill (S. 3218) for the relief of Martina Sena, Luis E. Armijo, and Maria Baca de Romero, and I submit a report (No. 563) thereon. I ask for its present consideration by unanimous consent.

Mr. SMOOT. Let it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The substitute proposed by the committee will be read.

The READING CLERK. The committee report to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to convey by patent to Martina Sena or her heirs such tract of land as may be found by the Secretary of Agriculture to be chiefly valuable for agriculture and not needed for public purposes, not to exceed 147 acres, formerly occupied by Margarito Romero, which tract is situated upon the south fork of Gallinas Creek, in the county of San Miguel, State of New Mexico, and to convey by patent to Luis E. Armijo or his heirs such tract of land as may be found by the Secretary of Agriculture to be chiefly valuable for agriculture and not needed for public purposes, not to exceed 56 acres, occupied and improved by said Luis E. Armijo and his predecessors in interest and possession, which tract is situated upon the north fork of Gallinas Creek, in the county of San Miguel, State of New Mexico, and to convey by patent to Maria Baca de Romero or her heirs such tract of land as may be found by the Secretary of Agriculture to be chiefly valuable for agriculture and not needed for public purposes, not to exceed 190 acres, occupied and improved by said Maria Baca de Romero and her predecessors in interest and possession, which tract is situated on the north fork of Gallinas Creek, in the county of San Miguel, State of New Mexico: Provided, That the lands shall first be surveyed by an employee of the Forest Service under the direction of the United States surveyor general in accordance with the act of August 10, 1912 (37 Stats., p. 269), entitled "An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913": Provided further, That the expenses of said surveys shall be paid from available funds appropriated for the survey of homesteads on national forests under the act of August 10, 1912, aforesaid, and the act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year in which the survey is made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PENTWATER RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. CALDER. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 12869) for the construction of a bridge across the Pentwater River or Pentwater Lake, Mich., and I submit a report (No. 564) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the township of Pentwater, Mich., or the Pere Marquette Railroad Co., a corporation, to construct a bridge, with approaches thereto, across Pentwater River or at the outlet of Pentwater Lake, in the State of Michigan, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. JONES of New Mexico:

A bill (S. 4310) to amend an act entitled "New Mexico enabling act"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. TRAMMELL:

A bill (S. 4311) to amend sections 216 and 223 of chapter 18 of the United States Statutes at Large, being the revenue act of 1918, approved February 24, 1919; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. GRONNA (for Mr. LA FOLLETTE):

A bill (S. 4312) granting a pension to Ingwald Rugg; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CALDER:

A bill (S. 4313) for the relief of Philip A. Hertz; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SWANSON:

A bill (S. 4314) for the relief of the Gauley Mountain Coal Co. (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Claims.

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 193) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan tents to the State Normal School for Women, East Radford, Va., for the use of its summer normal school; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13266) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. CURTIS, Mr. PHIPPS, and Mr. SMITH of Maryland conferees on the part of the Senate.

OIL FOR NAVAL PURPOSES.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, yesterday during a discussion of the oil question it was asserted that there was a great shortage of oil and that the Government of the United States needed oil for naval purposes. Upon that occasion I offered a resolution, stating that I would this morning ask for its adoption. It occurs to me, however, that the matter is of so much importance that it ought to be the subject of a Senate investigation, and the question may not be one that ought to be given publicity at the present time. So I ask that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, in order that that committee may take the necessary steps in the matter.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be directed to report to the Senate whether or not it is necessary or would be advantageous for the United States to acquire oil lands in foreign countries for naval purposes, and if so what steps should be taken to acquire such lands.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on this day approved and signed the act (S. 2442) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to convey to the trustees of the Yankton Agency Presbyterian Church, by patent in fee, certain land within the Yankton Indian Reservation.

NATIONAL BUDGET SYSTEM.

The VICE PRESIDENT (at 12 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.). The morning business is closed.

Mr. COMER obtained the floor.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to suggest to the Senator from Alabama that we take up the unfinished business, and if he desires to address the Senate, he can do so upon that bill. If there is no objection, I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 9783.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9783) to provide a national budget system and an independent audit of Government accounts, and for other purposes.

VALUE OF COTTON CONTRACTS.

Mr. COMER. Mr. President, I have been trying to get through an amendment to the cotton-futures act which I regard as most important but against which a highly organized propaganda has been carried on by strong outside influences.

Cotton, notwithstanding its sectional culture and production, is not a sectional product but is a national product, of national use, of international use, and it is the highest duty of Congress to enact remedial legislation caring for it against selfish interests, particularly that class of interest which, while adding nothing to the intrinsic value of it, yet within the law organize to get undue gain.

Cotton is the only agricultural product where the gambler's interest is recognized by law, and by law should be restricted to the smallest possible opportunity to levy tax where no tax is due. The cotton exchanges are the only aggregation of business management which, proposing to take the functions of the economic law of supply and demand, to take the functions of the world's political economy, an economy where use makes the price, and which law is as old as commerce, and by pure egoism ensemble unto themselves the power to create a price, the power to govern prices, and the power to establish value.

This assumption, if not connected by experience with their business relations, with the facts regarding their business as put forth by them and running through years, would be pronounced insolent; and yet this is just what the cotton exchanges in their claimed relation to the price fixing and consequent value of cotton, the different grades of it, assume for themselves, and if remedial legislation is attempted which disturbs this power to get an increment where no increment is due, to reap a harvest from the other man's crop, they cause to be threatened dire results.

H. & B. Beer, cotton commission merchants, New Orleans Exchange, have issued a circular containing statements regarding the effect of the proposed amendment to the cotton-futures act on the cotton trade, particularly on low-grade cotton, and sent this broadcast through the cotton States and Congress. In this circular is given a set of figures on different styles of low-grade cotton proposing to show that even the present amendment to the Smith-Lever bill enacted a year ago had greatly depressed the value of low-grade cotton, causing serious loss to the holders of very large quantities of cotton not included in the tenderable grades.

Supposing that H. & B. Beer are competent to be commission merchants, we will cite them to the law of supply and demand, will cite them that the price of every grade of cotton is made in the markets of the world and not in the exchanges. If the exchanges made the prices, then by law we should multiply the number of exchanges until we had at least one in each cotton county, then by law we would make the exchanges good—I mean make them operate in the interest of the farmer and let them make the price of every grade of cotton and let them say how much difference there should be between the grades, high and low, and see that the spinners bought their allotment at their prices and at stated differences. I put this down barefaced to let H. & B. Beer understand that their statement is a camouflage so thin that it ought not to deceive that large class of credulous citizens who buy the medicine which makes the hair grow straight.

The schedule of types and prices and comparison that H. & B. Beer made and which I simply make a part of this address, and the difference between those grades which they inferentiate was caused by being outlawed from the exchanges, I mean by law are not now tenderable grades on the exchanges. They use good ordinary as being now 13.5 cents below middling. This extreme difference because it is not now tenderable. H. G. Hester, official statistician, states that low middling is 7.5 cents below middling, the greatest difference ever known, and yet low middling is in the tenderable grades, and by the very fact that it is tenderable, according to the logic of H. & B. Beer, should influence its value, but it does not; it can not.

H. & B. Beer also state that middling tinges, which are not tenderable, but because of the intrinsic value is 4¾ cents above low middling, and therefore because of its high relation to the tenderable grades should be tenderable. If the law of supply and demand, if the markets of the world make the price, if political economy is true, then this reasoning of H. & B. Beer either emanates from minds unacquainted with the first constructive principles of trade, or if appreciative of its true deceptive influence because of its appeal to the cupidity of the holders of low-grade cotton, then it becomes comparable to the vile intent of Iago whispering in the ears of the Moor, but with this difference, the exchange propaganda has for its purpose loot from that most oppressed class of our fellow citizens, the cotton farmer.

H. & B. Beer state that our present tenderable contract, of 10 standard types is too contracted; that we ought to go back to the 21 grades. If having the right to tender on the exchanges increases the value, why have any restrictions on the grades at all? Why not let any grade be tendered? That is the true logic of their reasoning.

As a commission house, they no doubt remember the fat times after 1890 and on through 1906–1910, when there were tens of thousands of bales of the lowest grade cotton at differences made by themselves assembled by the exchange members for the purpose of looting the market, and it was a scandal. In the immensity of its levy on the cotton trade the present motor hold-ups on banks are tame. It became a national scandal, and an attempted protective law was provoked. Under the loose management of the Bureau of Markets, the intent of this law was defeated, defeated by their allowance of a multiplex assembly of low grades at factitious differences, to be used not as a tender, but to defeat the very intent of the law for a fair contract. So great was the quantity and weight of low grades which the exchanges, notwithstanding they were unbridled, had failed to find a market for and had simply used as a speculative value and medium as a load in the dice with which to play the game, so great was the accumulation of low grades—and, mark you, these low grades accumulated when there was nothing to restrict them, when the markets of the world and the exchanges were open everywhere—that the war committee, of which Mr. Baruch was chairman, proposed to get them into manufacture by allocating a million bales of low-grade cotton to all the mills of the country. That is, they proposed to allocate this quantity of low-grade cotton and make the mills take it, whether they desired it or not or whether they could use it or not—a million bales of it.

This purpose was published; and while it was never enforced, the very suggestion of it put cotton down 5 cents per pound, and Congress had to pass a law that the exchanges could not put cotton down more than 2 cents per pound a day. This was when they had a free exchange and all grades of cotton were tenderable. If, as Messrs. Beer state, the exchanges influence and increase the use and protect the value of low-grade cotton, where were the exchanges then? Certainly, one blast of Rhoderick's horn would have been worth many millions of dollars to the cotton holders.

The Messrs. Beer, with their proposed advantages to off-grade cotton in having it made into a tender, forget that the cotton trade has been through all those debauching conditions in which they have been viciously robbed, and the suggestion by them to go back is comparable only to the memory of the Israelites' journey, the Promised Land ahead and the flesh pots of Egypt behind, yet there were those who wanted to go back; and there are those to-day, I will say to the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA], who want to go back.

They charge that this is a spinner's contract and will hurt low grades of cotton. In its last analysis it is the spinner's demand and use which, being greater or less than the supply, makes the ultimate price of cotton. Of course, it is the spinner's demand that makes the demand for cotton. How else are you going to get a market for it? If there is more spinner's demand for any grade of cotton than there is of that cotton, then that cotton is relatively high. If there is less spinner's demand for any grade of cotton than there is supply, the price of that grade of cotton is relatively cheap. That is the law of supply and demand. You can not get beyond it. It can not be changed by contrary statements made by Messrs. Beer or anybody else.

The proposed contract will in the largest measure enable the spinner to utilize the purpose for which the exchanges were established, that is, in the fall of the year when the offering of cotton is most abundant, the spinners will become buyers, purchasing cotton and storing it in their own warehouses ahead of their sales. To protect this class of purchase they would sell an equal amount of cotton on the exchanges with perfect confidence that the exchange value would represent the spot value. In the same manner if the spinner sold goods ahead, then he would buy on the exchange a relative amount of cotton, and as he bought the spot cotton to cover he would sell the hedge. The same way with the dealer in cotton, mentioning particularly the letter herewith printed of Messrs. W. P. Welch & Co., large cotton factors at Selma, Ala. They have an opportunity to buy 1,000 bales of cotton for which they have no order. They buy it, sell contracts against it, and again, if they should sell 1,000 bales ahead of what they had, they would buy contracts against it; and in both cases, when they had sold the cotton or bought the cotton, they would close out their hedge—close it out with confidence that the futures contract, representing the fair value of spot cotton and not an oscillating basis middling, as now, would be a business protection. This kind of a transaction would greatly benefit the producer, because at all times he would have a market at market value for his cotton; and this is a business protection that legitimate dealers in cotton have a right to demand that Congress should give. Thus would the exchanges function in a legitimate way, providing an accurate index to the commercial value of cotton.

They would be a hedge; they would be an index of the market—not makers of the market price, but an index of the market price. That is what the exchanges should be. Cotton values are not made through the exchange. You can turn the value around with the exchange in an unnatural manner, but the natural price of cotton everywhere in the world is the supply and demand price, and you can not get beyond it.

At the recent cotton convention in Montgomery one of the resolutions adopted was that a committee of business men should go to Europe to see the spinners and try to sell the cotton direct, eliminating the dealer; and yet the exchanges took possession of that convention, controlled its committees, and Mr. Thompson, ex-president of the New Orleans Cotton Exchange, used every effort that the Comer amendment to the cotton-futures act should be sequestrated, should not be indorsed.

Ex-Senator Frank S. White, Mr. M. C. Allgood, commissioner of agriculture of Alabama; Messrs. J. O. Thompson, and G. E. McElderry, and Gen. Bibb Graves, recognizing the importance of it to the cotton interests, not only of Alabama but of the whole South, by the most earnest effort had the amendment brought out of the hands of the sequestrating committee and discussed on the floor of the convention, and notwithstanding the most unfair methods used to suppress it the amendment was indorsed by the convention.

This was brought about by the splendid service of the gentlemen above named; and notwithstanding the fights against the amendment, notwithstanding the fight against the spinner, one of the constructive things the convention did was to send a delegation to the European spinner, not to the European cotton exchanges, but to the spinner to sell the cotton direct.

As against H. & B. Beer's statement, I introduce the statement of W. P. Welch & Co., Selma, Ala., large cotton factors, engaged in business for many years and very reliable.

SELMA, ALA., April 20, 1920.

Hon. B. B. COMER,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We wish to command you in your effort to amend the law that will give to the cotton trade a just and fair contract on the cotton exchanges.

For years we have longed for a contract that would afford us a reasonable hedge. As you are aware, spot cotton is frequently offered for sale when buyers can not in turn make an actual sale; under such circumstances we, as buyers, would be glad to buy the cotton if we could get a hedge on the cotton exchanges that would be reasonably safe. Thus you will see the benefit that would arise in favor of the producer, he could always find a purchaser for his cotton. With conditions as have prevailed during the near past, how could a buyer buy spots at, say, 40 cents and sell a future contract as a hedge at a discount of something like $25 a bale?

If we can be of any service to you do not hesitate to call on us.

Yours, very truly,

W. P. WELCH & CO.

And, Senators, as long as what Mr. Welch says is true the exchanges are not functioning properly. They are running a proposition on which you can not do a safe business.

I also introduce a telegram from Mr. Lyday, of Fort Worth, Tex., president of the Farmers' Union of Texas, with the reputation of being a very smart man and fully acquainted with what he is talking about:

FORT WORTH, TEX., April 27, 1920.

B. B. COMER.
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

My first impression was your amendment would reduce value low grades. Careful investigation has convinced me I was wrong since your amendment would unquestionably make contracts for middling more valuable.

Of course it would.

All grades would be carried up with it, as price of all grades are based on middling; privilege of tendering low grades on contracts militates against values of all contracts and enables speculators to manipulate markets.

It does just what he asserts. He has stated the case as well as anybody could have done it. He stated it as well as I could have done it myself, Senators.

Cotton has but one real value.

That is true.

That is for spinning. Tendering unspinnable cotton hampers contracts for actual delivery, converts trading into an uncertain gamble, and injuriously affects all legitimate interests.

D. E. LYDAY.

That is from Texas, from the president of the farmers' union there. You can not state the case better than that.

This telegram gives a very clear statement of the whole case and carries the full intent of the amendment.

I also introduce a letter from Messrs. Helgason Bros., Vicksburg, Miss., who write from experience:

VICKSBURG, MISS., April 25, 1920.

Hon. B. B. COMER,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: We have read with great pleasure and profit your two addresses printed in the Vicksburg Herald of this city.

We have been in the cotton-growing, also speculating business on a conservative line for the past 20 years, and after reading what you say and what you are trying to do for cotton no informed disinterested man can do other than indorse your actions. As for the telegrams protesting against your amendment, the senders or signers have no more interest in the "poor farmer" than the devil has in the doctrine of saving lost souls.

I do not know whether I ought to have read that part or not—

That New Orleans bunch, headed by Thompson, would not hesitate at anything to perpetuate gambling in cotton in its worst form, and if you look back and see the form and signatures to the protests against the Smith-Lever Act—

That was last year—

you will see the same style and the same crowd trying to manufacture opposition to your bill, that will help every cotton grower in the United States. I do trust the Mississippi Senators will vote for your amendment.

You are performing a great service to the South in what you are doing.

Yours, very truly,

HELGASON BROS.,
By E. B. HELGASON.

I also again introduce Mr. E. A. Calvin, particularly the letterhead.

Cotton States Official Advisory Marketing Board—that is a big name, is it not?—Mr. E. A. Calvin, special representative, 300 Kellogg Building, Washington, D. C. This is a striking letterhead, and you would think that the farmer has in him a Brobdingnagian representative, but, inquiring into the record of this Brobdingnag, I find that the "Cotton States Official Advisory Marketing Board, Mr. E. A. Calvin, special representative," is purely self-mentality, the name being the only significance. He occupies expensive quarters. It would look like rather a paying office. This telegram from Mr. Brown will explain the farmer's relation to him, and I have heard that this extends to Texas:

ATLANTA, GA., April 19, 1920.

Hon. B. B. COMER,
Washington, D. C.:

My return from Montgomery to-day finds your letter of 13th. Providence prevents me coming to Washington this week. Can mail affidavits as to Calvin if you think we have time. Calvin does not represent any action of Cotton States Marketing Board relative to Comer amendment. Has absolutely no authority from board to speak for this board on this subject. I consider his persistence in this matter is an imposition on the board and an outrage against the South.

J. J. BROWN,
Commissioner of Agriculture and Member Cotton States Marketing Board.

In view of the letterhead—"Cotton States Official Advisory Marketing Board, E. A. Calvin, special representative"—I think he would be on an understandable basis if, with all the exchange propaganda he is constantly issuing, he would explain just what all this means, as he is now, and was last year, when the Smith-Lever bill was amended, functioning as an exchange lobbyist.

With Senator HARRIS's permission, I am reading into the RECORD, as part of this address, a letter from Mr. W. L. Brown, county chairman, Gwinnett County division, American Cotton Association:

LAWRENCEVILLE, GA., April 24, 1920.

Senator WILLIAM J. HARRIS,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: I have studied the Comer amendment restricting the delivery of cotton on future contracts, whereby the seller will be required to deliver 50 per cent middling and better. As a practical legitimate spot-cotton dealer, I heartily favor the amendment. This amendment will tend to eliminate the short selling of future contracts by the large cotton gamblers who deal exclusively in future-cotton contracts. Any legislation that will make it difficult for these future contract cotton gamblers to make deliveries will, in my honest judgment, benefit the producers to a great extent.

We have two classes of sellers of cotton—the one selling against his actual holdings of spot cotton, the other the fellow who sells the market short. The short seller is the enemy of the cotton farmer, the spot-cotton dealer, the banker, and the entire cotton-producing South. When he sells the market short he then throws his reputation as a great financier, commercial giant, and student of economics full force against the market to beat it down to the very lowest point possible, so that he may be able to buy in his contracts at a great profit to himself. This is no guesswork with me.

Having been actually engaged in the business of buying and selling spot cotton for the past 12 years, I know whereby I speak.

As stated above, I have studied the Comer amendment thoroughly, and will frankly say that I believe it to be a good measure for every southern Congressman and Senator to support and enact into law.

Yours, very respectfully,

W. L. BROWN, County Chairman.

I can assure all the Members of Congress that the only relation this amendment can possibly have to the cotton-futures act is encouragement to honest, straight business dealing to which all business is entitled.

Are the exchanges competent advisers as to how they should be controlled? Should Congress lay down the regulations to protect the farmers, the dealers, and the manufacturers, or should the exchanges do it? Should they be left to what the exchanges advise? Cotton speculation through the exchanges, and abundantly borne out in their history, has practiced the most outrageous swindling methods. The value of cotton, not only to the South, not only to America but to the world, is too great to be bandied around in any such manner, and Congress owes it to this great international product to fully protect it.

In all this contest we are making there is nothing whatever that militates against the proper function of the exchanges. We believe the exchanges are necessary, as I have repeatedly said, as an index, as a barometer, of the market; but the very minute that they by manipulation attempt to make values, then they are not functioning.

I should be glad to answer any question any Senator may have to ask.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama is troubling the conferees on the Agricultural appropriation bill, of whom I happen to be one. It has been argued to the conference committee that if the Comer amendment is adopted it will tend to reduce the price of low-grade cotton. It has also been argued that there is, especially this year, a larger quantity of cotton below the grade of middling than above the grade of middling, and for that reason it would necessarily tend to lower the price of low-grade cotton, because the Comer amendment provides that the spinner or buyer may demand one-half of the product middling and above, and the seller has the privilege of delivering one-half from any one or more of the 10 grades. I would like to have the Senator comment on that feature.

Mr. COMER. I went into that thoroughly in this very article.

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; I noticed that the Senator touched on it.

Mr. COMER. I covered the entire ground. The spinner goes into the open market and buys the cotton to make the goods out of which he can make the most money. That goes without saying. If that cotton is high grade, then there is created such a demand for high-grade cotton that high grade goes relatively up. At the same time, if the spinner can use the off-grade cotton at the lower price at which it is now selling, he switches off of the high grade and gets onto the low grade.

All these things are governed by that law which does not change, the law of supply and demand, which you can not switch around and twist about. Just as long as the present market exists, wherein a spinner can buy a high-grade cotton and make more money out of it, he is going to find that cotton if it is in existence.

If the low-grade cotton is not sold, of course, it hunts a lower level; it goes to where the demand will find it, where the usufruct will find it.

Mr. GRONNA. But would not the farmer who has produced principally low-grade cotton be penalized if the amendment proposed by the Senator were enacted into law?

Mr. COMER. Not in the least. They put into the minds of lots of people that the spinners go to the exchanges to get cotton. They do not. They go where the cotton is grown, they go to the section which grows the cotton, and buy it there. When they put cotton through the exchanges, then they have to pay the freight to New York, pay the expenses through the exchange, pay the expenses out of the exchange, and ship it to the point of consumption, whereas they could ship it from the point of origin, where it is raised, direct to the mill, saving one freight and also saving the exchange charges and certainly getting the same value.

Mr. GRONNA. Then I understand the Senator's argument to be that if the tenderable grades are reduced from 10 to 5 there would be less opportunity for selling the market short, and for that very reason the actual producer would stand a better chance of getting what his cotton really is worth than he does under the present law?

Mr. COMER. The tenderable grades are not reduced; they remain 10 as they are now, only one-half of it shall be of the higher grades. This actually puts new cotton in the futures contract, as hitherto the higher grades have been boycotted by the usufruct of the exchanges. Doing this will make the contract market approximate the spot market, so that the contract price will be equalized with the spot price. In other words, we would have a commercial market instead of basis middling, as now. The futures market, basis middling, constantly fluctuates from 1 to 3 cents, and in the more distant months more than that, below spot cotton. As the prices of the lower tenderable grades fluctuate with the basis middling price, you can easily understand how this fluctuating contract disturbs and lowers the market against the farmer or the actual holder of cotton. Hence, if the futures market was commercialized, made agreeable to the spot market, then the tenderable lower grades and all the lower grades would in a measure be vitalized on some known basis in their relation to value. Will again state that the use of the lower grades on the exchanges does not increase their value and the stabilizing of the exchange price by compelling the use of the higher grades in delivery of a contract will result in a higher contract market, at least approximating the spot market, and there is no cotton, whether low or high grade, and no honest business of whatever description that will be hurt by the transaction. Otherwise, every rule of trade would be void.

The price is fixed by commerce. It is commerce, the same thing, Senator GRONNA, that puts your wheat up or down, or your meat up or down, and, when you come to cotton, you do not find commerce different from what you have it out West. No attention should be paid to all this stuff about bringing in cotton through the exchanges, giving it this value or that value. They may muddy the price; they may grog the price, but when it comes to the inherent market price, it is commerce which makes it. Everybody knows that, and all these statements they make are camouflage. It is a camouflage, I say, which ought not to appeal to anybody, let alone as great a man as a Senator or a Representative. There is nothing else to it. The price of cotton of every grade, no matter where it is, is made by the law of supply and demand, and you can not get beyond it, and any statement beyond that is false, I do not care who makes it. It is attempted camouflage by the exchanges, saying to the farmers, "It will hurt low-grade cotton." They know it is not true; and, as I said here, if they do not know better, they ought to pull down their signs as men capable of doing business for others.

I would be glad to answer any question any Senator may have to ask about this. It is one of the most important things to the South. The amendment will greatly improve futures contract. It is simply a move up in business methods, to get honestly handled this great staple of the South. That is all there is to it, and when we come here and ask you to agree to this amendment, we ask you to pass a law that, as nearly as possible, will make a business proposition out of it, instead of a gambling proposition.

The people out West would not stand for this a minute. If the grain and meat exchanges should attempt to handle wheat and corn and meat like this, then there would be out West something like the old song down in Georgia, which the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS] can tell you about, "Hell Broke Loose."

I am truly sorry that this amendment has been so badly camouflaged; how it has been managed I do not know. I do not know how a man could misunderstand it. The actual cotton of consumption does not come through the exchanges, and I can not understand how any man can so misinterpret the function of the exchanges. The actual cotton of consumption comes from producer and dealer. The exchanges are intended to represent commercial values, which ought to be as far away from fictitious and factitious values as possible. On this kind of a market a dealer can buy or sell a hedge with the confidence of being protected by the rule of commerce and not exposed to gambling devices.

PUBLIC FISCAL CONDITIONS.

TO THE TAXPAYERS OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I shall address myself very briefly to the taxpayers of the United States.

The war with Germany has entailed a debt of more than $25,000,000,000 upon the United States, demanding an annual interest charge far exceeding its annual prewar expenditure. A century of burdensome taxation, attended by the utmost frugality of administration, will not avail to cancel this stupendous obligation. Without such frugality it will be and abide with us forever, or it will be repudiated when a wearied people, despairing of relief from its exactions, will cast it from their shoulders.

The needs of postwar administration have increased the aggregate of this debt. Hence you face the approach of the next fiscal year with a deficiency moderately estimated at $2,500,000,000. It can be liquidated directly by increased taxation, or postponed through another bond issue bearing interest at not less than 5 to 5½ per cent per annum.

Our national and individual well-being at all times, but just now more than ever, demands the exercise of every economy in public administration which is consistent with national security and efficiency in Government operation. It has been proclaimed in words, but up to this time Congress has honored the policy more in its breach than in its observance, while retrenchment in some directions has been fully offset by expansion in others. It is not surprising, therefore, that our aggregate appropriations far exceed the national income, albeit some excess was inevitable.

Large appropriations for some departments, notably those of war and of justice, have been unavoidable. Smaller ones could have been made in other directions, and sometimes with resulting improvement in the public service, and notably through the consolidation or abolition of bureaus and the elimination of thousands of supernumerary employees. But it is no exaggeration to assert that aside from the efforts of the appropriations committees, some of whose members in both Houses are sincere devotees to frugality in public fiscal affairs, the spirit of extravagance on the one hand and of indifference to the public fiscal conditions upon the other was never more apparent in legislation than at present.

This fact is strikingly illustrated by the Senate attendance since the final vote upon the treaty on March 19, from which date, with one or two exceptions, two roll calls followed by instructions to the Sergeant at Arms to request the presence of absent Senators have been necessary to secure quorums for the transaction of business. Absenteeism has synchronized with the consideration of great appropriation bills literally carrying hundreds of millions, to which so little attention is paid that quorum calls are avoided lest they result only in needless delay.

The Fuller bill to increase pension rates passed the Senate by a vote of not to exceed 12 for and less than half that number against it. The bill adds $65,000,000 to the Nation's permanent annual disbursement. During its consideration the attendance seldom exceeded a dozen Senators. Its importance was apparently too trifling to arouse even a languid interest. Yet a few of us believe the bill to have been an indefensible one. It establishes a horizontal pension increase without reference to the individual need of the beneficiaries and in disregard of the fact that the soldiers' homes, supported by public taxation, have literally thousands of empty beds and more than enough for all veterans needing the hospitality of their ample and generous accommodations. But between the alternative of $65,000,000 of public money and the displeasure of Grand Army of the Republic votes six months before a presidential election the line of least resistance was obvious. The taxpayer seems easily placated by mutual denunciations of party extravagance. The resentment of the disappointed pensioner is not to be so easily allayed.

Estimates for governmental needs for the next fiscal year vary from five to six billions of dollars. The smaller estimate is beyond the probable public revenue under the existing law. Unless the first be reduced or the last be revised upward, July 1, 1921, will bring a second deficiency. If the tax rate be increased at this period of dwindling production, its results must prove disappointing. Prosperity is incompatible with such a prospect, too gloomy for contemplaton but too serious to be wholly disregarded, however quiescent the taxpayer may be.

Party leaders give glib reassurance of colossal economies in appropriation represented by huge figures thrown upon the screen of moving events. The soporific announcement of cuts below departmental estimates, aggregating one and a half billions, means little or nothing in the final analysis. It may be good campaign material, but is otherwise without substance. Excess of estimates above appropriations is a common practice whose principal harvest is a series of deficiency bills for every session of Congress. These in turn become the vehicle of other and independent appropriations. The present Congress has passed two great deficiency bills, aggregating $121,171,899.13, and another is on the calendar, with still another on the way. It is perhaps necessary that I should say that this has reference to the deficiency appropriation bill which was passed day before yesterday.

The closing of the polls in November next will be the signal for another and yet another. The aggregate amounts carried by them added to the sum of the regular allotments will approach, if they do not exceed the rejected estimates when the next Congress, moved by the same impulses, will repeat the old tactics if your lethargy continues through the interval. Such conditions will, indeed, encourage fresh disbursements, and it will be strange if pending measures for drainage, irrigation, good roads, national education, maternity hospitals, and other Treasury demands now transiently suspended and involving countless millions do not press for successful consideration.

The same gentlemen who cheer you with glad tidings of vast economies effected and vaster ones in contemplation, are lending ready ears to the demand of some of the soldiers and sailors of the war just ended for a cash bonus, whose totals, under whatever plan thus far suggested will reach two billions, and may reach the vast sum of $3,000,000,000.

Since that statement was written, Mr. President, the House has determined to consider the insurance method of compensation, as it is called, under which it is proposed to increase the burdens of the people by $6,000,000,000, if it is adopted, an amount some 200 per cent greater than the most extreme estimates hitherto appearing upon the subject, and, of course, 200 per cent more attractive to the beneficiaries than the preceding schemes of so-called compensation.

In this connection I ask permission to have printed in the RECORD, without reading, an editorial from the New York World of yesterday entitled "A bonus by confiscation," and an editorial from the New York Times of to-day, entitled "Taxing backward and looking forward."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The editorials are as follows:

[From the New York World, Apr. 28, 1920.]

A BONUS BY CONFISCATION.

"Assuming that the two-billion bonus is to be voted to soldiers, the plan presented by Representatives JOHNSON of South Dakota and RAINEY of Illinois for raising the money is probably the worst that could be devised. What they would do is to levy an additional tax of 80 per cent upon incomes earned in 1917, 1918, 1919, and 1920—less taxes already paid—that were in excess of the income of the prewar year of 1914.

"This may be called an income tax, a conscription of war profits or a patriotic drive, but it amounts to a confiscation of capital. All these incomes have been heavily taxed once, and what was left of them was long ago absorbed in business extensions and other investments. In few cases could such a levy be met without borrowing or enforced liquidation. The country gradually adjusted itself to the highest taxation ever known, although its effects to-day are plainly visible in prices that refuse to come down and in restricted enterprise. Perhaps all that is needed to break the back of prosperity is to set the precedent of plunder that this measure has in view.

"One such raid will lead to others, and with that prospect before him the average man of affairs will find industry and trade in the United States about as inviting as they are in Russia. The Government which gives its receipt in full for taxes and then comes back with a confiscatory demand for more does not have far to go before it will find an excuse for forced loans and the seizure of all property and credit.

"If it is conceivable that money is to be obtained in this way for the purpose named without disaster to those who pay it, there is a moral certainty that its diffusion among millions of recipients will be demoralizing now and for many years to come."

[From the New York Times, Apr. 29, 1920.]

TAXING BACKWARD AND LOOKING FORWARD.

"Labor seems to think that the object of doing business is to produce wages. Lawmakers seem to think that the object of doing business is to produce taxes. The real object of business is the production of goods, and whatever tends to lessen production is contrary to the interest of consumers—that is, of everybody—and sure to be disappointing to those who wish to convert profits into either wages or taxes. When profiteers are dissatisfied with profits they become investors, and production is lessened to that extent.

"Nothing yet suggested, not even the Kitchin schedules, is better adapted to produce that result than the proposal to take two billions of taxes from the excess profits of 1917–1920, using 1914 for a basis of comparison. Retroactive legislation is odious, but cumulative retroactive taxation seems particularly so. If it were not a presidential year, it would not be possible for members of both parties to think that four years' cumulated back taxes could be collected in one year any more than fruit could be picked twice. Last year's profits are like last year's birds' nests—the eggs are either hatched or addled. Nobody has separated the profits of those years and kept them in a fund in readiness for a raid by the taxgatherers.

"The fear of such a tax already is disheartening those who earn what they pay in wages and taxes. If the money really is taken from them, some will be ruined, others will stop doing business, and there will be unemployment for the wage earners and double time without extra pay for the tax collectors. As it is a bipartisan plan, there would seem to be no way to punish both parties for such a blunder, worse than a crime. The penalty would have to be visited upon individuals seeking reelection, and there might be surprising results to independent candidacies. That would be the only way to make an impression upon representatives of the taxpayers who are under the delusion that it is possible to confine the burden of taxes to any class of the community.

"If the Members of Congress were in any considerable proportion men of business, they would be more sympathetic with wage earners who are fooled with counterfeit wages and with business, big or little. Most of them are free from the suspicion of being themselves profiteers, for their salaries are their chief means of support and not subject to the surtaxes which the proposal of cumulative retroactive taxation, four years in one, would impose in a form as offensive as novel. To get better taxation it is necessary to find a tax which is universal and known to be such because everybody gets a receipt for the payment. Taxes are paid generally, if not universally, however they are laid, but too many think that they escape them because they never see a tax bill. A tax which Members of Congress would know that they paid personally like other people would make them cautious about the sort of tax which they pretend that they collect from profiteers. There is no person outside of Congress whose opinion is valuable who doubts that the excess-profits tax is shifted to those who have no suspicion that they pay it and who know that they are not profiteers.

"But so far from repenting of the excess-profits tax, the taxers want to revive it in more offensive form and lay it upon both corporations and individuals, as well as retroactively. Americans must love to be humbugged if they do not see that the tax schemers intend to cut open the layers of the golden eggs in order to get eggs more quickly. Marcelline was never so funny as when he got in everybody's way, bustling about and zealously meddling with tasks of which he knew nothing. Our taxers are not like Marcelline, for there is nobody at hand to remedy their blunders and their efforts are not funny nor harmless. It may be suggested that they are trying to do more than they have shown capacity to do and are overworking themselves at tasks which the country would be glad to have left undone."

Mr. THOMAS. The demand for this exaction is organized and clamorous. Its insistence is too loud to be ignored. The consequence of its denial, as voiced by its eager proponents, is too terrible for words. Congressional courage, never too valorous, quails before it. Whoso questions its constitutionality is derided; whoso challenges its justice is doomed to disaster in November. The plan is maturing, the bills are in committee, the lobby is tireless and aggressive. Unless opposition is aroused very soon the spoils will be gathered for early division. You will be required to supply them by some method of special taxation not yet formulated. Whatever the method, its effect will be to transfer the money of one part of the people to the pockets of another part. And you may be sure the method will be an indirect one, seeking to shelter its obvious injustice under the forms lending themselves to plausible terms of justification. The profiteer, if he can be located, always subject to extravagant and doubtless to just disapprobation, may be required to pay an added tax percentage to his present rates of assessment, the proceeds to be applied to the payment of the soldiers' bonus; and this upon the charge that, having profited by the perils and sacrifices of the man in the trenches, it is but justice that he should yield a scanty portion of his fortune to his less favored and more worthy neighbor. Or the excess-profits tax may be raised for the same reason. The plan will in any event be so framed that it will not apparently directly touch the tax-paying masses. These will be told that no part of the added burden will rest upon their shoulders, that they have been carefully shielded from the operation of the law, which, based upon a perfect scheme of distributive justice, will pay a nation's dole from a tainted fund. The tax-paying voter will indeed be expected to applaud a revenue measure which, by governmental processes, distributes the loot of the wicked among the hosts of the poor and the deserving. For, mind you, the revenue to be raised by this process is not for governmental purposes, but for the reward of militant patriotism. Taxation until now has been theoretically for necessary public purposes. This project enlarges its scope and sets a precedent under whose operation money may be taken from the people, or some part thereof, to satisfy private demands, backed by the possession of political power. How far it will be carried in future, once the first step is taken, no man may safely prophesy. John Marshall said the power to tax is the power to destroy. But that great jurist, in his most pessimistic moods, never dreamed that his countrymen would assail the fundamentals of constitutional government by using this mighty prerogative to garner wealth from one part of the people that it might confer that wealth upon another.

The idea is not a new one. It is the active principle in protection, whose final analysis is the guardianship of crime by the police power. It blazed forth in the French Revolution and more recently in Russia. But there the method was direct. It was called confiscation. Names and methods, however, do not alter facts. The odor of the rose and the injustice of robbery are the same in every language. The direct method has, nevertheless, one advantage over the indirect one, for confiscation is the beginning and the end. The loss is a fixed one whether partial or complete, for it can not be passed on to the community, while the indirect method accomplishes that inevitable result.

This bonus tax, wherever originally placed, will be paid by the consumers of America, just as they have paid and are paying the excess-profits tax, the stamp tax, and nearly every other tax carried by the revenue bill. These become overhead expenses to the immediate taxpayer, and as such are added to cost and levied upon the consumer. The Department of Justice estimates that the excess-profits tax and other taxes on business has increased the price of commodities by 23.2 per cent. This always was and always will be so. The genius and experience of man has never been able to defeat this persistent feature of every scheme of taxation since government began. Every man avails himself of it whose business, however humble, involves the production or exchange of commodities. Those of the American Legion who accept the proposed bonus will contribute to its return with everything they buy or consume. Every artisan at his workstand, every farmer at the plow, every merchant, bookkeeper, manufacturer, everyone who produces and consumes, will, whether he knows it or not reimburse the man or corporation upon whose income this excise will be levied, whose inconvenience will be transient, and whose loss will be limited to the sum of their own consumption. Of all the forms of taxation, the most insidious is the indirect process. Painless, unperceived, and seldom recognized it operates by day and by night inexorably, effectively, perniciously. Among its advocates are many of its victims. Like the chronic user of narcotics, they seem unable to exist without it, and all are prone to surrender to its methods, preferring unconscious robbery to the rude and more agonizing processes of frontal attack.

The cost of living, already beyond all past experiences, will be raised by the sum of this proposed tax plus a generous margin for safety or profit, or both. You, my toiling fellow citizens, striving vainly to live within your means, and not the profiteer, are the certain victims of this collossal raid upon the revenues of the Republic. And no one knows it better than your Senators and Representatives in Congress assembled by whose votes must the proposal be accomplished. If any of them do not know it, their capacity for national legislation is a minus quantity. Many of them sincerely believe the demand a just one, and feel called on to comply with it; but they can not challenge the eternal fact that the burden must finally rest with all its crushing weight upon the bent back of the American consumer.

No one doubts that every raise in wages adds to the cost of living. The increase to the railway brotherhoods is now reflected in a huge national deficit, for the payment of a portion of which a bill carrying about $310,000,000 is now before us. It will soon find expression in heavier freight and passenger rates. I bought an overcoat not long since and was told the labor cost in it was larger than the price of my last one. Hence, being the consumer, I had to pay $135 for it.

Surely, my countrymen, your daily sacrifices and experiences are too serious and too constant to delude you into the notion that you will escape the unnecessary and intolerable burden of added billions of taxation by the sleight-of-hand process of imposing it directly upon a class. The horse's burden is all that rests upon his back, and includes his rider's gun, though he may carry it upon his shoulder. Mr. Lincoln said all the people can not be fooled all the time. I doubt if taxpayers have been fooled about their tax burdens, but if so they have been fooled long enough.

I shall not now discuss the character of this contemplated raid upon the Treasury, whose stupendous proportions make all others look like the catchpenny schemes of immature adventurers. I shall do that when it shall have taken definite form and appears upon our calendar. I shall content myself for the present with the assertion that even though we had two and a half billions of dollars in the Treasury, which we have not and, doubtless, never shall have, it should be used not for bonus purposes but to liquidate that much of our national debt. No true lover of this Republic, whether soldier or civilian, would do otherwise. "Debt," said Wendell Phillips, "is the fatal disease of Republics." It grows by what it feeds on. Once a free nation is caught in its toils only the heroic resolution of its citizens to wrest themselves free from its clutches by liquidating it at whatever sacrifice can replace it upon enduring foundations. Borrowing, though less easy and more respectable than stealing, is safe; but once it becomes the habit, either of a Republic or of an individual, the end is bankruptcy or repudiation.

Following the outbreak of this war, Congress established a vast system of war-risk insurance, upon the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury. It was expressly designed as a substitute for the pension system which has so long disfigured our statute books. The bureau was generously financed by appropriations, premiums, and allotments aggregating $1,132,197,042. It has paid $786,152,376.41 in benefits to 1,661,059 recipients, and is easily the greatest life and risk insurance establishment in the world. It will and should be maintained until it shall have accomplished its object.

Notwithstanding the Government support of this most meritorious institution, other and added demands by its beneficiaries have been and are being made for money.

The Senator from Utah, when this bill was up for consideration, made the prediction that, instead of being a substitute for, it would become supplemental to added demands for pensions and other forms of monetary compensation. First, a bonus of $250,000,000, which was paid, now another of $2,500,000,000, which it is proposed to distribute. This appetite for ready money easily secured grows amazingly. Like that for pensions, it will prove progressive both in amount and aggressiveness.

I might add, Mr. President, in view of what is now taking place in the other House, they will also become retroactive, reach back, and, under the forms of taxation, levy upon the accumulated wealth of the country, presumably upon a particular class, but actually upon the wealth of all the land. Like the daughters of the horse leech, its cry will be give, give, give. Every cent that is given will come from you. Other organizations of men, eager to imitate this example, will arise, are arising, possessed of arguments quite as plausible, armed with power quite as apparent, to knock at the congressional door for financial recognition, and demand their share of the public revenues. The floodgate lifted now may never close. The devastating torrent, overrunning the land and leaving ruin in its wake, will in time overwhelm the Nation.

But one thing stands between this monstrous proposition and its certain accomplishment. I refer to the aroused opposition of the great army of American taxpayers and consumers. If that can be materialized, and disciplined by swift and intelligent organization, it can be converted into a potent force for good in Washington. Practically every other interest is so organized, with its militant lobbies at the Capitol. These lobbies, like the bonus, are sugar coated by more pleasing names. They are generally called committees on legislation. Labor, agriculture, good roads, prohibition, antiprohibition, irrigation, drainage, rivers and harbors, Mississippi flood control, leagues and antileagues, the Plumb plan and other plans, Syrians, Koreans, Czecho-Slovaks, Jugo-Slavs, Polanders, Irish, and Egyptians, all these and more are with us. They want governmental aid, which, in the last analysis, means financial aid. You who furnish the sinews for every Government activity; you whom the tax collector interviews, inspects, and interrogates; you who must prepare correct schedules and pay correct amounts of tax levies at your peril; you without whom this great Republic is impotent and can not function; you who want nothing from your Government but security and permission to ply your calling in peace; you who respond always to your country's needs when called upon, who loaned it your billions and gave it your sons, are neither organized nor articulate. The hosts which are organized and on the ground struggling against each other in the mad rush for your rapidly diminishing Treasury, know you only as the source of supply. Since you do not seemingly concern yourselves with the manner in which your representatives spend your money, they encounter no opposition to their assaults upon your treasure vault save as they come in collision with each other or attract by their clamor rival seekers for public and national bounties.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. MYERS. I do not want to discourage the distinguished Senator from Colorado, but I desire to say that I do not think there is a particle of chance or reason to hope that the great body of the American people will act according to any sort of organization or common understanding in these matters. The special interests which the Senator has mentioned will continue to cast their votes in one block, as one vote, and the remainder of the people will simply go to the polls and vote according to politics; Republicans will vote the Republican ticket; Democrats will vote the Democratic ticket. They will vote a party label; and that sort of thing, in my opinion, is going to continue so long as the American Republic shall last.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator from Montana can not discourage me. My discouragement reached zero long ago. I try to warm it occasionally, and that is, perhaps, all that I shall accomplish by this effort.

Some of your representatives will oppose the enactment of this measure to the best of their ability. Some believe the Government to be without authority to tax its citizens for a private purpose. Some perceive the injury which the project, if successful, will impose upon those who are to enjoy its fruits. But against them are the clamor of the multitude and the subtle influence of organized power, a power by no means confined to the ranks of the legion. These representatives need all the support you can render. They are fighting your battles much more than their own. They would protect you from confiscatory legislation by defeating a measure whose greatest menace is the encouragement it must give to other schemes of public plunder. If you content yourselves with occasional protests, voicing only individual opinion, they will be undone. But if you will imitate the tactics of the forces arrayed against you, if you will mass your opposition into ordered and intelligent associations, and give them the strength which comes from your union, they will hold the outposts and win the fight. If you remain unorganized and incoherent, you will be plucked in the end, as you have been in the past. But one course remains; you must unite or perish. And there is no time to lose, for the adversary has mobilized his forces and is on the way.

Mr. President, it gives me great pleasure to announce the reception of large numbers of letters from ex-service men and from organizations of ex-service men patriotically protesting against the bonus and calling upon their Representatives in Congress to defeat it. It would be impossible and at the same time, I think, unnecessary to incorporate in the RECORD all the letters and resolutions to that effect which I have received, but I have selected two from a very large number, one an individual letter signed by G. W. McCoy, written from Gunnison, Colo., the other signed by William M. Galvin, adjutant of Augustus P. Gardner Post, No. 18, of the American Legion, of the District of Columbia, with appropriate resolutions upon the subject. As I read these resolutions this morning I was proud of the fact that the members of Augustus P. Gardner Post, No. 18, proved themselves worthy of the illustrious and glorious American name by which they have designated their branch of the American Legion. I ask, Mr. President, that these letters and the resolutions be inserted in the RECORD at the end of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

GUNNISON, COLO., April 25, 1920.

HON. CHAS. S. THOMAS,
United States Senator.

DEAR SIR: I wish to commend your stand on the so-called bonus legislation.

A great many letters are appearing in the public press as to why bonuses should be granted to ex-service men at this time, but I have failed to see a single letter written by an ordinary ex-service man in opposition to the plan. Now, I belong to the opposition, served 14 months in France, 6 months in the zone of shell fire during the World War and believe this soldier relief legislation should be defeated. Does anyone know a healthy and honorable ex-service man whose circumstances demand that this bonus bill, with all it entails, be forced through Congress at this time?

Drafted men, who were forced into the service, have a right to demand extra pay, though they show a great lack of patriotism in making these demands at this time. Volunteers who make this demand violate the principle of voluntary service by so doing. If the advocates of this bonus bill place a cash value on their services and demand that the public pay the bill at once, receive payment, then at some future time should become in actual need and seek further relief, the public at that time will have the right to say to them, "We paid your bill at your own valuation; we owe you nothing more."

Any kind of relief bill at this time founded on a cash payment basis is wrong and should be defeated.

More power to the Senators and Congressmen who dare to brave the bugaboo of the soldier vote which is dangled before their eyes to force favorable action on this matter.

Very truly, yours,

G. W. McCOY,
Formerly of Company L,
Twenty-third Engineers.

AUGUSTUS P. GARDNER POST, No. 18,
DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA DEPARTMENT OF THE AMERICAN LEGION,
April 29, 1920.

Hon. CHARLES S. THOMAS,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I inclose herewith a resolution expressing disapproval of the bonus legislation now before Congress adopted unanimously by the Augustus P. Gardner Post of the American Legion, Washington, D. C., at a meeting held April 22 last. The resolution is sent to you by direction.

The Augustus P. Gardner Post will esteem it a favor to receive an expression of opinion from you concerning its resolution.

Very truly, yours, WILLIAM M. GALVIN, Adjutant.

"Whereas the District of Columbia commander of the American Legion has sent to the Augustus P. Gardner Post, No. 18, of the District of Columbia, through usual channels a copy of H. R. 13293, a bill to be known as the national soldiers' land settlement, home aid, vocational training, and adjusted compensation act, together with the recommendation of the District of Columbia department legislative officer of the American Legion that all District of Columbia posts and their members urge Senators and Representatives individually to pass that bill at the earliest possible moment and without radical amendment; and

"Whereas this is the first occasion upon which the Augustus P. Gardner Post has been called upon to cooperate or even to express its opinion in the matter of this proposed adjusted compensation; and

"Whereas this fitting occasion has arisen for the post to take public notice and action on this vital question: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the Augustus P. Gardner Post is opposed to the passage of the national soldiers' land settlement, home aid, vocational training, and adjusted compensation (H. R. 13293) act, because all of its provisions are based primarily upon a monetary gratuity for past military service. The bonus for past or prospective military service has been a recognized evil throughout our history. The payment of such a bonus would violate the principle of the fundamental obligation of the citizen to render military service to the State in time of war. That obligation has no price.

"The bill would impose a financial burden on the country which would be economically disastrous, and in the exercise of their sense of individual obligation to the community, State, and Nation the members of the Augustus P. Gardner Post can not approve and do oppose the imposition of such a burden. The American Legion was not formed to serve such purposes as this, nor can the veteran justify a demand for a bonus by the misdeeds of the profiteer. He should neither protect nor imitate the wrongdoer; and be it further

"Resolved, That the Augustus P. Gardner Post urges the speedy passage of all necessary legislation for the complete relief of injured veterans and the widows and orphans of those who died as the results of service. It believes that support of this bill by the American Legion would be in effect the abandonment by the American Legion of the disabled and the widows and orphans; and be it further

"Resolved, That copies of this resolution be transmitted to all Members of Congress in order that they may be informed of the opposition to the bill by the Augustus P. Gardner Post and its reasons therefor, to the national commander of the American Legion, to the commanders of the departments of the American Legion, and to all posts thereof in the District of Columbia in the hope that the reasons expressed against the bonus may influence them to oppose this bill, and to the press in the hope that it may induce due consideration of the reasons against the bonus and influence others to take similar action."

NATIONAL BUDGET SYSTEM.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9783) to provide a national budget system and an independent audit of Government accounts, and for other purposes.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, the bill before the Senate, H. R. 9783, as amended by your committee and unanimously reported from that committee, proposes a reorganization in the method of preparing, coordinating, and assembling the estimates of expenditure submitted to the Congress by the Executive.

The plan contemplated by the bill is not new. The idea upon which the plan is based is even older. I do not now speak of the original plan under which estimates were submitted to Congress by Alexander Hamilton and his immediate successors, but of those several attempts by Congress, during the last quarter of the last century, to bring some order into the preparation and submission of estimates.

The provisions in the Revised Statutes—the acts of July 3, 1884, March 3, 1901, and June 22, 1906—all express the consciousness of Congress that want of system and of central authority to prepare estimates made for waste and inefficiency. It may be said that the several acts were steps, each in advance of the one preceding; but it must be said, too, that the steps were halting, and that they did not carry the reform of the Government finances very far.

Some 20 years ago academic students of public finance in America, academic students of the fiscal systems of the several States and of the National Government, began to express concern lest the want of any central authority to assemble and revise estimates, in the States or in the Nation, presently would lead to such an appalling increase of public expenditure as to imperil the prosperity of the country. Before the war the agitation for reform, for the adoption of some modern system of budget-making, had borne results in most of the great cities, and finally in a majority of the States.

The great mass of taxpayers who were conscious of the growing burden of taxation and of the want of coordination in the control of expenditure naturally knew only in the most general terms the character of the reform which they sought to have carried into law. Some men demanded a budget system, any budget system, and that it be adopted immediately, without delay, instanter. They would apply the budget system, so called, to the body politic with as little concern and with as great certainty of its efficacy as our mothers would have applied a mustard plaster to any of us. It was not until the Nation became conscious of the burdens consequent upon the war that Congress addressed itself to a thorough study of the control of estimates in its bearing upon the appropriation of moneys by Congress and so upon the levy of taxes.

These several burdens—the inflation of the currency, the increment of the public debt, the creation of great armies of functionaries whose discharge from the public service presents difficulties incomparably greater than that of the discharge of the men under arms—in every country have raised the issue of retrenchment, and impressed upon men the importance—nay, the necessity—of providing adequate machinery for the control of expenditures.

I do not have to argue in this presence the relation between expenditures and the inflation of the currency. It may be said that in the civilized world the aggregate circulating medium is four times what it was before the outbreak of hostilities in 1914, with a consequent increase in the cost of articles manufactured, of produce raised upon the farm, of labor, of living.

It is noticeable that although the increase in costs is chiefest in those countries where deficits have been the greatest and loans the largest, nevertheless the increase in the cost of living in other countries inevitably influences the cost of living here.

If the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, whether it be the present incumbent of the office or the able Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] who preceded him, finds it necessary to admonish other powers regarding their expenditure, it is even more necessary that we should set an example to other powers of economy and efficiency in the control of public finances.

Even now two of the great belligerents among the European democracies face grave deficits during the coming year. The French budget contemplates an expenditure for the fiscal year to come of 42,000,000,000 francs, half of it, and only half of it, to be raised by taxation. Of the twenty-one or twenty-two billion francs to be raised by taxation, nearly a half in turn constitutes an addition to the sum of taxation raised during the fiscal year now coming to a close. One of the consequences of the increase in the levy of taxes and of the appalling deficit about to be authorized by the French chambers is the threatened general strike in France on the 1st of May next. A great element in the population thus seeks to demonstrate its opposition to the continued conduct of the Government upon such a scale as to incur vast and continuing deficits.

In Italy the aggregate of expenditure and the sum of the deficit, to be sure, are smaller than those contemplated in France; but the revenues of the Italian Government never have been comparable with those of the French Republic. Italy is a poor country, yet she contemplates for the ensuing fiscal year an expenditure of nearly 10,000,000,000 lire, a deficit of 2,500,000,000 lire. At the current rate of exchange, let us say that the deficit of France will amount during the ensuing fiscal year to $3,000,000,000, and that of Italy to between $600,000,000 and $700,000,000. The English—merchants, mariners, bankers, statesmen, for long generations—have determined that there shall be no more deficits, and that as the Government during the ensuing year is able to provide a surplus the inflation of the currency shall be diminished in proportion to the ability of the Government to withdraw treasury bills or bank notes from circulation.

It is notable, nevertheless, Mr. President, in spite of the insistent demands of the general public in Great Britain, her manufacturers, and her bankers for a sharp retrenchment in expenditure, that the chancellor of the exchequer has given notice that it will be necessary to levy new taxes in the sum of nearly three-quarters of a billion dollars a year.

I have before me figures prepared in the Treasury Department showing the estimated ordinary receipts of the United States for the fiscal year terminating June 30, 1920, and for the fiscal year terminating June 30, 1921. For the first year they are six and a half billion dollars; for the second year they are something less than five and a half billion dollars. It is impossible to speak definitely at this time of the balance between revenue and expenditure in this country, but as nearly as one may determine there is every probability that this year may see a deficit and next year likewise. This, Mr. President, despite the wisdom and resolution of the chairman of the majority steering committee in the House [Mr. MONDELL] and the chairman of the House Appropriations Committee [Mr. GOOD]. They, with their colleagues, have cut the estimates of the administration nearly 33 per cent, or by over a billion dollars. If the deficits be not large, nevertheless they must be considered in face of the fact that the floating indebtedness of the United States can not be appreciably reduced this year or next year.

We do not propose a revolution in this bill. We propose to return to our old system. There is no system yet devised which can meet every exigency, or any system which, during the course of time, is not liable to abuse. Senators know that during the first years of the Republic Alexander Hamilton discharged the duties, bore the responsibilities, and exercised the authority of a true minister of finance. The estimates of expenditure were prepared under his supervision and control. That was true of his immediate successors. By degrees the practice which existed under the general authority of law fell into desuetude. But it was not until the seventies that the law took cognizance of the abandonment of the practice which had existed at the beginning of the Republic, of the abandonment of the exercise of power by the Secretary of the Treasury. The bill reported to the Senate by the committee contemplates a restoration of the duty abandoned by the Treasury Department.

Mr. President, you will understand that the committee sought advice from men without regard to party whose successful experience in the public service justified the committee in attaching great weight to their judgment. The committee likewise, of course, made some study of the systems of other countries. Its members were interested to note that the very abuses which have crept into the Treasury here, that the very accretion of nongermane functions in the Treasury through act of Congress, found their counterparts in abuses or accretions in the treasuries of other countries.

To-day both the British Treasury and the French Ministry of Finance are under searching examination. To-day in Great Britain there is a well-nigh universal demand on the part of those in Parliament who have studied the problem that the treasury shall be purged of its nongermane functions, and that it shall be concerned only with revenue, the national expenditure, and the estimates of both to be submitted to the legislature.

It was the original purpose of the committee of the Senate to include in the bill provisions removing from the Treasury certain bureaus which, in the opinion of the committee, have no reason for being there, and which make of the Treasury a spending department. It is the very nearly unanimous judgment of critics, not only in this country but in others, that the Treasury should be charged with no responsibility for expenditure on its own account. Therefore it was the judgment of your committee that the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, the General Supply Committee, the Office of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury, the Public Health Service, and other services all should be removed from the Treasury Department. The bill as originally drawn made provision for the removal of such services.

But the committee unanimously came to the conclusion that since Congress faced the task of reorganizing and coordinating all the executive departments in the interest of homogeneity, economy, and efficiency, it would be a mistake at this time to remove from the Treasury and to place in other departments certain bureaus which might remain in the other departments only for a twelvemonth, until Congress had completed the work contemplated in the resolution submitted by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

There are certain differences between the bill reported to the Senate and the bill as it passed the House. It may be said of the bill as reported to the Senate that it goes further than does the bill which passed the House. It is written in more specific terms. The powers created by it are more exactly defined. It seeks to carry into law this year the reform which it contemplates, whereas the bill as it passed the House, as a study of the texts of the two measures will show Senators, postpones until another day the accomplishment of the actual reform. The bill as reported to the Senate places the budget-making machinery in the Treasury. The bill as it passed the House places it in the office of the President of the United States.

In order that I may not tax the time and the patience of the Senators who are in the Chamber by a long and detailed examination of the two bills, I may invite their attention to certain provisions of the bill as it passed the House which exemplify the differences between the two measures. The first sentence of the first section of that bill reads:

> That there is created in the office of the President a bureau of the budget.

The first sentence of the second section reads:

> That the bureau of the budget shall assist the President in the performance of the powers conferred upon him by this act.

The responsibility not for the sum of the budget and the fiscal policy of the administration but the actual detailed preparation of the budget is imposed upon the President of the United States by the terms of the bill as it passed the House, a responsibility which, in the judgment of your committee, the President, already the most overburdened Executive in the world, never would be able to discharge if he found time for his other duties and the conduct of the business of the people abroad and at home.

The other salient characteristic of the House bill may be found by reading section 2, excepting the first sentence, to which I have alluded. It reads:

> The bureau shall also make a careful investigation of all provisions of law dealing in any way with the preparation and transmission to Congress of estimates and the preparation and submission to Congress of financial data of any character—

And so forth.

In section 5 it is provided:

> That, except as otherwise provided in this act, the statutes governing the contents, order, and arrangement of the estimates of appropriations and receipts, and the notes and other data submitted therewith, shall apply to the estimates submitted to the President under section 3 and to the estimates for the expenditure needs of the Government when transmitted by the President under section 4.

Section 6 provides—

> That the President, in addition to the budget herein required to be transmitted, shall transmit at the same time and for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, only, an alternative budget prepared in such form and according to such system of classification and itemization as is, in his opinion, most appropriate, with such explanatory notes and tables as may be necessary to show where, in such budget, the various items embraced in the budget provided for in section 4 are contained. The alternative budget shall also make known the essential facts regarding the condition of the Treasury, revenues, and expenditures, appropriations, and what, in the opinion of the President, are the revenue and expenditure needs of the Government for the ensuing fiscal year, and how these needs should be met.

Mr. President, an examination of the whole bill will bear out the purport of these passages which I have read, that the House bill in effect contemplates no other change in the existing method of assembling and transmitting estimates than that they shall be assembled in the office of the President and not in the Department of the Treasury. The House bill creates no authority to revise or reduce estimates. It provides only for their assembling in the President's office.

The bill as reported to the Senate does not postpone the consummation of the plan for the genuine control of the estimates of the department by single authority. It does not postpone and vest in the Executive discretion as to the form in which the estimates shall be submitted for the better information not only of Congress but of public opinion. The bill as reported to the Senate sets forth the terms under which a budget of the estimates must be submitted to Congress. It provides the machinery for the assembly of the estimates and for their revision—aye, and reduction—and places that machinery in the Department of the Treasury.

Mr. WARREN. Will it interrupt the Senator if I ask a question at this point?

Mr. McCORMICK. Not at all.

Mr. WARREN. I notice that the House bill provides for one director and one assistant, also one comptroller and one assistant, while the bill submitted by the distinguished Senator from Illinois, on the part of the Senate special committee, provides for one principal and two assistants each. The Senator feels that that is necessary, does he?

Mr. McCORMICK. The committee felt that if the budget bureau were to be able intelligently to examine the preliminary estimates as provided in the bill, to cooperate with the bureau chiefs during the preliminary preparation of estimates to the end that when they finally came to the Secretary of the Treasury they might represent a meeting of the minds and agreement, it would be wise to give the commissioner of the budget two assistants. The committee felt that if the machinery were worth creating, it would be wise at this time to give the commissioner of the budget two principal assistants, upon whose discretion and judgment he might largely rely.

I do not answer the second part of the question of the Senator from Wyoming at this time, because it comes under a different head of the bill. The decision upon the number of assistants represents the judgment of members of the committee like the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] and the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], whose experience is much greater, as their judgment is much more weighty, than my own.

Perhaps I might take advantage of the question of the Senator from Wyoming to point out that, of course, the bill in no sense touches the constitutional responsibility of the Executive or of Congress. It vests in the Treasury authority covering the preparation of estimates, it makes the President responsible for the aggregate estimate of expenditures sought from Congress, but it makes Congress no less responsible for the aggregate of expenditures authorized by law.

There are critics of the measure, among them one distinguished Senator who is not present to-day, who feel that the committee should have sought to restrict the control of Congress over appropriations. The committee did not share that view, and if any member of the committee had held that view, nevertheless the committee would not have felt justified in attempting any such restriction by legislation. If Congress is to be limited in its control of expenditure, that limitation must be brought about by rules adopted by the two Houses for their own restraint.

Mr. WARREN. Of course, the Senator will understand that the questions I asked were in no wise in criticism. I merely had in mind the matter of economy.

Mr. McCORMICK. I quite understand, and I thank the Senator for his questions. In the light of his long experience, I hope he will interrupt with as many questions as may occur to him.

Mr. WARREN. In the line of economy, and judging from the actions of some of the heads of departments and their assistants, sometimes a less number of assistants is better than a greater number, because they divide the duties and authorities, and occasionally produce worse rather than better work. I want to see them paid salaries high enough to secure the service of those abundantly capable, and whether we establish one or two assistants or more, they should receive whatever they are worth. I simply asked to know if the committee had given that so thorough an examination that they felt they ought to have three high-salaried men in the performance of these branches, the comptroller and the others.

Of course, the Senator, I know, joins me and others in wanting that this should lead to economy as well as regularity. In fact, we must adopt economy if we are going to sustain our credit and not go entirely bankrupt, as seems sometimes to be hinted in the amounts of money by which our expenditures exceed our income. So that in this bill I assume that in dividing and stating the duties of each of the assistants the committee had some reason for wanting to have the additional two assistants and for dividing and assigning to each his duties.

The Senator will remember that we have sometimes met with complaints from the head of a department that he should rule as to his assistants and what duties should be delegated to each by him, and I assume the committee must have considered that along with other matters.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STERLING in the chair). Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. McCORMICK. Certainly.

Mr. CURTIS. Did not the committee also consider the advantage there would be in having three or two members in passing on the question of duplication of work in the different departments?

Mr. McCORMICK. That was one of the considerations which led the committee to its final conclusion.

It will be interesting, perhaps, to the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] to know that the New York Chamber of Commerce, in indorsing the Senate bill in sweeping terms, made but one exception to the indorsement. It found the salaries provided for the commissioner and the comptroller and their several assistants too small.

Mr. WARREN. I should expect that from the New York Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. McCORMICK. The committee considered this question. They had the advantage of the judgment of those Senators long in the service, as I have suggested, and after debate at several sessions they finally fixed the number of assistants as found in the bill and their salaries as there set down.

The committee decided for the Treasury as against the office of the President on several grounds. In the first place, it seemed the part of wisdom that the financial policy of the administration, in so far as it was deputized to a subordinate of the President, should be under the guidance of a single officer. The ultimate responsibility, of course, under the Constitution and under the terms of the bill, is with the President; it is impossible to divest him of that responsibility. But the committee felt after due deliberation that it would be unwise to hold one officer responsible for the control of revenue and the estimate of income and another for the estimates of appropriation; that is, of expenditures.

Furthermore, it was the judgment of the committee, after hearing witnesses whose opinion and experience carried weight, that a director or commissioner of the budget in the office of the President would lack the authority necessary to maintain his judgment as against that of the multitude of chiefs of divisions and of bureaus, who, moved by the best of good will and an insatiable appetite, always seek to increase appropriations by Congress. If a bureau chief were upheld by a Cabinet officer as against the commissioner of the budget, the commissioner of the budget would have no recourse but to surrender or appeal directly to the President. If the President were to sustain a subordinate officer as against the head of a department, a member of the Cabinet, the only course open to the member of the Cabinet would be to resign.

The committee felt, on the other hand, that if the matter were at issue between the Secretary of the Treasury and another member of the Cabinet, in the great majority of cases the differences would be resolved without reaching the President, and if any of them finally were submitted to the President for determination neither officer would feel it incumbent upon himself to resign if the decision went against him.

The committee presumed that under the terms of the bill the President, in conference with his Cabinet at some time prior to the beginning of the preparation of the budget, would determine the general fiscal policy of the administration in fulfillment of its economic, social, and political program, allotting tentatively to the several departments and establishments of the Government sums necessary to carry out that program. At the same time the Cabinet would have under review the estimates of the Treasury for the revenue during the forthcoming year. The President in conference with his Cabinet must determine whether the demands for expenditure would meet the revenue contemplated to accrue from existing taxation, whether they would require additional taxation, or whether they would permit the repeal of existing taxes by Congress. Certainly no preliminary estimate can be infallible. Therefore it would be the duty of the Treasury, through the Secretary, advised by the commissioner of revenue and the commissioner of the budget, to propose to the President and to the members of the Cabinet from time to time such modifications of the original plan as might be dictated by developments.

The commissioner of the budget bureau, Mr. President, acting through his assistants and other subordinates, would be in contact with all departments during the preparation of the estimates, and particularly with the fiscal officer, the "financial secretary," so called, for the designation of whom provision is made in the bill.

Here is presented a vast opportunity for economy to be accomplished by the budget bureau, and which can be accomplished in no other way. Senators who have served long and usefully, as has the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], know how many duplications and multiplications of the same service there are throughout the departments of the Government; and yet I do not doubt that the Senator from Wyoming will bear me out that, with all the burden of their other duties upon them, it has never been possible for these devoted conservators of the public revenue in the other House and in the Senate to rid the Government of duplication and the multiplication of services, and the consequent waste which is found throughout all the departments.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. McCORMICK. I do.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator from Illinois is absolutely correct in the statement which he has just made. Of course, in the early days of my service in the Senate—in fact, before I was a member of the Committee on Appropriations and even afterwards—there was a check in this matter, because appropriations were then all in the hands of one committee. That committee through its work in connection with the different departments of the Government could provide pretty well against duplications and multiplications of appropriations. However, the growth of the country and the fact that the other House first divided their appropriation bills and apportioned them amongst various committees other than the Committee on Appropriations, which action was followed by the Senate, resulted in the duplication of services and appropriations, and that defect has never entirely been overcome; indeed, I very much doubt if it ever can be entirely overcome unless the very ardent wishes and labor of those of us who are figuring on having a budget system may overcome it.

I wish to see it overcome; I welcome in entire earnestness any move along the line of a budget system if it shall accomplish exactly that to which the Senator from Illinois alludes—the prevention of duplication in the different departments of work, each one of those departments striving to build itself up without at least very much regard to any other.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, it is a matter of wonder and admiration to those of us who are the junior Members of this body how the older Members, and especially those who have devoted their energies to the Committee on Appropriations, have mastered the details of this amorphous structure, which is the administrative branch of the Government of the United States. So long as there was no centralized authority in the Executive, responsible before the country and before Congress for the aggregate of estimates, there was no movement within the executive branch of the Government to purge the departments of duplicate services. It may be that some of us are too sanguine, but I am constrained to believe that from the time that the President and the Secretary of the Treasury as his agent become responsible to Congress and the country for the aggregate of expenditure, and therefore of taxation, an effort will be made, through the machinery created under the pending bill, to purge the Government of waste and inefficiency.

I do not say that the bill goes far enough. It seems to me that the resolution introduced by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], and which is now in the Committee on Appropriations, over which the Senator from Wyoming so ably presides, should be passed at this session, to the end that a joint committee of Congress may begin its labors upon a reorganization of the executive departments. I would go even further: I would give the Committee on Appropriations or an analogous committee general control over all appropriation bills, determining the gross sums which may be allotted to the several services for which provision is made in the various appropriation bills.

It has been the habit for a long time in the public press and on the Chautauquas to charge Congress not merely with the ultimate responsibility for expenditure but with the primary responsibility for extravagance, assuming that the initiative is with Congress. The pork barrel has become proverbial. Yet Senators very well know that to-day it is not the appropriations for rivers and harbors or for public buildings which consume the substance of the taxpayer; it is the maintenance of a multitude of functionaries.

I do not gainsay that among the most able, public-spirited, and zealous servants of the Government are those very expert bureau chiefs who seek most eagerly to increase the sums appropriated for the support of their bureaus or divisions without regard to the total cost of the Government. It is a matter of jest in the Capitol that in one service or another, military or civil, such a bureau chief or such a chief of division manages to prepare and to secure in the Secretary's estimate the incorporation of figures twice as great as might be necessary for the successful maintenance of his office.

They do that, cynically looking to Congress to reduce the appropriation below the estimate submitted. Mr. President, if this bill becomes a law the time is not far distant when the toleration of such a practice will bring the Chief Executive of the Government, whoever he may be, into such general disrepute that he or his successor will compel reform.

The House committee in its wisdom believed that in establishing a centralized control of estimates by the Executive it would be prudent to create an officer independent of the executive department, appointed by the President, but, in so far as might be provided, responsible also to Congress, to supervise and criticize the expending departments of the administration. The Senate bill follows the House bill in principle. It creates a general accounting office under a comptroller general, and vests in his office not only the powers of the Comptroller of the Treasury but those of the several auditors and those duties now discharged by the divisions of Public Moneys and of Bookkeeping and Warrants.

The Senator from Wyoming, when he asked the first of his illuminating questions, addressed it very naturally to the number of assistants to the comptroller general provided by the bill, as well as to those provided for the commissioner of the budget. I might say, first, that the Senate bill contemplates vesting in the comptroller an especial and important responsibility, for which no provision is made in the House bill. The assistant comptroller general is, if I may so phrase it, the chief of audit and control. His duties, I think, need no other definition; they are those already established by law. The third assistant comptroller general is, in effect, the chief bookkeeper of the Government, discharging duties now already established by law.

The second assistant comptroller general is to be the expert accountant of the Government. I do not doubt that Senators now in the Chamber can give more instances than ever I can of the inconsistent and incongruous systems of accounting which obtain in the various departments.

When the committee began hearings the Association of Chartered Accountants notified the committee that it wished to be represented by witnesses. There were none of those witnesses who, before the committee or privately, did not speak of the incongruous, the inconsistent, the wasteful, the blind systems of accounting which obtained in various branches of the executive departments. The committee owes to the study, the judgment, and the information of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] more than to any other member of the committee the inclusion of this provision in the bill.

In years gone by it has been suggested that commissions be appointed and firms of expert accountants employed to bring order out of the disorder in the accounting systems of the Government. The bill provides that the second assistant comptroller general shall have authority to bring about uniformity and consistency in the Government's accounts. Perhaps Senators have had such an experience as has been related to me of a member of the Cabinet who during the same week presented statistics bearing on the same subject, the second group of which utterly contradicted the first group, and both of which had been supplied to him by his own department, although by different branches thereof.

Now I come to the provision of the bill creating the board of appeals.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. McCORMICK. I do.

Mr. POMERENE. Before the Senator proceeds to that branch of the bill, I notice that the House bill practically provides that the comptroller general shall succeed to all the powers and duties of the Comptroller of the Treasury. In what respect does the bill increase the duties of the comptroller general over and above those now performed by the Comptroller of the Treasury?

Mr. McCORMICK. I thank the Senator for that question. It devolves upon his office the duties of the Divisions of Bookkeeping and Warrants and Public Moneys, which now are attached to the office of the Secretary of the Treasury. Upon examination it was learned that these two bureaus, although nominally subordinate to the Secretary of the Treasury, were actually vestibules, as it were, to the comptroller's office. The Division of Public Moneys receives from the Treasurer's office certificates of deposit, wherever originating, designates the character of their entries, and forwards them to the Division of Bookkeeping and Warrants. It is a clerical bureau, as the Senator will learn upon examination, performing a function in duplicate of that subsequently performed in the comptroller's office. It also deals with the approval of duplicate checks where the originals have been lost or destroyed prior to payment.

The Division of Bookkeeping and Warrants discharges one function which under this bill goes to the commissioner of the budget. It is the agency, as it were, which to-day collects and assembles the estimates of the departments, and which subsequently are transmitted by the Secretary of the Treasury to Congress. It keeps the account of the general fund of the Treasury and the appropriation accounts therefrom it sets up when appropriations are made. It keeps the personal accounts of bonded persons who receive certain advances on accountable warrants. It makes out the warrants opening the appropriation accounts on the books. It makes out warrants for covering in certificates of deposits on the books. It makes out pay warrants and accountable warrants. All these, of course, are approved by the comptroller. Finally, it reports daily and annually the receipts and disbursements of the Government.

When it was first proposed to the committee that the comptroller general, in addition to taking over the responsibility as provided in the House bill, should take over these responsibilities of the Division of Bookkeeping and Warrants and the Division of Public Moneys, I wondered how great these responsibilities might be and how large a personnel might be involved. The responsibility, legally and in an accounting sense, is as meager as I have outlined here, while the number of persons is 79 out of a total of 2,445 who, by the terms of the bill, would be transferred to the comptroller general's office.

Beyond this, Mr. President, as I sought to explain a moment ago, there is added the new responsibility—to be discharged under the comptroller's direction by his second assistant—that of bringing about uniformity and consistency in the accounts of the Government. One of the members of the Bureau of Efficiency remarked to me that at certain far-off points systems of keeping accounts original with some individual now forgotten still obtain. There is no hand now which can reach out to establish uniformity of accounting, any more than there is any hand which can reach out to sweep out redundant and wasteful services in the Government.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, do I understand from that statement that under the office of the Comptroller of the Treasury there may be different systems of bookkeeping relating to the several executive departments?

Mr. McCORMICK. Those different systems do not exist in the office of the Comptroller of the Treasury, but in the administrative accounts which he is called upon only to examine and to audit. The Senator from his long experience knows, doubtless in far greater detail than I do, that there is the administrative account and the administrative audit, over which the comptroller has no jurisdiction other than to certify that the accounts balance and that the Government has not been fraudulently deprived of money.

Have I answered the Senator's question?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes.

Mr. McCORMICK. Before I conclude I must say a word about the board of appeals for which provision is made in the bill, and of the constitution of which I am ready to acknowledge I am less certain than I am of any other provision of the bill. I think the principle of a board of appeals is sound.

It was the judgment of the committee, after considering the matter, that the individual who sought and who received a reconsideration of his claim, a new adjudication of the decision of the comptroller's office, himself would be better satisfied and would be assured of more certain justice if a board of three, representing a point of view other than that of the original adjudicating officer, sat in judgment upon the claim. It was at first contemplated that the first assistant comptroller, who had made the original adjudication, should be a member of that board, and I confess that there is strong argument that he should be present as a member of the board in reviewing the case upon which he has passed originally. He could bring to the board the fruit of his experience. There was argument that the third assistant comptroller, who, after all, will be a bookkeeper, and presumably nothing but a bookkeeper, would come to the board in no sense especially equipped for the responsibility which will devolve upon the board. It was originally proposed that the board should consist of the first and second assistant comptrollers and the solicitor, but it was the final judgment of the committee to constitute the board as provided in the bill. I advert to the hesitancy of the decision because I think that the facts in such a case should be laid before these experienced Members of the Senate who are present, and whose judgment ought to be had upon such a provision.

Mr. KELLOGG. I do not want to interrupt the Senator, but when he gets through I wish to ask him a question.

Mr. McCORMICK. I will be glad to answer the question now.

Mr. KELLOGG. I understand the comptroller general is to have jurisdiction over all matters relating to auditing in all departments of the Government.

Mr. McCORMICK. He would have vested in him all the powers now exercised by the comptroller and the auditors, including the Auditor of the Post Office Department.

Mr. KELLOGG. So that he may establish a uniform system of accounting in all departments of the Government?

Mr. McCORMICK. He may. So far as his control over accounting is concerned, that is a provision not found in the House bill and an authority not now existing in law.

Mr. KELLOGG. That is what I wished to ask the Senator.

Mr. McCORMICK. I may recall in this connection, if my memory is not at fault, that the powers sought to be conferred upon the comptroller by this bill are not only those which have been proposed by the Association of Expert Accountants, but by the President in his regular message to this Congress.

I could discuss the details of this bill at greater length, Mr. President, and I could with great good will urge upon the Senate that this bill, in itself and alone, will not accomplish all the reforms which we seek. The all-important work contemplated by the resolution of the Senator from Utah, now in the Appropriations Committee, and soon to be reported, I hope, is necessary not merely as a supplement, but as the crown, if you wish, to the reform contemplated in this bill. Its importance transcends that of this bill. I count the country fortunate that the resolution was submitted, not only because of its terms, but because of the person of its author. We may be certain that the search undertaken by the budget bureau will be the more thorough, and we may be certain that the reforms which it recommends will be the more drastic, if the Senator from Utah presides over the committee created by the terms of his resolution.

I could argue, sir, that while Congress proposes the reformation of the Executive, the House and Senate would do well to examine their own constitution for the dispatch of the public business. There are nearly fourscore committees of the Senate and nearly threescore committees of the House, some of them created before this Chamber in which we sit was born in the imagination of the architect—committees which have not met during the service of any Senator here to-day. The want of policy and restraint which under this committee system marks the voting of moneys threatens not only our prosperity but our very security.

The reorganization of the administrative departments and the reform of parliamentary organization must wait a little. An effective budget system we can establish now and by the terms of this bill. As I have explained at all too great length, it makes the Secretary of the Treasury what Alexander Hamilton was—the President's chief deputy in determining the administration's financial policy. It creates a budget bureau in the Treasury, and by providing for a financial secretary in each of the departments insures the collaboration of the departments with the budget bureau; it gives the Secretary of the Treasury not only the power to collect estimates but to revise and reduce them. Furthermore, it prescribes the form in which he must submit them to the President. Finally, it makes the President indisputably responsible for the sum of the estimates and Congress no less clearly responsible for the sum of the appropriations. It vests the comptroller general with powers and responsibility which make him no less the agent of Congress than of the President in searching the spending offices for waste or mismanagement.

I know that this is a dull theme and that figures are a drab study, but consider that Federal taxes are fivefold what they were 5 years ago and State taxes fivefold what they were 20 years ago. Within five years the debts of France and Italy have grown fivefold. The British debt is ten times what it was before the war. Our debt is twenty times greater than it was three years ago. Japan owes less to-day than she did when she began hostilities against Germany.

In these crowded years, when passionate devotion to liberty and high hopes of a new age steeled the hearts of men to face the agonies of war, homilies upon frugality and sermons upon prudence have found few to hear them. The hearts of the people have been stirred by the pledges of their spokesmen that their sufferings would win for them and their children a better world, a more general and more genuine democracy, a larger measure of economic justice, a surer social progress, and, above all, enduring peace. These are things to enthral the souls of multitudes, to move orators to eloquence, to enlist the services of statesmen. Who among us does not hope that in our own time we may be vouchsafed in some small part the happiness which always lies before the succeeding generations of men, like the treasure under the rainbow's end?

None of the ideals for which we fought and for which some died can be fulfilled; no measures for the relief of the weak or for the control of the ruthless, for the pursuit of science or for the education of the masses; no plan to assure markets to the farmer, tradeways for the merchants, or prosperous and unbroken labor for our workers can be carried into law unless Congress, husbanding the public wealth, conserves to-day the means with which to work to-morrow. In bygone centuries great civilizations have fallen, their foundations rotted under the pressure of unendurable taxation, their superstructures wasted by profligate administration. The most splendid designs for the future, aye, and the very present prosperity of our society hang upon the measure of reform now before the Senate.

WORK OF RECLASSIFICATION COMMISSION.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. President, I desire at this time to call the attention of the Senate to the report of the Congressional Joint Commission on Reclassification of Salaries, "submitting," as its subtitle says, "a classification of positions on the basis of duties and qualifications and schedules of compensation for the respective classes."

The duty of the commission, as defined by the act, was—to investigate the rates of compensation paid to civilian employees by the municipal government and the various executive departments and other governmental establishments in the District of Columbia, except the navy yard and the Postal Service, and report by bill or otherwise, as soon as practicable, what reclassification and readjustment of compensation should be made so as to provide uniform and equitable pay for the same character of employment throughout the District of Columbia in the services enumerated.

This commission, through its chairman, submitted its report to the Congress on March 12, and on March 22 introduced a bill in the Senate (S. 4106) which, if enacted into law, will carry into effect the recommendations made by the commission. I had the honor of serving on that commission, and I wish to assure you that the best efforts of every member of the commission were used in an earnest endeavor and desire to present a constructive document—I may say, a reconstructive report—to the Congress. As stated, however, in our letter of submittal, on page 17 of the report, "your commission is not suffering from any illusions as to the degree of perfection attained."

I have here the report of the Reclassification Commission and the current Book of Estimates. The Book of Estimates contains the recommended appropriations for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1920, and ending June 30, 1921. It contains the estimates made by the various departments in the summer and early fall of 1919 and compiled and submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury last December for the assistance of the Appropriations Committees of the House and the Senate and the Members of Congress for use in considering proposed expenditures. All the Members of the Senate are familiar with the Book of Estimates. I wish every Member of the Senate and of the House had become as familiar with the contents of the report of the Reclassification Commission, but in these times of readjustment following the World War and with our attention fixed on the various candidacies for nomination for the Presidency at the coming national conventions, it apparently has been difficult for the Congress to give to this report the attention which I am sure all recognize it deserves and will receive sooner or later.

By way of contrast with some things in the reclassification report, let me call your attention to some things in the Book of Estimates. Take the matter of titles of positions. The title of a position goes for that position when it is vacant and when it is occupied the title applies to the position and to the employee holding it. The titles of positions are used in the ordinary business of the department; they are used by the Civil Service Commission in calling examinations to secure eligibles to certify for appointment; they are used by the departments in submitting to the Congress their estimates for appropriations for what the accountants and budget experts call personal services; and they are used by the Congress in making appropriations; so titles of positions are quite important. Even if Congress passes the budget bill now pending it will be necessary for Congress to consider the titles of positions and the reclassification as contained in this report.

How many titles of positions appear in the Book of Estimates? I am unable to give you the grand total for the entire Government service, but I can give you the total in the Book of Estimates for the positions in the Washington service; that is, those in the municipal government, the various executive departments, and other governmental establishments in the District of Columbia, exclusive of the navy yard and the Postal Service. In short, I can give the positions of employees over which the commission had jurisdiction. For these, the positions of employees at the Capital City alone, the Book of Estimates contains 2,066 different titles. Of this number 583 are included in estimates for statutory appropriations and 1,483 are included in the details supporting estimates for lump-sum appropriations.

It appeared to the commission that this was an excessively large number of titles. In fact, it is larger by 304 than the total number of titles for classes of positions appearing in the report of the Reclassification Commission. The commission would have welcomed a further decrease, but it was not authorized to reorganize the Government service. It took the service as it found it and endeavored to classify the existing positions for which the Congress had been making appropriations. But the large number of titles in the Book of Estimates is not the worst feature. These present titles are vague and in many cases meaningless. Except in a few cases there are no statutes defining what they mean. They are not backed up with specifications.

Under an act of 1854, sections 163 and 164 of the Revised Statutes, there are created four classes of clerks, classes 1, 2, 3, and 4. A clerk of the first class is one who gets $1,200 per year; of the second class, $1,400; of the third class, $1,600; and of the fourth class, $1,800. We often found clerks of these four classes doing the same work but getting these different salaries and, under the present law, in different classes. The trouble is that the present titles do not represent a classification on the basis of the duties of the positions and the qualifications required to perform the duties.

It was found that for positions involving the same duties and the same degree of responsibility there were often great varieties of titles in use.

This lack of standardization in present titles of positions gives such a good understanding of the fundamental defect in the present situation that I think you will be interested in what the report has to say about it. I quote from the details of our seventh finding on page 44 of the report:

LACK OF STANDARDIZATION IN PRESENT TITLES OF POSITIONS.

"Seventh finding: That the Government has no standard to guide it in fixing the pay of its employees and no working plan for relating the salaries appropriated to the character and importance of the work for which such salaries are to be paid, and that the designations of positions now appearing in the Book of Estimates are inaccurate and misleading.

"As an employer the Government of the United States has not hitherto established, by law or otherwise, a standard for paying its employees uniformly according to the duties, responsibilities, and qualifications involved in their respective positions. The rates of compensation of some positions are fixed by general statute, in other cases by the annual appropriation acts, and in still other cases by individual, executive, or administrative action. The rates of compensation thus fixed pertain to positions with specified titles but undefined as to duties, degree of responsibility, or required qualifications.

"Legislation enacted in 1854 and still in force, section 163 of the Revised Statutes, provides that 'the clerks in the departments shall be arranged in four classes, distinguished as the first, second, third, and fourth classes,' and section 167 prescribes the annual salaries as follows: 'Clerks of the first class, $1,200; clerks of the second class, $1,400; clerks of the third class, $1,600; and clerks of the fourth class, $1,800.' But the duties which must be performed by an employee to entitle him to the pay of any one of these classes have never been defined.

"An examination of the questionnaires of 1,283 employees whose salaries are appropriated for under the title of 'Clerk, class 1,' showed that they are filling positions that call for the performance of 97 varieties of duties. A similar study of the questionnaires of 3,207 'Clerks, class $1,200,' brought out the fact that they are properly classifiable in 77 of the classes proposed in this report. This analysis, carried further, revealed the same conditions throughout the whole range of present clerk classes.

"That the appropriation titles, pay-roll titles, or common titles generally are by no means descriptive of the duties of employees has been brought vividly before the commission by the detailed examination of the questionnaires giving data regarding rate of compensation, duties, etc., for each position studied. Two fairly typical illustrations of the variations in pay-roll titles for a given definite occupation or kind of work (referred to in this report as a 'class') are here presented to give some idea of the wide divergence.

"Employees termed 'senior file and record clerks' in the classification, according to the duties actually performed, have been selected for the first illustration. This class embraces 2,400 employees. While many of them were described as clerks of the four classes and some as 'clerk, class $1,000,' 'clerk, class $1,100,' 'clerk, class $1,300,' and some simply clerks, the positions of others were described by many different titles, 105 being the total number of different titles now in use for this class. In the words of the classification the duties and qualifications of a 'senior file and record clerk' are as follows:

"Duties: Under general supervision, to exercise independent judgment in assorting, classifying, arranging, and filing papers, cards, cross-reference sheets, books, samples, or other office records; to extract papers or folders from files for information or for precedent purposes, or to make notations thereon; to read, brief, and index papers and search the files for required information; to have charge of or to operate a tally card or follow-up file; in some cases, to review the work of other file clerks; and to perform related work as required.

"Common qualifications: Training equivalent to that represented by graduation from high school and by not less than one year's work in a recognized filing or library school; ability to instruct others and supervise their work; and preferably knowledge of typewriting.

"Special qualifications: For each class in the group familiarity with the classification of the subject matter and the method of filing in the office where the work is performed, as indicated by the title of that class.

"The pay-roll titles now in use for employees whose actual duties class them under the title 'Senior file and record clerk' were found to be as follows:

"Apprentice graphotype operator; assorter; assistant supervisor; administrative clerk; addressograph operator; assistant graphotype supervisor; awarder; addressograph proof reader; addressograph operator; adjuster; assistant file clerk; auditing clerk; assistant file and mail clerk; assistant statistician; assistant manager; assistant chief; address correspondent; auditor; assistant in document section; boss painter; bookkeeper; clerk; clerk, class 1; clerk, class 2; clerk, class 3; clerk, class 4; clerk, class $1,000; clerk, class $1,100; clerk, class $1,300; clerk, typist; correspondence clerk; underclerk; verifier; correspondent; clerk—stenographer and typist; chief of incoming mails and files; clerk, general duties; coder; code clerk; chief file clerk; copyist; card puncher; clerk statistician; dictator; duplicator clerk; editor; examiner; expert (clerk); editorial clerk; filer; filer and searcher; file clerk; form-letter supervisor; file supervisor; first checker; file assistant; freight-rate clerk; group head; group head supervisor; index and catalogue clerk; index clerk; indexer; Italian verifier; junior clerk; library assistant; mail clerk; minor clerk; telegrapher; unit supervisor; mail messenger; mail examiner; mail reader and distributor; planning and recording clerk; principal file clerk; production expert; project clerk; reawarder; reviewer; route clerk; reviser; rate clerk; recording clerk; searcher; special detail clerk; special searcher; special expert; sorter; stenographer; stenographer-typist; supervisor; skilled laborer; special agent; substitute supervisor; special employee; secretary; statistician; subreviser; title writer and index supervisor; time clerk; timekeeper; typist; trouble chaser; telephone supervisor; typist, reader, and file clerk; telephone operator.

"Examination of the above list of titles for a single 'character of employment' shows that they are based upon no common plan. Moreover, the titles themselves indicate in a striking way that the plan of basing rates of compensation upon the appropriation titles of positions and without regard to duties results in great inequalities in the rates paid for the same work in the Government service. We find clerks, class 1, at $1,200; clerks, class 2, at $1,400; clerks, class 3, at $1,600; clerks, class 4, at $1,800, all performing the work of a position requiring the same duties and qualifications and carrying with it the same degree of responsibility.

"Junior examiners have been selected as a second illustration. In this class some 500 employees are described at present by 48 different pay-roll titles. The duties and qualifications of a junior examiner in the terms of the classification are:

"Duties: Under supervision, to make tentative findings upon claims of simple character involving office rules and regulations, or to pass upon features of more complex claims; to assemble evidence, data, and reports; to check routine periodical reports of local offices; to conduct correspondence incidental to the foregoing; and to perform related work as required.

"Examples: Examining passports to see if correct in form; examining applications for issuance of duplicate money orders; approving bonds of letter carriers and clerks; making primary adjustments of awards to soldiers and sailors under war-risk insurance acts; making abstracts of inspectors' reports, Interstate Commerce Commission; determining specific penalties, Internal-Revenue Service; making initial examination of applications for copyright; examining survey plats and tract books; adjudicating claims of simple character.

"Common qualifications: Training equivalent to that represented by graduation from high school; and not less than one year's experience as an under examiner or experience considered equivalent.

"Special qualifications: For each class in the group, familiarity with the activities of the department or bureau where the work is performed, as indicated by the title of that class.

"The pay-roll titles for employees whose duties call for their classification under the title of junior examiner were found to be as follows:

"Clerk, class 1; clerk, class 2; clerk, class 3; clerk, class 4; typist; administrative clerk; claims examiner; special expert; examiner; field examiner; statistical clerk; correspondence clerk; examiner of transportation and travel expense; attorney; insurance expert; unit supervisor; assistant in insurance section; State supervisor; law clerk; typist; clerk; group head; supervisor; assistant supervisor; secretary; clerk (qualified in buiness administration); reviewer; index and catalogue clerk; examiner and reviewer; stenographer; reawarder; subsupervisor; junior claims examiner; editorial clerk; awarder; correspondence clerk; correspondence supervisor; copyist; reader; auditor; special examiner; instructor; duplicate adjuster and reviewer; junior clerk; skilled laborer; file clerk; special clerk; instructor examiner.

"Examples of many different pay-roll titles embraced under a single class title are not limited to the services involving filing and examining work. They are found in nearly all of the services. Under the title 'Junior civil engineer' as the correct occupational designation were found positions carrying 33 different pay-roll titles, some of which were: 'Clerk, class 3,' 'Chief draftsman,' 'Valveman,' 'Assistant classifier,' and 'Skilled laborer.'

"In the class of positions properly designated as 'Associate cadastral engineer,' involving knowledge of United States laws and regulations governing public-land patents as well as engineering, were found several employees whose positions now carry the following pay-roll titles: 'Clerk,' 'Clerk, class 3,' Clerk, class 4,' and 'United States surveyor on special detail.' Among those correctly classed as 'Carpenter' were found some 400 employees having at present 29 different pay-roll titles. These included 'Mechanic,' 'Mechanician,' 'Night guard,' 'Orderly,' and 'Clerk, class 1200.'

"Examination of these lists of titles for positions involving the same 'character of employment' shows that they are meaningless. They indicate that to base rates of compensation upon the appropriation titles of positions and without regard to duties will inevitably result in great inequalities in the rates paid for the same work, and that the use of this confused title scheme has been largely responsible for the existing lack of uniformity in pay for like work.

"On lump-sum pay rolls the titles are of several different types. Often they indicate the position of the employee in his immediate organization. Examples of such titles are 'Assistant supervisor,' 'Administrative clerk,' 'Assistant chief,' 'Group head,' and 'Unit supervisor.' If one is possessed of detailed information regarding the organization concerned and if it has adopted a standard terminology, then titles may be indicative of the rank of the respective employees. They are not descriptive of the duties.

"Another type of title is apparently based on the qualifications which were possessed by the employee on entrance into the service and upon which he qualified in the civil-service tests. Among such titles are 'Apprentice graphotype operator,' 'Addressograph operator,' 'Clerk-stenographer and typewriter,' 'Clerk, statistician,' 'Card puncher,' 'Minor clerk,' 'Skilled laborer,' and 'Telegrapher.' That these titles are used for clerks actually engaged in filing probably reflects the frequent practice of assigning employees to duties without much reference to the examinations under which they entered the service.

"Because of the practice of basing rates of compensation upon title of position only, it is not an uncommon occurrence to change the title of a position without change of duties so as to increase the salary of the incumbent.

"The facts abundantly prove the contention that the present titles, despite their great number and variety, are of almost no value to the Congress and its committees for identifying the nature of the work actually performed. It is apparent that the present appropriation, pay roll, and common titles of positions can not serve as a basis for a system of uniform and equitable pay for the same 'character of employment' and that Congress has had no other standard."

I now call your attention to the commission's classification, part 2 of the report. This is the bulk of the detailed report, 884 pages of titles and specifications of classes and proposed rates of compensation, while part 1 contains findings of facts, recommendations, and expositions of the classification. That you may readily understand what part 2 contains, I shall read from page 72 of part 1 the passage headed—

"A DESCRIPTION OF THE RECOMMENDED PLAN OF CLASSIFICATION AND OF THE CLASS SPECIFICATIONS—BASIS, ARRANGEMENT, AND CONTENTS.

"The classification of positions in the Washington service that the commission has worked out as a basis for the equalizing and standardizing of salaries is presented in this report as part 2. A description of this classification should probably be prefaced by a brief statement of the principles upon which it was worked out and a definition of some of the special terms that must be used to make the description clear.

"PRINCIPLES AND DEFINITIONS.

"The act requires that the recommended salaries should be uniform for the same 'character of employment.' The classification is for the purpose of bringing together positions involving the same 'character of employment.' In interpreting this expression the commission proceeded on the basis—

"1. That positions and not individuals were to be classified.

"2. That the duties and responsibilities pertaining to a position constitute the outstanding characteristics that distinguish it from other positions, or, conversely, that mark its similarity to other positions.

"3. That the qualifications in respect to education, experience, knowledge, and skill necessary for the performance of certain duties are obviously determined by the nature of those duties, and hence a statement of such qualifications assists in bringing out the differences and similarities in the duties involved and constitutes a valuable aid in the determination of the proper classification of positions.

"4. That the individual characteristics of those persons who happened to occupy the positions at the time should have no bearing on the classification. In other words, that the duties the incumbents are required to perform rather than the age, sex, pay, or fitness of such incumbents should serve as the basis for the grouping of positions according to likeness in the 'character of employment.'

"5. That positions could properly be considered of the same 'class' as involving the same 'character of employment' where the duties and responsibilities are so nearly the same that persons who at the time of appointment could be considered qualified for any one of such positions could be considered equally well qualified for any one of the others.

"Certain terms used in the classification and in the following description should be interpreted in the light of the following definitions:

"1. Position: A 'position' is a specific office, employment, or job (whether occupied or vacant) calling for the performance of certain duties and the exercise of certain responsibilities by an individual.

"2. Class: A 'class' is a group of all positions which, regardless of their organization connection, or location, call for the performance of substantially similar duties or work and involve the exercise of responsibilities of like importance, and therefore demand substantially the same qualifications on the part of incumbents, and are, for these reasons, subject to common treatment in the selection of qualified appointees and other employment processes, and that can be aptly described by the same title.

"3. Series of classes: Where a number of 'classes' of positions are substantially similar as to the type of work involved and differ only in rank as determined by the importance of the duties, the degree of responsibility involved, and the amount of training and experience required, such 'classes' constitute a 'series,' and each is given a title containing a common term descriptive of the type of work, with a modifying term indicative of the relative rank.

"4. Service: A 'service' is a general aggregation of classes of positions grouped regardless not only of departmental and organization lines, but also regardless of rank, on the basis of outstanding common characteristics, selected more or less arbitrarily to aid in the process of classification. A 'service' includes positions belonging to a given occupation, vocation, calling, profession, business, craft, trade, or group of trades—a general line of work.

"THE CLASSIFICATION PLAN IN GENERAL.

"Part 2 of this report sets forth the classification in detail. There are 1,762 sets of specifications, each of which normally covers one class of positions. In some cases, however, specifications cover 'groups of classes' of the same rank but having special variations with respect to some single qualification requirement within the group. Each set of specifications applies to every position in the class (or the group of classes) in all of the departments and independent establishments in the Washington service, be it a large class embracing thousands of positions or the smallest possible class embracing only one position truly in a class by itself.

"The classes are arranged in the following 44 services:

"I. Services involving clerical, office, or commercial work:

"1. Administrative and supervisory clerical service.
"2. Assessor and appraised service.
"3. Court clerk and docket service.
"4. Departmental publications and information service.
"5. Fiscal and accounting service.
"6. Mail, file, and record service.
"7. Messenger service.
"8. Miscellaneous clerical service.
"9. Office appliance operating service.
"10. Personnel service.
"11. Specialized business service.
"12. Supply and equipment service.
"13. Telephone and telegraph operating service.
"14. Typing, stenographic, correspondence, and secretarial service.

"II. Services involving the skilled trades, manual labor, public safety, or related work:

"15. Custodial and janitor service.
"16. Detention and reformatory service.
"17. Domestic service.
"18. Engineman service.
"19. Farm, garden, and park maintenance service.
"20. Fire service.
"21. Investigational and inspectional service.
"22. Marine operating service.
"23. Police and criminal investigation service.
"24. Printing trades service.
"25. Skilled trades and labor service.

"III. Services involving scientific, technical, professional, or subsidiary work:

"26. Actuarial service.
"27. Agricultural promotion and extension service.
"28. Architectural service.
"29. Arts service.
"30. Biological science service.
"31. Chaplain service.
"32. Community and recreation service.
"33. Economic and political science service.
"34. Educational service.
"35. Engineering service.
"36. Law and examiner service.
"37. Library service.
"38. Medical science service.
"39. Nursing service.
"40. Patent service.
"41. Physical science service.
"42. Social science service.
"43. Statistical service.
"44. Translating service.

"Each service is preceded by a list of the classes it contains. Within each service the specifications for the various classes are arranged in series, each of which begins with the class of the lowest rank and ends with that of the highest rank. There may be only two classes in the series, there may be seven or eight. All told, there are 376 series, and in addition there are some 378 classes that do not fall in any series.

"Following the specifications for each class, or group of classes, is given the recommended schedule of compensation in the form described in the next section of this part of the report.

"A complete alphabetical list of the classes appears in the back of the book. This includes, in addition to the class titles, the names of the groups and of the services and series to aid the inquirer in finding all the classes covering lines of work in which he may be interested.

"Each set of specifications contains four main features, the title of the class, a statement of duties, a statement of qualifications, and the principal lines of promotion from and to the class.

"The title of the class: The title describes, as accurately as can be done in a word or two, the class of positions as a whole. It will become the title of each position in the class and will also apply to every employee holding a position in the class. In many cases, of course, the class titles are entirely different from the present pay roll or customary departmental titles of the positions that properly go into the class. They have been carefully selected with a view to obtaining aptness and brevity in description. However, the titles now appearing in appropriation bills and departmental records have been given preference and have been retained whenever they are consistent with the commission's classification. The title invariably contains a substantive word in form indicating the kind of work common to all of the positions in the class (e. g., stenographer) generally with a prefixed word in adjective form indicating the ranking of the class on the basis of difficulty of duties, degree of responsibility involved, or extent of qualifications required for the performance of the duties of the positions in the class (e. g., 'senior' stenographer). The use of numerals or letters to indicate this ranking element in the classification has been rejected in the work of the commission because they would imply equal differences between the classes within a service and also a standardization of the ranks or grades of classes that is not supported by the facts about the variations between positions. In the use of adjectives in the titles standard terminology has been adopted as far as possible. The adjectives in the series of classes in the clerical services, beginning with the lowest, are 'under,' 'junior,' 'senior,' 'principal,' 'head,' and 'chief.' The term 'senior' in these services has ordinarily been used for the position held by an employee who has reached the journeyman stage of development and has demonstrated full capacity for the average position typical of the series. The 'junior' is ordinarily the employee doing the simpler duties of the type, while the 'under' is generally one without any previous experience doing beginner's work of the type.

"The adjectives 'principal,' 'head,' and 'chief' in titles might at first appear to be synonyms, but by precedents set in various municipal and State classifications they have come to indicate the ranking of higher classes of positions from principal up.

"In the scientific and technical services the adjectives in the series are somewhat different, being taken by analogy from titles used in the field of higher education, and running as follows: 'Junior,' 'assistant,' 'associate,' full rank (indicating by the absence of any adjective), and 'senior.'"

Mr. President, on this matter of the scheme of titles there is an analogy drawn from the standardization in the university world. I recall from my own experience as a student, and later as a regent of the University of Nevada, that the titles of those on the faculties ran like this: Instructor, assistant professor, associate professor, professor, senior professor. So the titles in this classification for those services which draw most heavily from the colleges and universities of the country are similar. Likewise, if you will pardon me for another personal reference, I noted when a second lieutenant in the Second Regiment United States Volunteer Cavalry, in the Spanish-American War, that above me were first lieutenant, captain, major, lieutenant colonel, colonel, and higher, and the ranks below were sergeant, corporal, and private. Not only in the educational world, the Army and Navy, and the police and fire service, but in every civilian line of work in a large organization there is a ranking element in classification. The commission has tried very carefully to have this worked out on the basis of the facts:

"The titles contain words indicating the department in which the positions are found only in those cases where the class of positions is peculiar to that department and is likely to remain so indefinitely. In order that classes peculiar to the District of Columbia government may be readily distinguished, the words 'District of Columbia' have been appended to the titles—e. g., coroner, District of Columbia.

"Where the 'group of classes' appears, the name of the group is the part of the titles of the classes which is common to them all, both the substantive and the adjective. For the special classes in the group the variation in title is indicated in parentheses.

"THE DUTIES STATEMENT.

"The two divisions in the class specifications under side headings 'Duties' and 'Qualifications' together define the class and indicate its scope. Of these the foundation statement is that under the heading of 'Duties.' This is put in the infinitive form and contains, ordinarily, a broad statement descriptive of the work performed in positions that come within the class, followed by a description of the responsibilities involved, including both supervisory responsibility and responsibility for work independent of supervision. As far as possible standard terminology has been used to indicate the degree of supervision under which the duties are performed. 'Under immediate supervision' indicates that all work performed is closely scrutinized by a superior; 'under supervision' indicates that all work is done under the personal observation of a superior; 'under general supervision' indicates considerable independence of action in carrying out instructions; 'under direction' implies practically independent execution of plans developed by a superior; and 'under general direction' carries the idea of development and execution of plans along the lines of a very general program laid down by a superior.

"Other clauses in amplification of the general statement are included in sufficient detail to give an outline picture of the class concerned in relation to the other classes in the same service or in other services. The duties statement for every set of specifications concludes with a clause covering duties not specifically mentioned. For classes of positions in which the duties are of a supervisory nature this reads 'and to perform other related work,' and for classes of positions in which the work is supervised the phrase 'and to perform related work as required' is used. It is believed that this covers those slight variations that come from the assignments of employees to special tasks from time to time to meet departmental emergencies and fluctuations in work.

"EXAMPLES OF DUTIES.

"In many sets of specifications examples are given in addition to the general statement of duties. These examples, set forth in participial form, are used to show the variation in details of work that the incumbent of any position in the class may be called upon to perform. They serve to support and explain the scope of the class as indicated in more general terms by the duties statement. They will also assist in allocating to its proper class a given position of known duties. The examples of duties as given are not to be considered as inclusive or exclusive, nor do all the kinds of work listed necessarily apply to any one position.

"THE QUALIFICATIONS STATEMENT.

"The statement of qualifications covers two or more of the following five lines: (1) Education and training; (2) experience; (3) special knowledge of subject matter, process, or method; (4) traits of character; (5) physical attributes. The qualifications in every case are those which any person should possess to be eligible for appointment to a position within the class. They serve primarily to assist in defining the character of the employment covered by the class, supplementing the duties statement. Incidentally they should be of great value to the agency that must recruit the service. Since proficiency increases with experience and industry in the work of the class, the qualifications set up are not those of the employee who has attained the maximum usefulness but those properly required of an employee at entrance. Moreover, since the Government wishes to provide the widest possible competition for merit appointment to positions in the various classes, the qualifications are put at the minimum to secure efficient service from the entering employees.

"Ordinarily the educational requirements are given first. These are given, depending on the extent of education required, in the following form: (1) 'Common-school education;' (2) 'Training equivalent to that represented by graduation from a high school;' (3) 'Training equivalent to that represented by graduation with a degree from an institution of recognized standing.' In no case has the commission recommended that the possession of a degree or a certificate from an educational institution be made an absolute requirement. In every case it has specified educational qualifications 'equivalent to' the education represented by a formal certificate or degree. This has been with the definite view that the employee who through general reading or private study has acquired the equivalent of the education measured by formal certificates or degrees is just as much desired for the Government service as any other. It is left to the employing authorities to apply these terms of equivalents under the limitations of the proposed bill reading as follows:

"'Whenever the possession of a university or college degree or a high-school diploma, or the equivalent of such degree or diploma, is prescribed as a qualification for a class, the commission shall prescribe as such equivalent a standard or standards based on experience or demonstrated ability in the performance of duties similar to those prescribed for such class, which will be accepted as such equivalent.'

"In setting up the experience requirements, emphasis has been laid on the character of experience rather than its length. Only in unusual cases has more than five years of service of a certain specified kind been prescribed. This item includes statements showing where the experience must have been secured or where it should preferably have been secured.

"In some cases a statement of special knowledge required in addition to that clearly indicated by the character of the experience necessary is given. For example, 'Thorough knowledge of the laws and regulations in force in the District of Columbia relating to public health;' 'Ability to read scientific French and German and to prepare in clear and concise English manuscript dealing with work in meteorology;' 'Knowledge of the use of drawing instruments and ability to use them neatly.'

"Native and acquired ability and qualities of character are shown for each class of supervisory positions, and some phrase descriptive of the character of supervisory ability required is given. In the interest of standardization the words 'administrative ability' are used uniformly instead of 'executive ability.' The qualities of initiative, industry, enthusiasm, honesty, sobriety, and patience are not indicated except in special cases, being regarded as requisites of all classes of positions. But whenever the possession of a quality is preeminently necessary for the performance of the work in question it is given. For example, 'junior information clerk' is required to have tact and good address. Physical attributes are indicated for many of the classes of the skilled trades and for the classes in the police, fire, and custodial services, where health and strength are essential requirements. Also for some of the classes of the clerical services physical qualifications are required. For example, in examining finger prints, 'good eyesight' is necessary.

"Where the specifications apply to a 'group of classes,' the duties statement is followed by a statement of common qualifications applying to all of the classes in the group, and then a statement under a separate heading of 'special qualifications,' which indicates those qualifications that differentiate between the classes in the group—usually knowledge of a special subject matter—as indicated by the titles of the respective classes.

"PRINCIPAL LINES OF PROMOTION.

"The statements of duties and qualifications—the specifications proper—are followed for most of the classes with a section headed 'Principal lines of promotion.' Under this the first line begins with the word 'From' and lists one or more classes of positions involving duties of less difficulty, less responsibility, and fewer qualifications. Employees in these classes of lower rank should be eligible for competition for promotion on merit to the class concerned. The second line begins with the word 'To' and lists one or more classes of positions involving more difficult duties, greater responsibilities, and higher qualifications to which employees in the class concerned should be eligible to compete for promotion. The listing of these principal lines of promotion does much toward setting the upper and lower boundaries of the class. It is a valuable supplement to the specifications proper.

"The lines of promotion listed are merely the main lines. They are neither exclusive nor inclusive. The commission recommends a policy of the broadest avenues of promotion possible, not only within bureaus and departments but across department lines. It has recommended this broad plan of promotion outlined elsewhere in this report as a fundamental feature of the comprehensive employment policy designed to secure efficiency and the desired morale in the service as a whole.

"It is to be remembered that the development of such a classification as that herewith submitted, with principal lines of promotion indicated, has been awaited by the Civil Service Commisson as a preliminary to the establishment of the competitive system for true promotion—that is, for advance from class to class, as distinguished from mere salary increase within a class."

Reclassification means a great deal more than mere temporary readjustment of salaries of employees. There are three points of view involved—those of the Government or the public, the administrators or the management, and the employees or incumbents of the positions. It would be difficult to make a better statement of what reclassification means than is found in the "summary of benefits," on pages 26 and 27 of the report. Permit me to read it, because I think it will be of value to you in connection with other points I desire to make:

"SUMMARY OF BENEFITS.

"The commission is firmly of the opinion that the adoption of the classification of positions and the uniform schedules of pay recommended in this report, and of the proposed plan for the future administration of this classification and these schedules will bring about the following benefits to the Congress, the departments, the employees, and the public at large.

"The Congress will secure:

"A sound and practical working basis for arriving at the proper rates of compensation in appropriations for personal services.

"The assurance that on this basis salaries and wages will be appropriated at the same rate for the same work in all departments and at all times.

"A means of controlling expenditures for personal services paid from lump-sum appropriations or contingent funds, and of bringing them into conformity with the basis observed in itemized appropriations.

"The assurance that on this basis the salaries appropriated for positions of different classes will have the equitable relationship that is called for by the difference in the values of the work involved in the respective classes.

"The further assurance that the salaries appropriated on this basis will be fair to the employee and to the public as the taxpayer.

"A method of adjusting salary scales from time to time, as required and justified by changes in economic conditions, in such a way as to permit of discriminating application of increases or decreases which will take into account the relative requirements of the several kinds of employment (as against the arbitrary spreading of bonuses, increases, or reductions over deserving and undeserving classes), and which will not affect the relative status of employees in the same class.

"Assistance in the consideration of estimates through the common use by all departments of a specific and uniform terminology for classes of positions, i. e., kinds of personal service.

"A means, through this descriptive system of nomenclature, of comparing the organization requirements of different departments and of the same department at different periods.

"Relief from the pressure of special requests for changes in the salary appropriations for individual positions or employees or for special groups or departments.

"The departments will secure:

"The immediate relief, so vital to the holding together of the experienced departmental organizations, that will come from the adoption of revised salary scales for specialized workers (particularly scientific and technical employees).

"Permanent relief from the confusion resulting from the variations in salary scales for the same work in different departments, with the consequent tendency toward interdepartmental competition.

"A means of expressing their exact organization needs to the appropriating body—the Congress—and the recruiting body—the Civil Service Commission.

"All of the direct and indirect benefits that will come from a fair and businesslike wage policy and a contented personnel.

"The employees will secure:

"Immediate relief in cases where they are now inadequately paid.

"Uniform justice in the relation between the compensation they receive and the value of their work.

"The assurance that all other employees of the Government engaged in the same work are being treated in the same way.

"The assurance that adjustments of pay in the future will have reference to changes in living costs.

"The incentive to effort that comes of a knowledge of an assured reward for successful accomplishment—advance in pay for increased usefulness in the same class of work and higher compensation upon promotion to a higher grade of work.

"The public will secure:

"The assurance that its Government aims to be a model employer, and to pay each employee in proportion to the value of the work required of him.

"The commission further submits that many additional benefits in addition to those enumerated above will accrue from the adoption of its general recommendations for a comprehensive and centrally administered employment policy (see recommendations 16 to 24 in the foregoing tabulation). It believes that the standardization of working conditions that will result will be second only to the standardization of pay in its good results. It is convinced that the personnel policies proposed will insure to the Government a maximum return in loyal and efficient service for its pay-roll expenditures and will make the public service attractive as offering real opportunity for a worth-while career."

Your commission, immediately after its appointment in March, 1919, began to study the problem assigned to it by the Congress, and soon found that there was abundant precedent for a classification of positions on the basis of duties and qualifications, as the foundation for just and equitable standardization of compensation. This precedent was found in the largest cities and in some of the States of our own country, and also in the entire national service of the Dominion of Canada. As distinguished from the old civil-service reform movement, which established a so-called classified service to set up barriers against spoils control of the public service, this new classification movement laid stress on a businesslike foundation for all employment processes. It had an exact counterpart in the development of the employment manager's department to handle personnel problems in the large organizations of private industry. All this work rests on an analysis of the positions concerned.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STERLING in the chair). Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. HENDERSON. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. I notice that under the resolution appointing the Joint Commission on Reclassification it was authorized, by a bill to be presented, to reclassify all positions and to readjust compensation in all of the departments except the navy yards and the Postal Service. Why were those branches of the public service excluded?

Mr. HENDERSON. There is a joint commission now investigating the reclassification of salaries in the postal department. That commission was made up of members of the respective Committees on Post Offices and Post Roads of the two Houses, and the work is under way. Furthermore, I understand that some years ago salary reclassifications were made in the navy yards. Therefore, those two services were left out of the bill presented by the commission.

There will be found an excellent review of what I have referred to as a "movement," in some notes given as Appendix B of the "Report of Transmission to Accompany the Classification of the Civil Service of Canada," prepared by Arthur Young & Co., of Chicago, and issued by the Canadian civil-service commission in 1919. I recommend its reading by anyone who desires to get an understanding of the scope of modern work in the classification of employments and the standardization of compensation.

From this it appears that the Commonwealth of Australia made a duties classification of the 11,661 positions in its service between 1902 and 1904.

Mr. President, I understand that it took the commission in the Commonwealth of Australia 17 months to make a duties classification of the 11,661 positions, while your commission handled over 100,000 questionnaires in 12 months.

Some of the Senators may recall the executive commission created in 1907, known as the Keep Commission. President Roosevelt sent to the Congress a report by that commission on the classification of positions and the gradation of compensation. This report proposed a duties classification, although it did not work it out comprehensively.

The first of the duties classifications in this country was made by the city of Chicago in 1909 and 1910. Mr. E. O. Griffenhagen, of Chicago, who served as chief counselor of our joint commission, was connected with that early classification as expert on system and organization for the civil-service commission of the city of Chicago. He informed me that in the Chicago work one of the reference reports used was the 1907 report of the Keep Commission. Mr. Herbert E. Fleming, of Chicago, who served as director for our joint commission, was connected with the Chicago commission on city expenditures in 1909, and in 1910 was secretary and manager for the Chicago Civil Service Reform Association, both of which bodies assisted in creating public opinion in favor of promoting efficiency through a duties classification and salary standardization.

Following the Chicago classification some of the others were: New York City, 1912–1916; New Zealand, 1912; Pittsburgh, 1914; New York State, 1916; New Jersey, 1917; Dominion of Canada, 1919.

The Canadian classification was made under an act of 1918 calling for a classification of the "outside service"—that is, the service outside of the capitol at Ottawa. But in order to get a complete standardization both the "outside" and the "inside" service, which had previously received some classification, were classified together. While our work was going on both Houses of Parliament unanimously adopted the Canadian classification, which went into effect in April, 1920. The Canadian classification was made for a commission—in that case a civil-service commission—by a firm of American experts.

After preliminary counsels with representatives of the New York bureau of municipal research, as well as with others interested in this kind of work, your commission decided to retain for service at the head of its directing staff the same firm which had served Canada so well. This organization, formerly known as the industrial engineering staff of Arthur Young & Co., of Chicago, but now practicing as Griffenhagen & Associates (Ltd.), had charge of many large undertakings in the field of personnel and salary standardization work since 1911, when it entered this field.

Mr. Griffenhagen, as before stated, was appointed chief counselor and had an important part in preparing the program of work upon which we based our year's operations, and in the course of the ensuing months spent much time in consultations with the commission on questions of policy and procedure, and in general supervision of the work of the staff. Mr. Fleming, serving as director for the commission, was in Washington continuously throughout its work, correlating the activities of the headquarters staff and the classification staff, the research staff, the statistical force, and the clerical force, detailed from the various departments. These two men, together with R. O. Beckman, Robert E. Goodell, and Fred G. Henchling, of Chicago, acting as assistant directors; Lewis Meriam, of Washington, statistician; W. E. Mosher, of New York, associate director in charge of economic research; and Ad Hoehne, of New York, in charge of classification records, constituted the headquarters or directing staff of the commission.

Mr. President, these men brought to the service of the commission wide experience in classification and standardization, from both governmental bodies and industrial and business concerns. They brought an outside point of view, and with it great initiative and industry. This was highly important since the bulk of our work, under the act creating this commission, had to be done largely by inexperienced classifiers of positions detailed from the various departments. These specialists from the outside showed great skill in training and leading the detailed force, and a broad vision of the entire subject, thereby aiding the commission in keeping its various activities correlated and being able to make its report on March 12—the date set by law. While retained on a professional basis, they gave to the work fine public spirit.

In retaining these experts the commission was actuated by a high sense of duty in having a scientific and practical piece of work accomplished in a strictly nonpartisan manner. I am sure the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER], the only Republican member of the commission from the Senate, will bear me out in the statement that not a single step was contemplated or taken by the Reclassification Commission in a partisan spirit. The report, of course, speaks for itself in this respect, for nowhere in it can be found a single expression of a partisan nature. I sincerely trust that it will be considered by this body in the same spirit in which it was prepared, drawn, and submitted. It is a business matter, relating entirely to the employment side of the Government.

In this connection I wish to call your attention to the fact that the commission submitted a unanimous report. There is no minority report. There were six men, with six different experiences and perhaps six different lines of thought as to where emphasis should be placed. But by months and days and hours of pounding away on the material submitted to us by our directing staff we hammered out and reached conclusions which, while perhaps not perfect, together make a piece of work we feel is entitled to your best consideration.

The lack of uniformity and equity in compensation, growing out of the lack of any system designed to secure uniformity and equity, really astounded the commission when it studied the statistics and the statements of facts compiled from the questionnaires which had been distributed, the organization charts which had been made, and the supplementary facts that had been gathered through visits to the departments and public hearings. I shall only cite a few by headings:

"LACK OF UNIFORMITY IN PAY SCALES BETWEEN DEPARTMENTS.

"First finding: The commission finds that the salary and wage rates for positions involving like duties and responsibilities and calling for the same qualifications—that is, for positions of the same class—show wide variations and marked inequalities."

I wish to call the attention of Senators to the statement on page 33 of the report in regard to this matter.

"Second finding: The commission finds that the salary and wage rates for positions in the same class are different in different departments and independent establishments. The scale of pay in some departments is markedly higher than the scale for the same class of work in other departments."

Attention is called to the table on page 35 of the report.

"INEQUALITY BETWEEN SALARY AND WAGE SCALES IN WAR-EXPANDED DEPARTMENTS AND OTHER DEPARTMENTS.

"Third finding: The commission finds that these inequalities in salary and wage scales as between departments are most striking when the rates of pay in the war-expanded establishments are contrasted with those in the organizations that were not largely increased during the war."

Attention is called to the table on pages 38 and 39 of the report.

"INCREASE IN INEQUALITIES AS A RESULT OF THE PRESENT BONUS SYSTEM.

"Fourth finding: The commission finds that the bonus act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, tends in many cases to increase the inequality in salary and wage rates for positions in the same class."

Attention is called to the table on page 40 of the report.

"INEQUITY IN RATES IN RELATION TO INCREASES IN THE COST OF LIVING.

"Fifth finding: The commission finds that rates of compensation in the Government service as a whole have not increased as rapidly as has the cost of living."

Attention is called to the table on page 42 of the report.

"VARIATION IN RECENT INCREASES IN RATES AS BETWEEN CLASSES AND DEPARTMENTS.

"Sixth finding: The commission finds that the amounts of recent increases in rates of pay in the Government service have varied greatly (a) as between classes of employment and (b) as between departments."

Attention is called to the table on page 44 of the report.

I am quite sure Senators will find those tables very interesting.

Mr. President, we owe a debt to Canada for her precedent in a national field, and while the Canadian reclassification report of 1919 was the last word on the subject up to that time, it is the judgment of those who have taken the time to examine the two that the Washington reclassification report of 1920 marks an advance over its best predecessor. One reason for this is that the Washington report gives more facts and figures, more description and more statistics, showing the situation to be remedied by classification.

While the Washington classification is not quite so consistent as it would have been if it had been done exclusively by experts, as was the Canadian, still the commission has had the benefit of the intimate knowledge of the departments brought to the work by the detailed staff.

Furthermore, in this style of presentation, especially in the schematic arrangement of the plan of classification, with the titles and specifications of the classes given by services and series, the commission believes marked progress has been shown.

If more time could have been given to this work it would have been even better. The commission was working under pressure, and especially is this true from early in December, 1919. Pains were taken, however, to recommend provision for carrying this work forward in the future. It is of the utmost importance that some action be taken at an early date on the resolution (No. 160) now pending before the Senate taking care of this matter. The commission felt that the plan of administration could best be carried on through the Civil Service Commission. It is the only central personnel agency the Government now has, and it logically should be the administrative agency for classification and salary standardization. The idea of enlarging it and adding elected employees and administrative members was rejected, but the commission favors an advisory council, so constituted, also departmental personnel committees.

It may be asked, What does classification itself do for salary standardization? When like positions, regardless of departmental lines, are placed in the same class, the first great move toward just and equitable compensation is made.

The commission differentiated between mere salary advance and true promotion. The latter is a change for a class of positions involving duties, responsibilities, and qualifications of one level to a class involving the same elements at a higher level. Periodic efficiency increases in compensation within the class is recommended, and, of course, provide salary scales.

There is no absolute standard for salaries. We took into account many factors—salaries now paid in the various departments, compensation paid in comparable positions in the outside world, recent legislation by the Congress, and finally our own best judgment.

Just what the cost to the Government would be in increased pay to the employees, if the report is adopted, is not easily determined. I believe that if the recommendations of this commission are substantially adopted the Government will not be the loser. In this connection let me read from the letter of submittal on page 11 of the report, under the title "Estimates of Cost":

"ESTIMATES OF COST.

"In considering the cost of the proposed changes in salaries your commission was of necessity compelled to depend on carefully prepared estimates. Within the time available after the completion of the last salary recommendations, it was impracticable to make the detailed tabulations required to show the precise amount that would be added to the appropriations if the recommendations of your commission are adopted. Our statistical staff made a detailed study of 68,806 positions, or approximately 70 per cent of the total number in the Washington service, to estimate the cost of the recommendations made in respect to them. These positions represented practically all the numerically important classes of employees working full time and receiving no special allowance. We regard these estimates as giving results of substantial accuracy not only because the classes were representative but also because the average basic salary of the positions included in the estimate was $1,242 and the average basic salary of all the 100,000 positions on our position lists, as based on the pay rolls and reports submitted by the departments, was $1,240. The other tests to which the estimates were submitted seemed to us to demonstrate that the percentages of increase they showed were substantially accurate."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, would it disturb the Senator if I should ask him a question for information?

Mr. HENDERSON. Certainly not.

Mr. KING. The commission, as I understand the Senator's statement, based their estimates and calculations upon the assumption that there were 100,000 employees or more, or, at any rate, that the roll showed more than 100,000 employees of the Government in Washington. I wish to ask the Senator whether or not they reached any conclusion as to the necessity of 100,000 or more employees in the departments here in Washington, in view of the fact that just before the war, my information is, that the number of Government employees in Washington was very much less than that—indeed, less than 40,000? Are the recommendations of the commission based upon the fact that more than 100,000 are to be the number of employees in the departments at Washington, and would the recommendations have been different if the number of employees had been substantially the same as during the prewar period?

In other words, does the question of the number of employees cut any figure in the recommendations, in the classification, and in the final report of the commission?

Mr. HENDERSON. My answer to the Senator is that the commission feel that the number now in the employment of the Government at Washington should be greatly reduced, and the estimate of cost of necessity had to be based upon the number of employees in the service at this time. As the number is reduced, of course, the expense will not be so great. We took what was placed before us, those that were in the service at this time; but the commission feel that if this report is acted upon, and our recommendations considered, and some action taken, we shall be able to reduce greatly the force in the employ of the Government here and also get greater efficiency under the system proposed by the commission; but, of course, the figures I am giving now were based upon the number of employees as given us by our staff.

"Judging from these figures, we would place the percentage of increase in pay, over and above the present pay including the bonus, at between 8 and 10 per cent; we believe the percentage will be nearer 8 than 10. A closer statement is difficult, because for most classes provision is made for efficiency advances within the class. Actual experience alone will demonstrate how many of the employees in a given class will get the maximum and how many the minimum. With due allowance for this factor of uncertainty, we believe it safe to say that the increased appropriation involved will not exceed 10 per cent over the present pay, including bonus, and in all probability will be approximately 8.5 per cent."

As to how this report has been received, permit me to call your attention to two editorials taken from two of the leading newspapers in Washington—the Washington Star of March 13 and the Washington Post of March 14. I ask that these two editorials may be printed as a part of my remarks, without reading.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Evening Star, Mar. 13, 1920.]

THE RECLASSIFICATION REPORT.

"After months of painstaking effort and research the Joint Congressional Commission on Reclassification has reported to Congress a plan of reorganization in the departmental service, embodied in a bill which provides a system of duty divisions and pay scales. It is the first practical attempt to establish the civil service of the Government on a definite basis of coordinated efficiency and compensation.

"For many years the Government's pay scale has been under criticism. It has not been generous, and in times of public stress, caused by the advance in necessity costs, lack of advancement has severely injured the employees, who have been barely able to meet their requirements, and with no established system of promotions have had no hope of betterment.

"The war-time rise in prices brought the matter to a crisis. Congress voted to refer the question to a commission, composed in part of sitting members and in part of former members. This commission has labored faithfully, going deeply into the matter to find the best mode of classifying duties and assigning compensations. It has adopted the principle of regular promotions as the basis of the plan, and has grouped the workers into numerous classifications, within which they may advance regularly and from which they can pass to others of higher grade upon demonstrating capacity and merit.

"The hope is that Congress will not now proceed to tear this plan to pieces. It may not be perfect. It may be subject to criticism from both points of view—that of the Government employer and that of the employees. But the commission has been in the best position to judge the whole matter and to frame a working plan. If the Houses of Congress now go at the subject in a spirit of detailed correction or change there is no prospect of immediate enactment. Far better will it be to adopt the plan as it stands and to amend from time to time as changes are shown to be desirable or necessary.

"The great point about this plan is that it is consistent. It is built around a single principle of putting all the departments and bureaus on the same footing as to duties and pay. Its adoption will greatly simplify the work of the Appropriation Committees and the Houses later. It will make administration easier and more effective. If it is accompanied or closely followed by a retirement measure the Government service will at last be placed upon the plane of definite businesslike justice and system."

THE CIVIL SERVICE.

"The report of the Joint Congressional Commission on Reclassification of Salaries, just submitted to Congress, is like a ray of sunshine breaking through the clouds to 107,000 Government employees whom it affects. Through a readjustment of existing salaries upon an equitable basis the commission attempts to do away with the many inconsistencies now in effect and to provide for increased compensation measurably in proportion to the advanced cost of living. The new schedule ranges from $720 a year for messengers up as high as $9,000 a year, the various rates being basic and exclusive of the $240 bonus now being received by those earning smaller salaries.

"But the increased pay provided in the report, welcome as it is and deserved as all will admit, is not the most encouraging feature. What is of far greater importance to the young clerk or artisan is that the machinery is proposed under which merit will be recognized in the service and promotion will go only to those who win it by efficiency. The lucrative and desirable positions in the services are opened as attainable goals for all who will work for them. Those who give their lives to the civil service of the Government may do so, if this report eventually is enacted into law, with the knowledge that in their declining years, when their efficiency has been reduced by age, they will not be thrown out upon the world to be a care upon others, but may retire with a pension adequate to maintain them in comfort for the remainder of their days.

"The Reclassification Commission has dealt with the whole subject of the civil service in a broad and comprehensive spirit. It has attempted to evolve a plan which will do justice to the employee and to the Government and make Government employment attractive, not by fancy pay but by assurance of just treatment and proper recognition of efficiency. If this plan is transmuted into law and is administered in good faith, the young man or young woman who enters the civil service may do so with pride and with confidence that the Government will prove a just and appreciative employer. No longer will Government service be looked upon merely as a haven for incompetents or mediocrities or as a stepping-stone to permanent and better positions outside."

"Government workers under this report are divided into more than 1,700 classes, and the commission has fixed maximum and minimum salaries for each class, endeavoring to give the same rate of pay to all doing work of a similar character and with like responsibility. But realizing that in attempting a task of this magnitude mistakes and injustices are certain to creep in, an appeal board is set up for the purpose of hearing complaints regarding classification and salaries and for remedying any defects of this nature which may be disclosed. This board will represent the various branches of the public service, and its recommendations to the Civil Service Commission and to the school board will carry weight. The reclassification of salaries suggested, it is estimated, will add $33,000,000 a year to the Government's pay rolls. Making allowance for the $240 bonus now effective, the increase in cost to the Government would amount to but $13,000,000 a year.

"Perhaps defects in the plan recommended may be developed. There may be discrepancies in salaries and classifications which will demand correction; some suggestions may have to give way to better ones; criticisms may be brought forward which will appeal forcefully to reason. But these are matters which are entirely susceptible of adjustment, and they will not alter the fact that the commission has outlined a practical reform which is based upon justice, and which, if adopted by Congress, will provide a much more competent civil service. Congress should deal with the subject promptly."

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. President, the Senate members upon this commission had in mind one important feature that should always be considered when reading or studying this report, which is, the foundation for a sound and comprehensive policy for the Government as an employer.

NATIONAL BUDGET SYSTEM.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9783) to provide a national budget system and an independent audit of Government accounts, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the bill may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The Special Committee on the National Budget report to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill, and to insert:

That this act may be cited as the "national budget and audit act."

SEC. 2. That when used in this act—

The term "department" means any executive department.

The term "establishment" means any independent commission, board, bureau, office, agency, or other establishment of the Government, including the municipal government of the District of Columbia, which obtains support from moneys appropriated out of the Treasury of the United States, but shall not include the legislative branch of the Government.

The term "budget estimates" means all estimates of appropriations needed or requested by any department or establishment.

SEC. 3. That there is hereby created in the Treasury Department a budget bureau. The President shall nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint a commissioner and two assistant commissioners of the budget bureau. The commissioner and the two assistant commissioners shall be known as the commissioner of the budget and assistant commissioners of the budget, respectively. The first commissioner appointed shall continue in office for a term of two years, and the first assistant commissioners four and six years, respectively, from the date when this act shall take effect, the term of each assistant commissioner to be designated by the President, but the successors of the commissioner and of the two assistant commissioners shall be appointed for terms of six years, except that any person chosen to fill a vacancy shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of the official whom he shall succeed. The commissioner shall receive an annual salary of $10,000 and the assistant commissioners shall each receive an annual salary of $7,500. The assistant commissioners shall perform such duties as the commissioner may designate, and in the absence or incapacity of the commissioner or during a vacancy in the office of commissioner the Secretary of the Treasury shall designate one of the assistant commissioners to act as commissioner.

SEC. 4. That the commissioner shall employ and fix the compensation of such attorneys, economists, accountants, special experts, examiners, clerks, and other employees, and make such expenditures for rent, printing, books, periodicals, office equipment and supplies, and other expenses of the bureau as he may find necessary to carry out the provisions of this act, and as may from time to time be provided for by law: Provided, That not more than $200,000 per annum shall be expended under the provisions of this section and not more than four persons shall be employed by the commissioner at a salary of $5,000 per annum, and no person shall be employed by him at a salary in excess of that sum. All employees of the bureau, except the commissioner and the two assistant commissioners, shall be appointed in accordance with the civil-service law and regulations.

SEC. 5. That the head of each department and establishment shall designate one of the assistant secretaries or other chief assistant to have direct supervision of those services which have to do with the purely business operations of the department, such as the offices of chief clerk, appointment clerk, disbursing officer, division of accounts, division of mails and files, division of supplies, superintendent of buildings, etc., and, under the direction of the head of the department, to perform the duties of a general business manager of the department. Such assistant secretary or other chief assistant so designated shall also act as a general financial secretary, and as such shall supervise the classification and compilation of all budget estimates, including supplemental and deficiency estimates, for such departments, and perform such other duties as the head of the department or establishment may prescribe.

SEC. 6. That the head of each department and establishment shall study, analyze, and revise the budget estimates of his department or establishment, and shall submit to the commissioner of the budget on or before the 1st day of October in each year his final revised budget estimates for the ensuing fiscal year; and, in case of the failure of the head of any department or establishment to furnish such estimates as herein required, the commissioner of the budget shall cause to be prepared budget estimates for such appropriations as in his judgment shall be requisite for such department or establishment.

SEC. 7. That after the head of a department or establishment has submitted to the commissioner of the budget the regular budget estimates of such department or establishment for the ensuing fiscal year, he shall not submit for such year, any special, supplementary, or additional budget estimates or other request for appropriations except to carry out laws subsequently enacted, or to meet unforeseen emergencies of the public service. Such special, supplementary, or additional estimates shall be accompanied by a full statement of their imperative necessity and reasons for their omission from the regular budget estimates.

SEC. 8. That the head of each department or establishment in communicating budget estimates to the commissioner of the budget shall give references to any law or treaty by which the proposed expenditures are authorized, specifying the date of each and the volume and page of the Statutes at Large or of the Revised Statutes, as the case may be, and the section of the act in which the authority is to be found.

SEC. 9. That in all cases where the head of a department or establishment includes in his budget estimates an amount that is in excess of the amount previously provided for the same item, or an item for which no appropriation previously has been made, he shall set forth in detail by means of a note the reason why he has estimated for such increase or new item.

SEC. 10. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall by regulation prescribe a uniform system of preparing and submitting budget estimates.

SEC. 11. That the commissioner of the budget shall have and perform the powers and duties now held and performed by the division of bookkeeping and warrants of the office of the Secretary of the Treasury, in so far as they relate to the compilation of the budget estimates.

SEC. 12. That it shall be the duty of the commissioner of the budget in the period prior to, and upon submission to him, of the budget estimates of the several departments and establishments, to make a detail study of the organization, activities, and methods of business of the several administrative services of the Government for the purpose of determining those changes which, in his opinion, should be made in the existing organization, activities, and methods of business of such services or in the appropriation of moneys for the support and conduct of the work of such services, or in the assignment of particular activities to particular services, or in the regrouping of services departmentally with a view to securing greater efficiency and economy in the conduct of public affairs. The budget estimates for the ensuing fiscal year, together with the recommendations of the commissioner of the budget, shall be submitted to the Secretary of the Treasury on or before November 1 of each year.

SEC. 13. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall revise, consolidate, unify, coordinate, reduce, or otherwise change any item or items of the budget estimates submitted to him by the commissioner of the budget, including any special, deficiency, or supplemental budget estimates, in such manner as he may deem necessary to effect economies and to prevent waste, extravagance, loss, or duplication.

SEC. 14. That every department and establishment shall furnish to the Secretary of the Treasury and to the commissioner of the budget such information regarding its powers, duties, activities, organization, financial transactions, and methods of business as they or either of them may from time to time require, and the commissioner of the budget, or any of his assistants or employees, when duly authorized by such commissioner, shall, for the purpose of securing such information, have access to, and have the right to examine, any books, documents, papers, or records of any such department or establishment.

SEC. 15. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall, on or before the 20th day of November in each year, prepare and submit to the President for his consideration the budget, which shall contain a statement in summary and in detail of the budget estimates for the ensuing fiscal year as revised under the provisions of section 13 hereof.

The budget shall further contain:

(a) Balanced statements of current Treasury resources and obligations, setting forth in detail the condition of the Treasury at the end of the last completed fiscal year, the estimated condition of the Treasury at the end of the year in progress, and the estimated condition of the Treasury at the end of the year to be financed, if the financial proposals contained in the budget are adopted.

(b) Statements setting forth in detail all essential facts regarding the bonded and other indebtedness of the Government.

(c) Statements setting forth in detail the amount of appropriations, whether annual, permanent, or otherwise, including balances of appropriations for prior fiscal years, available for expenditure during the year in progress.

(d) Statements setting forth in detail the revenues of the Government paid into the Treasury during the last completed fiscal year or series of years, the estimated revenues to be paid into the Treasury during the year in progress and the estimated revenues to be paid into the Treasury during the year to be financed, if the revenue proposals contained in the budget are adopted.

(e) Statements setting forth the expenditures of the Government during the last completed fiscal year or series of years, the estimated expenditures during the year in progress, and the expenditures as represented by the revised budget estimates, which, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury, should be authorized for the year to be financed.

(f) Such other financial statements and data as in the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury are necessary or desirable in order to make known in all practicable detail and fullness the financial condition, operations, and the estimated future revenues and expenditures of the Government.

(g) If the estimated revenues for the ensuing fiscal year, on the basis of existing law, are less than the estimated expenditures which in his opinion should be authorized for that year, the Secretary of the Treasury shall in the budget make recommendations to the President for new taxes, loans, or other appropriate action to meet the deficiency; or if such estimated revenues are greater than the estimated expenditures for the ensuing fiscal year, he shall make recommendations for the application of such surplus or for a reduction in taxation.

The foregoing provisions regarding the character of the data to be furnished by the budget are intended to be directory only and may be departed from in detail as experience and conditions to be met may render necessary or desirable, provided that the fundamental purposes sought to be obtained by such statements are carried into effect.

The Secretary of the Treasury shall from time to time submit in like manner to the President such supplemental, deficiency, or other budget estimates as may be submitted to him by the commissioner of the budget, as provided in this act.

SEC. 16. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall not transmit to the President budget estimates for the District of Columbia greater than twice the estimated revenues of the District, including charges under all appropriation bills.

SEC. 17. That the President shall have authority to revise the budget submitted to him by the Secretary of the Treasury, by the increase, reduction, or elimination of any item therein contained, by the addition of new items which, in his opinion, are needed for the proper conduct of the affairs of the Government, by the consolidation or regroupng of items, or by making any other changes in the way of the assignment of specific duties to particular services the regrouping of services, the consolidation or elimination of field stations or other units of organization, or in any other feature of the organization and operations of the several services which, in his opinion, will lead to increased economy and efficiency in the conduct of public affairs.

SEC. 18. That the President shall, on or before the 10th day of December of each year, submit to Congress the budget, as revised and approved by him, including a statement of what, in his opinion, are the revenue and expenditure needs of the Government and how these needs should be met. The President shall also from time to time submit to Congress such supplementary, deficiency, or other budget estimates as shall be approved by him, and no budget estimate or request for any increase in any item of the budget as submitted by the President shall be submitted to Congress or to any Member or committee thereof by any officer of, or person employed in, any department or establishment except as provided for by this act, unless at the request of either House of Congress or a committee thereof having jurisdiction over appropriations or revenues.

SEC. 19. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall, at the request of any committee of either House of Congress, direct appropriate officials from the budget bureau to furnish such committee such aid and information, in person or otherwise, as the committee may request.

SEC. 20. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause to be prepared a codification of all the laws now in force relating to the expenditures of the Government, and shall, on or before January 1, 1921, transmit the same to the President with a statement showing which of such laws in his judgment should be revised, or repealed in whole or in part, and what new provisions, if any, should be added. The President is hereby requested to transmit to Congress such codification and accompanying statements, together with his recommendations.

SEC. 21. That there is created an establishment to be known as the general accounting office, which shall be independent of the several executive departments and under the control and direction of the comptroller general of the United States. The offices of Comptroller of the Treasury and Assistant Comptroller of the Treasury are abolished, to take effect July 1, 1920. All other officers and employees of the office of the Comptroller of the Treasury shall become officers and employees in the general accounting office at their grades and salares on July 1, 1920, and all books, records, documents, papers, furniture, office equipment, and other property of the office of the Comptroller of the Treasury shall become the property of the general accounting office.

There shall be in the general accounting office a comptroller general of the United States and three assistant comptrollers general of the United States, who shall be nominated and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appointed by the President. The comptroller general of the United States shall receive a salary of $10,000 a year; the first and second assistant comptrollers general shall receive salaries of $7,500 a year; the third assistant comptroller general shall receive a salary of $5,000 a year. During the absence or incapacity of the comptroller general, or during a vacancy in that office, the first assistant comptroller general shall act as comptroller general. The comptroller general and the assistant comptroller general shall hold office for a term of five years and shall be removable only for cause: Provided, That in the first instance the comptroller general shall be appointed for a term of one year, the first assistant comptroller general for a term of two years, the second assistant comptroller general for a term of three years, and the third assistant comptroller general for a term of four years, respectively, from the date when this act shall take effect: Provided further, That any person chosen to fill a vacancy shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of the official whom he shall succeed.

SEC. 22. That the comptroller general shall perform the same duties and have the same powers and responsibilities as those now performed by, or appertaining to the Comptroller of the Treasury, the six auditors of the Treasury Department, and the Division of Bookkeeping and Warrants of the Office of the Secretary of the Treasury, except as provided in section 11 hereof. Subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, the comptroller general shall prescribe the procedure for the issue of warrants for the receipt or payment of public moneys at the Treasury, including the postal revenues and expenditures therefrom. He shall perform the duties now appertaining to the Division of Public Moneys of the Office of the Secretary of the Treasury so far as they relate to the covering of revenues and repayments into the Treasury, the issue of duplicate checks and warrants, and the certification of outstanding liabilities for payment. He shall prescribe the forms, systems, and procedures for administrative appropriation and fund accounting in the several departments and establishments, and for the departmental or administrative examination of fiscal officers' accounts and claims against the United States. He shall submit periodically to Congress reports upon the adequacy and effectiveness of the administrative examination of accounts and claims in the respective departments and establishments, and upon the adequacy and effectiveness of the departmental inspection of the offices and accounts of fiscal officers.

SEC. 23. That the assistant comptrollers general shall perform the following duties:

(a) The first assistant comptroller general shall perform the same duties as those now performed by, or appertaining to, the six auditors of the Treasury Department, except as otherwise expressly provided herein, and such other duties as may from time to time be assigned to him by the comptroller general. He shall receive, audit, and settle all accounts of fiscal officers and claims against the United States, and certify his findings thereon to the third assistant comptroller general. The findings of the first assistant comptroller general upon the settlement of public accounts shall be final and conclusive upon the executive branches of the Government, except that any person whose account has been settled, or the head of the department or establishment to which any account pertains may, within a year, obtain a revision of the account by the board of appeals created by section 24 hereof.

(b) The second assistant comptroller general shall prescribe the forms of keeping and rendering all accounts of appropriations and funds, revenues and expenditures, and accounts of fiscal officers. He shall determine the accounting procedure to be followed in the payment of settled liabilities of the Government, in advancing funds to disbursing officers, and in covering public moneys into the Treasury, and the procedure to be followed in accounting for appropriations made or special funds established or authorized by Congress. He shall conduct a continuous inspection of the methods and procedure followed in the administrative examination of fiscal officers' accounts and claims, and he shall report periodically to heads of departments and establishments, and to the comptroller general, as to the adequacy and effectiveness of such examination. He shall periodically inspect the places of business of accountable officers, examine the books and papers evidencing their respective transactions, and count their cash, stamps, and accountable paper; he shall report periodically to heads of departments and establishments, and to the comptroller general, as to the adequacy of the inspection of accountable officers conducted by the respective departments and establishments with which they are connected; and he shall perform such other duties as may from time to time be assigned to him by the comptroller general.

(c) The third assistant comptroller general shall keep all general accounts of receipts and expenditures of public money, including the postal revenues and expenditures therefrom; of appropriations, special funds, and trust funds, and of the public debt; and he shall perform generally the duties now appertaining to the division of bookkeeping and warrants of the Office of the Secretary of the Treasury, except as expressly provided herein; he shall perform the duties and exercise the functions now appertaining to the division of public moneys of the Office of the Secretary of the Treasury so far as they relate to the covering of revenues and repayments into the Treasury, the certification of outstanding liabilities for payment, and the authorization of the issue of duplicate checks and warrants. He shall perform such other duties as may from time to time be assigned to him by the comptroller general.

All acts performed by the assistant comptrollers general under this section shall be subject to the direction and approval of the comptroller general.

SEC. 24. That there shall be attached to the general accounting office a board of appeals, to consist of three members, including the second assistant comptroller general and the third assistant comptroller general. The third member, who shall be chairman of the board, shall be nominated, and, by, and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appointed by the President, and shall receive compensation at the rate of $5,000 a year. He shall be known as the solicitor of the general accounting office, and shall hold office for a term of five years. He shall have administrative charge of the board's activities and shall supervise such subordinate personnel as may be attached to it.

The board of appeals shall perform its duties under such rules of procedure as may be prescribed by the comptroller general. It shall review all decisions of the first assistant comptroller general involving an original construction of a statute or a modification of an existing construction, and items in any account affected by such decision shall be suspended and settlement thereof withheld until the board of appeals shall approve, disapprove, or modify such decision and certify its findings to the first assistant comptroller general. Upon application by any disbursing officer or head of a department or establishment, the board of appeals shall render its decision upon any question involving a payment to be made by such disbursing officer or under the jurisdiction of such head of department or establishment, which decision when so rendered and confirmed by the comptroller general shall govern the first assistant comptroller general to settling the account containing such payment. Any disbursing officer or head of department or establishment, or any other person aggrieved by the action or by any decision of the first assistant comptroller general in the settlement of an account or claim may, within one year from the date of such settlement, present an appeal to the board of appeals and obtain a revision of the account or claim thereby, and the decision of the board of appeals upon such revision shall be final and conclusive upon the executive branches of the Government after confirmation by the comptroller general. Authority to suspend payment and direct the reexamination of any account settled by the first assistant comptroller general shall be exclusively vested in the comptroller general, who shall have authority to reopen any account so settled and direct its revision by the board of appeals.

SEC. 25. That the offices of the six auditors of the Treasury Department and the division of bookkeeping and warrants of the Office of the Secretary of the Treasury shall be abolished, but the six auditors of the Treasury Department shall be transferred at their present salaries to become officers of the general accounting office, and all other officers and employees of these offices and of the division of bookkeeping and warrants shall become officers and employees in the general accounting office at their grades and salaries on July 1, 1920. All books, records, documents, papers, furniture, office equipment, and other property of these offices and of the division of bookkeeping and warrants shall become the property of the general accounting office. The general accounting office shall occupy the rooms now occupied by the office of the Comptroller of the Treasury, the six auditors of the Treasury Department, and the division of bookkeeping and warrants until otherwise provided.

SEC. 26. That the comptroller general shall appoint, remove, and fix the compensation of such officers and employees in the general accounting office as may from time to time be provided for by Congress, and perform all other duties of the head of an independent Government establishment. All such appointments shall be made in accordance with the civil-service laws and regulations. Not more than three persons shall be employed by the comptroller general at a salary of $5,000 a year, and no person shall be employed by him at a salary in excess of that sum. Until March 5, 1921, no person who at the time of the passage of this act holds office as one of the six auditors referred to in section 25, and who in pursuance of said section is transferred to the general accounting office, shall be removed from office or have his compensation reduced, except for cause. All officers and employees of the general accounting office, whether transferred thereto in pursuance of sections 21 and 25, or appointed by the comptroller general, shall perform such duties as may be assigned to them by the comptroller general. The comptroller general shall make such rules and regulations as may be necessary for carrying on the work of the general accounting office.

SEC. 27. That the comptroller general shall investigate, at the seat of government or elsewhere, all matters relating to the receipt and disbursement of public funds, and shall make to the President on or before October 15 of each year, and to Congress, at the beginning of each regular session, a report in writing of the work of the general accounting office, containing recommendations concerning the legislation he may deem necessary to facilitate the prompt and accurate rendition and settlement of accounts and concerning such other matters relating to the receipt and disbursement of public funds as he may think advisable. In such regular report, or in special reports at any time when Congress is in session, he shall make recommendations looking to greater economy or efficiency in the public expenditures. He shall make such investigations and reports as shall be ordered by either House of Congress or by any committee of either House having jurisdiction over revenues, appropriations, or expenditures. The comptroller general shall also, at the request of any such committee, direct assistants from his office to furnish the committee such aid and information as the committee may request. The comptroller general shall specially report to Congress every expenditure or contract made by any disbursing officer in any department or establishment in any year in excess of the appropriation to such department or establishment and in violation of law.

All departments or establishments except the Supreme Court shall furnish to the comptroller general such information regarding the powers, duties, activities, organization, financial transactions, and methods of business of their respective offices as he may from time to time require of them; and the comptroller general, or any of his assistants or employees when duly authorized by him, shall, for the purpose of securing such information, have access to and the right to examine any books, documents, papers, or records of any such department or establishment. The authority contained in this paragraph shall not be applicable to expenditures made under the provisions of section 291 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

SEC. 28. That the Civil Service Commission shall establish an eligible register for accountants for the general accounting office, and the examination of applicants for entrance upon such register shall be based upon specifications approved by the comptroller general.

SEC. 29. That for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, the sum of $225,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of defraying the expenses of the establishment and maintenance of the budget bureau, and the sum of $150,000 for the establishment and maintenance of the general accounting office, including the payment of salaries herein authorized.

SEC. 30. That this act shall take effect on July 1, 1920.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment to the pending bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 32, line 20, insert, after section 28, a new section, as follows:

SEC. 29. The Bureau of Efficiency, together with its books, papers, and records, furniture, equipment, and supplies, is hereby transferred to the jurisdiction of Congress, and its officers and employees are transferred in their present status without reappointment. The Chief of the Bureau of Efficiency shall hereafter be appointed jointly by the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives and may be removed from office by them. All other employees of the bureau, including a disbursing officer for the payment of the salaries and expenses of the bureau, shall be appointed by the chief of the bureau in accordance with the civil-service laws and regulations. The Bureau of Efficiency shall conduct a continuous investigation of the public expenditures. It is authorized to investigate any matters relating to the organization, activities, or methods of business of the several administrative services of the Government and shall from time to time submit to Congress reports of its investigations with recommendations looking to greater efficiency and economy in the conduct of the public business. It shall make such special investigations and reports as may be required by either House of Congress or by any committee or subcommittee thereof of either House having jurisdiction over revenues, appropriations, or expenditures. Officers and employees of the executive departments and other establishments shall furnish authorized representatives of the Bureau of Efficiency with all information that the bureau may require for the performance of its duties and shall give such representatives access to all records and papers that may be needed for that purpose.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I am earnestly in favor of a budget system and think we should have an effective one. I believe it will coordinate the various departments of the Government and make them more economical and effective and save much duplication in work and much waste and extravagance of expenditure.

However, I did not rise to make a speech in behalf of the budget system. My colleague, the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], has been unavoidably detained from the Senate to-day. It was impossible for him to be here. I expect possibly he will be here to-morrow. I know he is deeply interested in the budget system, and he has some very positive views about how the system should be made effective and beneficial in its results.

I ask the Senator from Illinois if he contemplates having the bill passed this afternoon?

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, in view of the absence of the junior Senator from Virginia, I have said to the leader of the minority that I should be very glad to have the bill put aside for the afternoon, if the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] wishes to devote the balance of the afternoon to the consideration of the fortifications appropriation bill, but I should want an agreement that the budget bill shall be the unfinished business at the conclusion of the morning hour to-morrow.

Mr. SMOOT. I expect the fortifications appropriation bill to be in the Senate from the Printing Office within the next few minutes. Then I shall ask the Senator having the bill in charge to temporarily lay it aside, and I shall ask the Senate to take up the fortifications appropriation bill.

Mr. SWANSON. Then consideration of the budget bill will be resumed at 2 o'clock to-morrow, at the conclusion of the morning hour?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. SWANSON. If the morning business is concluded before 2 o'clock, will it come up at that time? I think my colleague may be here a little after 12 o'clock. He will be here before 2 o'clock, at least.

Mr. SMOOT. We can go on with the bill until that time. Even though it be a little after 12 o'clock when your colleague arrives, there are other amendments to be offered to the bill, I understand. The amendment which I offered has not been acted upon, Mr. President. I should like to have a vote on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCORMICK. In order that there may be no misunderstanding, unanimous consent has been given that, although the budget bill is to be laid aside temporarily this afternoon it shall be the unfinished business at the conclusion of the morning hour to-morrow.

Mr. THOMAS. It will be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. SWANSON. It is understood that it shall be temporarily laid aside and that it can be brought up any time anyone wants to call it up to-morrow.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will state that I am informed that copies of the fortifications appropriation bill will be in the Chamber in just a moment. Then I shall ask the Senate to take the bill up for consideration. I do not believe there will be any opposition to the bill. It has been cut to the bone. It carries only about $18,000,000, and I might say that, perhaps, we have been a little too strict in following the bill as it passed the House.

We recognize that all appropriations ought to be as small as possible, and we followed out that thought in the preparation of the fortifications appropriation bill. If we have made any error at all, in my opinion, it has been in not meeting the demand of the War Department for appropriations for the Air Service. I recognized that the establishment of an Air Service in the War Department is one that is of vital importance to our country. I think if there is an efficient Air Service established in the War Department that many of the millions of dollars which are now spent for land fortifications could be eliminated from future appropriation bills.

I do not know that I care to speak upon any particular item in the bill until the bill is before the Senate. I am quite sure that all that we have granted in the bill is necessary and my only fear is that in some one or two particulars we have cut the appropriation too much. If all the other appropriation bills had been scanned as carefully, and only the amounts appropriated that were absolutely necessary, as has been done in the fortification bill, I think the amounts of appropriations for the coming fiscal year would be hundreds of millions of dollars less than they will be.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If there is no objection, I should like to have an order entered placing the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. COMER] on some of the committee assignments which belonged to my late colleague, Senator BANKHEAD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The order will be read.

The order was read, and agreed to, as follows:

Ordered, That the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. COMER] be appointed to the following committees:
Civil Service and Retrenchment.
Coast and Insular Survey.
Commerce.
Conservation of National Resources.
Post Offices and Post Roads.
Transportation Routes to the Seaboard.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 15 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, a number of Senators desire an adjournment at this time, and to take up the fortifications appropriation bill in the morning hour to-morrow. I have no objection to that course. I therefore move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, April 30, 1920, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, April 29, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord God, our Heavenly Father, without whom nothing is strong, nothing is holy, so move upon the hearts of men everywhere that they may fix their minds upon the eternal values of life.

For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also.
The light of the body is the eye: if therefore thine eye be single, thy whole body shall be full of light:
But if thine eye be evil, thy whole body shall be full of darkness. If therefore the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness!
No man can serve two masters: for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other. Ye can not serve God and mammon.

The age is full of deception, deceit, selfish ambitions, and thousands are suffering for the necessities of life, which are abundant for all. Hasten the day, we beseech Thee, when brotherly love shall come, that we may return, and that right speedily, to the normal, when every man shall worship Thee under his own vine and fig tree and none shall make him afraid, for Thou art God and Thou knowest the heart of every man; thus we hope, and aspire, and pray. In the spirit of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

OPERATIONS OF FEDERAL LAND BANKS.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to make a statement of about two minutes in length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WINGO. On April 13 I placed in the RECORD a comparative statement of certain expenses connected with the operation of farm-land banks. It is found on page 5626 of the RECORD.

I wish to call attention to the last column under table 3, which lists the average cost of appraisal of profits and organizations to February 29, 1920, per $1,000. In that column the Federal land bank at St. Louis is credited with a cost of $4.39 per thousand, or the second highest in the system. This average of $4.39, which was furnished by the bank to the board in making up the statement, is based upon the total loans recommended by the appraisers, and not as called attention to in a footnote that accompanies the table, which was that it was based upon the total amount. Now, the cost of appraisal, if based upon the total number of loans considered by the Federal land bank at St. Louis, would be $2.17 per thousand instead of $4.39.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the rural-credits bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the soldiers' bonus legislation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 13266, being the District appropriation bill, and disagree to all the amendments of the Senate, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the District appropriation bill, disagree to all the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Is there objection [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The SPEAKER appointed the following conferees: Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota, Mr. CRAMTON, and Mr. BUCHANAN.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, by unanimous consent may I make a statement on behalf of the coordinate legislative branch of the Government, that this appropriation bill as it comes to the House carries less than when it left the House? So far as I can recall in all my years of service here this is the first time that an appropriation bill has returned from the Senate reduced in amount. That is so remarkable a fact that I think it is worthy of mention.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It seems to me we ought to pass a resolution of thanks.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in to-day's RECORD in reference to a certain passport provision in the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill, now in conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD upon the passport provision of the Diplomatic bill. Is there objection?

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. The Diplomatic and Consular bill has not gone to conference, has it?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The conference report has been made, anyhow.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I should have so stated. The report of the conferees appears in Tuesday's RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York makes a similar request. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the rural credit legislation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of rural credit legislation. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

RETIREMENT OF EMPLOYEES.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, in accordance with the order entered yesterday, by unanimous consent I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 1699.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 1699.

Mr. LEHLBACH. And pending that, Mr. Speaker, I would like to see whether an arrangement for limitation of time in general debate can be made.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What suggestion has the gentleman to make about it?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I would suggest that the general debate be confined to the bill and be limited to two hours—one hour to a side.

Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina. I have a good many requests for time over here of 10 and 15 minutes each. I would suggest that an hour and a half on a side would be better.

Mr. LEHLBACH. The gentleman has requests that will occupy the full 90 minutes if allotted to him under that arrangement?

Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina. Yes, I think so; and I expect other requests also.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate on this bill be limited to three hours—one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. GODWIN] and one-half by myself—the debate to be limited to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent that the general debate be limited to three hours, and all confined to the bill, half of the time to be controlled by himself and half by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. GODWIN].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from North Carolina whether or not that takes care of the time that has been requested?

Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina. Yes, sir; this takes care of all the time I have requests for.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New Jersey that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 1699) for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, with Mr. MCARTHUR in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 1699) for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey is recognized for one hour and a half.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 25 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. NELSON].

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I am in favor of the passage of this bill, Senate bill 1699, known as the Lehlbach-Sterling bill, passed by the Senate April 3, 1920, and amended by the House Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service of the United States. I am for it because I believe it is a long step in the right direction for a just and scientific treatment of our Government employees, because it makes possible a more efficient personnel in the handling of our Government business.

It is quite evident to anyone who has studied the business of our Government that we need to introduce into our various governmental departments more of business efficiency, and while it is not possible that in a republican form of government we can ever hope to have the same degree of efficiency as obtains in private business or in well-regulated corporations, yet I do believe that even in a republican form of government such as ours we can have a much larger degree of business efficiency than now obtains, and it is my opinion that we must eliminate, in many of our departments and bureaus, large numbers of inefficient help and cut down the number of employees. Indeed, we must have a real house cleaning in every one of these departments, especially in the departments which have grown like mushrooms during the recent emergency of the Great War. Thousands of employees should be dismissed from the service, and a larger degree of efficiency demanded of the balance of the employees. This, in my judgment, can only be done when the administration and Congress address themselves to the fact that we must have in our government both economy and efficiency, and that is what is contemplated under the bill now before us for discussion and passage.

Our slogan must be fewer employees in most of our departments, but greater efficiency in all. Eliminate the drones and increase the pay and the possibilities of scientific advancement for those who are efficient and remain in the service. This is the best way of improving our efficiency and increasing our morale. The awful waste now apparent must be eliminated, and this retirement bill will assist the departments and the administrative bureaus to do this. The large army of war emergency clerks should be reduced at once to a basis of immediate need, and the slogan should not be fewer hours and bigger pay, but a more adequate pay and a larger efficiency. We must introduce all along the line scientific methods of reclassification and a proper basis for advancement or promotion—promotions to be based on a system of efficiency and service. At the present time, in my opinion, the Government is paying too dearly for want of a real system of coordination and cooperation in the various departments, and through a lack of an efficient program of promotions based on real merit and service.

In our Government service we should insist on the common-sense system used in our most highly organized business enterprises, both private and corporate. The Government must deal on the square with these employees and the employees must do their utmost to make the service efficient. Secretary Lane has, in my judgment, struck the keynote when he said:

And now, in parting, let me say a general word as the fruit of my experience here. Washington is a combination of political caucus, drawing room, and civil-service bureaus. It contains statesmen who are politicians and politicians who are not statesmen. It is rich in brains and in character. It is honest beyond any commercial standard. It wishes to do everything that will promote the public good. But it is poorly organized for the task that belongs to it. Fewer men of larger capacity would do the task better. Ability is not lacking, but it is pressed to the point of paralysis because of an infinitude of details and unwillingness on the part of the great body of public servants to take responsibility. Everyone seems to be afraid of everyone. The self-protective sense is developed abnormally, the creative sense atrophies. Trust, confidence, enthusiasm—these simple virtues of all great business are the ones most lacking in Government organization. We have so many checks and brakes upon our work that our progress does not keep pace with the Nation's requirements. We could save money for the Government if we had more discretion as to how we should use that given us. For the body of the civil servants there should be quicker promotion or discharge and a sure insurance when disability comes. For the higher administrative officers there should be salaries twice as high as those now given and they should be made to feel that they are the ones responsible for the work of the department; the head being merely an adviser and a constructor of policies. As matters are now devised there are too few in the Government whose business it is to plan. Every man is held to details, to the narrower view, which comes too often to be the department view or some sort of parochial view. We need for the day that is here and upon us men who have little to do but study the problems of the time and test their capacity at meeting them. In a word, we need more opportunity for planning, engineering, statesmanship above, and more fixed authority and responsibility below.

The Hon. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Assistant Secretary of the Navy, has written a letter in which he refers to defects in our departmental organizations when he says:

I do not hesitate to say that I could run the Navy Department more efficiently in every way with 15 per cent fewer employees if I could have authority to take the salaries of these employees and add the amount, in my discretion, to the pay of those who are experts in their own line of work and who would command far higher pay in private employ. I have in mind the men who are making good, but will not stay under present conditions.

This bill is not perfect, but it is the best bill that the combined judgment of all the Government departments affected could bring forth. It is based upon the best scientific research made of the various pension or retirement plans now in force in this and other countries of the world. It has the approval of all the Cabinet officers and of the department heads involved and of the rank and file of the official leaders and individuals of the employees affected.

The functions of a pension system should be twofold: First, to secure a better and more efficient service to the employer; and, second, a protection against the risk of dependence and of old age or disability of the employees. For economic efficiency the employer, whether a government, a corporation, or an individual, has found it to his interest to establish some pension system which will enable the old or disabled employees to retire under proper and helpful conditions. The obligation resting upon the employer is both a financial and a moral one—financial because of the economic efficiency and better service to be obtained, and moral because of the better and happier conditions to be brought to the whole group of laborers employed.

The unanimous testimony of the heads of the executive departments is that some such measure as the one under contemplation is an economic necessity in the efficient administration of our Government. The three factors that must govern in the consideration of this problem are humanity, economy, and efficiency. As to the humanity of it, it is only necessary to refer briefly to the long period of service of these people, to their low salaries, and to the high cost of living, and to realize what is emphatically true—that the people of the United States are not willing that a man or woman who has served faithfully for a lifetime shall be cast out on the street or upon the mercy of his kin.

It is quite evident that the removal of a sufficient number of inefficient employees will permit efficiency and dispatch of business and help to put the Government on a business basis such as obtains to-day in any well-regulated business concern.

Pension systems are now maintained by nearly all of the foreign Governments, notably France, England, and Germany. In our own country several systems of pensions are in operation, both contributory and noncontributory. Teachers' pensions, both by States and cities, are common. Superannuated preachers' funds are now maintained by all the leading religious denominations. Police and firemen's pensions are common in most of our large cities. Railroads, banks, and insurance companies and large mercantile establishments maintain and operate very complete systems of pensions. In most of these systems pensions for superannuation or retirement are granted to employees retiring at 60 to 70 years of age after from 10 to 30 years of service. The employing companies have, as a rule, so restricted the age limit for entering their service that the usual maximum age is now 45 years. Pensioners are usually allowed to engage in gainful occupations, but may not reenter the company's service.

Most of the large railroad systems have retirement or pension funds established. For example, the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co. has a relief department divided into three sections, known as the relief, savings, and pension divisions. The fund for the payment of pensions is supported by the company and was put into operation in 1884.

Organized society, expressed in governments, corporations, or private associations, has adopted many forms of aid and relief funds and insurance funds of various kinds, and in later years superannuation or retirement funds based on scientific study for the purpose of not only benefiting the pensioners, but for the efficiency and general betterment of the service, have been adopted, and it is to this phase of the subject that I desire to address myself to-day.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GARD. Does the gentleman intend to put in the RECORD the number and percentage of inefficient employees?

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. I will say to the gentleman that it will be my purpose to do so.

A CIVIL-SERVICE RETIREMENT LAW HAS BEEN INDORSED BY BOTH DEMOCRATIC AND REPUBLICAN PARTIES.

The Democratic Party in its national platform of 1916 has this to say with reference to a retirement law:

> We believe in an equitable establishment of retirement law providing for the retirement of superannuates and disabled employees of the civil service to the end that a higher standard of efficiency may be maintained.

The Republican Party in its national platform of 1912 makes this significant statement:

> We favor legislation to make possible the equitable retirement of disabled and superannuated members of the civil service in order that a higher standard of efficiency may be maintained.

This bill, therefore, ought to have the unanimous support of every Democrat and every Republican. This measure should not be put in the sense of a partisan measure at all. Indeed, Mr. Chairman, as a new Member I am impressed with the fact that too often we omit real constructive legislation by injecting too much of partisan spirit. I feel that when it comes to real constructive legislation the question ought not to be whether it is to help the Democratic Party or the Republican Party, but the question ought to be, "Will it help the American people?" [Applause.]

We should be concerned to-day with a large reconstruction program. Our Government must be put on a business basis. We must have a budget system. We must assist our taxpayers by reducing all possible waste and inefficiency.

I wish to make this observation, however, that collectively we are all for reduction of appropriations and taxes, and each Congressman is flooded with letters and telegrams pleading to cut down appropriations and reduce taxation; but, individually, there is not a measure up for which appropriations are asked in which there are not thousands of telegrams and letters sent to individual Congressmen and Senators pleading for some particular item of appropriation to be doubled and trebled.

Fortunately, however, for us to-day this measure—as agreed to unanimously by our committee and passed by the Senate and approved by all our departmental heads, and by that wizard of finance, our Government actuary, Mr. McCoy, who states that this measure produces not only efficiency and business methods but actually reduces our taxes by millions of dollars annually, and in efficiency will mean a saving of $18,000,000 annually to our Government—does reduce taxes and eliminate waste in our Government.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. Yes. I will yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. HASTINGS. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the report is unanimous?

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. Yes. It is a unanimous report of the committee.

Mr. HASTINGS. So there is no minority report upon this bill?

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. No; there is not.

Mr. HASTINGS. It is indorsed by all the members of the committee?

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. Yes; it is.

Mr. HASTINGS. And all the Cabinet officers?

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. As far as I know.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Did I understand the gentleman to say there would be a saving of $18,000,000 in efficiency?

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. Yes. Our Government actuary makes the statement that the efficiency of the service will be increased at least 5 per cent, which is equivalent to over $18,000,000 per year on the present number of civil-service employees.

Mr. RAMSEYER. That is, by enacting this law?

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. Yes; by this retirement bill, and I wish to say that we can do nothing more just and humane to-day to our faithful Government employees than by passing this bill.

Mr. CRISP. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. CRISP. I should like to know if the gentleman can give us any estimate as to how much this bill will cost the Government?

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. It will approximate about $9,000,000 a year and it may run up to $15,000,000 a year and possibly more as the number of employees increases, but that is relative according to the increase of the number of employees and the increase of salaries. The contribution by employees being fixed at 2½ per cent on their salaries would naturally reduce the amount paid by the Government and increase that paid by the employees should their salaries be increased over the present salary standard.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. I am sorry, but I must hurry on. I would like to yield, but my time is limited.

Thousands and thousands of employees now upon the pay rolls should be eliminated. The employees should feel that as they give their best to their Government they should be paid adequate salaries and be given the chance of proper promotions. And, Mr. Chairman, this is what I contend this bill will do for our Government in providing a proper basis of retirement of our employees and provide for a proper basis of promotion.

Pension systems of several kinds are as old as the Roman Empire, but not until in recent years have pension systems been placed on a thoroughly scientific basis, built upon actuarial tables. Pensions as rewards for services in military or naval activities or for distinguished contributions in the fields of discovery, art, science, or literature have been quite common for centuries past. But recent years have brought pensions into the field of industry and labor as a distinct aid to efficiency in public and private life.

We now recognize that both private and public service are sure to become impaired as a result of the waste and demoralization brought about by retaining in the service employees who are no longer efficient because of infirmity or old age. It is generally agreed that in all our Government departments to-day there are thousands of worn-out employees who should be retired, as their retention prevents the promotion of younger and abler men and women. Our present system of retaining in the service men and women incapacitated is extravagantly expensive to our Government and contributes to the inefficiency of our governmental departments.

Congress and our Government administration must of necessity see to it that a square deal is given to the faithful Federal employees of our Government, and the Federal employee who is shirking his duty and only looks for pay day to come around should be eliminated with the greatest of haste, as he would be in any well-regulated business concern. I therefore appeal to both Democrats and Republicans to throw all partisanship aside when it comes to a measure of this kind and have only one aim in view, and that is the efficiency and economy in our governmental administration. And, speaking to the majority party to-day, I wish to say that we can do nothing more just and enhance in a larger degree the economy and efficiency of Government administration than by granting to our Government employees in the classified civil service a retirement plan such as is contemplated under the pending bill. The Republican Party, ever known as the party of efficiency in public service, would add to its long list of large achievements another most worthy achievement of governmental efficiency and social justice by passing overwhelmingly the pending retirement bill.

In the broadest and deepest sense our duty as national legislators is not to legislate as Democrats or Republicans but as Americans. The final determination of our vote on important measures should not be whether it will help the Democratic Party or the Republican Party, or whether it will mean our own return to Congress, but rather will it help the American people? At present our American Government is drifting like a ship without a pilot. We have no Chief Executive to direct in a large and true sense its destiny. Cabinet officers are not even permitted to function in their various departments and to use their best initiative without danger of dismissal. The apparent indifference of the executive branch of our Government to carrying out the legislation enacted by Congress has brought about a very serious condition in our country to-day—a condition that must not be permitted to continue much longer, and which we fervently hope will end by March 4, 1921. [Applause.]

Much of the unrest and chaos to-day in our social and industrial life and the apparent inability to stop unscrupulous profiteering both by rich and poor, high and low, by greedy capital both private and corporate, and by grasping labor, led by Bolsheviki and radicals, is due largely to the policy inaugurated during the war emergency to truckle to greedy capital on the one hand, making it possible to make unconscionable profits at the expense of the Government and the public, and, on the other hand, to bow to every mandate of labor, exacting higher and higher wages and shorter and shorter hours. Indeed, I desire to say right here, with all the earnestness of my soul, that during the war emergency the administration and Congress should have had the nerve and courage, as well as statesmanlike vision, to have conscripted both capital and labor as well as the lives of our dear boys—the flower of our Nation's dearest and noblest asset. Then, as the boys fought, bled, and died in the trenches on Flanders Fields to make the world safe and humanity free at a dollar a day, our labor and capital at home could not have demanded, as they did, the emergency advantages which have led, in my judgment, to much of the high cost of living due to unconscionable profits by greedy capital, individual and corporate, and unreasonable demands in high wages and short hours by our labor unions.

I am a friend of labor, and I came from the ranks of labor. I shall always stand for honest toil and for honest capital. I shall continue to stand and vote for the interest of both as long as they stand for the interest of our Republic and for a square deal to all. But I am persuaded that 69,000 millionaires made by war profiteering during the four years of the Great War and the labor unions demanding billions in increased wages and shorter hours have been indifferent in a large degree to the welfare of our public, the third side in the great triangle of our Nation's interest, who have been long-suffering and patient to the very limit. Both capital and labor have, in my judgment, not been willing to remedy the great need of our social and economic life to-day for a larger production, a better distribution, and for a larger conservation for the common good of all. Each seemingly is demanding the last pound of flesh from a patient and long-suffering public.

Between the fight of the 4,000,000 to 5,000,000 of organized labor on the one side and organized capital on the other, the 35,000,000 or 40,000,000 of unorganized labor and the rank and file of our American citizenship, the long-suffering and patient public, have been sacrificed between the upper and the nether millstone, which have been grinding the public without regard and mercy. And to-day this patent and long-suffering majority is rising to the knowledge of the fact that it is utterly sacrificed to greed and lust of capital and utter selfishness and disregard by organized labor. Now let both unite with the ranks of American life and industry and demand the square deal to all and special privileges and class legislation to none. Let us be the servant of all but the slave of none. [Applause.]

No true and self-respecting Representative or Senator can submit to the selfish and self-centered demands of organized labor on the one side, demanding less hours with increased pay, including Plumb plans and coal strikes, and, on the other side, the utterly selfish and greedy lust of power and special privileges so forcibly expressed by the Steel Trust in its Pittsburgh steel-plus base, and the past method of the Standard Oil Co. in strangling all competition, and the old railway method of first destroying all competition and then raising rates, and the all-persuasive monopoly of the packers' combines. [Applause.]

In this land of majority rule no minority selfishness shall ever have the ascendency; in this land of freedom each rising sun shall shine on "the land of the free and the home of the brave"; in this land the Stars and Stripes shall protect equally beneath its folds the rich and the poor, the high and the low, the ignorant and the learned, and its future shall spell the hope of equality, justice, and equal opportunities. The ideals of a minority, when they are right and devoid of selfishness, can be brought to the attention of the American people and approved by the majority under our present system of constituted law and order. [Applause.]

We are living to-day in times of great unrest and social and economic discontent, yet pregnant with great opportunities for consecrated wealth and loyal labor to work out a destiny mighty with promise for peace and happiness. Change the awful tide for selfish power for the higher and nobler ambition for heroic service, and you will make at once humanity more helpful and the world more free. The old foundations of error, inequality, fixed wrong, stereotyped injustice, selfish ambitions, gruelling aims, and material aggrandizement are to-day in a fluid mass melted in the fire of the world's awful conflict. The hopes and aspirations of mankind to-day are ready to be led by the spirit of freedom, justice, and patriotism to nobler resolves and higher consecrations, ready to become conscious instruments of social good, universal happiness, and nation-wide and world-wide freedom of body, mind, and soul.

The remedy, in my judgment, is plain. Capital must become more generous and labor must become more faithful. Both must clasp hands across the chasm that now divides them in a spirit of real cooperation and with a heart and mind actuated by the principles of the Son of Man to the end that they will serve their Nation and their generation in the highest and truest sense. Thus only can we bring about a larger production and a proper conservation of our national resources, including money and industry. Selfishness, greed, and profiteering must cease.

The great game of grabbing and holding without conscience and regard for our fellow men must stop. The india-rubber conscience produced as an aftermath of the great World War in the ranks of both labor and capital, rich and poor, high and low, must be changed to the principles enunciated by Christ in the Sermon on the Mount or we shall suffer utter defeat and chaos. All the forces of the Government and the people must be united in a spirit of constructive cooperation and deep filial concern if we shall hope to make our Nation socially happy and economically contented. The real constructive program needed by our Nation and the world to-day is to just get back to first principles of civilization and Christianity and build upon the eternal Rock of Ages to the end that farm, mine, and factory shall produce its utmost and be conserved and distributed for the welfare and betterment of mankind. The future growth and glory of our Nation still rest on what Roosevelt called the "square deal to all." We must still build on the primal rights of mankind as a unit and not upon the rights of single individuals or even groups or classes. These ideas are American in their truest and highest sense and make a government "of the people, for the people, and by the people." This idea of universal liberty and universal well-being is the only hope that will fulfill the promises of the immortal Declaration of Independence and will verify the vision of our immortal founders. It is this idea, truly American, that to-day must elevate the intellectual spirit of our Nation and deepen the channels of our moral and spiritual life. [Applause.]

BRIEF HISTORY OF EFFORTS TO SECURE CIVIL-SERVICE RETIREMENT LEGISLATION.

Beginning with the year 1889, the first real effort was made to secure the enactment of a civil-service retirement law, which took the form of a bill introduced by Representative Brosius, of Pennsylvania. This initial effort contemplated that the annuities or pensions to be paid the superannuated or retired employees were to be created by a common fund made up of contributions from the entire classified civil service as constituted and organized. This plan of commingling the contributions of the employees was fundamentally inequitable and actuarily unsound. It was the application of the so-called tontine plan of insurance to a retirement scheme.

Shortly after the introduction of the Brosius bill the civil-service employees organized, in March 1900, about 20 years ago, the United States Civil Service Retirement Association. At first this organization limited its activities to the civil-service employees connected with the Federal Government in the District of Columbia. No substantial progress was made in the effort to impress the Congress with the need for this legislation until 10 years later, when the various civil-service organizations, principally composed of postal employees, began the active agitation throughout the United States for the enactment of an equitable civil-service retirement law.

There seems to have been two schools of thought as to the most desirable way of providing for the retirement of the aged and disabled employees of the classified civil service of the Government. Some contended—and it is only fair to say that these constituted the great majority of the civil-service employees—that the Federal Government should pay the entire cost of pensioning its aged and disabled civil-service employees. Others insisted that the retiring allowances should be made up by individual contributions of the employees, based upon their salaries, with varying percentages of deduction, with the proviso that the Government would supplement the individual contributions by recognizing its liability to the extent of providing the necessary appropriations to cover past or back services.

Only within a very recent period have these two schools of thought been brought into complete harmony, which is now exemplified in the Lehlbach-Sterling retirement bill, now under consideration. The underlying principle of this bill is the recognition of the contractual relationship between the Government on the one hand as the employer and the civil-service personnel on the other hand as the employees. In other words, this bill attempts to recognize the principle, as far as it is possible to do so, that the cost of providing retirement annuities should be divided between the Government and its employees.

The underlying theory of a so-called contribution system where the individual beneficiaries contribute a percentage of their wages or compensation is predicated upon the idea that such a plan will encourage thrift and stimulate the employee to a higher effort in the discharge of his official duties besides giving him a voice in the management of the fund thus created.

It may be of interest to note at this point that the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching in a recent bulletin published by it sets out in as brief a form as it is possible to state it the evils of a pension system where the beneficiaries do not contribute to the creation of their own annuities. I quote from a report of the foundation published in February, 1919:

A pension system paid out of income, whether of a government or of a corporation, at no cost to the beneficiary is expensive beyond all anticipation. Its cost is not only impossible to estimate in advance, but has proved an intolerable burden even to the practically unlimited income of a government.

Experience shows further that, while under the noncontributory plan the beneficiary appears to get something for nothing, it is certain that in a limited number of years the pension will be absorbed in the wage or salary schedule and become practically deferred pay, received by only a minority of those interested.

The effect of the so-called free pension upon the individual is distinctly demoralizing. The notion of getting something for nothing appeals to our universal human nature, but it is a prolific breeder of human selfishness. Not only is this true, but the lifting from the shoulders of the individual of a responsibility, properly and rightfully his, is a source of weakness not of strength. What society needs is the machinery under which the individual shall be able to discharge his obligation without making an unreasonable demand either upon his financial resources or upon his self-control.

As a result of an extended study of all pension systems, both in this country and abroad, the commission intrusted with this work formulated as a part of its report the following principles upon which a sound pension system should rest.

In further support of the so-called partly contributory system of retirement as exemplified by the bill under consideration, I quote Mr. Paul Studensky in his pamphlet entitled "The pension problem and the philosophy of contributions," in which he summarizes the relative advantages and disadvantages of the three distinct types of pension schemes:

I. THE WHOLLY CONTRIBUTORY SYSTEM.

1. It embodies no public purpose, for it is usually established by the employees as their private association for their own benefit. The employees manage it themselves, while the Government and the public have little interest in the matter.

2. In the course of time the measure proves unfair to the employees and inadequate for the Government and leads to considerable bitterness. The employees realize that the pension is of benefit not only to them but also to the public, and they consider unfair that they alone should contribute. Frequently, too, they take an extreme viewpoint that it does not benefit them but benefits only the public and that they should be absolved, therefore, from contributing. The Government realizes that the system could more adequately benefit the public if it were reorganized and managed partly or entirely with that purpose in view. As a result of the movement, either a subsidy is granted or employees' contributions are altogether abolished, the Government assuming the entire cost. At the same time the Government takes either part or the entire management out of the hands of employees. Thus the system changes to a partly or noncontributory basis.

3. The abandonment of wholly contributory systems is accelerated by the fact that the employees always fix their contributions so low that the fund breaks down after a few years of operation.

4. If their contributions were high, they would lead to an increase of salaries, thereby shifting a part of the employees' pension burden upon the taxpayers in another form.

5. It affords no basis for the establishment of a sound actuarial system, because the cost of benefits, especially at higher ages, would be absolutely impossible for the employees alone to bear.

II. THE NONCONTRIBUTORY SYSTEM.

1. It is autocratic, more or less discretionary with the higher officials, and dangerous, therefore, to the independence of employees. It is established by the employer for the purpose of gaining a greater control over the efficiency of the service by retiring the superannuated and by threatening the active members of the force with forfeiture of all pension rights in case of their dismissal or resignation. It regards the employee merely as a machine and ignores his needs and desires. It gives him no voice in the management of the system.

2. It is inequitable between the older and younger employees. It focuses the attention upon the immediate retirement of the aged members. Its natural tendency is to provide no benefits for the contingencies which threaten the young employee, such as early disability, early death, resignation and dismissal, but to provide increased benefits to the fortunate ones who remain in the service until old age.

3. As the pension disbursements increase they depress the wages of the younger employees, with a result that the pension becomes a "deferred pay" and the system becomes contributory under disguise in a most inequitable form. The younger generation pays for the benefits of the older and no one knows how much he pays.

4. It absolves a large group of employees from any obligation to save. This is harmful to the individual employee as well as the society at large. It meets the condemnation of the public which promotes voluntary and compulsory savings and it is eventually substituted by a contributory system.

5. It becomes too costly for the Government. The latter is forced to request the employees to contribute and changes it to a partly contributory basis. The change involves much greater complications than would have taken place had that basis been adopted from the beginning. It has been abandoned almost everywhere abroad and must be abandoned in this country.

6. Its basis is ill adapted to the establishment of a sound actuarial system which involves the building of a reserve, because the cost of such a system would be too great from the very outset for the Government alone to bear.

7. Its exclusive application to a certain group of or all public employees affords an argument against the establishment of contributory systems for all other wage earners. It blocks, therefore, the spreading of the social insurance movement.

III. THE PARTLY CONTRIBUTORY SYSTEM.

1. It is a compromise between the foregoing two extreme systems.

2. It harmoniously combines with social insurance and with its principle that every worker must participate in the cost of his protection.

3. It is a joint undertaking which involves mutual benefits and a two-fold purpose—on the one hand, insuring the employees and their dependents against want in old age, disability, death and, to some extent, resignation and dismissal; on the other hand, facilitating the elimination of the inefficient from the service and promoting an esprit de corps.

4. It tends to give both sides an equal voice in management.

5. It promotes a clear distinction between pension and wages, each side knowing what it pays; it is not intended either to reduce or increase the wages, does not depress the wage, and does not become a "deferred pay."

6. It makes possible the establishment of a financially sound system, the cost of which amounts to 10 or 11 per cent, or even more, by dividing the cost and requiring the employees to pay 5 or 6 per cent, as is being done all over the world.

7. Concurrently with its adoption for both present employees and new entrants, the old "vested rights" and privileges are being swept away.

8. It is a system which progresses in harmony with social evolution while the other systems are dying, and it expresses the growing mutual responsibilities which make for a greater democracy and a happier community.

It may be of interest to call attention at this point to a plan which has been adopted by the city of New York in pensioning its school-teachers. This plan is essentially a fifty-fifty plan, where the employees contribute one-half the cost and the city of New York the other one-half for the purpose of creating the individual annuity.

Prior to the adoption of the plan a committee was appointed by the mayor of the city of New York, and this committee undertook, during the course of its investigation, to study the details of some 9 or 10 different plans at that time in existence of pensioning municipal employees of the city of New York.

The committee made its report on December 8, 1915, and I quote from that report the following statement:

In this report, therefore, following good practice elsewhere, and guided by the past mistakes of New York City in dealing with pension problems, a proposal is made to organize a retirement system which will be free, on the one hand, of uncertainties, and, on the other, will provide a means just to employees and taxpayers alike for its financing. It is by no means maintained that the conclusions set forth in the report are final. They are presented with a view to complete discussion and with the expectation that they will be changed in the light of fuller wisdom and possibly more mature thought which this discussion will produce. Whatever may be the judgment on the recommendations, the facts are plainly told so that there is provided a complete basis for considering the two major questions involved in the problem: First, what shall be the conditions of retirement? Second, how shall the cost of meeting these conditions be provided?

It is conceivable, of course, that the cost of the entire pension plan may be levied upon the teachers themselves. But to do so would mean either to cut down the benefits below a point where they would seem adequate to furnish a proper basis of retirement or to impose an intolerable burden upon the teaching force. Similarly it is conceivable that the entire cost might be laid upon the city. But if this were done the burden on taxpayers would be so great that protest would be surely evoked, and either reduction or complete stoppage of benefits would follow.

The middle course of equal division of cost is suggested with the adequate safeguard of the interest of teachers that in case they withdraw from the service prior to retirement their contributions shall be returned to them with compound interest. * * *

I wish to conclude my statement in the discussion of plans with the following excerpt from the report of the commission appointed by the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching, which had under consideration the reorganization of the original scheme for pensioning superannuated teachers under this benefaction.

[Excerpt from report of commission appointed by the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching to consider a provisional plan for a pension system.]

I.

1. The function of a pension system is to secure to the individual who participates in it protection against the risk of dependence due to old age or to disability.

2. The obligation to secure this protection for himself and for his family rests first upon the individual. This is one of the primary obligations of the existing social order. Society has done its best for the individual when it provides the machinery by which he may obtain this protection at a cost within his reasonable ability to pay.

3. Men either on salary or on wages are, in the economic sense, employees. The employer, whether a government, a corporation, or an individual, has a direct financial interest in the establishment of some pension system which shall enable old or disabled employees to retire under satisfactory conditions. In addition, society demands to-day that the employer assume some part in the moral and social betterment of his employees. The obligation of the employer to cooperate in sustaining a pension system is primarily a financial one, and, in the second place, a moral one.

4. A pension system designed for any group of industrial or vocational workers should rest upon the cooperation of employee and employer.

5. Teachers' pensions should be stipendiary in character, amounting to a fair proportion of the active pay.

II.

1. In actuarial terms a pension is a deferred annuity upon the life of one or more individuals, payable upon the fulfillment of certain conditions.

2. In order that an individual participating in a pension system may be assured of his annuity when due, one condition is indispensable: There must be set aside year by year the reserve necessary, with its accumulated interest, to provide the annuity at the age agreed upon. On no other conditions can the participator obtain a satisfactory contract. The man of 30 who participates in a pension plan under which he expects an annuity 35 or 40 years in the future, will take some risk of disappointment in accepting any arrangement less secure than a contractual one.

3. A pension system conducted upon the actuarial basis of setting aside year by year the necessary reserve is the only pension system whose cost can be accurately estimated in advance.

4. A method by which a pension is paid for in advance in annual or monthly installments is the most practical plan which can be devised for purchasing a deferred annuity, provided that the contributions begin early in the employee's career, and provided also that the contributions paid in year by year receive the benefit of the current interest for safe investments.

5. As a matter of practical administration, a pension system should apply to a group whose members live under comparable financial and economic conditions. To attain its full purpose participation in the pension system to the extent of an agreed minimum should form a condition of entering the service or employment the members of which are cooperating in the pension system.

HISTORY OF CIVIL-SERVICE PENSIONS IN GREAT BRITAIN.

A brief history of civil-service pensions in Great Britain will be found in Senate Document No. 290, Sixty-first Congress, second session, the material embraced therein having been prepared by Mr. Herbert D. Brown, at present the chief of the Bureau of Efficiency, under direction of the then Commissioner of Labor.

The first general law on the subject of superannuation was passed by Parliament in 1810, amended by the act of 1822, and later by the acts of 1824 and 1829. These several amendments were intended to extend the provisions of the original act to new classes of employees.

The first comprehensive superannuation act passed by Parliament was the act of 1834, under the provisions of which the employees all were required to contribute a small percentage of their salaries to a common fund, out of which superannuation allowances were made to those reaching the retiring age, but where no provision was made for a refund of any portion of the individual contributions in the event of voluntary separation from the service or death before reaching the retirement age.

The act proved to be inequitable and unsatisfactory. This led to the passage of the act of 1859, where the Government practically confiscated the entire amount of money remaining in the common fund under the act of 1834 and undertook to establish a straight civil pension plan, where the entire cost was to be borne by the Government, without any contributions from the individual employees.

This later act likewise proved unsatisfactory and as early as 1874 an agitation was begun by the civil-service employees of Great Britain asking for important amendments with additional benefits, resulting in the appointment by Parliament of several royal commissions, which undertook to make a critical survey of the whole situation and to prove or disprove the statement of the employees that the practical administration of the act of 1859 resulted in substantially decreasing their salaries, because all persons who were placed in a pensionable class with an ultimate pension in view were compensated at a less rate of pay than those engaged upon the same or similar work who did not come within the pensionable class.

It was therefore found that practically one person out of seven on an average lived long enough to enjoy the benefits of a retirement allowance, though, as a matter of fact, all persons, as stated above, expecting to receive the benefit of a pension were receiving less compensation than they otherwise would have been paid.

After 50 years of agitation, Parliament passed the act of September 20, 1909, and recognized in the amendments made that there was substantial merit in the contentions of the employees as to the inequalities and inequities of the act of 1859.

The present act under which civil-service employees of Great Britain are retired on account of age or disability Mr. Brown considers an indirect though essentially a contributory scheme, and in concluding his review of the several acts referred to summarizes his conclusion in part as follows:

The conclusions to be drawn from Great Britain's century of experience in pensioning its civil employees are very definite. That experience shows that pensions paid out of the public treasury as pure gratuities are certain to be taken into account in fixing salaries, and a pension system thus becomes, in effect, a contributory system. As soon as the employees realize that they are contributing to their own pension they at once demand that, on separation from the service for any cause whatever, the value of their contributions shall be returned to them in some form. It is in recognition of the reluctance of human nature to give something for nothing—shown first by the officers of the Government in taking the pension into account in fixing salaries, and next by the employees in their unwillingness to forfeit their contributions under any circumstance—that the pension system of England was modified by the act of September 20, 1909.

RETIRING AGES OF EMPLOYEES.

The Lehlbach-Sterling bill groups certain classes of employees for the purpose of establishing ages of retirement. Railway postal clerks under the provisions of this bill are eligible for retirement at 60 years of age after 15 years of service. Mechanics, city and rural letter carriers, and post-office clerks retire at 62 years of age after 15 years of service, and all other employees, not embraced in the above-mentioned groups, retire at the age of 65 years after 15 years of service.

The Smoot amendment, adopted by the Senate, eliminates the group arrangement and retires all employees at the age of 70 years. In all retirement bills which have been thus far presented the effort has been made to group, for the purpose of establishing ages of retirement, those employees whose occupation is more or less hazardous. For example, railway postal employees, where the records of the Post Office Department show that this class of employees suffer physical breakdown earlier than perhaps any other class of civil-service workers.

Statistics have been prepared to show that mechanics in the navy yards and in the arsenals also suffer earlier physical breakdown than do other classes of employees engaged in purely clerical work. The same has been found to be true of city and rural letter carriers, though the statistics as to rural letter carriers are not as complete as those with respect to city letter carriers and post-office clerks. This explains why mechanics, city and rural letter carriers, and post-office clerks have been put in a group by themselves in establishing the age of retirement.

Of course it must be conceded that if all civil-service employees are to be retired at the age of 70 years it will materially reduce the ultimate cost to the Government under the terms of the bill, but in justice to those groups of employees who are engaged in more or less hazardous employment an earlier age should, in justice and fairness to them, be fixed under the terms of this bill. As a compromise the groups of employees retiring at the ages of 60 and 62 might be advanced to 65, and all other workers retired at the age of 70. It may be of interest, however, to state that superannuated civil-service employees retired by Great Britain under the provisions of the act of September 20, 1909, to which reference has been made, are compulsorily retired at the age of 65. This is general as applied to civil-service employees in Great Britain. In France superannuated civil-service employees are retired at the age of 68.

Personally I agree with the committee of the House that the Smoot amendment should not obtain in this bill, as it in a large measure vitiates many of the good effects of the bill. The bill as it originally came from the House committee and as now amended by the House committee should obtain and be enacted into law, because it gives to the employees every advantage to be gained under the Smoot amendment, and in addition to this makes it possible for the Government to protect itself against keeping persons from 62 or 65 to the age of 70 who are incompetent or for any reason unable to perform their duties efficiently. Under the House amendment it is possible for the Government to extend by two-year periods the time of superannuation of the Government employee, thus making him retire at about the age of 70 if he proves efficient and qualified in every way, but it also makes it possible for the Government to retire the man at 65 should he be found to be utterly inefficient and incompetent. This elasticity works to the advantage both of the Government and of the effective and efficient Federal employees and should be retained in the bill. One of the real reasons for making this bill is to effect efficiency and economy and to increase the morale of the entire Government employees. This, in my judgment, the Smoot amendment entirely nullifies and it should therefore not receive the approval of the House. The Smoot amendment absolutely forces the Government, as is now the case, to retain on the pay rolls all employees between the ages of 65 and 70 whether they are competent or not.

WHAT WILL THE SYSTEM COST THE GOVERNMENT?

From the best actuarial authorities and from the hearings presented it would be quite accurate to make the deduction that the Government would contribute over 62 per cent of the cost and the employees a little over 37 per cent of the cost. In fact, it is quite the opinion of those who have given this their best and most thorough study that, under the terms of the bill, the Government will ultimately contribute about five-eighths of the cost and the employees about three-eighths.

I am advised that the Lehlbach-Sterling bill, which in all essential particulars is identical in its provisions with the McKellar-Keating bill, has been the subject of extended and critical examination by the actuaries both in the employ of the Government and in private employ. I am advised that Mr. Joseph S. McCoy, Government actuary, connected with the Treasury Department, made an actuarial examination of the bill under consideration, and the report of his examination was submitted to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment of the Senate. I take pleasure in quoting from his report as to the cost of the plan:

[1] Excess over amount sufficient to pay annuity.

From this table the following illuminating deductions can be made:

On the basic salary of $1,200 for the nine periods, the Government will contribute about 66⅔ per cent; on the $1,800 basic salary, the Government would contribute about 49⅞ per cent; on the $2,000 basic salary, the Government would contribute about 44 per cent; and on the $2,500 basic salary, the Government would contribute about 33⅝ per cent; or, taking the average on the four basic salaries for the several periods, the Government would contribute about 48 7/18 per cent.

The following letter by Jos. S. McCoy, the Government actuary, who is an authority on actuarial figures, is so replete with fundamental facts and illuminating information that I wish to insert it here in full:

JANUARY 15, 1920.

Hon. PAUL F. MYERS,
Chief Clerk, Treasury Department.

DEAR SIR: Referring to your letter of the 8th instant, relative to Senate bill 1699, proposing a scheme for the retirement of civil-service employees, I have to say as follows:

The method of retiring employees in the classified service contained in Senate bill 1699 provides for the employees loaning the Government 2½ per cent of their salaries at a rate of interest lower than that paid by the Government on its war bonds.

This loan, instead of having a fixed date of maturity, is to be repaid them upon their separation from the service, whether on account of death, resignation, or other cause. If the employee reaches the age of 65 while still in the service, after a service of 15 years or more, the loan is repaid in the shape of a fixed annuity, depending principally upon the length of service, but also upon the salary received for the last 10 years of service. It may be stated that the maximum salary basis for this annuity is about that now paid on entrance.

If the annuitant lives long enough to exhaust his loan, together with the interest thereon, the deficit is to be made good by the Government and the full annuity is continued until his death.

From this it is evident that no aid is given any employee by the Government unless he continues in the service and lives long enough to be retired, and then, also, long enough to exhaust his loan to the Government.

It is also evident that each person is saving for himself and not for the general service. His payments go into a fund for himself and not into a general fund for all employees. This is a fact, even if it happens, as it often will, that his salary is so high and he has continued in the service so long that his loan to the Government is large enough to be more than sufficient to pay the annuity due him. In this case provision is made that his estate shall receive the balance.

At first, the burden of paying these annuities would be entirely upon the Government, those who are retired at once not having contributed at all. This would change gradually until those who are now entering the service would be retired. Finally the contribution on the part of the Government would be somewhere around 50 per cent. If entrance to the service was limited by age to those under 30 years, the Government's contribution would probably fall below 50 per cent.

The maximum number of annuitants will not probably exceed 30,000. The total annual payment to these would be about $18,000,000, of which the Government would probably contribute not in excess of $10,000,000 annually, and this could readily be reduced to not in excess of $9,000,000 annually, much less than the bonus now paid.

Not having statistics of the service as at present constituted, I have estimated the number of employees of each age in the service upon the basis of a total of 300,000 employees. Allowance has been made in this estimate for the large increase in personnel during the last few years. This estimate places the total number, 65 years of age and over, at 12,220, and the number who have reached 60 years, but not 65 years of age, at 12,500. It places the number to be retired at once under the provisions of this bill at 9,285. The average number on the retired list for the first 10 years and the total payments thereto are as follows:

	Number.	Payment.
First year	10,116	$6,099,600
Second year	11,835	7,101,000
Third year	13,300	7,980,000
Fourth year	14,418	8,650,800
Fifth year	15,456	9,273,600
Sixth year	16,467	9,880,200
Seventh year	17,495	10,497,000
Eighth year	18,557	11,134,200
Ninth year	19,735	11,841,000
Tenth year	20,944	12,566,400

The average annuity paid would not be over $600, due to the length of service of those retired.

These computations are based upon the retirement at not before 65 years of age, as the number that can be retired at 60 and 62 years is unknown. It is probable that the majority of those entitled to retirement at those early ages will not be retired during the first 10 years.

As before stated, it is not a fair method to deduct from the payments made by the clerks the above payments. For the first year the Government would have to bear all the burden of these, about $6,000,000. After that the share contributed by the clerks would increase until in about 30 or 40 years the normal would be reached, when the Government's share would not, upon this basis, be in excess of $10,000,000 per annum; probably about $9,000,000. It is doubtful whether the maximum contribution by the Government for any one year will ever reach $15,000,000, based upon a service of 300,000 employees.

As before stated, the 30,000 employees, the maximum that will probably ever be upon the retired list at any one time, are the only employees aided by the Government, the remaining employees, those dying and those leaving the service for any other cause, receiving upon such separation only the amount contributed by them, together with the moderate interest thereon. For this reason it would seem futile to complicate the analysis of this scheme by attempting any analysis beyond that of the annuitants themselves.

While there are a number of inequalities and faults of omission and commission in this scheme, it is probable that modifications made as the working of the scheme may show necessary will be able to perfect it and make of it a model plan of superannuation beneficial to the Government and to the employee alike.

While the plan will eventually cost the Government some $9,000,000 a year, it is very evident that the efficiency of the service will be increased at least 5 per cent, which is equivalent to over $18,000,000 per year.

Annexed is a table showing the present worth of annuities for life, beginning at the age of 65 years; also, a table showing the amount of the payments made by the employees upon reaching the age of 65 years, based upon the age of entrance and upon their salaries, together with the contribution necessary to be made by the Government, both as to amount and percentage, in each case, so as to pay the corresponding annuity.

Respectfully,

JOS. S. MCCOY,
Government Actuary.

I wish to insert the following table of figures submitted by Mr. Joseph S. McCoy, the Government actuary, to the chairman, Mr. LEHLBACH, of the Civil Service Reform Committee. This table very clearly indicates the lack of real business efficiency in our present method of operating Government business and shows the necessity for a retirement law such as the one proposed.

Estimated cost to the Government of not retiring clerks inefficient through mental or physical incapacity. Based upon a total number of 300,000 employees.

	Estimated number of clerks who, chiefly through age, are inefficient.	Annual salary of employees.		Total cost of—
		Average salary.	Total salary.	Nonretirement.	Retirement.
100 per cent inefficient	5,202	$900	$4,681,800	$4,681,800	$3,121,200
75 per cent inefficient	1,737	1,000	1,737,000	1,302,750	1,042,200
50 per cent inefficient	1,256	1,200	1,507,200	753,600	753,600
Total	8,195		7,926,000	6,738,150	4,917,000

That is, the Government is now paying annually some 8,195 employees $6,738,150 for work not performed by them, but actually performed by other employees. It would cost about $4,917,000 per year to retire these employees, a net saving by retirement of about $1,821,150.

If we take into consideration the $240 bonus, which will be granted to these 8,195 employees for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, there will be an additional saving of $1,966,800.

I am further advised that the McKellar-Keating bill was actuarily examined by Dr. Maddrill, at that time employed as actuary in the Bureau of Efficiency, and I take pleasure in referring to his testimony before the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment of the Senate from which I read:

The CHAIRMAN. Dr. Maddrill, have you made a statement as to the estimated receipts in the form of deductions from employees' salaries, for the first six years, and the disbursements upon withdrawals prior to pension age, the pensions, and guaranteed returns to pensioners, and the differences in these figures; and if so, will you file the same as Exhibit C to this hearing?

Dr. MADDRILL. I herewith file a statement along those lines.

(The statement referred to is here printed in full, as follows:)

"EXHIBIT C.—Estimated excess of amount of deductions over the amount paid upon withdrawal and as pensions and guaranteed returns to pensioners.

"[McKellar-Keating bill (S. 4637, H. R. 12352).]

Fiscal year ending July 1—	Receipts in the form of deductions.	Disbursements upon withdrawals prior to pension age.	Pensions and guaranteed returns to pensioners.	Excess.
1920	$9,000,000	$400,000	$1,732,000	$6,900,000
1921	9,400,000	865,000	1,972,000	6,550,000
1922	9,500,000	1,340,000	2,154,000	6,000,000
1923	9,600,000	1,840,000	2,400,000	5,350,000
1924	9,700,000	2,360,000	2,589,000	4,750,000
1925	9,770,000	2,910,000	2,778,000	4,100,000

"The amounts of pensions and guaranteed returns to pensioners can be computed for the first few years with fair confidence, for the reason that the portion of the service which they cover is probably not much affected by the present abnormal conditions. These payments are to be made not only from the civil service retirement fund but also from public moneys.

"On the other hand, the amounts of the deduction to be received, following the passage of the bill, from the employees now in the service are just as indeterminate as the present size of the service itself. While the Bureau of Efficiency, in the course of other investigations, has been called upon to estimate the size of the present service, and has, perhaps, received as authentic information as can be furnished, the numbers assumed to be now in the service must be deemed conjectural. The amounts of deductions received and of disbursements upon withdrawals prior to pension age must, therefore, be taken as more or less uncertain approximations.

"It seems hardly necessary to point out that the differences in the last column are not an index to the solvency of the scheme. They have no actual significance. The amounts in the first column are received to pay definite pensions mostly in the distant future, though they may, like savings deposits, be withdrawn from the account earlier. The amounts in the third column are combined costs to the Government and to the employee."

The CHAIRMAN. From these figures on Exhibit A, I notice that the percentage is a little more than 5 per cent. Generally speaking, do you think that 5 per cent of the salaries of the civil-service employees will pay for this system?

Mr. MADDRILL. Five per cent will very nearly cover the cost of this proposed bill, as shown by these figures.

The CHAIRMAN. I now call your attention to Exhibit C, in which I notice that within the first six years the aggregate amounts received from the employees are very considerably in excess of the amount to be paid out in pensions and guaranteed returns to the annuitants and to be paid out upon withdrawals prior to the pension age. Will you kindly explain this?

Mr. MADDRILL. The statement made following the table in Exhibit C practically covers these points, Senator. There I have endeavored to make it clear that the receipts in the form of deductions greatly exceed the gross payments to be made during the first few years of the system. When all the employees at present in the service have retired the figures will show receipts and disbursements very nearly equal.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, Dr. Maddrill, as I understand you, while for the first few years the aggregate amount received from the employees will very considerably exceed the amount paid out by the Government, still, as the years go by and the system continues in force, the amount that the Government pays will increase until the two will be about equal?

Mr. MADDRILL. That is true. I might add one thing more. This statement would be almost exactly true if no growth were to take place in the service, but as it is natural to assume that the service will always grow, the payments made in the form of deductions being made by the employees for benefits to be received by them many years hence will for that reason rather exceed payments paid out by the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. Some criticism has been suggested that inasmuch as the United States Government now needs all its funds to carry on the war, it would not be wise to institute this system, which will cost the Government money, while the war is going on. As I understand these figures, instead of the Government having to pay out any money for the retirement system for the next few years, it will actually receive more money from the employees during the next few years than it will pay out in retirement pensions; is that correct?

Mr. MADDRILL. Of course, you understand that the moneys paid in by the employees actually belong to them, and, accordingly, during the first few years of the system they could be regarded as a loan by the employees to the Government. In other words, the funds paid in by the employees are trust funds in the hands of the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. Dr. Maddrill, have you made a statement of figures in reference to this cost, and, if so, will you submit it for the record and mark it "Exhibit D"?

Mr. MADDRILL. I have made figures showing the calculation of the cost the first years of pensions and guaranties, and will mark the same "Exhibit D" and submit it herewith.

(The matter referred to is here printed in full, as follows:)

EXHIBIT D.—Cost of pensions and guaranties.

In the consideration of the cost we should not overlook the estimated loss in dollars and cents to the Government at the present time due to inefficiency on account of superannuation and physical disability.

In 1912 it was estimated that the Government was annually sustaining a loss of about $2,500,000 as the result of maintaining upon its rolls inefficient employees in the various branches of the service, the inefficiency being primarily due to superannuation or physical disability. In other words, the Government is now maintaining, by indirection at least, a costly system of civil pensions where the presence of these aged and infirm persons can not help but be demoralizing to the younger personnel of the service, as in many cases these aged employees perform little or no service and report for duty merely for the purpose of drawing their regular monthly pay.

The question may be asked, Why are these aged employees retained in the service, why are they not dismissed because of their inefficiency? The answer is plain. To do so would be considered heartless and cruel and contrary to the dictates of humanity, and Congress has been repeatedly told by Cabinet officers, heads of bureaus, and other supervisory officials that they will not dismiss these aged people, as to do so would in many cases result in great distress or would force these people to be cared for by charitable institutions if not fortunate enough to have friends or relatives who would provide for them.

The Government of the United States, rich, prosperous, and a leader in world thought, is the only civilized Nation in the world which has not made some sort of provision to take care of its aged and disabled civil-service workers.

Congress has enacted legislation pensioning the employees in the Life-Saving Service, the enlisted men in the Coast Guard Service, and the employees in the Lighthouse Establishment, and the Judiciary. In addition, Army and Navy paymasters clerks are pensioned, and in all of these instances wholly at the expense of the Government and without any contributions from the employees themselves, while this bill attempts to make a division of the cost between the Government and its employees upon approximately the basis of five-eighths for the Government and three-eighths for the employees.

The bill carries an appropriation of $100,000 to cover administrative expenses, and this money is to be appropriated out of moneys not otherwise appropriated in the Treasury of the United States. It has been claimed, and I accept it as being true, that for a period of nine or ten years the Government will not be called upon to make any direct appropriations from the Treasury for the purpose of paying annuities, for the reason that during this period it has been estimated by the actuaries that the moneys derived from the deductions from the salaries of the employees will accumulate in considerable volume, and from this civil-service retirement fund annuities will be paid. During this period of time, of course, the Government will hold these deductions with the accumulating compound interest at the rate of 4 per cent, compounded annually, as a trustee, but nevertheless will have the use of this money for the purpose of paying annuities.

As bearing upon the question of cost, I wish to call attention to the following statement made by the Joint Commission on Reclassification of Salaries in its report submitted to Congress on March 12, 1920:

NEED FOR RETIREMENT LAW.

Your commission recommends the immediate enactment of an actuarially sound retirement law. Our investigations have convinced us that the Government is maintaining a most expensive civil pension system. Thousands of superannuates encumber the pay rolls and reduce the morale of the departments. Some are brought to their desks in wheeled chairs, and in one case an employee frankly told your commission that he had no duties, "because he was blind." Of course, no administrative officer has been found heartless enough to dismiss these faithful servants from the positions they occupy. Their salaries amount to much more than would be the cost of a generous retirement system, to say nothing of the decreased efficiency resulting from their presence.

In making the statement quoted from the report, it should be borne in mind that the commission had the fullest opportunity during the period covered by the report in making a detailed study of the entire civil service in the city of Washington, including not only the departmental service but the civil-service personnel of the District of Columbia as well. Questionnaires were submitted by approximately 100,000 civil-service employees.

HOW WILL THE RECLASSIFICATION OF SALARIES AFFECT THE OPERATION OF THE RETIREMENT LAW?

It has been contended by some that in the event Congress should enact a retirement law for the civilian employees of the Government based upon their individual contributions, it would at once be made the basis for a general increase of salaries to cover the amount of such deductions. It should be remembered that the bill under consideration provides that no deduction shall exceed 2½ per cent of the basic pay, salary, or compensation of the employees. The report of the Joint Commission on Reclassification of Salaries plainly shows that independent of any retirement law the salaries of Government employees should be readjusted with substantial increases in many instances, and if the report of this joint commission should be made the basis for the enactment of law embodying the recommendations contained in the report, it would undoubtedly create a greater sense of satisfaction on the part of the employees contributing a portion of their salaries toward the creation of their retiring annuities, simply for the reason that the increases recommended by the joint commission are more than sufficient to cover the small percentage of deduction contemplated under the terms and provisions of this bill.

In order that the records may have a complete answer to the oft-repeated question, What is the number of civil-service employees in the District of Columbia and in the various departments of the Government? I wish to insert here a letter from the Hon. Martin A. Morrison, president of the United States Civil Service Commission, together with a table of statistics covering this inquiry:

UNITED STATES CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C., March 24, 1920.

Hon. ADOLPHUS P. NELSON, M. C.,
Room 276, Office Building, House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. NELSON: In response to your personal inquiry as to the number of persons in the Federal civil service, I inclose herein two tables. You will note that one relates only to employees within the District of Columbia. This list is approximately correct down to January 31, 1920. We have no later figures that are complete.

The other list relates only to service outside the District of Columbia and is approximately correct down to July 1, 1919. We have no later figures that are complete. You will note that the total number within the District of Columbia on January 31, 1920, was 100,110. It is estimated that by July 1, 1920, the number will be smaller.

You will note that the total in the field service (outside the District of Columbia) on July 1, 1919, was 657,744. This number has been considerably reduced and is being reduced.

Total number in District of Columbia	100,110
	757, 854

The commission estimates that by July 1, 1920, the grand total of 757,854 will be reduced to less than 650,000. Of course, drastic legislation in the meantime may make greater reductions. As the commission must await official reports on appointments and separations, it is rarely possible to give official figures complete and accurate to date. The commission has compiled no data in the matter of the ages of Federal employees, and therefore can not estimate the effect of the pending retirement legislation.

Very truly, yours,
MARTIN A. MORRISON,
President.

UNITED STATES CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C., April 27, 1920.

Hon. ADOLPHUS P. NELSON,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. NELSON: Supplementing my letter to you of March 24, 1920, I respectfully call your attention to the fact that the figures therein include the entire personnel of the civilian Executive branch of the Federal Government. In order to give you the best available figures on the probable number that will be in the competitive classified civil service on July 1, 1920, I beg to report that the number will be approximately 430,000 persons.

Very truly, yours,
MARTIN A. MORRISON,
President.

POST-OFFICE EMPLOYEES.

Some time ago I received from the Chamber of Commerce of Ashland, Wis., the following statement:

At a meeting of the board of directors of the Ashland Chamber of Commerce held Tuesday, April 6, 1920, the matter of the insufficient help in the Ashland post office came to its attention, and the Secretary was instructed to write you calling attention to the condition as exists locally, and in addition to make the recommendation for the board of directors of the Ashland Chamber of Commerce that attention be given to the general matter of the increase in pay for post office as well as other Federal employees.

This request from the Chamber of Commerce of Ashland led me to make a thorough investigation into the service of our post-office employees, and I am amazed at the inadequate salaries which are provided for this large branch of the Government service. Indeed, it is my belief, after a thorough investigation, that the post-office employees are one of the most efficient and conscientious set of men in our Government service and deserve our very best consideration. I find that but trifling increases have been made in their salaries since the year 1883, while the cost of living has increased since that time over 100 per cent.

We hear very much these days about the inadequate pay of the preacher and the teacher, and I am persuaded that the teacher and the preacher are entirely inadequately paid for the services rendered to the good of society. I am also persuaded that to this class must be added the post-office Federal employee, and I wish to say, at this point, that I sincerely hope that when the report of the Reclassification Commission will be before us, we will do the right thing and give a square deal to all post-office employees. During all the hardships of the war they stood manfully by our Government and have given us their very best all through the great conflict. The postal employees stuck manfully to their duties and worked untold overtime periods but did not receive an adequate raise to help them. In my judgment, it is necessary for us to conserve the best interests of our Postal System by giving a proper wage to our postal employees. Under most trying conditions in many places they have faithfully performed their duties, and I believe that it is up to Congress to see that the service shall be improved by keeping in the service, through adequate wage and proper retirement law, the best talent and the best brains possible. I am glad to believe that when we shall have the whole question before us we should do the square thing by this important branch of our Government service, and these faithful employees of the Postal Service shall be given a square deal. [Applause.]

For facts and figures and suggestions upon which I base my arguments, I wish to give full credit to Joseph S. McCoy, the Government actuary; Dr. Lewellyn Jordan, of the Treasury Department; Gilbert E. Hyatt, president of the National Federation of Postal Employees; R. H. Alcorn, chairman of the Joint Conference on Retirement and president of the American National Association of Supervisors; John S. Beach, of the Pension Bureau; E. J. Ryan, president National Railway Mail Association; Senator STERLING, of the Senate Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment; and to our able chairman of the House committee, Mr. LEHLBACH, who has worked most efficiently in season and out of season for the enactment of a proper retirement law.

NEEDS OF POST-OFFICE CLERKS AS TO RETIREMENT.

One of the handicaps of the post-office clerk is the name under which he is known. He is not a clerk in the common meaning of the term, but is a highly specialized tradesman who, after undergoing an arduous training, becomes a skilled distributor of mail. This trade is based upon an accurate knowledge of a series of facts concerning the proper dispatch of mail to trains, or of the names of firms, the streets, and numbers served by the carriers of his city. Just how severe the training required is can be shown by the following tabulation of facts necessary to the proper dispatch of one city:

A SEVERE TEST OF EFFICIENCY.

During his service he is required to commit to memory a scheme of distribution comprising from 10,000 to 25,000 separate and distinct notations or facts. To illustrate: He must know that the town of Olney, Ill., is in the county of Richland, that a letter for that place must be dispatched on the 8.30 a. m. auto for connection with the Chicago and Carbondale railway post-office train 23, No. 1, via Champaign, leaving the Illinois Central depot at 8.45 a. m. When this train is gone he must know on what train to send it next and so on as per following schedule:

Chicago and Carbondale train 23, No. 1 (via Champaign), Illinois Central depot, pouch locks 8.29 a. m., auto 8.30 a. m., train time 8.45 a. m.

Chicago and St. Louis train 21, No. 3, Dearborn station, pouch locks 9.41 a. m., auto 9.42 a. m., train time 10 a. m.

Chicago, Springfield, and St. Louis train 1, No. 3, Union station, pouch locks 9.59 a. m., auto 10 a. m., train time 10.15 a. m.

Chicago and Evansville train 93, No. 3, Dearborn station, pouch locks 12.06 p. m., auto 12.07 p. m., train time 12.25 p. m.

Chicago and Carbondale train 3, No. 2, except Saturday, Illinois Central station, pouch locks 5.59 p. m., auto 6 p. m., train time 6.15 p. m.

Chicago and Carbondale train 21, No. 2, except Saturday, Illinois Central station, pouch locks 8.14 p. m., auto 8.15 p. m., train time 8.30 p. m.

He must have stored away in his memory approximately the same amount of information regarding 2,000 to 5,000 other post offices in his particular State or section of States. He must, besides, be ever on the alert for letters that are overweight or stamps that are uncanceled while he distributes mail at the rate of 50 to 75 pieces per minute.

As train schedules change, post offices are discontinued, new ones established, or old ones reestablished, the schemes of distribution are in a continual state of fluctuation, so that the clerk, in order to maintain a proper standard of efficiency, must study and practice at home.

He must be prepared to take an examination every 75 days or every year, according to scheme, and pass with a mark of not less than 95 per cent. This requires him to devote on an average of one hour a day to his study at home.

Regarding the efficiency of the average post-office clerk, Mr. Frank H. Galbraith, superintendent of mails in the Chicago office, made the statement that the post-office clerk makes only one error in every 34,026 pieces of mail handled, while the general public makes one in every 177.

When it is realized that the dispatch of mail to a whole State, or even a group of States, forms the necessary equipage of every distributor, it becomes plain that only the freshest and most retentive minds can absorb the new facts and unlearn the old ones involved in this work. Men of advanced years can not acquire with any degree the same facility as can a young man the new and arbitrary series of data which is the trade of the post-office clerk. In addition to this basic condition, which is enough in itself to establish that any man of 62 years, perhaps at his highest efficiency for other classes of work, is past his zenith as a distributor, are certain other conditions surrounding this calling which make it peculiarly one of the Government industries to which the principle of retirement should be applied in the interests of both humanity and of efficiency. [Applause.]

SALARIES OF POSTAL EMPLOYEES.

The postal employees have been notoriously underpaid for many years. So much is this true that it is a palpable impossibility for a competent employee to save on the wage formerly established and the one now allowed. For many years the maximum salary was $1,200, only reached after at least six years in lower classifications, $1,100 having been the limit in the second-class office. At present there has been allowed a temporary classification with a maximum of $1,650. That this increase, gained after over a decade of waiting, is now less adequate than the former classification at the time of its inauguration is shown by the following tables of cost compiled by Chicago post-office clerks and making a more modest estimate of the situation than many other creditable sources have brought forward.

A MINIMUM EXISTENCE EXPENSE ACCOUNT FOR FAMILY OF FOUR.

Minimum existence expense account for family of four, including two children of school age:

Rent, $25 per month	$300.00
Fuel, 5 tons coal at $12 per ton	60.00
Gas and light, $4 per month	48.00
Food, at 18 cents per person per meal, $15.12 per week	786.24
Clothing, including shoes, underclothing, coats, hats, suits, etc., husband and wife, $150; two children, $150	300.00
Insurance, household and life	92.60
Telephone, necessity because of irregular working hours	18.00
Reading matter, newspaper and two magazines	13.88
Carfare to and from work only	37.44
Doctor and dentist bills	50.00
Household upkeep, $5 per month, and incidentals, $2 per month	84.00
Total for year's necessities	1,790.16

ESTIMATE BASED ON AMERICAN STANDARD OF LIVING.

Additional items necessary to the maintenance of an American standard of living:

Interest on home, $15 per month	$180.00
Fuel, 1 ton additional	12.00
Repairs and upkeep	100.00
Insurance on house	10.00
Reading matter for educational purposes	10.00
Church or lectures	25.00
Recreation, vacation, $50; movies or other diversions, $1 per week	102.00
	439.00
Doctor and dentist bills reduced $25 because of better living conditions	25.00
	414.00
Minimum existence, total	1,790.16
Grand total	2,204.16

In comparing these totals with the prevailing salaries paid the postal employees the question arises as to how they manage to get along.

A comparative scale of wages, gathered by the same organization, the Chicago Local No. 1, National Federation of Postal Employees, shows something of the handicap suffered by the postal employees on the score of comparative remuneration:

REMUNERATION IN PRIVATE INDUSTRIES FAR GREATER THAN IN POSTAL SERVICE.

That private industries have recognized the necessity for wages commensurate with the increased cost of living is evidenced by the following table of salaries. We insert the salaries of postal employees at the bottom of each group to show the marked contrast in Government salaries.

Live-stock handlers, feeders	1,800.00
Common labor, men and women	1,632.40
Post-office clerks, including expert distributers—maximum	1,500.00

TEAMSTERS AND CHAUFFEURS.
Laundry-wagon drivers, $25 per week and commission, average $40 per week	2,080.00
Milk-wagon drivers, $35 per week and commission, average $36.50	1,898.00
Bakery-wagon drivers, $25 per week and commission, average $42 per week	2,184.00
Chauffeurs, 7-ton truck	1,768.00
Chauffeurs, 5-ton truck	1,638.00
Chauffeurs, 3-ton truck	1,508.00
Teamsters, 4-horse wagon	1,508.00
Post-office clerks, expert distributers included—maximum	1,500.00

RAILROAD OFFICE CLERKS.

Freight rate clerks, $1,500 to $1,700 per year and over.

Post-office clerks are the lowest paid of any of the above-mentioned workers.

The rate of increase in the cost of living is claimed by experts to be one which will continue. The present situation is shown by the following table:

HOW COST OF FOOD INCREASED.

In support of the food item of $786.24, we submit the following table taken from the report issued by the Government April 18, 1919:

	1913	1914	1917	1918	To-day.
Sirloin steak, pound	$0.25	$0.26	$0.30	$0.37	$0.45
Pork chops, do	.20	.30	.31	.38	.42
Bacon, sliced, do	.32	.32	.50	.60	.63
Lard, do	.15	.15	.31	.35	.37
Eggs, dozen	.39	.35	.30	.68	.52
Butter, pound	.36	.36	.49	.65	.72
Milk, quart	.08	.08	.12	.14	.13
Bread, pound loaf	.06	.07	.10	.10	.10
Sugar, pound	.05	.06	.08	.10	.11

As a whole, 22 articles were 2 per cent higher last month than the preceding month, and were 14 per cent higher than March, 1918.

For the six-year period, March, 1913, to March, 1919, the increase in the retail prices of all the foods was 80 per cent, with flour, bacon, lard, and cornmeal increasing more than 100 per cent.

This should establish the fact that the postal worker is not and has not been in a position to lay up a surplus against old age. If the Government has taken his youth and vitality until he can no longer meet the strain of his calling, without paying a sufficient wage to allow him to provide for himself the responsibility for his proper provision in old age certainly rests with his employer.

To return to the peculiarities of the post-office clerks' calling a number of other circumstances make it one in which it is not a profession to be followed to an advanced age.

NIGHT WORK.

Work at night is deteriorating. The unnatural conditions of rest and of labor inseparable from duty at night are wearing on young men, producing an earlier breakdown. On the older man, requiring his natural rest for recuperation, this hardship produces a keen effect on the well being of the individual and on the quality of his work. Something like 70 per cent of the distributors work at night.

OVERTIME.

The Post Office Department exacts from its employees an amount of overtime at certain periods of the year that can not be followed without a drain on the vitality. Bitter complaint has been made against this by the clerks of the service, and these complaints are being made at the present time. Chicago, Minneapolis, Omaha, and other places are cases in point.

SPEEDING UP.

The very nature of the work requires, during the rush periods when the post offices are swamped with mail, in the evenings, at the first of the month, and the beginning of the year, and of the quarters of the year, that the post-office clerk must work at high tension. The form of the examinations he must pass, periodically, to prove his qualification for the job show that speed is considered one of the prime requisites. Add to this the almost perfect accuracy obviously necessary and it becomes plain that while the young and the middle-aged can meet the strain, the aged can not.

LOWERED MORALE.

One of the by-products of a lack of a retirement provision is the effect on the men in the service. The boys have before their eyes every day that they work object lessons in the penalty paid by those who spend a lifetime in the Government service. They see the aged employee, after years of expert work, struggling to keep up his end, pitifully trying to hide the fact that he is not able to deliver the amount of work set as a standard by the average of the other men, and only hoping that his deficiencies will pass unnoticed. They realize that the old man is there only on sufferance and that it is only the simple humanity or perhaps the shame of those in authority which prevents him being driven from the service. Concrete examples of this condition may be found in almost every post office of any size in the country. The effect on the young man entering the service can be seen in the increasing difficulty of retaining these young men in the service. A letter from Detroit says that it is hard to retain the newcomer beyond two days and that the younger element among the regular force is resigning at the rate of from 10 to 20 a week. The civil-service periodicals throughout the country show the effort necessary to recruit the force to its bare requirements. Under this situation it is the young man who leaves, the old one must remain, and the result is an increasing retirement problem. Chicago and New York are in this condition, and it is a general rather than an exceptional condition throughout the country. It simply means that the recruit for the service, learning the facts surrounding his employment and seeing the concrete proofs that the calling holds no future, leaves it as soon as possible. The former attitude of the public, that any Government job was a good job, is fast changing to the commonly heard expression that the Government service is no place for the forward-looking and ambitious. The advice given now is to keep out and not, as formerly, to enter.

Even if executives so brutal as to throw out the old employees could be found there is no remedy in this but an aggravation of the problem, as it would simply mean another argument to deter the young man, who must continuously recruit the Government ranks, from applying for these positions. If the Post Office Department is to recover the ground it has lost and attract again to its ranks the men of the snap and enthusiasm that its obvious requirements make necessary, it must, among other things, make it a calling that a man is not afraid to stay in. The passage of a retirement measure will not solve all the problems, but it will relieve one of the most pressing.

INSANITARY POST OFFICES.

Many of the post offices of the country are not fit for the purpose for which they were erected. In addition, insanitary conditions prevail in some of the largest. A notable example is the Chicago post office, the sanitary condition of which has been a source of complaint for over a decade. Lack of ventilation, proper lighting, and even of ordinary cleaning have been continuously complained of without redress. Such surroundings contribute to a lowered efficiency, a higher sick and death rate, and an earlier superannuation. Uncleaned, even undusted, mail sacks not only spread germs through the offices but must contaminate the mail received by the public. Tuberculosis rises to the dignity of an occupational disease among post-office clerks.

SCIENTIFIC ANALYSIS OF THE LEHLBACH-STERLING BILL.

The first paragraph of section 1 defines the optional age when employees shall be eligible for retirement and makes it a condition precedent for retirement on an annuity that the employee shall have rendered in the aggregate at least 15 years of service.

Except in the preferential classes, the age for retirement is fixed at 65 years. The optional age for retirement of mechanics, city and rural letter carriers, and post office clerks is 62 years, for the reason that their occupation is either hazardous, laborious, or subject to exposure, or the conditions of their employment are such as to render them incapable for efficient service at a comparatively early age. By analyzing the provisions of section 6 in conjunction with the paragraph now under consideration, we find that retirement does not at once become compulsory, but that employees may be continued in the service beyond retirement age under certain conditions specified in that section. More extended reference to the question of optional and compulsory retirement will be made when section 6 is reached.

Employees of the Library of Congress and the Botanic Garden are included in the provisions of the act. These employees, coming as they do under the legislative branch of the Government, have a peculiar status. Although they are not in the classified civil service, yet their duties, rights, and privileges are analogous to those of other civil-service employees and their tenure of office is reasonably certain; therefore it would appear to be an act of justice to give them the same benefits of a retirement law as will be accorded to the employees in the classified civil service.

The power vested in the President to extend the scope of the law is in harmony with the authority already conferred upon the Executive in civil-service matters. That he shall have added power to exclude from the operation of the law certain employees is deemed wise, particularly in the interest of good administration. It will be noted, however, that this power is limited, and it is presumed will be invoked only to meet extraordinary contingencies which may arise from time to time and which would render administration of the law difficult or prejudicial to the interests of the Government or the employees concerned.

Certain employees of the municipal government of the District of Columbia are also included in the provisions of the act. The conditions of employment in this branch of the service are such as to warrant the extension of the law to include the employees mentioned in the third paragraph of section 1.

Postmasters are specifically excluded from the provisions of the act, for the reason that their occupation as such is usually incidental to other lines of business, and, in fact, in a large proportion of cases, they give only part time to the duties of the office; therefore the application of a retirement law for postmasters would be exceedingly difficult, if not inequitable, as compared with other branches of the service.

An act of Congress approved June 20, 1918, provides for retirement of certain employees in the Lighthouse Service, and as that act confers greater benefits upon those employees than they would receive under this bill they are also specifically excluded.

Section 2 defines the classifications and rates to be used as a basis for computing annuities, which are graduated both in relation to the number of years in the service and to the average annual salary, pay, or compensation during the last 10 years of service. A maximum and minimum annuity is fixed for each class, and it is provided that in no case shall an annuity exceed $720 per annum or be less than $180 per annum. As before indicated, no annuity shall be granted for less than 15 years' service.

The following table will serve to illustrate the scale of annuities provided in this section:

Table of annuities.

Average annual salary, pay, or compensation during last 10 years of service.	Class A, 30 years or more 60 per cent.	Class B, 27 to 30 years, 54 per cent.	Class C, 24 to 27 years, 48 per cent.	Class D, 21 to 24 years, 42 per cent.	Class E, 18 to 21 years, 36 per cent.	Class F, 15 to 18 years, 30 per cent.
$1,200 or more	$720	$648	$576	$504	$432	$360
$1,100	660	594	528	462	396	330
$1,000	600	540	480	420	360	300
$900	540	486	432	378	324	270
$800	480	432	384	336	288	240
$700	420	378	336	294	252	210
$600 or less	360	324	288	252	216	180

The House committee has added a very important amendment that should obtain in order to deal fairly and squarely with the higher paid employees of the Government when it added the following amendment at the end of section 2:

Whenever the contribution, with interest, of the employee, at the age of retirement will purchase an annuity of the kind provided for herein in excess of the annuity herein provided, the employee shall receive an annuity of the amount his contributions with interest will purchase.

It is evident to anyone who has given this deep and thorough study that this section is eminently fair and will remove the objections raised by the higher salaried Federal employees and will enhance the equity and square dealing of the entire people.

Section 3 gives the employee the benefit of all periods of service for the purpose of assignment to classes defined in section 2. If the employee is in receipt of a pension or compensation on account of military or naval service, the period of his or her service in the Army or Navy shall not be included for the purpose of assignment to classes; in the event, however, that such employee is not in receipt of a pension or compensation for such service, then the period of military or naval service may be included. This means, in effect, that the retired employee may receive an annuity in addition to a pension or compensation, but the period of military or naval service in such cases shall be eliminated for the purpose of computing annuity.

Section 4 provides for administration of the act by the Commissioner of Pensions under direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

The Bureau of Pensions is splendidly equipped to undertake this additional work. It is located in a spacious building, well lighted and well ventilated, and affords maximum facilities for transaction of official business. Included in its personnel are many employees who, by reason of education and training, have become skilled in the law and practice governing adjustment of pension claims. The medical division, under direction of the medical referee, includes employees possessing a technical knowledge of medical jurisprudence. More than 1,200 boards of examining surgeons scattered throughout the country come under the control of the bureau and are available for the purpose of making examinations at a minimum cost. There is also a corps of special examiners in the field service trained in making inquiries affecting the rights and interests of claimants and pensioners. The disbursing office is fully equipped with every modern mechanical appliance used for the purpose of writing and mailing pension checks.

It will be possible to utilize all these agencies in the business of adjusting claims for annuities and making payments when granted, thus providing administration at a minimum cost and yet with a maximum of efficiency.

The right of appeal to the Secretary of the Interior from any adverse action of the Commissioner of Pensions in his construction of the retirement law would be in harmony with present practice in pension matters, and the assurance that such appeal would be considered by a regularly constituted board guarantees to the appellant a judicial determination of his claim.

Section 5 provides for retirement of employees who become totally incapacitated for efficient service before reaching the retirement age. The interests of the Government have been carefully safeguarded in the drafting of this section.

The employee must have had at least 15 years of service before becoming eligible for retirement on account of disability. Retirement is conditioned upon an examination by competent medical authority, and total disability for efficient service must be satisfactorily established. The annuitant must submit to a medical examination annually until reaching the retirement age unless the disability is permanent in character. Provision is made for discontinuing the payment of annuity upon recovery from the disability and for suspending the annuity if the annuitant fails to comply with the rules and regulations applying to medical examination. The Commissioner of Pensions is given full authority to institute special examination at any time to determine the facts relative to the disability for which the employee has been retired.

If the nature of the disability is such as to give the employee the right to benefits under the Federal employees' compensation act, then he may elect whether he will accept such benefits or accept retirement or annuity as provided in this section.

Section 6 defines the conditions under which retirement shall be compulsory or may become optional. Upon reaching the retirement age the employee shall be automatically separated from the service unless arrangements have been made previously for his retention. The right to retire upon reaching the requisite age, or at any time thereafter, belongs to the employee; he can not be compelled to remain in the service after having attained retirement age. Retention in the service beyond retirement age rests primarily upon the decision of the administrative officer as to whether the employee is still capable of rendering efficient service to the Government, even under these conditions, and continuance of the employee in the service must be by mutual agreement between him and the administrative officer.

Continuance in the service shall be upon certification; first, by the administrative officer stating that the employee is efficient and is willing to continue in the service, and, finally, upon certification by the Civil Service Commission as a matter of official record. The certification shall be for two-year periods only, but may be terminated at any time at the will of the employee or by the administrative officer, should he decide that the employee shall have become inefficient. This point is more clearly defined in the proviso contained in section 7.

After the act has been in full force and effect for 10 years, retirement becomes compulsory at the end of four years after reaching the retirement age defined in section 1.

Section 7 gives the employee the privilege of filing an application for annuity 30 days in advance of his retirement, which will facilitate the adjudication of his claim and insure prompt payment of the annuity after separation from the service. The time is not limited, however, within which he may file the application, but it is absolutely necessary that he shall make claim in proper form before his application for annuity can be considered, and this claim must be supported by relevant facts based upon authentic records. The certificate to be issued by the Department of the Interior becomes evidence of the right to the annuity therein defined.

The date when the annuity shall commence is fixed so that there will be no lapse between termination of pay for active service and the commencement of the annuity.

Section 8 provides for deduction of 2½ per cent from the employees' basic salary, pay, or compensation, and such deductions are to be transferred to the credit of a special fund known as the "civil-service retirement and disability fund." This fund will become immediately available for the payment of annuities, refunds, and allowances. The interest of the individual employee in the deduction from his or her salary, pay, or compensation is fully safeguarded by the provisions contained in section 11 hereinafter outlined.

The Secretary of the Treasury is directed to invest in interest-bearing securities such portions of the "civil-service retirement and disability fund" as may not be immediately required, and he is empowered to receive and invest certain moneys and contributions and to disburse the same as outlined in the last paragraph of this section.

Section 9 provides that every employee coming within the provisions of the act shall consent and agree to the deductions from salary, pay, or compensation, as specified in section 8, and by so doing he becomes a party to the contract between himself and the Government. This section modifies certain provisions of the Revised Statutes which fixes the classification of salaries of employees in the departments.

Section 10 defines the conditions under which employees in the unclassified service at the time of the passage of the act, but who subsequently attain a classified status, may obtain credit for service rendered prior to classification, or prior to the passage of the act. Provision is also made for those who become separated from the service and who are subsequently reinstated.

In both such cases it is necessary that a sufficient sum shall be deposited with the Treasurer of the United States to equalize their deductions with those of the employees who shall have been continuously in the classified service from the passage of the act, otherwise they will be treated as new entrants in the service. A provision is made, however, so that failure to make the requisite deposit shall not operate to deprive the employee of credit for service rendered prior to the date when the act shall become effective.

Section 11 makes provision for return of deductions with accrued interest under three contingencies:

First. In case of separation of an employee from the service for any cause whatsoever before reaching the retirement age the total amount of deductions with accrued interest shall be returned to the employee.

Second. In case an annuitant shall die without having received annuities equal to the total amount of deductions with accrued interest, the difference shall be paid to the legal representatives of the annuitant.

Third. In case an employee shall die without having reached the retirement age or before establishing a valid claim for annuity, the total amount of deductions with accrued interest shall be paid to the legal representatives of the employee.

Section 12 provides for payment of annuities monthly under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe. If the present practice in the payment of pensions is followed checks will be issued, without requiring separate vouchers, in all cases where payments are to be made directly to the annuitant. In other cases vouchers may be required.

Section 13 requires the Civil Service Commission to keep a complete record of all appointments, changes in grade, separations from the service, and all other relevant data which will enable it to furnish the Commissioner of Pensions with a report upon each individual claim whenever called for, showing all facts necessary to a proper adjustment of such claim. The commission is also required to keep needful tables and records as a basis for future valuations and adjustments of the plan for retirement of employees under the provisions of the act.

The Commissioner of Pensions is required to make an annual report, showing in detail all relevant data in connection with receipts and disbursements on account of annuities, refunds, and allowances.

Section 14 provides that none of the moneys mentioned in this act shall be assignable in law or equity and that they shall not be subject to execution, levy, attachment, garnishment, or other legal process.

Section 15 authorizes the appropriation of the sum of $100,000 for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the act and makes provision for future estimates.

Section 16 provides for the establishment of a board of actuaries, who will operate under the authority of the Commissioner of Pensions. The establishment of this board insures reducing the system, ultimately, to a sound financial and actuarial basis.

Section 17 repeals all laws in conflict with the act.

STATEMENTS AND LETTERS SUBMITTED BY CABINET OFFICERS, HEADS OF DEPARTMENTS, AND COMMISSIONS OF THE GOVERNMENT.

Mr. Saltzgaber, Commissioner of Pensions, stated at a hearing before the Senate Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment, on June 25, 1919:

My convictions have existed for a long time that it is to the interests of the Government and of the employees, as well as economic and humane, that a bill like this should be enacted into law. I presume that in the Pension Bureau we have the most conspicuous example of the need of such legislation. We have a great many clerks who have served the Government for a long period of time, some of them over 50 years, and they have reached an old age at which they are no longer efficient, some of them; and yet Congress does not require it, and we do not turn them out of employment. They are still carried on the roll, but practically they are of very little, if any, benefit to the Government by way of service that they render.

Mr. Galloway, a member of the United States Civil Service Commission, submitted to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service of the House, on June 18 and June 25, 1919, the commission's views as to the necessity for retirement legislation, and later appeared before the Senate committee:

In response to your communication of June 12, your attention is invited to the inclosed extracts from recent reports to the commission relating to retirement of employees.

The commission as at present constituted is in accord with the views therein expressed, and trusts that the subject will have the earnest attention of your committee. The Government is now actually pensioning its superannuated employees, and this in a very expensive, indirect, and unsatisfactory way. Heads of departments and bureaus have not the heart to discharge men and women who have grown old and infirm in the service, and so their names are carried on the pay rolls year after year with little regard for ability to render an equivalent in service. Many of these old people, who would otherwise resign, continue in their positions in the hope of having the benefit of a retirement law. With provision made for retirement, appointing officers would have less hesitation in relieving the service of the deadwood that now encumbers it. A retirement law is urgently needed in the interests of efficient public service.

Yours, very truly, ——— ———, President.

In the annual report of the Civil Service Commission for the year 1916, under the heading of "Retirement," the report says:

Superannuation is older than the civil-service act, and any increase does not result from the merit system. That system does not protect incompetents. Improved administrative methods and the standardization of salaries can not be effectively made until a retirement system is established which will provide for superannuated employees. The commission believes that a contributory plan would be just and practicable and earnestly recommends its adoption.

In its annual report for the year 1917, under the heading of "Retirement," the commission said:

The increased demands upon the personnel of the civil service by the war have given emphasis to the need of a retirement system. It is too costly to continue the aged and infirm in positions requiring alertness and vigor, especially where they have supervision of other employees, and a retirement system is possible which would be alike in the interests of the Government and of the worker. While inefficiency is a just cause for removal, appointing officers naturally hesitate to dismiss old employees who have become incapacitated after rendering long and efficient service, and a virtual pension system thus exists.

The commission does not favor a system of straight civil pensions. Temporary or permanent injuries received in the performance of duty are already provided for out of the Public Treasury in the compensation act of September 7, 1916, which extends to personal injuries sustained while in the performance of duty and applies to all civilian employees of the United States Government.

The commission favors a general system of retiring annuities, based upon length of service, the annuity to be provided by deductions from the salaries of employees invested under the supervision of the Government, the interest on which will be sufficient to provide the annuity to be paid.

A retirement system would give stability to the service, create an inducement to capable men to continue in it, contribute to improved administrative methods, and make possible a standardization of salaries and other needed reforms. The benefits to the service from an equitable retirement system would justify a direct contribution from the Public Treasury to create an annuity for superannuated employees in the service at the time the system is established.

The Hon. Newton D. Baker, Secretary of War, had the following to say before the Senate Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment on June 25, 1919:

I do not believe that anybody who has had an executive place has failed to realize the practical impossibility of securing the dismissal of superannuated employees who have been faithful and whose only fault is their superannuation and enfeebleness by the process of age. It leads to the clogging up of the service; it discourages and dispirits those who are already in the service.

I myself am frequently called upon to reduce clerks who have given practically the whole of their lives to the service of the Government, and yet have reached a place where the maximum of their capability is that they should be the custodian of more or less dead files, and they get into positions of inactive occupation, as it were, with very modest income but always with a feeling of grievance and resentment, and a difference of opinion between them and their superiors as to whether their enfeeblement is real or their reduction is based upon some prejudice. As a matter of fact, every department in Washington has employees whose entire life has been devoted to the Federal service, who have now reached the place where nothing but the necessity of their daily bread keeps them at any occupation, and where out of pure humanity and against all reason the head of the department is obliged to retain them in the service.

There is another consideration to which I would like to ask the attention of the committee. I do not want to moralize about it, but I have a very strong feeling that we ought to do everything we can to make the service of the Government dignified, to make it honorable and respected, and to attract into it the very best material that we can possibly find. Generalizations are always dangerous, and this will be dangerous, but I am going to suggest it. I feel perfectly sure that in the vast emergency which this war has presented, if the public service had been intrinsically more dignified, it would have enabled us to get along with fewer employees, and would have enabled us to do away with a very large number of wholly inexperienced employees who were brought into the service because they were the only people who were procurable through the channels of the civil service or otherwise.

I think that the public service should be put upon a dignified basis, so that it would mean not only just compensation during the period of active service, but that it would provide a system of retirement which will enable that same employee who has given full service to the Government to have enough to live upon in a very modest way for the remaining years of his life. Every consideration that I can think of, humanitarian, toward the employee, and the good of the service, so far as the Government itself is concerned, so far as getting the best type of employees and getting the best service out of those we have, dictates, I think, the necessity of some sort of retirement provision for the employees in the public departments.

Mr. Paul F. Myers, chief clerk of the Treasury Department, before the Senate committee on June 25 made the following statement and submitted a letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. GLASS:

I should like briefly to say a few words in support of the retirement measure. The Secretary of the Treasury, in response to the request of the chairman of this committee, has submitted a letter, which I will make a part of the record here, with your permission, indorsing the general retirement measure.

The CHAIRMAN. This may go into the record, and I had expected to put it into the record until I learned that you might possibly come.

(The communication referred to is here printed in the record, as follows:)

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, June 25, 1919.

Hon. THOMAS STERLING,
Chairman Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In compliance with the request contained in your letter of the 23d instant, I take pleasure in inclosing excerpts from recent annual reports of the Secretary of the Treasury relating to retirement of superannuated and disabled employees.

In reply to your request for an expression of my personal views on the subject of enacting legislation which will provide for retiring civil service employees, I am of the opinion that an efficient service is not practicable without a method of honorably and justly retiring persons whose efficiency because of age or physical or mental incapacity is seriously impaired. The Treasury Department is constantly engaged in the work of increasing its efficiency and diminishing the relative expense of operation, but any extensive and successful effort to improve the administrative operations of this large department is very heavily handicapped by the absence of a just method of retirement.

The efficiency of the department is retarded for want of a retirement law. I believe that the enactment of legislation providing for superannuated or disabled employees of the civil service in this department would result in economies and increased efficiency in the transaction of public business. It would be a measure of benefit to the Government and of justice to the employees, who faithfully have devoted their talents and the best years of their lives to the interests of the Government.

In this connection I should like to draw particular attention to the following recommendation contained in the annual report of my predecessor, Secretary McAdoo, for the fiscal year 1918:

"Recommendation has been made in previous annual reports of the Secretary for the enactment of an equitable retirement law for civil-service employees. The necessity for effective action of some character along this line has been accentuated during this period of war. It would seem to be not only a measure of justice to faithful public servants who have devoted their lives and talents to the Government, but it would be also in the interest of economy and increased efficiency in the administration of the public business.

"In considering this important question the attention of Congress is respectfully invited to the possibilities of an expansion of the principles underlying the Bureau of War Risk Insurance. Humanity demands that something be done for the civil employees of the Government and suggestions of pension systems, while praiseworthy as an effort to render justice, and effective as an expedient, would probably not afford a real solution. It is confidently believed that the solution lies along the lines of insurance with both the Government and the civil employees contributing to a scientific plan that will provide for retirement as well as insurance against death."

I heartily indorse the suggestion outlined above.

Sincerely, yours,

CARTER GLASS, Secretary.

Excerpts from annual reports of Secretaries of the Treasury. The 1909 report is as follows:

Any inquiry into the efficiency of administration very soon involves a consideration of a policy of civil service retiring pensions. And it seems to me that the conclusion is unavoidable that a really efficient service is out of the question without a method of honorably and justly retiring persons whose efficiency is seriously impaired. It is quite true that the older clerks of the service are no more likely than the younger clerks to be inefficient. Indeed, their experience and their settled relations to the service could easily compensate for the lack of some other personal equipment. But just as there are instances where the younger clerks should be disciplined or dismissed so there are many cases of the older clerks where, in justice to both themselves and the service, they ought to be honorably relieved.

The service is blocked in many instances by the unwillingness of the officials in charge to throw out of place worthy men and women who have given the best of their lives to the work of the Government. So that, in a very important and wholly unsatisfactory manner, practically a pension system is and long has been in operation.

The United States is the only Nation that has no general legal retiring pension for the employees of its civil service. We have this unique position in the world, along with a reputation for great wealth and for otherwise liberal expenditures. The entire civilized world has shown great and growing recognition of pensions or retiring allowances; and while the United States is so far behind the rest of the world in civil pensions, it has by far the largest pension list among the nations. The war and navy pensions are a recognized part of our policy; and in civil service pensions have been extended to the judiciary. And though as a Government we have halted at a general retirement allowance for civil employees, the great universities of our country and the great corporations have been taking immense steps along this very line, and the Federal Government is becoming more and more isolated.

While I have spoken only of the effect upon the service itself of the lack of a system of retiring pensions, there are, as everyone knows, other claims upon the Government to establish this policy. I hope that the Congress will take up and consider favorably one of the various forms of law that are proposed. This subject has been before the country and before the Government for a long while; and if the policy were to be adopted at this time, it would undoubtedly give a strong impulse to that improvement of every branch of the service which is now so much desired by the people and which is a matter of so much interest to the Congress and to the administration. In expressing my opinion in favor of the retiring allowance I purposely avoid the expression at this time of a preference for any particular plan or system.

The following letters from members of the Cabinet were read into the record of the hearings on this retirement bill:

JUNE 15, 1919.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I am glad, in response to your favor of the 11th instant, to hand you extracts from the annual reports of this department during the past six years relating to the subject of legislation for retirement of superannuated and disabled Government employees.

Since the extracts forwarded were written by myself, it may hardly be necessary to add to them in further expression of my views, yet I regard the subject as of such importance that I must not leave undone anything within my power to advance it.

I look at it from the standpoint of common justice, on the one hand, and from that of efficient service on the other hand. Large private concerns recognize that a lifetime spent in their service carries with it an obligation of honor toward the employee who has thus served faithfully when years make him incapable of further effective work. The business house that would turn out an aged employee, saying to him, in substance "Now, look out for yourself," after a long and good record, would be damned by the common opinion of the business world, and ought to be.

The only conceivable excuse that could be made would be that the employer had paid during the long service a sufficient salary over and above all the exigencies of life to have enabled the employee to provide himself for his own old age.

No one will charge the Government with doing that, especially when objection is made to an employee endeavoring in his own time to add something to his or her income.

Failure to be as just in these matters as private concerns are injures the Government, either by causing the ambitious to seek better opportunities for service elsewhere, or by relaxing the efforts of its employees generally through the unconscious drag that comes from hopeless service.

The result of the present condition is seen in the survival of many old people in the Government work who struggle on, when they should have ceased from their labors because they needs must. Enactments requiring these aged workers to be discharged are substantially repealed by the higher law of humanity. They are demoted and maintained at reduced pay, thus creating what is in substance a pension without retirement, without the dignity of a recognition by the Government of their worth, and maintaining the inefficiency which everyone seeks to remove.

I am not specially concerned as to the details of any measure, but do earnestly hope it may be possible soon to establish a civil retirement system which will at once justly provide for those who have served many years, open the door to a more rapid promotion and to larger opportunities for younger and more active employees, and make the Government work more efficient not only through the removal of ineffectives but by the unconscious but very real self-discipline that comes in response to wise and farseeing treatment of the employee.

I firmly believe that after a year of experience with any sound retirement system no voices will be lifted against it.

Yours, very truly,

WILLIAM C. REDFIELD,
Secretary of Commerce.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
OFFICE OF SECRETARY,
Washington, June 25, 1919.

Hon. THOMAS STERLING,
Chairman Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Your letter of June 23, inviting me to attend the hearing held by your committee to-day on the subject of civil-service retirement, or to submit any statement I might desire to make on the subject matter, was received this morning. As your office has been advised, my engagements to-day were such that I was unable to be present at the hearing.

In view of the fact that practically all other Governments have long ago enacted legislation of this character and that a very large percentage of the private employing corporations have inaugurated retirement pension systems, Congress would do well, in my judgment, to lose no time in enacting an adequate civil-service retirement law.

Entirely apart from the humanities and justice involved in such legislation, it would seem to be high time to recognize the fact that the executive departments have a pension roll, whether they like it or not, and that it is the most expensive, cumbersome, and in many ways inhuman sort of a pension system. What I refer to here is the waterlogged pay roll, which in all essentials produces a pension system without the retirement. In other words, aged and decrepit employees who have been worn out in Government service are retained on the pay roll at a salary which is considerably higher in most cases than would provide an adequate pension. These people are not discharged, can not and will not be discharged by the heads of departments for humane reasons, which we need not go into here. On the other hand, they must be at their desks each day for seven hours in order to receive the salary at which they are listed. This is not only a physical hardship upon them, it is a useless and inhumane one.

On the other hand, it has a demoralizing effect upon the other employees, particularly those who, going in at the entrance grade, are perhaps getting a salary for real work much less than the pensioners are receiving. These old people do nothing and are expected to do nothing, and the young clerks coming in at a lesser rate are naturally more or less incensed at being required to do the work that these "old-timers," so called, are unable to do.

If the pay rolls could be relieved of this water logging, the Government could pay the entire cost of a reasonable system, such as is outlined in your bill, and save money.

You will see from this that I do not look upon the retirement of civil-service employees as a charity measure. All of the great corporations do it as a business proposition. Some of these corporations and some foreign Governments have a contributory system and some pay the amount outright from the treasury. Personally I do not favor the contributory system. I believe that ultimately the Government of the United States will adopt a fair civil-service retirement annuity paid from the Treasury of the United States.

However, at this time and for the purpose of getting the principle of retirement accepted, I should be glad to see even a contributory system enacted.

I sincerely trust that Congress will enact at this session some sort of civil-service retirement.

Sincerely, yours,

W. B. WILSON, Secretary.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, June 25, 1919.

Hon. THOMAS STERLING,
Chairman Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR STERLING: I have just this morning received your letter of the 23d of June, informing me that hearings on the subject of civil-service retirement will be held this afternoon, June 25, at 2 p. m., in room 450, Senate Office Building, by the Senate Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment, and inviting me to appear and state my views for the consideration of the committee.

It so happens that I have official engagements which make it impossible for me to appear before the committee to-day, and therefore I hasten to say that if the committee should desire especially to ask me any questions upon the subject of civil-service retirement I should be glad to appear before it at some other time. I have no information to present to the committee further than to say that I am strongly in favor of the adoption of some practical plan for retirement of civil-service employees as a measure greatly in the interest of efficiency and one which in the end would be economically advantageous. It is my belief that this is one thing that would help to bring about a much-needed improvement in the Government service, not only by making suitable provision for worthy men and women who have devoted their best years to the service of the Government at a very modest rate of compensation, but also by offering inducement to persons of ability to devote their lives to the service of the Government with the assurance that when their usefulness is at an end the Government will provide an annuity for the period after their earning capacity shall have ceased.

Thanking you for your invitation, I am, my dear Senator STERLING,

Very sincerely, yours,

FRANK L. POLK.

[From hearings on Post Office appropriation bill, 1921, before the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, December, 1919.]

Mr. KOONS. If there is any prospect of a return to duty at the end of the year, we do not drop them. If there is no prospect that they will return to duty at the end of the year, sometimes we put them at the foot of the substitute roll. They hope to get a pension law passed, and we put them at the foot of the substitute roll in order to carry them, if possible, beyond that time. But as long as we carry them on the roll as a regular employee, it prevents us from appointing a regular clerk, and we try to take care of them in each particular case as best we can.

Mr. MADDEN. How many employees injured in the performance of their duties who were unable to return to work within one year were required to resign or have been dropped from the rolls?

Mr. KOONS. None during the past year.

Mr. MADDEN. Then I would like to know what procedure is followed in cases where employees become incapacitated through age and are no longer able to perform their duties?

Mr. KOONS. The policy in those cases, when a person becomes incapacitated and is no longer able to perform his duties, is to reduce him one grade or to the next lower grade. And as he becomes less efficient we reduce him down until finally some of them reach the lowest grade. It is very seldom a person is dropped from the service because he is incapacitated. There are occasions where that is done, but that is only in cases where it has reached such a stage that we could not under the law possibly keep him in the service any longer.

Mr. MADDEN. In your judgment, would the enactment of a retirement law for superannuated employees benefit the Postal Service?

Mr. KOONS. Yes. The passage of a retirement law for superannuated employees would benefit the Postal Service, but in my judgment it would not benefit the employees to the extent they expect.

Mr. MADDEN. In what respect?

Mr. KOONS. Because, at this time, the minimum salary is $1,200, and it is very rarely we ever drop one from the service. When they reach the lowest point they are retained at the minimum salary. Now they draw that salary and they have some employment. But if a retirement bill were in effect they would be dropped. I think all the bills have provided a maximum of $600, which is all they could receive, and they would not have any employment. And if you take a man who has been active all of his life and take his employment away from him, it is more serious than to allow him to perform what service he can and pay him for it.

Mr. MADDEN. So you think it is best for the men to comply with the practice which is followed by the department at the present time?

Mr. KOONS. Yes; it is better for the men themselves, but not for the Postal Service.

Mr. MADDEN. Do you think economy and efficiency would result from the elimination of those men through a system of retirement?

Mr. KOONS. There would undoubtedly be economy and efficiency both, Mr. Madden, because the maximum retirement rate is $600 and there would be a saving of $600 in the salary alone. And, of course, the old employee who would leave the service would be replaced by a young man who is more active and efficient.

This bill, having been passed by the Senate, approved by Cabinet officers and heads of departments and bureaus, and by the rank and file of the classified civil-service employees, and approved as sound and economical both to the Government and the employees by our best governmental actuarial experts, should have an overwhelming vote for its passage by the House and be enacted into law.

This law would mean the dawn of a better day for economy and efficiency in our governmental service and would make it possible to inject the beginning of a program of real efficiency and administration of our Government business. The Government in its final analysis is but the business of the entire Nation. It would also mean the beginning of a more efficient, happy, and contented Federal employee. [Applause.]

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Mr. Chairman, on yesterday I made some remarks upon the subject of the container bill which was under consideration, and I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD upon that bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from West Virginia asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I am very glad that the time has finally arrived for the consideration of this legislation. It has been pending before this Congress for a long time and has been agitated for a great deal longer time. The tendency of the business public throughout the world is to provide for those who are in its employ when they can no longer provide for themselves. I have always believed that the Government should not be less generous than the business public that helps to maintain the Government. If the business public believes it to be economic wisdom to pension the men and women who are in its employ when they are no longer able to function, it certainly ought not to be considered unwise for the Government to do the same thing. We are here affording an opportunity for many faithful men and women who have passed the meridian in life in the Government service to retire, with the knowledge that they are not going to suffer for the remaining years of their lives. We give here an opportunity for people who are in the Government service, when they have reached the age of 60 years, up to 65, to take advantage of the privileges of retirement after having contributed part of the earnings which they have made during their employment to the payment of the annuity which they are to receive as the result of their retirement.

It is said by those who have given careful study to the question that there is not a very large number of people to be affected immediately by the enactment of this law, but there is a sufficient number who have passed the age of usefulness still in the Government service who, if they were turned out on the streets, would be compelled to go to the poorhouse; and since they have given the best that is in them in the early years of their lives to the faithful service of the Government, the enactment of this law is but the extension of a measure of relief which indicates the intention of the Government to deal justly with those who are upon its pay rolls.

It must be known to any person who has given any consideration to the matter that many people are still in the service of the Government who are not able to function, and that if we deal with this question purely as a matter of economy it will be an economic method of conducting the Government to retire these people on some sort of pension, because to-day I think it will be acknowledged by all who know the facts that somebody else in many instances is required to do the work for which other people are being paid. I am not as clear that it will save a large amount of money annually to the Treasury of the United States as is the gentleman who just preceded me, but that should not be the prime consideration. The prime consideration should be justice, and inasmuch as we are endeavoring to make the Government function efficiently, then to the extent that we can mete out justice and at the same time promote the efficient conduct of the Government bureaus, even if we are obliged to add something to the cost, I am in favor of it. The time has come in the world's activities when more serious consideration must be given to the comfort and well-being of the masses of the people, and while the people in the United States, generally speaking, and particularly those upon the Government pay roll, are better compensated than those who are employed by other nations and other peoples, yet I believe we should begin to realize that we are the only nation in the world, with one or two exceptions, that has not already entered upon the policy of providing for those who are in the Government service when they are no longer able to do that kind of a day's work that people are expected to do in their early years. I have seen a great many of these patriotic men and women who have devoted their lives faithfully to the service, who have been hanging on, so to speak, with the hope that some legislation of this sort would be enacted before they were compelled to retire to the poorhouse, and even the compensation provided for in this bill is not going to enable those who are to become its beneficiaries to live in great luxury, because the highest compensation to be paid in any case will be $720 a year and the lowest $180. So that it will be a meager living they will receive at best, but it will be an evidence of the good intention of the Government, through the Congress, to recognize the merits of their case.

I am glad to have this opportunity to say in a general way that I am proud that the time has come, under the leadership of my distinguished friend from New Jersey, Mr. LEHLBACH, to present this meritorious measure to the consideration of the House. Mr. LEHLBACH has given more consideration and study to the question than anyone that I know of. His heart and soul is embodied in the legislation. He will be able in more detail than yet has been presented to tell us the merits of the measure. I congratulate him as a young Member of the House upon his success in bringing this bill before the body for consideration [applause], and I congratulate the men and women who are to be permitted to come under the provisions of the bill upon the fact that they have had such an able, earnest, young champion of their cause. He has never hesitated night or day to urge and plead with his fellows in this House to give early consideration to this measure, and if he never does anything else during his membership in the Congress than to be the sponsor of this beneficent legislation he is entitled to the hearty thanks and the earnest and enduring gratitude of those who are to come under its provisions. [Applause.]

Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HAMILL].

Mr. HAMILL. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am glad to see this day arrive, when the Congress of the United States is proceeding to consider the necessity of doing an act of long-delayed justice to a most worthy class of Government employees and at the same time something which will promote greater efficiency in the transaction of public business in the various departments of the Government. I eagerly join with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] in offering cordial congratulations to my colleague from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH], the chairman of the committee, on the successful result of his efforts in behalf of this bill. I am sure it can be predicted now at the beginning of the debate that the bill will pass the House by a substantial majority and that it will receive presidential sanction and be written into the statute books of the country.

There are two main reasons why this bill ought to become a law. They are the promotion of efficiency in the transaction of public business and the rendering of justice and fair treatment to our deserving public employees. It is a well-recognized fact that the Government departments are filled with deserving men and women who have worn out their energies and become superannuated through long years of devoted public service. The period of their usefulness is past. But there is no way whereby they can be fairly separated from the service. They can be discharged and thus in their declining days deprived of their means of earning a livelihood. It is to the credit of the respective heads of our various departments that they have not resorted to this drastic procedure. I remember talking several years ago to a distinguished head of the War Department on this very subject. He told me that when he came into the department he was amazed at the number of employees who were superannuated, and he called his assistant into consultation and asked him what he could do with them. His assistant told him that the only course he could follow would be to discharge all employees who had outlived their usefulness. He declined to take this step on humanitarian grounds. The alternative was that he had to conduct the business of his department under the conditions and difficulties caused by superannuation. I am glad to be able to say that his attitude toward his employees was not exceptional, but that it is the way in which the matter is dealt with by practically every department head.

Many touching instances could be recited here showing the necessity for a retirement law. Aged letter carriers are seen on our streets burdened with bags of mail which would tax the strength of much younger men. Old department employees are compelled to ride in hacks to their offices, and I have heard it said, and truthfully said, that if in some of our large Government office buildings the elevators failed to work it would be impossible for a large number of the aged clerks to reach the floor where their desks are located.

It is strange to think that this condition exists in the United States. It does not exist in Great Britain, nor in France, nor in any of the progressive European countries.

It is true that the operation of this measure will entail expense to the Government. One of the speakers estimated the cost at about $9,000,000 annually. But, against this figure, we must consider the increased efficiency and the greater volume of business which would be discharged by the young and vigorous entrants into the service who would take the places of the older men. I think experience will demonstrate that there will be an actual saving through the operation of a retirement plan. Take the case of an employee earning $1,500 or $1,600 a year, who is retired at about half of this amount and whose place is taken by a new employee at $1,000 a year. The Government procures the services of a more capable man and loses practically nothing, because in time the aged pensioner will die, while it will take some years before his successor reaches by seniority rule the salary that the old employee received before he was pensioned.

The great corporations of the country, ruled as they are by men of ability and foresight, have seen that it is not only humanitarianism but good business as well to pension their employees. The Pennsylvania Railroad, the American Sugar Refining Co., the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., can be cited as examples. These concerns pay pensions not as a matter of charity; they pay them because they know that when an employee is assured of a means of subsistence until his death he will work with contentment and fidelity and perform a higher character of service than is the case where he does not have a pension to look forward to in his declining years.

This pension bill must not be regarded as governmental generosity. Pensions are not gratuities, and they should not be considered as such. They should be looked upon as deferred wages—as payments of wages which were not disbursed at the time when they were earned. When an employee gives all the best that is in him of skill, of industry, of ability, and of loyalty to the Government; when he devotes his whole life to Government service, then the least the Government might do is to pay him a pension to sustain him when age and consequent weakness render him unfit for further service.

Mr. Chairman, I am glad to support this measure. For years I have introduced and worked for the enactment of a pension bill. The measure which I proposed provided for what is known as the straight pension plan, according to which the Government would pay 100 per cent of the pension. The plan of this bill is known as the contributory system, whereby the cost of the pension is borne between the Government and the employee. While I consider that as a matter of principle the Government should pay the full amount of the pension, nevertheless this measure provides the relief which at this time is sorely needed.

I was glad to hear the first speaker on the Republican side of this Chamber refer to this bill as a nonpartisan measure. I have always so considered the question of pension legislation. There should be no partisanship in this Congress when it comes to performing an act of simple fairness and common justice to deserving employees. In the agitation carried on throughout the country for the past 10 years Members of Congress, heads of departments, business men, clergymen, and men prominent in professional life all united to create a sentiment in favor of this legislation, and there was no taint or suggestion of partisanship in their noble endeavors. This measure is a response to the Nation-wide demand for justice to the public employees. I feel satisfied that the vote by which it will pass will be a vote in which both parties in this Chamber will cordially and enthusiastically unite. [Applause.]

Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina. How much time did the gentleman yield back?

The CHAIRMAN. Three minutes.

Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK]. [Applause.]

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, it will not take me long to state my position on the civil-service retirement measure. I believe that we ought to have a retirement law, but I believe that the employees themselves should create the fund to pay the annuity, and that the only part of the expenses which the Government can be fairly asked to assume is the cost of the overhead expenses of administering the fund. There is, however, one additional expense which I think the Government can fairly afford to pay in order to get the system started, and that is the cost of retiring those aged employees who are now in the service and have not made any contributions to a retirement fund. Further than this I do not think the Government should go. The ideal condition, of course, would be for the Government to pay its employees a salary or wage which would be sufficient not only to support the employee and his family in average American standards of living but would also be sufficient to enable a man of ordinary thrift and economy to lay by a sinking fund to maintain himself and such family as he may be expected to have at that age in life in reasonable comfort, and trust to the employee to accumulate these funds by his own efforts. That would be the most desirable thing to do from many standpoints, but as a practical proposition it does not work out. Some men are thrifty and economical and have no difficulty whatever in making provision for their old age on salaries which others spend without apparent extravagance or dissipation and find themselves without funds in their old age.

For instance, we have here, for example, Mr. A and over here Mr. B, drawing the same annual compensation, and Mr. A comes down to his old age with a fund that he has accumulated himself sufficient to keep him in reasonable comfort. Mr. B, without apparent extravagance or dissipation, comes down to his old age without anything to maintain himself and family; and the unfortunate part is that, in Government as well as in most other employment, a very large number of people are in the class with Mr. B. So these practical facts we must reckon with, and I think it is to the advantage of the Government to make provision against them.

It is a fact which is well known that there are many employees now in Government employment who are too old to render efficient service, and many of them render scarcely any at all. Some one answers, why not discharge them? And looking at the matter from the cold logic of business, that would be the thing to do; but I am very glad to know that even in this age of so much unrest and discontent, when civilization is yet so far from perfection, that we do not look at everything from the cold logic of business. Sentiment sways us in some things, and it would be a bad old world, indeed, if it did not.

> That man may last, but never lives,
> Who much receives but nothing gives,
> Whom none can love, whom none can thank,
> Creation's blot, creation's blank.

So as a practical proposition the executive heads of our departments do not discharge these old men when they can no longer perform useful service; and, I guess, under the same or similar circumstances the most of us would act in the same way.

So what is to be done? The only logical answer, to my mind, is to create some kind of a retirement system. What kind shall it be? There are three plans possible of adoption. First, the cost thereof to be borne entirely by the Government; second, the cost to be borne by the Government and the employees by joint contributions to the fund; and, third, the cost to be borne entirely by the employees. I could not possibly bring myself to favor the first plan, wherein the Government would pay all, because that would simply amount to old-age pensions to civilians, and unless we are going to make it general in its application I would not single out one group of our civilian workers and make them a favored class at the taxpayers' expense.

I can not favor the second plan for substantially the same reasons, because if it is not right for the Government to contribute all of the fund out of general taxation it is not right for it to contribute any part of it. Under the plan proposed in the bill now under consideration, the 62.3 per cent which the Government would ultimately pay of the retirement fund would only be less wrong to the extent as it would differ in degree from a 100 per cent contribution by the Government to the fund.

So the plan that I do favor is that which requires that the Government shall deduct from the compensation of its employees a fund sufficient to create the retirement fund. And at the proper time in the consideration of the bill I will offer an amendment to accomplish that purpose. What shall the percentage of deduction be? The present bill now under consideration provides that the rate of deduction shall be 2½ per cent; and, according to Mr. Beach, the actuarial expert from the Bureau of Pensions, who advised the committee in the preparation of this bill, this rate of 2½ per cent will pay about 37.7 per cent of the retirement fund, and the Government would therefore have to contribute about 62.3 per cent.

Mr. Herbert D. Brown, of the Bureau of Efficiency, in the figures which were inserted by Senator SMOOT in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 3, places the Government's contribution at a considerable higher percentage than 62.3 on a basis of the rates contained in the present bill. But, assuming that the figures of Mr. Beach are correct, then the rate which it would be necessary to collect from the employees to make the system self-sustaining would be slightly in excess of 6 per cent of their annual compensation. Therefore, at the proper time, I shall move to strike out the figures 2½, on line 22, page 12, and insert 6 per cent.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. I will.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Is not the gentleman of the opinion that if this system of cooperative or self-serving insurance were adopted that it would ultimately result in the Government having to raise the salary of the employee enough to include the sum which would be deducted from his pay for insurance?

Mr. BLACK. I will say in answer to my colleague that I do not think there should be any reasonable connection whatever between the salary paid to a Government employee and this retirement fund. If it is a proper thing to do to create a retirement fund, it should not affect in any way whatever his salary. The salary of a Government employee should be the amount which his services are reasonably worth.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Is not the gentleman, however, facing this condition: That if circumstances arose under which it was claimed that the employee barely received enough to support or give him a living, that he would have to receive that sum over and above what was deducted from his pay for insurance?

Mr. BLACK. I will say to the gentleman that a statement of that kind would simply be an argument that would go to the inadequacy of the salary. His salary should be high enough, as a matter of simple justice, to permit him to support his family in reasonable comfort and in addition make provision for his old age. If we are justified in creating a retirement fund, then I contend that we should take it out of the employee's annual compensation, for the very reason that I stated awhile ago—that if you admit the duty of the Government to contribute 100 per cent of it, or 65 per cent of it, then you admit the principle of civilian pension, and you have no better right to pension a civilian employee of the United States Government than you have a right to pension any civilian worker in my district. [Applause.]

Will the gentleman yield me five minutes more? I will conclude in that time.

Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina. I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. CANDLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. I will.

Mr. CANDLER. The gentleman referred a moment ago to a statement that appeared in the RECORD by Senator SMOOT. Will the gentleman put in his remarks, so that it will be clear, what the estimated cost of this bill will be?

Mr. BLACK. Yes; I will be glad to do that.

Now, in conclusion, let me say this 6 per cent will, of course, not cover the overhead expenses of administering the fund, nor will it provide the funds necessary to retire the aged employees now in the service who will be eligible for retirement. That expense will have to be borne by the Government, because it would not be just to tax it against the younger employees. All that they should be required to do is to contribute a fund which will be sufficient to take care of their own retirement.

Now, it is admitted that a definite estimate in this matter is difficult to make, and if it should turn out that the rate of 6 per cent will fall short of the amount required to pay the annuities, then, of course, the Government will have to make up the deficit out of the Treasury. If it should, however, prove to be too much, the employees will not be hurt, because under the terms of the bill if an employee quits the service before reaching the age of retirement all that he has paid in will be refunded to him plus compound interest at the rate of 4 per cent. If he dies in the service before reaching the age of retirement, all that he has paid in is paid to his legal representative plus compound interest at the rate of 4 per cent. Also, if the committee amendment on page 6 is adopted, if the employee stays in the service until he reaches the age of retirement and his contribution of 6 per cent with interest at the age of retirement will purchase an annuity of the kind provided in the bill in excess of the annuity therein provided, the employee shall receive an annuity which the amount of his contributions with interest will purchase. So the only party that would stand any chance to lose on the 6 per cent rate would be the Government, and therefore I hope that it will be adopted; and if it is adopted I shall certainly vote for the bill, as will, I think, a good many others who will not otherwise do so. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, under leave to extend my remarks I insert a table prepared by actuarial experts for Senator SMOOT, and which he referred to in debate when this bill was pending in the Senate. I insert the table at the request of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER].

Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON].

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I have been impressed with the statements of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. NELSON] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], to the effect that this was simply an act of justice. I am inclined to look at it from a different angle. I think that it is an act possibly inspired by the humanity which runs through our Government, as well as our own hearts, and an act of business, looked at from the standpoint of the Government that has a great many officers on its pay rolls who have become utterly inefficient from age. But I want to discuss from the justice standpoint, just a minute, the reasons for reporting and pressing this and certain other bills at this time, if justice is that which is actuating the rushing of bills through this House.

Last June I introduced a bill to carry out a simple contract made by this Government with some of its employees, and also to do justice to them as between them and others, and that bill slept in the Committee on Military Affairs until December. And then, on their suggestion, being introduced in different form, it has slept there again until the 28th of February, when it was assigned to two other committees, and finally landed in the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, where it still sleeps. And that is a measure calling for justice to men who are deserving of justice at our hands—bill H. R. 10835, to provide that disabled officers of the Army of the late war who were not Regular Army officers and were disabled in the service should receive the same compensation as like officers of the Regular Army who were retired for disability. And I want to know why, if this is for the purpose of justice, we can not get a little justice for these other people also. I want to read you the act upon which the men who enlisted as officers of the Army at the beginning of the war enlisted, and under which they were invited to enlist:

> That all officers and enlisted men of the forces herein provided for other than the Regular Army shall be in all respects on the same footing as to pay, allowances, and pensions, as officers and enlisted men of corresponding grades and length of service in the Regular Army.

The courts of this country have decided that the retirement privilege is a pension, and the Judge Advocate General of the Navy to-day makes that decision, and that is the stand of the Navy. And the officers who went into the service and who went to France and were disabled from work for the balance of their days, and many of them shot all to pieces, came back here and said, "Give us justice," and they said, "You are not entitled to any retirement pay. We contracted that you should have the same consideration as the Regular Army officer, but you can not get it."

And then I introduced a bill and have been pressing it here for justice to these officers, for these men that have not got as many votes as many other people—some 2,000 of them—who are a spectacle to behold to-day, with a compensation of $80 a month as a maximum, while Regular Army officers, the very least of them, are retired at $157 a month. Yet these men are denied the privilege of being heard on this floor because they can not get a committee to report a bill here that will give them justice, which was promised in the act cited above. And then Members come in here and talk about doing justice in this House. Not only that, but they propose in the next few days to give a bounty to all the men who served, those who were in and who were not, and expressly exclude the officers, the very men who led the men in the fighting, and are back here maimed and blind and halt, and then gentlemen get up here and talk about doing justice in the public service. I am in favor of this bill properly guarded, giving a pension to people who have always been in an office here in Washington, a very much sought after position. We are giving a bonus to a million men, many of whom never saw a fight and never received a scratch, giving retirement privilege to the officers of the Regular Army, and yet to the young men who left their positions of standing and were selected by the Government to go out and lead the fight, and have come back here disabled for life, we say to them, "You are not entitled even to the bonus; we are going to give it to the men who never heard a gun fired and never were in reach of the bullets of the enemy, but not to you." I am tired of hearing about justice when I see a rank injustice like this being perpetrated, and that which purports to be perpetrated by gentlemen who propose to force a bonus bill here through the House giving $500 and $1,000 to the men all over this country, many of whom were never touched. I do not oppose that if the money is obtained from the proper sources, but I say do justice to these disabled men.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will suspend. Unanimous consent was agreed to for debate on this bill, to be limited to the bill. The Chair will admonish the gentleman to proceed in order.

Mr. STEVENSON. The gentlemen over here discussed the question of the justice of the Government to its employees, and I heard nobody call them to order. I am discussing the question of whether it lies in the mouth of these gentlemen who control these committees and who have refused for six months to give a tardy recognition of justice to these men, to come in here and talk about justice to us when they are pensioning everybody else except the men who were shot on the battle fields of France.

Now, Mr. Chairman, when will justice cease to trot through this House on three legs? She is limping badly now, and if we get through what is proposed in the next few days she will be limping much worse, and the men at Walter Reed who are appealing to this Congress for a mere pittance which will enable them to live without being the objects of charity in the neighborhood in which they live have been appealing here for six months for a mere consideration at the hands of this House, and the committees controlled by the gentlemen who talk of justice over there but have failed and refused to give them the first show here. Is it because they have only about 2,000 votes and the bonus is to be given to about 2,000,000? Is that the reason that thus far they have been unable to get a hearing on their bill in this House? And the leader on that side has stated that he hopes the committee will not allow that measure to come before this. And yet they propose to pension the people who have been in the departments in a snug berth all their lives and deny it to these men who carry the marks of the bloody strife in which they participated in the defense of this country in their bodies and will carry them to their graves. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. SMITH].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Idaho is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, any observing person who during the last third of a century has walked through the corridors of the departments of the Government, or watched the clerks entering the various Government buildings in the mornings or leaving them at the close of the day, must have noticed the large proportion of elderly and infirm among them. Prior to the establishment of the classified civil-service law most of those clerks who had outlived the term of the Congressman from their district were replaced at the request of the new Member by more active persons from among his constituents; but when the civil-service law became effective, preventing removals except for cause, and providing for appointments by a competitive examination, the clerks were permitted to remain, regardless of advancing years and increasing inefficiency.

Every new Cabinet officer or bureau head no doubt approaches the responsible duties of this position with a determination to eliminate the inefficient clerks, especially those advanced in years, in order that the work of the department may be kept up to date and disposed of in the most efficient manner. He soon discovers, however, that there is a human element entering into the matter which he can not ignore, and after a few weeks or months he drops into the old groove, because he has not the heart to throw out of employment faithful clerks whose only shortcomings are infirmities incident to advancing years.

At the beginning of the Harrison administration Hon. T. B. Coulter, of Ohio, an old friend of mine, was appointed Auditor for the Post Office Department. He soon discovered that some of the work was over three years in arrears; that nearly one-fifth of the force, consisting of 600 clerks, was inefficient, and that there were approximately 75 who, because of old age, were incapable of performing their duties in an efficient manner. Most of these were drawing the highest salaries paid in the bureau. The auditor stated that his first move would be to discharge these inefficient clerks and have their positions filled through the Civil Service Commission with younger clerks, in order that the work might be brought up to date and kept current. But before he could carry out his plan he had met personally many of these inefficient clerks, who, he discovered, were apprehensive that they would lose their positions in view of the statement he had made publicly, and acquainted him with their personal affairs. He learned that in almost every instance members of their family were dependent upon them; that they had accumulated nothing during their years of service; and that practically only a month's salary remained between them and their daily living. Few of them owned their own homes, and scarcely any of them had any other income than their salaries. Col. Coulter, the auditor, being an especially kind and large-hearted man, later stated that he would resign his position before he would be responsible for turning out of the service any of these aged clerks.

He called together the clerks in the various divisions, explained the embarrassing situation confronting him, and asked for volunteers to return in the evening and devote three hours of work five days a week, without compensation, to bring the work up to date. As an evidence of patriotism and devotion to the service of the Government, over three-fourths of the clerks cheerfully acquiesced, and during a period of nearly three months worked three hours in the evening during five days of the week, in order to bring the work up to date.

It will thus be easily understood why the Cabinet officers and the heads of bureaus refuse to assume the responsibility of discharging the aged clerks and the absolute necessity of enacting a general retirement law.

For the last 25 years the problem of how to take care of the faithful but aged clerks has been a constantly increasing one, and the necessity of formulating some humane and practical plan has engaged the attention of Congress, the Cabinet heads, and the clerks themselves during the intervening years. In 1893 and 1894 the Civil Service Commission called attention in its annual reports to the necessity of making some provision for the retirement of the aged clerks, and again in 1902, 1903, 1905, and 1908. The department and bureau heads earnestly and repeatedly urged favorable consideration of such legislation.

The Secretary of the Interior in his annual reports for the years 1904, 1905, 1908, 1909, 1910, 1911, and 1912 gave the subject of retirement particular attention, and the annual reports of the other heads of departments since 1909 have set forth the pressing need of some general plan of retirement of superannuated employees both as a matter of justice to the employees and in the interests of the efficiency of the service. Reference may be made particularly to the annual reports for 1911 by the Secretary of the Treasury (p. 7), the Secretary of War (p. 33), the Postmaster General (p. 15), and the Secretary of the Interior (p. 17).

In respect to the War Department, Secretary Dickinson, in his annual report for 1909, recommended that some provision be made for retirement on annuities of employees who become superannuated in the service, and in his annual report for 1910 he renewed this recommendation, inviting attention to extracts from the annual report of the several bureau chiefs setting forth the need that some measures be taken to provide for the retirement of superannuated members of the civil service.

President Taft, in his annual message to Congress in 1909, under the caption of "Reduction in cost of governmental administration," recommended legislation for the retirement of civil-service employees, coupling with it a recommendation for an increase in salary to meet the increased cost of living.

Again, in his message to Congress, December 21, 1911, he said:

> I have already advocated in my last annual message the adoption of a civil-service retirement system, with the contributory features added to it, so as to reduce to a minimum the cost to the Government of the pensions to be paid. After considerable reflection I am very much opposed to a pension system that involves no contribution from the employees. I think the experience of other Governments justifies this view, but the crying necessity for some such contributory system, with possibly a governmental outlay in order to cover the initial cost and to start the system going at once while the contributions are accumulating, is manifest on every side. Nothing will so much promote the economy and efficiency of the Government as such a system.

On February 18, 1908, the special committee on personnel of the Keep Commission—a commission appointed by the President June 2, 1905, on business methods in the executive departments—after careful consideration of this subject, presented a plan for the retirement of superannuated employees on the basis of monthly deductions from the salary of each employee to provide a fund for the purchase of annuity on his retirement. More recently the subject has received thorough consideration by the President's Commission on Economy and Efficiency.

Responsive, presumably, to the recommendations of the Civil Service Commission, the bureau and department heads, the recommendation of the Keep Commission and of the President, the matter has received consideration at the hands of Members and committees of Congress. Since 1903 no less than 50 bills have been introduced in Congress for the retirement of the employees of the civil service, and the matter has been the subject of repeated hearings before committees of Congress.

The following are recommendations from department and bureau heads as to the necessity of retirement legislation:

RECOMMENDATIONS OF CABINET OFFICERS.

SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY CARTER GLASS, 1919.

> The efficiency of the department is retarded for want of a retirement law. I believe that the enactment of legislation providing for superannuated or disabled employees of the civil service in this department would result in economies and increased efficiency in the transaction of public business. It would be a measure of benefit to the Government and of justice to the employees who faithfully have devoted their talents and the best years of their lives to the interests of the Government.
> In this connection I should like to draw particular attention to the following recommendation contained in the annual report of my predecessor, Secretary McAdoo, for the fiscal year, 1918:
> "Recommendation has been made in previous annual reports of the Secretary for the enactment of an equitable retirement law for civil-service employees. The necessity for effective action of some character along this line has been accentuated during this period of war. It would seem to be not only a measure of justice to faithful public servants who have devoted their lives and talents to the Government, but it would also be in the interest of economy and increased efficiency in the administration of the public business."

SECRETARY OF COMMERCE WILLIAM C. REDFIELD, 1919.

> I look at it from the standpoint of common justice on the one hand and from that of efficient service on the other hand. Large private concerns recognize that a lifetime spent in their service carries with it an obligation of honor toward the employee who has thus served faithfully when years make him incapable of further effective work. The business house that would turn out an aged employee, saying to him in substance, "Now look out for yourself," after a long and good record would be damned by the common opinion of the business world, and ought to be.
> The only conceivable excuse that could be made would be that the employer had paid during the long service a sufficient salary over and above all the exigencies of life to have enabled the employee to provide himself for his own old age. No one will charge the Government with doing that, especially when objection is made to an employee endeavoring in his own time to add something to his or her income.

Failure to be as just in these matters as private concerns are injuries the Government either by causing the ambitious to seek better opportunities for service elsewhere or by relaxing the efforts of its employees generally through the unconscious drag that comes from hopeless service.

The result of the present condition is seen in the survival of many old people in the Government work who struggle on when they should have ceased from their labors because they needs must. Enactments requiring these aged workers to be discharged are substantially repealed by the higher law of humanity. They are demoted and maintained at reduced pay, thus creating what is in substance a pension without retirement, without the dignity of a recognition by the Government of their worth, and maintaining the inefficiency which everyone seeks to remove.

SECRETARY OF LABOR HON. W. B. WILSON, 1919.

Entirely apart from the humanities and justice involved in such legislation it would seem to be high time to recognize the fact that the executive departments have a pension roll, whether they like it or not, and that it is the most expensive, cumbersome, and in many ways inhuman sort of a pension system. What I refer to here is the waterlogged pay roll, which in all essentials produces a pension system without the retirement. In other words, aged and decrepit employees who have been worn out in Government service are retained on the pay roll at a salary which is considerably higher in most cases than would provide an adequate pension. These people are not discharged, can not and will not be discharged by the heads of departments, for humane reasons which we need not go into here. On the other hand, they must be at their desks each day for seven hours in order to receive the salary at which they are listed. This is not only a physical hardship upon them, it is a useless and inhumane one.

On the other hand, it has a demoralizing effect upon the other employees, particularly those who, going in at the entrance grade, are perhaps getting a salary for real work much less than the pensioners are receiving. These old people do nothing and are expected to do nothing, and the young clerks coming in at a lesser rate are naturally more or less incensed at being required to do the work that these "old-timers," so called, are unable to do.

RETIREMENT OF DISABLED OR SUPERANNUATED CLERKS.

The requirements of the Railway Mail Service are exacting, and the performance of duty is attended by danger and hardship. From the nature of the work performed it is necessary that the force be active and energetic, and it must be replenished constantly with an element of that character in order to maintain a high degree of efficiency. When the work of a railway postal clerk deteriorates it is necessary to change his assignments to postmasterships in second, third, and fourth class post offices if these positions are placed under the civil service. Provision should also be made for their retirement from the Railway Mail Service when disabled or superannuated upon some system of limited payment provided for by a contributory plan or otherwise.

[Postmaster General Wanamaker's report for 1890, p. 38.]

I wish that some scheme might be devised by which the departmental force, and all parts and branches of the Postal Service, classified or to be classified, might be encouraged into new exertions by some just, general, and certain plan of promotions. This would perhaps involve the retirement at a certain age of Government employees who have been efficient in the past, and would possibly involve, too, the payment to them of a stated sum, or of smaller sums at stated periods. But scores of places in the departments, and in the large post offices, as I doubt not, are to-day filled with superannuated clerks who fail to do the work which the department is required by Congress and the public to expect of them, and also prevent those from taking their places who would be glad to do all of the work well. It would seem as if we might either heartlessly remove these useless Government employees or else confess that we really have a civil pension roll. In any occupation it is the man who is looking for better work to do and for better pay for doing it that deserves the better work and the better pay; and I am certain that the efficiency of the whole postal force would be increased beyond all calculation if there could exist, in it and through it, a continual upward movement, a regular and certain retirement in some just and humane way, and a consequent influx of the young, the strong, the ambitious.

[Extract from the Annual Report of the Secretary of Commerce, 1913.]

SUPERANNUATION AND RETIREMENT.

The problem of utilizing the services of aged employees to the best advantage is constantly becoming more difficult of solution. The growing volume of work, the demand for increased efficiency, and the introduction of new methods and ideas require the services of men and women whose minds are active and capable of development. It seems inconsistent that the Government should expend large sums of money in attempting to procure properly equipped eligibles to enter its employ and at the same time retain on its rolls those who have long passed their usefulness. The heads of bureaus are reluctant to discontinue the services of superannuated clerks, for to do so would in most cases deprive the latter of their only source of income. Demotion is but a palliation, and does not fully meet the difficulties of the case. It would therefore seem to be only just to provide in some manner for the retirement of such employees on annuities at least partly commensurate with the rates of pay which they have been receiving. In some cases the reduction of force possible through the greater efficiency of younger men and women would go far to meet the cost of these annuities.

A brief statement of a few reasons in favor of the contributory plan for retirement:

"(1) The experience of England shows that pensions furnished entire by the Government are considered practically as deferred pay; in that sense they tend to keep salaries down; and in a similar sense they form an indirect contribution from the employees. At the urgent request of the employees, moreover, the English system was modified a few years ago in the direction of a contributory plan.

"England and Russia are still considered straight-pension territory. Germany, France, Austria, New Zealand, Australia, Canada, etc., are in the contributory column.

"(2) According to the experience of the straight-pension system in England, only one in six or seven employees lives or remains in the service long enough to secure a pension. Under the contributory plan an employee may leave at any time, taking his savings with him.

"(3) Under a straight-pension plan, it is believed, there would be a constant tendency to seek through Congress special dispensations on account of those employees who died before the pensionable age and whose families might be left destitute. This matter of special privilege would not only have a demoralizing effect upon the employees in general but would tend to bring the whole civil service into public disrepute.

"(4) A straight pension undoubtedly would tend to bind a man to his job. An employee might be deterred from leaving the service and bettering himself simply because he felt the binding power of a pension and realized that provision for his old age depended upon holding his job until the time of retirement. It has been argued, also, that the average employee under such circumstances might hesitate or refuse to protest against possible injustice or maladministration for fear of incurring the displeasure of the powers that be. Such an argument, however, would hardly apply in the case of a contributory plan, since an employee might be assured, in so far as his pension were concerned, of withdrawing his savings if he should resign."

[From the report of the Commissioner of Pensions for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1918.]

CIVIL-SERVICE RETIREMENT.

The question of retirement of certain employees who have passed the age of usefulness is one that is frequently before Congress and is ever present to the officials of this bureau.

We have a great number of employees who have served the bureau loyally for many years, but who have now become physically less effective in the activities of the service. These people have generally been the supporters of families and have been unable to make any provision for their latter years. It would be a heartless and inexcusable proceeding to dismiss these worn-out servants of the Government, and yet their continuance in the service is indefensible, except on humanitarian grounds. Unless these people are to be summarily dismissed, the Government would be a gainer in a financial way by devising some retirement plan, and the bureau would greatly profit in increased results by the elimination of the nonefficient class.

The argument favorable to civil-service retirement draws much strength from conditions in the Pension Bureau.

The following statement shows the number, ages, etc., of employees in the Pension Bureau on the 1st day of July, 1918:

Number in the classified civil service	925
Age of oldest employee	87
Number over 80 years of age	24
Number between 70 and 80 years of age	168
Based on age of 70, number eligible for retirement	192
Percentage of all employees eligible for retirement	20.75

The average age of all employees in December, 1917, was 57 years.

NEED OF A RETIREMENT LAW AS APPLICABLE TO PENSION BUREAU.

Mr. Edward C. Tieman, former Deputy Commissioner of Pensions, in a statement to the committee, said:

I think, because of the fact that the Pension Bureau is one of the oldest bureaus in the Government service, we can demonstrate there in the most effective and easily recognized way the advisability, both from an economic and a humane point of view the advantages of a retirement law. At present we have about 870 employees on our rolls. We find that 295 of that number are eligible for retirement under the provisions of this bill. They are 65 years of age, have had the necessary service, and come within the requirements of either the voluntary or the compulsory provisions of this act.

I have found, on making a personal investigation, that approximately 150 of the 870 employees in our bureau would probably take advantage of a retirement law. I can say this, without any reflection upon that 150, nearly all of whom are employed in some manner, that we could dispense with their services at this time and not lose in appreciable degree any measure of efficiency in the bureau. It is not to us a helpful service, so far as the administration of pension matters go. I would say further that at least 50 of that 150 are inefficient and do not render any useful service whatever to us. They could be retired. In order that you may understand just what I mean by what I have said with reference to the number who might retire or be retired under this law, I would say that for the 150 whose services could be dispensed with 50 efficient clerks would render us a better service and a more useful service than those 150 clerks. If those 150 clerks were to take advantage of the provisions of this bill, the annuity paid to them would approximate $90,000. The amount of salary paid to them is approximately $190,000. If their services were not replaced at all with new appointees in this bureau, there would be an outright saving in salaries of $100,000. But, of course, it goes without saying that we would have to appoint persons to take the places of those who are going out. But I repeat that 50 efficient persons would render us a far more valuable service than is rendered by the entire 150.

Now, I think that demonstrates, in a practical way, the benefits in the Pension Bureau of this bill or of any other retirement bill as an economic and humane proposition. It is humane, because it is our experience that old people, who have been efficient, who have rendered loyal and splendid service, who have had their responsibility of families, who have educated their children, and who have reached the ages where they have become inefficient, ought to be taken care of, because it would be absolutely inhumane to retire them arbitrarily from the service without any sort of provision for meeting the exigencies of life. We use our inefficient people down there the best way we can. We shift them from one place to another. They render all the service they can, and they render it in the best way that they can. But these people ought to be retired. They do not render a service that is valuable to us nor could they render it elsewhere.

ABILITY OF PENSION BUREAU TO ADMINISTER A RETIREMENT LAW.

The proceedings incident to adjudicating claims for pensions and the proceedings incident to the administration of a bill of this character are so nearly related and so similar in general character that the practice which now obtains in the Pension Bureau and the practice which would obtain in administering the benefits of an act of this character are so nearly alike that the training and experience of the clerks now in the bureau would be invaluable if they were required to take up this additional work. While we have a large number of inefficients, there are about 700 trained expert clerks in the Pension Bureau who are not only capable of giving advice but they are capable of supervising and directing the efforts and energies of other clerks. Out of that 700 clerks we have a sufficient number who could be put in charge of this work and other less experienced clerks could be put under them, so that this work from its very inception would go forward without a particle of delay. At the same time, with the addition of such help as will be required, because of the retirement of some clerks who are engaged upon pension work, we could handle the pension work and go ahead with the administration of both laws without delay with absolute satisfaction to everybody concerned, and with great economy.

COST OF ADMINISTRATION.

There would be no considerable expenditure because of this additional work. We have the building, equipment, and a system of filing already in operation which could be used in this connection. We have a corps of trained clerks which, if increased as was found necessary to administer the pension laws and this law, would not involve a large amount of expense. We have a medical division which would determine all medical questions. We have a special examination division which covers practically the entire United States, which would investigate every question that brought up a matter of doubt. Our medical division has under its control local examining boards in practically every county in every State of the United States, before which an applicant for the benefits of this law might appear for examination. Those boards are maintained without a dollar of expense to the Government, because the members of the board are paid only for the examinations they actually make and report. Now, those same boards would handle this business just as they handle the pension claims, because the same character of questions would be considered. We have a disbursing division where, already installed, is all the machinery necessary for the payment of this annuity. We are paying now about 630,000 pensioners every quarter. The employees in the disbursing division are engaged 12 months in the year in making out and mailing checks, and the financial division is making out vouchers for those who are paid under voucher. The record division is maintaining a perfect system of indexes, which could be enlarged to include the beneficiaries of this law.

The persons entitled to annuities under a retirement law could be paid every month through our disbursing division without the expenditure, I think, of a single dollar for additional mechanical appliances. The only requirement would be a few more clerks.

The plan contained in the pending bill is the result of a most careful study on the part of actuaries and Government experts, as well as by Senators and Representatives in Congress, and it is believed that it is as nearly perfect and will come as nearly as possible to accomplishing what is so much desired as any legislation that could be framed.

I am heartily in favor of its provisions and earnestly hope that it may be placed upon the statute books before the close of the present session of Congress. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Idaho has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] and ask unanimous consent that he be allowed to use the 15 minutes of my time out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Oklahoma be allowed to use the 15 minutes granted out of his time out of order. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I will not make any objection, although I suggest to the gentleman to withdraw his request. It is not within the power of the committee to change the order that was presented in the House. I shall make no point of order on the gentleman; I do not care what he talks about or what he talks, but it is not within the power of the committee by unanimous consent to change the order that was made by the House requiring the debate to be confined to the bill. Probably the Chair will call the gentleman down if nobody else does.

Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I will state to the gentleman that the time will not be extended and that the 15 minutes will be used out of my time, and the subject to be discussed is so near to the subject matter under discussion that I thought it would not be unreasonable to make the request.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I know. I was simply stating that the committee can not change by unanimous consent the orders presented in the House.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, this is just a little House courtesy to the distinguished coming Senator from Oklahoma [Applause.]

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Illinois yield to me?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes. I am not objecting.

Mr. FERRIS. I am fully aware of the rule and I am fully aware that it is out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The unanimous-consent request is not in order under the agreement. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] is recognized for 15 minutes. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the Congress, out of the war with Germany, in which 4,800,000 men participated, sprang an organization known as the American Legion, conceived in the highest purposes and which will be a live, active force in the Republic for the next half century. The executive committee of that organization, pursuant to request, have drafted a relief bill that meets their approval. It was introduced by Chairman FORDNEY. It affects 4,800,000 soldiers. It affects the taxpayers. It affects the Treasury. It is important that a grateful Republic do its duty.

SYNOPSIS OF THE BILL.

They have drafted a bill and submitted it to Congress. It is up for consideration to-day. It consists of four well-defined proposals of relief:

First. The land settlement provision.

Second. Home-purchase provision—long-time loans, low rates of interest, homes to be selected by the soldier.

Third. Vocational training, trades, science, education, and general improvement of the soldier.

Fourth. Adjusted compensation—bonus to enable the soldier to recoup part of the financial loss suffered while in the service.

Fifth. The committee has added a fifth option to the soldier, known as the paid-up insurance policy provision.

It is roughly estimated by those in charge of the bill and on the Ways and Means Committee that it will cost about $2,000,000,000. This money must be raised from the taxpayers. The committee has reported that it shall be raised in two years. They provide five sources from which to raise this necessary two billions of revenue.

The sources are as follows:

First. Consumption tax—sales tax—from which it is estimated they can raise $400,000,000 per year, or $800,000,000 for the two years the tax is to run.

Second. Tax on tobacco.

Third. Tax on real estate transfers.

Fourth. Stock-exchange transactions.

Fifth. A gradual raising of the general income-tax laws, and from the latter four sources are to be raised $1,200,000,000 necessary to make up the two billion.

Roughly speaking, the average days of service for the men are 400 days. The adjusted compensation is figured on a basis of $1.25 per day, which would approximate roughly $500 per man.

The bill as it is to be reported from the committee includes all enlisted men and officers up to and including captains. It does not include widows, as they are provided for in the war-risk insurance law. It includes the Regular Army personnel during the period of the war only. It ought to include all men and women who served; we can not afford to cut out part of them—they all served.

HISTORY OF THE LEGISLATION.

The history of this legislation is interesting. It originated primarily in Secretary Lane's office. That bill received consideration during a preceding Congress and was first reported from the Irrigation Committee. That bill also received consideration during the early part of this session of Congress by the House Public Lands Committee. Numerous bills have been introduced on the question, some 50 in number—long hearings were had before the Public Lands Committee, which resulted in the final reporting of the Mondell bill. That bill was not acceptable to the soldiers—it was not acceptable to the Congress.

Recently by an appropriate resolution all of the 50 bills that had been introduced by the several Members of Congress, some 50 in number, were summarily referred to the Committee on Ways and Means for consideration.

The executive committee of the American Legion drafted and promulgated a bill; it was introduced by Chairman FORDNEY of the Ways and Means Committee. That bill has been considered by five subcommittees. It is a very important bill affecting 4,800,000 soldiers, a far-reaching effect upon the Treasury, a draft upon the taxpayers, and is a bill of first importance. It should not be considered under suspension of rules, which excludes the offering of amendments, only allowing 40 minutes debate, as a gag rule intended only for emergency, and no emergency is here asserted to exist.

VIEWS OF MEMBERS CLASSIFIED.

The membership of the House of Representatives, consisting of 435 Members, may well be classified into four groups, as follows:

First. Those actively and energetically in favor of soldier legislation.

Second. Those vigorously opposed to any legislation for the soldiers whatever.

Third. Those in favor of land and home legislation but opposed to bonus.

Fourth. Those who pretend to be in favor of legislation, but who hope to make it so obnoxious that it will be without value to the soldiers, and who are striving to attach to it a method of taxation so odious that it renders the bill unsatisfactory to the soldiers, if not a reflection upon their patriotism and devotion to country.

MY OWN PERSONAL VIEWS.

I am one of those who feel it the duty of Congress to pass soldier relief legislation for the soldier and pass it now. I did what I could to get it passed last Congress. Other countries engaged in the war have granted some substantial recognition to their soldiers, why should not we do the same? We are better able to provide for them; we should even do more than they.

I am in favor of including every person connected with the service, both men and women, both officers and men. I do not believe in haggling, cheeseparing, and driving any sharp bargains with these soldiers. A great portion of them were drafted into the service. They were our Nation's defenders then. We should be their defenders now. [Applause.]

I am in favor of passing legislation that will benefit the 4,800,000 soldiers, sailors, and marines and not only 3,000,000 of them, as provided for in this proposed bill. They were all soldiers. They were all the Nation's defenders; true, some served more than others, but each one served as he was directed to serve; each one stood ready to do his Government's bidding and his Government's call; it was not within his power to determine whether he had active service or inactive service; his was to serve; he did serve, and this is no time to drive sharp bargains with him—to make fish of one and fowl of another.

I am in favor of making the land-settlement provision, the home-purchase provision, the vocational-training provision, the paid-up insurance provision, so attractive that not a single man of the 4,800,000 will elect or feel it to his best interest to select a so-called bonus or cash provision. I feel that by so doing the Nation's defenders will receive benefits more lasting in character, will receive benefits that will make them better citizens, will receive benefits that will improve the community in which they live; whereas it is without doubt in many cases true that the cash bonus will not be availing, will not be lasting in character, and will not do more than temporary good, if even that, for the ones receiving it.

There are, however, doubtless some cases where the cash bonus will be the only assistance the Government could render and the soldier could accept, and for that reason I am in favor of the adjusted compensation for that soldier, or soldiers, as provided for in the American Legion bill.

I take no stock in the proposition that this is a sale of the soldier's patriotism, and I receive those statements as coming from those who either have not thought upon the subject or are seeking to strike a body blow at this legislation. It is to be regretted that such talk would be even tolerated. The 4,800,000 men who have just offered their lives to their country are not entitled to be subjected to any such talk.

I am one of those who believes this legislation is just—is due from Congress, and that the soldier may accept it without a feeling that his Government has done something that justice does not demand and something that a grateful Republic would not only be willing but anxious to do.

I am one of those who believes this Government can not afford to fail to pass this bill which will enable our boys to again gain their stride and take their several places in society in the community in which they live.

I am one of those who believes the legislation should be freely given without any humiliation to the soldier, without any vicious haggling, nasty criticism of the soldier. The soldier should not be subjected to humility and beggary because this Nation is asked to do what other nations do. Members here who make such criticisms are, I fear, unmindful of the services these soldiers rendered. They have forgotten the dangers of yesterday. They have forgotten the sacrifices made, the ends achieved. They brought the flag back in victory, not in defeat. They did what a grateful Nation asked them to do. They did what the Nation could do only through their patriotism, their zeal, and devotion to country.

UNWHOLESOME PROVISIONS OF BILL.

FIRST OBJECTION.

I am opposed to attaching to this legislation any revenue legislation of any sort. If this is just legislation that should be passed, and I assert that it is, it should become a charge against the general revenues of the Government and should not have an irritating special tax provision attached to it. This course is without precedent, is without justice, is an innovation which, in my opinion, amounts to a slur and a reflection upon the soldier. Even if it is not so intended it will amount to that. This should not be done. I am in favor of striking from this soldier-relief bill the revenue bill attached to it and let the revenues necessary to carry forth this legislation be provided for in the future in the regular way as a separate bill, standing on its own bottom, and not hitched on or attached to this soldier bill at all. In my 14 years of service in this House I have never before been called upon to vote for remedial legislation of any sort and at the same time hang a tariff bill on to it. The raising of revenue is one question and within the jurisdiction of the Ways and Means Committee. The creation of a charge against the Treasury and the appropriating of money is another question. These two questions can not properly be linked together. Taxes are always odious, always heavy to bear, always unpopular; therefore I do not want this special irritating "sales tax" hung on to this soldier-relief bill. The soldiers will feel hurt about it. It is not fair or just to them. It should not be done.

I submit the Ways and Means Committee have erred in tying these two provisions together. I assert that it is economically unsound. I assert that it is wrong in principle. It will reflect on the soldiers and it is unfair to the Members of Congress who desire to vote for soldier-relief legislation to couple with it and force them to vote for a tax proposition which they believe to be unsound, unfair, unworkable, and unjust.

OBJECTION TO ANNOUNCED PLAN OF ALLOWING BUT 40 MINUTES' DEBATE AND NO OPPORTUNITY OF AMENDMENTS.

Even if it were proper to hang onto this soldier legislation a revenue bill of any sort, I am bitterly opposed to the raising of this necessary money by any "consumption or sales tax" of any kind or sort. Such a tax on every sale is at best a taxing of the poor, who can ill afford to pay it; it is the imposition of an irritating tax that will be an annoyance to the retail merchant; it will be an irritation to the public; cost more than it amounts to to collect it; make tax collectors of our business men; bring humilitation and disgrace to our soldiers; it will be forcing our soldier population to be themselves taxed to pay for this legislation; it will be a lifting of the burdens from the rich, the war profiteer, and the ammunition maker, and heaping it onto the shoulders of the poor. I submit this is not as it should be. I submit the 4,800,000 boys do not desire this. I submit the already overtaxed public can not endure this. I submit it should not be raised in this way.

THIRD OBJECTION.

Lincoln said, "God must have loved the poor, because he made so many of them." It seems to me we should observe and avoid any steps that make more of the poor than has been decreed to us. To pursue such a course is to breed socialism, distress, discontent, and, finally, to submerge the Government. Let me without partisanship, without any desire other than to help our Republican friends who are in full control, not to do this thing, not to raise this money in this way.

FOURTH OBJECTION.

The bill affects 4,800,000 soldiers; it creates a charge upon the Treasury of $2,000,00,000; it is the highest duty a Nation owes; it is a duty to its soldiery. Still the Republican side of the House allows but 40 minutes' debate; not a single Member of the House is given permission to offer an amendment; we are forced to vote yes or no, however imperfect, improper, insecure, and lacking in feasibility the bill may be found to be. Such a procedure is without precedent, vicious, unpardonable, and will live to plague the party that forced it down the throats of 435 patriotic Representatives of the people duly elected and brought here to do their full duty.

I am sure I am not alone in my hostility toward the procedure adopted by the majority for the consideration of this bill. I am sure every Democrat on this side of the House objects to it. I am sure a large majority of the Republicans who believe in fair play, full consideration, and justice to the membership of this House are likewise opposed to it. This legislation is entirely too important, affects too many people, creates too great a charge on the Treasury to be handled in this summary way. If Speaker GILLETT does his duty—and in this instance it is discretionary with him—he will refuse to recognize any Member to move to suspend the rules to pass such a bill as this with but 40 minutes' debate and without the right to offer a single, solitary amendment, which precludes the right to even make a motion to recommit.

To pursue this course is to say that every Member of Congress who desires to vote for soldier legislation must likewise adopt and vote for this infamous provision of a consumption or sales tax.

I submit that this tax provision should stand on its own bottom. If it is just to thus tax the poor, the membership will approve it standing alone; if it is unjust to thus tax them, it should not be forced upon them in order that they may accord their friendship, help, and support for the 4,800,000 soldiers who richly deserve their support.

The membership of this House should at least be entitled to a chance to register its will; the country is entitled to know who favors this consumption or sales tax and who opposes it. The country is entitled to know who favors these soldiers and who really opposes them; the soldiers are entitled to know who really favor them and who really oppose them; and by coupling these two proposals together, which, to my mind, is almost infamous, it enables the Member who is really opposed to soldier legislation to hide behind the cloak of taxation and thereby really conceal his motives. I submit this is indefensible; I submit the exigencies are not so great to perform such a day's work.

WEALTH OF THE COUNTRY ABLE TO BEAR BURDENS.

Members of Congress here, on one pretext and another, are asserting that the Government can not afford to pass this legislation; they are asserting that the 4,800,000 boys do not need this assistance; some of them are even going so far as to speak scornfully of the men who so recently served them; some of them are asserting that the men received $30 a month during this war and but $15 during previous wars, and that is true; but the conditions are so different and the purchasing power of the dollar is so reduced and the ability to earn for those behind the lines had so increased that the financial sacrifices made by the soldier have been greater than he may well be expected to endure. They likewise paid about $7 per month for insurance, $15 for family allowance, until their salaries really were not only consumed but more than consumed. They came out broke. They need this legislation. They deserve it.

The real question to determine is whether or not the taxpayers of the Republic can really afford this additional drain upon them.

Let us observe what the Treasury Department shows as to the fortunes actually amassed by war profiteers—by ammunition profiteers—behind the lines during the war. We are told that there are 23,000 new millionaires—made during the war, came to us as a result of the war, out of the war. These millions were made by men behind the lines, in safety, while 4,800,000 of America's sons were fighting and dying in the service of their country on sea and land that free government might live. The soldiers were performing this hazardous service at $30 a month. They were baring their heads and their breasts to all the dangers, horrors, suffering, and terrors of war while the millions were being amassed by those behind the lines, in safety, selling their wares to the Government at fabulous profits.

Can these 23,000 millionaires thus created afford to be taxed to enable their Government to do justice to their soldiery? Will they desire to protest a modest levy against their fortunes made during the war, out of the war, to adjust the losses of America's soldiery? I do not believe it. The fortunes thus amassed could be put to no better purpose than help these boys to their feet, help a Nation keep its pledge, show a Nation's gratitude, and do a Nation's duty.

We are told that the corporations of this country who earned annually more than $100,000 made war profits during the war of more than $2,000,000,000. We are told that 69,000 men made war profits alone of $3,000,000,000 during the war years. If this be true, and my information is that it is true—my information is that it is but a mere scratching of the surface of what has actually been made—will these shrewd business men, brilliant, able, virile, thrifty, strong, capable of earning millions, will they come here and protest this legislation which levies a tax against their profits, their swollen fortunes, their earnings that have climbed mountain high, made possible by conditions occasioned and brought about by the war?

If they do come and protest, will a just Congress or a just constituency tolerate them and their millions of war profits to be tax free while the soldier stalks the street, penniless and alone? Will the 435 chosen representatives of the people, sworn to do their duty, acting under their oath of office, tax the farmer on his implements, the workman on his tools, the 20,000,000 toilers and wage earners on every purchase they make, to the end that these swollen fortunes may not be interrupted or molested or exactions levied against them?

No; I can not believe America's thrifty, thriving, teeming business men would have this Congress adopt such a course. I can not believe the 4,800,000 soldiers, a major portion of whom were drafted into the service, would accept or tolerate us to thus render their legislation unpopular, irritating, undesirable, unsatisfactory, by such a tax.

No; I repeat, the 4,800,000 soldiers were the flower of the Republic; they were the fairest flowers in all the garden; they carried the flag across 3,000 miles of surging sea, that free government might live; they fought on foreign soil; they brought victory out of chaos; brought hope out of despair. They brought the flag back in honor, not in dishonor; they served America well; they served civilization well. They are home with us again; they are our soldiers. Let us encourage them; let us disclose that the heart of a grateful Republic beats for them and with outstretched hands embraces them. Give to them some substantial recognition to help them find their way; to enable them to start anew; to urge them to nobler and better things.

This relief should not be grudgingly given. No irritating tax features should be injected into it or hung onto it. No nation can long endure that does not stand true to its soldiery. [Applause.]

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Dakota is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I would like to get the special attention of all those gentlemen who represent districts covered by grants of lands to railroads. I have just obtained a very important decision from the Solicitor of the Treasury in reference to certain claims that have been gathered up by attorneys, accompanied with powers of attorney, in which they are to get $100 for simply using a 2-cent postage stamp to mail them across to the Commissioner of Lands to the effect that the claimants may revoke those powers of attorney if they desire.

There is one firm of attorneys that did do a considerable amount of work in connection with this matter in establishing the law. They brought a case in one of the lower courts and took it through to the Supreme Court, and, of course, as to them they have earned perhaps a substantial fee. But other attorneys who have been gathering up claims, who absolutely did nothing to help establish the law, are to get 50 per cent, and it seems to me those who are claimants ought to know that they can revoke those powers of attorney, and that as much publicity as possible should be given to this——

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from North Dakota yield to the gentleman from Oregon?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. I do.

Mr. SINNOTT. Are the gentleman's observations directed toward those railroad grants where the double minimum has been charged unlawfully by the Government?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Yes.

Mr. SINNOTT. And the attorneys have taken the matter up for a refund of one-half of the double minimum?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Yes. That is what it is designed to cover.

Mr. SINNOTT. Does the gentleman know whether the Northern Pacific grant down from the Columbia River is included?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Does the gentleman mean the grant of 1889?

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. It is.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Under the leave granted to me, I shall extend in the RECORD copies of the letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the decision of the Solicitor for the Treasury, and other letters and telegrams, which I am sure will be of interest to all Representatives from railroad land-grant States:

FARGO, N. DAK., April 22, 1920.

HON. GEORGE M. YOUNG,
Congressman Second District North Dakota,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

Have just sent Secretary of Interior following telegram:

"Regarding rebate due settlers who filed in odd-numbered sections within railroad-grant area, great injustice has resulted in cases where settlers, without any knowledge of department's decision of September 10, were induced to sign contract with attorneys at Washington to collect Government rebate on terms outrageously exorbitant. Much dissatisfaction expressed because of Government's failure to notify settlers of decision months ago."

Suggest you get in touch with department immediately regarding this matter and insist upon some measure of relief. Also suggest that you communicate by wire with the different United States land offices in North Dakota for further particulars. Answer.

TELEGRAM CONTAINING INFORMATION AND ADVICE.

APRIL 23, 1920.

JOHN ANDREWS,
Managing Editor North Dakota Leader,
Fargo, N. Dak.:

In further response to your telegram will say that I have investigated at the General Land Office the matter of rebates due to settlers who filed on lands in odd-numbered sections within the railroad-grant areas and commuted their entries. It is entirely unnecessary for anyone at this time to employ attorneys to collect these rebates. It is a simple matter for any man to collect it by asking for blanks either from the Land Office or from his Congressman. The trouble is that many have already sent claims to attorneys at Washington coupled with a power of attorney to handle the claims and retain one-half the amount collected for their services. About 95 claims out of 100 coming in now are being presented by attorneys, and only about 5 per cent are coming in where the checks will be made out in full to individual claimants. It occurred to me that perhaps it would be well for each claimant to file a revocation of his power of attorney with the Commissioner of the General Land Office. The chief law clerk claimed that this could not be done, because of the rule of law that a power of attorney coupled with an interest is not revokable. I thrashed this out with the chief law clerk, and he is now in considerable doubt about it, but is inclined to think that the power of attorney used in these cases is revokable, because of the law which provides that claims against the Government can not be assigned, and that in these cases they have attempted to assign a half interest in the claim. So far as I can learn it will be impossible to get an opinion from the Solicitor of the Treasury Department in advance of an actual case being presented to him. This can be done by some one filing a revocation of his power of attorney with the Commissioner of the General Land Office, which, if done, will be sent by the commissioner along with the claim and power of attorney to the solicitor for his opinion. I am going to do the best I can to obtain an opinion from the solicitor without waiting for this process; but it would seem to me that it would be well to get word to every claimant possible through the press to file revocations, because the claims are coming in fast, and, of course, it will do no good to file a revocation after the claims have been paid. It would seem to me well worth while for all having claims to quickly forward revocations, either direct to the Commissioner of the General Land Office or to their Congressman to be filed with him.

The commissioner has taken under advisement the matter of issuing a general statement to the press in respect to the fact that claimants need not employ attorneys.

Member of Congress.

REPAYMENT INFORMATION.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, April 17, 1920.

Hon. GEORGE M. YOUNG,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. YOUNG: Referring to your telephone call of the 23d relative to the practice of Copp & Andrews and other attorneys of this city in the matter of repayment of portions of moneys paid on lands within the limits of railroad-land grants, I have the honor to advise you that for many years this department held that both odd and even numbered sections within the primary limits of railroad-land grants as fixed by map of general route, or definite location, should be rated at $2.50 per acre.

The firm of Copp & Andrews in the year 1912 filed in this office the claim of Robert A. Laughlin for repayment of $1.25 per acre of the money paid on cash entry No. 106, The Dalles, Oreg., series. The entry is located in an odd-numbered section within the limits of the grant of the Northern Pacific Railroad Co. as fixed by map of general route filed August 13, 1870, for that portion of the grant of July 2, 1864 (13 Stat., 365), through what is known as the Columbia Valley from Wallula Junction, Wash., to Portland, Oreg. No map of definite location was ever filed, and the road was never constructed as to that portion, and the grant to that extent was forfeited by the act of September 29, 1890 (26 Stat., 496).

The act of 1864 granted to the railroad company the odd-numbered sections for 20 miles on each side of the road after the general route should be fixed, excepting from said grant the odd-numbered sections which had been settled upon or otherwise segregated from the public domain prior to the date that the line of road was definitely fixed. It was further provided that the alternate reserved even-numbered sections should "not be sold by the Government at a price less than $2.50 per acre when offered for sale." This department, following uniform previous decisions, held that all lands within the limits of said branch line, as shown by map of general route, both in odd and even numbered sections, were properly rated at $2.50 per acre from the date of withdrawal on map of general route to the date of forfeiture in 1890.

In the Laughlin case, which was pursued through the Court of Claims and the Supreme Court by Copp & Andrews, the latter court held, in effect (249 U. S., 440–447) that since the granting act did not authorize the increase in price, and there was no other authority for such increases on lands in odd-numbered sections, the price should be $1.25 per acre where no map of definite location of the road was filed, unless a different price was fixed by a special act providing for the sale of such lands.

Following this decision of the Supreme Court, the department in its decision of September 10, 1919 (47 L. D., 258), heirs of E. D. Baldwin, held, in effect, that odd-numbered sections which had been excepted from railroad land grants because of prior settlement or segregation, whether the road had been definitely located or not, should be $1.25 per acre, instead of $2.50, as had been theretofore charged.

It follows, in the absence of special provisions of law to the contrary, that one who purchased an odd section of land within the limits of a railroad grant where the map of general route has been filed, and who has therefore been required to pay in excess of $1.25 per acre for such land, is, generally speaking, entitled to repayment for such excess; or one who has entered land so situated under the homestead laws and has paid commissions computed on the basis of more than $1.25 per acre, is entitled to a repayment of such excess commissions.

This office has given full information concerning claims of this character, in response to all inquiries, and where the record showed a prima facie right to repayment blank forms were inclosed; but we have not searched our records to ascertain the possible existence of such claims with a view to giving notice thereof. Circular No. 664, under date of December 13, 1919, notified the local offices of the change of the rule relative to the price of odd sections in railroad grant limits. I presume we have received a thousand applications for repayment by reason of the decision above referred to, about equally divided between applications for excess purchase price and excess commissions.

Referring to the telegram you have received, will say that the department is in no way responsible for the activity of attorneys in this connection, so long as such activity is not unprofessional in character. Any contracts which prospective claimants have entered into with such attorneys are, of course, purely private transactions.

Very respectfully,

CLAY TALLMAN, Commissioner.

REQUEST TO SOLICITOR FOR OPINION.

APRIL 23, 1920.

SOLICITOR FOR THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am very anxious to obtain as quickly as possible your opinion as to whether certain powers of attorney are revocable which were filed by attorneys for the collection of a portion of the commutation fees upon homesteads in odd-numbered sections within the land-grant areas.

The following is a sample of the form of power of attorney referred to:

"I hereby appoint ———, of Washington, D. C., my true and lawful attorney, with full power of substitution to prosecute my claim for repayment of money due me under this application and to receive warrant in payment thereof."

While I have not had an opportunity to investigate, I assume that the particular attorneys who carried the test case through the courts are entitled to reasonable compensation for their services. I do understand, however, that there are other attorneys who did absolutely nothing to test out the law who gathered in some claims without doing any work on them at all and filed them with the Commissioner of the General Land Office and expect to collect by reason of the powers of attorney and retain 50 per cent of the amount collected.

Would not the law against assigning claims against the Government take these powers of attorney out of the general rule of law that powers of attorney coupled with an interest are not revocable?

I want to protect the men who executed powers of attorney against cutting their claims in the middle by men who did nothing more to earn the fee than walk over to the Commissioner of the General Land Office and file the claim, or else send it to him through the mails, and I am very anxious to have an opinion from you as quickly as possible so as to put a stop to this, if it can be stopped; in other words, an opinion several weeks from now would be of no value, because it will be like locking the barn door after the horse has been stolen.

Thanking you in anticipation for an expression of your opinion in this matter quickly, I remain,

Yours, respectfully,

GEORGE M. YOUNG,
Representative in Congress, Second District, North Dakota.

OPINION OF SOLICITOR OF THE TREASURY.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
OFFICE OF THE SOLICITOR OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, D. C., April 27, 1920.

In re revocation of power of attorney for collection of part of commutation fees upon homesteads.

Hon. GEORGE M. YOUNG, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Your letter of the 23d instant, relative to whether a certain power of attorney given for the collection of a portion of commutation fees upon certain homesteads is revocable, was received.

The power of attorney referred to reads as follows:

"I hereby appoint ———, from Washington, D. C., my true and lawful attorney, with full power of substitution, to prosecute my claim for repayment of money due me under this application and to receive warrant in payment thereof."

Generally speaking, the law is well settled that if no term of service has been agreed upon, the principal may at any time revoke the authority of his agent so far as it relates to things to be done and remaining unexecuted, unless the authority is coupled with an interest. Of course, if the authority has been executed it can not be revoked. The power of revocation exists even though it be expressly stipulated that the agency is irrevocable. American and English Encyclopedia of Law, second edition, volume 1, pages 1216 et seq. Also see Greene's Digest, volume 3, page 3369, of the American State Reports.

It is clear to my mind that the foregoing power of attorney can be revoked.

The Auditor for the Interior Department informed me that until such power of attorney is revoked the warrant issued on the claim for repayment of money due the claimant who executed such power of attorney would be delivered to the attorney named in such instrument; but a written revocation of such power of attorney sent either to the Auditor for the Interior Department or the Secretary of the Treasury would result in such warrant being sent direct to the claimant.

A mere notice setting out a copy of the power of attorney to be revoked, signed by the claimant, and delivered to the Auditor for the Interior Department or the Secretary of the Treasury, would be sufficient of such revocation. Of course, if the attorney performed any service, either personal or through some other parties, under the powers conferred by such instrument, he could collect for such services by an action in court under a contract made by and between him and the claimant.

If I can be of any further service to you in this or any other matter, I shall be pleased to do so.

Very respectfully,

TELEGRAM TO THE GOVERNOR.

APRIL 29, 1920.

To the GOVERNOR OF NORTH DAKOTA,
Bismarck, N. Dak.:

Yesterday the 28th I sent a telegram to P. E. Byrne, register of the United States land office, Bismarck, in the following words:

"Am pleased to inform you that I have just obtained a written opinion from the Solicitor for the Treasury Department, in which he states that the powers of attorney obtained by Washington attorneys for the collection of claims for excess amount paid by homesteaders in commuting entries upon odd-numbered sections within railroad grants can be revoked. The decision is written in response to my written application to the solicitor for decision made on April 23, and after citing authorities and giving copy of the power of attorney used by the attorneys, reads as follows:

"'It is clear to my mind that the foregoing power of attorney can be revoked. The Auditor for the Interior Department informed me that until such power of attorney is revoked, the warrant issued on the claim for repayment of money due the claimant who executed such power of attorney would be delivered to the attorney named in such instrument, but a written revocation of such power of attorney sent either to the Auditor for the Interior Department or the Secretary of the Treasury would result in such warrant being sent direct to the claimant. A mere notice setting out a copy of the power of attorney to be revoked, signed by the claimant, and delivered to the Auditor for the Interior Department or the Secretary of the Treasury would be sufficient notice of such revocation. Of course, if the attorney performed any service either personal or through some other parties under the powers conferred by such instrument he could collect for such services by an action in court under a contract made by and between him and claimant.'

"Now, if the widest publicity can be given to this it will result in a saving of about $100 for those who learn about it and act quickly. Only one firm of attorneys can show they earned anything to speak of, namely, Copp & Andrews, because they took the test case through the courts, but even that firm in case of revocation of power of attorney would have to go into court and prove the real value of their services. Other attorneys can probably show no services performed of any value and will probably never go into court. Of course, those who have not yet signed powers of attorney should be cautioned not to do so, and should write to their Congressman for blanks."

Have received to-day, the 29th, a telegram from Receiver Brandt, of the United States land office, saying that he is not at liberty to act without the authority of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and the Commissioner of the General Land Office has just refused to give such authority, saying that he does not care to interfere with agreements made between claimants and their attorneys. I am therefore calling the entire matter to your attention, believing the information should be made as public as possible.

GEORGE M. YOUNG,
Member of Congress Second District.

A copy of my telegram respecting decision was also sent to Mr. John Andrews, Fargo.

HOW TO GET $100 FROM THE GOVERNMENT BY WRITING A LETTER.

[Copy of open letter.]

DEAR SIR: I inclose herewith a copy of an important decision rendered by the Hon. Lawrence Becker, Solicitor of the Treasury Department, which holds that powers of attorney may be revoked which were given by claimants to attorneys authorizing them to collect claims for overpayment by those who commuted their entries upon odd-numbered sections within the railroad grant areas.

Those who have heretofore given powers of attorney to the firm of Copp & Andrews may revoke the powers of attorney given to them, but thereafter may be obliged to pay the amount which they agreed to pay them, because these particular attorneys presented and argued the case in the Court of Claims and also in the Supreme Court of the United States, and it was through them that the right to secure a rebate was established. All other attorneys, in my judgment, performed only nominal services. They had nothing to do with establishing the law and can collect the money merely by presenting it to the Commissioner of the General Land Office or by simply mailing it to him. It would seem that no one should consent to pay anything other than a very small amount for such nominal services, and it would seem now that everyone who has outstanding a power of attorney under these circumstances should immediately revoke it. Attorneys in Oregon who brought action in the State courts to recover fees under somewhat similar circumstances failed to secure a judgment.

If the revocation of the power of attorney is forwarded to me, I will file it promptly. Of course, it must be filed before the Government pays the money. It will do no good thereafter.

If any claim has not yet been made, I shall be pleased to forward blanks upon which to make out the claim, present it, secure the money, and forward it without any charge whatsoever.

It should be remembered that the man who made final proof is entitled to a rebate even if he doesn't live on the land now.

In order to assist you in the preparation of the revocation of power of attorney, I have obtained the approval by the Solicitor of the Treasury Department to the following form:

"Revocation of power of attorney.

"Know all men by these presents that whereas I, ——— ———, of ——— ——— post office, State of North Dakota, did, in my letter of attorney, constitute and appoint ——— ———, of ——— ———, my true and lawful attorney for me and in my name to prosecute my claim for repayment of money due me under the application attached to said power of attorney, in which said application a claim was made for $1.25 per acre erroneously and improperly collected from me by the Government of the United States at the time of making final proof by me covering the following-described land: ——— ———, and which said power of attorney also authorized said ——— ——— to receive a warrant in payment thereof.

"Now, therefore, I, the said ——— ———, by these presents do hereby revoke, countermand, annul, and make void said letter of attorney and all power therein and thereby or in any manner given or intended to be given to the said ——— ———.

"In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and seal this —— day of ———, A. D. 1920.

"——— ———. [SEAL.]

"Signed, sealed, and delivered in the presence of—

"——— ———.

"——— ———.

"STATE OF NORTH DAKOTA,
"County of ———:

"On this —— day of ———, A. D. 1920, before me, a notary public in and for said county and State, personally appeared ——— ———, known to be the person who is described in and who executed the foregoing instrument and acknowledged that he executed the same freely and voluntarily.

"——— ———,
"Notary Public, ——— County, N. Dak.

"My commission expires ———."

If this does not interest you kindly hand it on to your neighbor, who may be saved $100 by it.

Those who desire further information upon this subject are invited to write me about it, in care of the House of Representatives, Washington, D. C. Everything will be done free of charge.

Yours very truly,

GEORGE M. YOUNG,
Representative in Congress from Second District North Dakota.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Dakota has expired.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, Uncle Sam is the greatest employer in the world and should be the fairest and most just. This Government, with a pay roll greater than that of any other enterprise in the world, can and should blaze the way for the solution of the great problems involved in the relations between employer and employee.

'Tis pity but 'tis true that the United States and Turkey alone of the nations of the world have failed to provide retirement pay for worn-out public servants. That the richest Nation in the world has been sending its faithful employees to the scrap heap in old age has been cause for shame. The passage of this retirement measure will be cause for congratulation and approval.

I have been urging the passage of a measure of this kind since I first entered this Congress. It has always seemed to me that by insisting upon humanity and justice in our dealings with Government employees we would be setting an example which would be of great value in the struggle for industrial justice in the Nation. That is the vital problem in America. Upon its solution depends the future of this Nation and its institutions, and this measure is a long step in the right direction.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] made an interesting statement a moment ago when he said that the wages paid Government employees have nothing whatever to do with the question of retirement. As a theory this assertion may be correct. As a practical condition it is woefully wrong. I will admit that the wage paid every real worker should be sufficient to not only provide food, clothing, and shelter for the worker and his family but also to provide a fund for the days of old age. The fact is that present wage standards for Government employees make necessary a constant struggle to maintain the American standard of health and decency for the present, to say nothing of the future.

Senator STERLING, joint author of this measure, in the debate in the Senate stated that the average yearly compensation for employees of the United States Government is $1,138. Of course, that includes many with low salaries along with those who receive high salaries, but the average is fixed at that figure.

Now, does any sane man think that such an income in these days of skyrocketing prices will meet the cost of the actual necessaries of life? It will not provide for a family to-day in Washington or any other large city in the land.

The best summary of the income necessary to support the average family at a level of health and decency has been prepared by the Bureau of Labor Statistics. It is based on the prices of last August, which were lower than they are to-day on almost every item. It is the result of wide investigation and careful study. It considers the average American family to consist of the parents and three children, and the figures are on that basis.

This budget states that the minimum quantity of food will cost $773.93 for the year. The clothing costs are fixed at $513.72. Rent, fuel, and light are figured at $428. All other items are computed to amount to $546.82. The total income necessary to permit the family to have the ordinary necessaries of life is fixed at $2,262.47.

When you study this report you will find no extravagance, to say the least. The weekly food bill for the entire family is $14.55. On the bill of fare made possible by that sum I promise there will be no gluttony and overeating.

The clothing items are figured to a razor edge. The man is allowed a hat every two years, a pair of gloves every two years, an umbrella every three years, and an overcoat every four years. The wife is awarded a suit every two years and a coat every three years.

Still more interesting than the items covered in the budget are the items omitted entirely. There is not a cent for the purchase of a book or magazine. There is not a cent for the purchase of furniture, although house furnishings and furniture have a way of wearing out. There is nothing for moving expenses, although in these days of the rent profiteer moving day is a fixed day in the calendar. There is no provision for a postage stamp nor a sheet of letter paper. There is nothing for funeral expenses, even though the grim reaper comes some time or other into every home.

This latest and best report on a living income for the average American family fixes the amount required at $2,262.47. It is issued under the auspices of the Government by Government investigators. Place beside that fact the other fact that the average pay of Government employees is $1,138 a year and then ask yourself if there is no connection between the income received and the need for protection from the poorhouse in the days of old age.

Mr. Chairman, down all the years there has been a terror in the hearts of mankind. It is the fear of poverty and helplessness in the days of old age. It has put despair in the minds of men and women and has cast a pall over countless lives.

None have been more subject to this terror than the Government employee, giving all their days of usefulness to the work of America. They know no other work, and when Uncle Sam casts them off the only door open is that leading to the charitable institution, which is worse than death itself.

Simply as a matter of common humanity and decency, I contend that we can not take the best efforts of faithful employees for a lifetime and then throw them out as waste on the scrap heap. Such a policy is against every principle of Americanism; it can not be endured in a land of justice.

Most department heads in the public service have taken that stand and as a result have refused to discharge old and worn-out employees, and they have been kept on the pay roll long after their days of usefulness have passed. Of course, that is better than heartlessly casting them out, but such a course is not fair to either the employee or to the Government.

I believe this retirement bill will substitute for the present haphazard, unscientific, inefficient pension system a just and fair plan, which will assure a square deal to every employee. It will save this Government millions of dollars in the end. No longer will we have a situation where a man's very life depends on his being kept in the service. Under this system those who have become inefficient through age and infirmity will be glad to step aside for younger men to assume their tasks and carry them through more effectively.

Mr. Chairman, one of the finest instances of patience and loyalty is to be found in the average Government employee. Through the discouragements of less than a living wage, of debt and privation, there have been faith and devotion which deserve admiration. They were in the public service. They believed the Nation's business must be carried on. In the midst of soaring prices for every necessary of life, with the increases cutting their incomes in two, they held to the faith that America would be just.

It is a pleasure to see this retirement measure so near passage. It is an evidence that this Congress wants to be fair, and that, though long delayed, justice will be the final reward of every faithful worker in this Nation, both in and out of the Government service.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. FAIRFIELD].

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Mr. Chairman, this is essentially new legislation on the part of the Government of the United States. It has been denominated progressive legislation, just legislation, legislation that takes into account the fact that a human being can not be made most efficient by merely mechanical means. Yet I have no doubt there are men who seriously and honestly think the legislation is unwise, perhaps unjust, and possibly not economic.

It might be well to reflect that the legislation is not proposed suddenly, or without very long and careful study. As I understand it, for almost a quarter of a century there have been those in this House who have advocated legislation of this sort. Various bills have been proposed, and after the most careful consideration and study of the bill the Senate has passed the measure that is now reported out into the House by our committee.

It is easy, perhaps, to cripple a bill of this kind in essential features by unwise amendments. There has been no disposition on the part of any who have spoken thus far to do that. We have been led to understand that any agency, whether governmental or private, that employs vast numbers of men and women becomes in a sense responsible for their physical well-being. A great corporation enters a community, organizes its industry, advertises for help, men are called, and there is a large concentration of population in a certain industry. There has been a disposition in this country to say that if they do not want to work at that particular thing let them quit. But a closer study of the problem of efficiency has revealed that if there is one peculiarity to a human being it is that, so far as industry is concerned, he is absolutely immobile—he can not change or shift after many years of employment in a particular industry—and because of that fact many of the great industries of this country have already thought it wise in an economic sense, in a humanitarian sense, to take care of their employees when they become unable to discharge their duties either by virtue of age or inability.

That responsibility rests upon every agency that is willing to take, even by solicitation, young men and keep them in their employment; and the Government, employing more than 350,000 men and women in the classified service, can not shirk that responsibility.

This bill—the first that has ever passed the Senate, as I understand it, and the first time that it has had, in all probability, an assurance of passing the House—is an effort to discharge the responsibilities of the Government as an employer to its employees.

It is true that in a sense it is a radical departure from what we had thought either wise or economic in the handling of this Government. But many years ago old Thomas Carlyle made a very pertinent remark with regard to the Government of the United States. He said:

> You have never had problems to solve in that country because you have had abundance of room; but wait until a crowded population begins to trench upon substance; wait until in a compact civilization you are faced with the great problems that constantly confront the concentrated populations of Europe, and then you will begin to understand something of the difficulties inherent in human government.

We are beginning to understand in the development that has rapidly come with the rise of great cities, with the taking up of public lands, with all the perplexing problems of social, economic, and industrial unrest, some of the difficulties that confront us. And so this legislation will go out to the people stamped with the idea that the Government of the fathers is capable of adapting itself to the new and untried situation, and is capable of so adapting itself as to show forth that immortal idea that gave the Republic birth, that the people are to have the first consideration. And so, gladly, I am supporting this bill. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. ROBINSON of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MOONEY].

Mr. MOONEY. Mr. Chairman, at the outset I must confess the very greatest enthusiasm for retirement legislation. Upon my election to Congress, when the Democratic Ways and Means men suggested that new members submit a preferred list, I asked for membership on the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, and this request followed my desire to try to help in retirement and reclassification work.

My interest came largely from years in the life insurance business, which calls most sharply to attention the very small percentage of men who approach old age with anything like a competence, and the appalling number who in later life are wholly or in part dependent upon relatives or public charity. It follows my profound conviction that there is a social and moral obligation upon the part of each employer to care for the aged employee who has given to him many years of faithful service, and its practical advantages were emphasized by my knowledge of the substantially increasing number of large employers who through group insurance or private endowment have made provisions for annuities for their aged employees.

A large acquaintance with and friendship for postal employees in my own city has emphasized the need for this kind of legislation at the earliest possible date. As has happened in all industrial centers, the cost of living in Cleveland has greatly increased through the past several years; salaries, generally, have also risen, and Federal pay is now below the standard of like work outside. Many of the very best employees have been forced by their expenses to leave the service, but there still remain a great many men who can leave the Government to-morrow and accept private employment at increased pay—these men have full knowledge of that fact, yet with a sense of duty that almost passes understanding have remained at their posts and by increased efforts are attempting to maintain the former high standard of efficiency with new helpers—in many instances young boys. There is no gentleman present who does not appreciate how absolutely we all depend upon uninterrupted mail service. I have felt, and do feel, that this department of the Government, which is not only self-supporting but earns a surplus, owes retirement provisions to its employees as a mark of appreciation for this loyalty and as deferred payment on salaries that are now much too small. [Applause.]

While originally there was more personal concern in the Postal Department and while perhaps the same reason for retirement does not exist in other branches, I am now convinced of its absolutely universal necessity. It is true that this legislation marks a distinct change in the civil-service employment policy of our Government, but the principle has been established for many years in both the Army and the Navy; there has been no effort to take away Army or Navy retirement rights, and should be none; yet I submit there can be no reason for its application there that does not here apply.

There is difference of opinion as to the outlay involved. One gentleman in particular, in whose judgment I have unusual confidence, who believes in retirement legislation and has given the subject careful study, opposes this measure, because he feels the expenditure will eventually be great. I do not easily disagree with the mature judgment of this gentleman, but have given to this measure unusual study; have tried to approach it as a business proposition; have given to it the very best of whatever little ability there is in me; and am convinced that it is a measure not of expense but of economy; that it is absolutely essential to efficient conduct of the Government's business. I have talked with men who from large actuarial and industrial experiences are best qualified to pass upon the subject; have carefully gone through the facts developed at our hearings; have looked for but have not found one country in which retirement legislation has been enacted and repealed; have talked with firms which carry this form of insurance, who regard it not as philanthropy but good, sound business; and have had my own judgment in the matter absolutely confirmed. There are many persons now eligible for retirement, many others who soon will be and whose contribution toward this fund will be small. Of course, it goes without the saying that their retirement payments will run into money, but the question is not how many persons but how much accomplishment will be taken from the service; whether or not the cash difference between retirement and present pay will do this work. It is a matter of common knowledge that there are very many men and women in the departments here and elsewhere who, because of age or ill health, are unable to render efficient service; it is known that incompetency for these reasons does not cause dismissal from the service; and until retirement legislation is enacted the time will never come when it does cause dismissal. It therefore follows that the Government is conducting a most expensive pension plan, and instead of receiving dividends in contentment and added loyalty of its employees is thereby demoralizing its own service. [Applause.]

The present policy forces a heartless and undeserved humiliation upon faithful employees; it crowds offices, retards promotions, and warns the ambitious and younger employee of what will happen in the evening of his own life; it advises the competent to seek private employment and will have the tendency to crowd Government service with those who have neither the ambition nor energy to succeed in outside work. There has never been a time in the history of the Republic when it was more essential that not one unnecessary dollar be expended, and in all proper measures to save money I shall go as far as anyone, but proper economy does not mean to sacrifice the aged and infirm. [Applause.] In the interest of efficiency there must be neither man nor woman in public service who could not retain a like position in private employment. The business of this Government is too vast and too important to be inefficiently handled, for, after all, an organization is just so good as its weaker links.

There is, in my judgment, not the slightest doubt that while some departments are staggering on without sufficient help other bureaus have very many more clerks than there is either reason or work for. This is not at all surprising, nor does the fault lie in any one man or set of men, because the vast machine has never since its organization been properly coordinated, nor have additions to personnel ever been made under any plan that would be permitted in private enterprise. Many bureaus were hastily enlarged and others formed under stress of war, with more concern for expedition than expenditure; but this reason no longer exists and it is my conviction that a joint congressional committee on reorganization can perform a real public service and can accomplish real economy. The Committee on Reclassification has just reported that work has been done, and I think well done, but the reclassification and reorganization work should go together, for it is the theory of civil service that by competitive examinations efficient, energetic help may be obtained and to prove successful these positions must be at least equally as desirable as positions in private employment. [Applause.] In the last analysis it is my judgment that the multiplicity of clerks and the inefficiency of which we all complain is largely the fault of Congress.

It is my observation that generally you get what you pay for, and when positions in the Government are made a little more desirable than those outside they will be filled with men and women who expect to make the service their life work. The Government should not retain in its service one unnecessary employee, for, after all, and particularly at this time, each one of these is kept from useful service elsewhere and there are more than enough positions for all of them, but there is a clear duty upon the part of Congress to set an example in fairness to its people, not to be far behind the average corporation in treatment accorded employees. [Applause.]

I believe that great economy in governmental work will follow proper treatment to the correct number of efficient employees; that the passage of this bill will go a long way in the right direction, and I hope it will pass without amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. ROBINSON of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I am one of the free lances of the House, in the sense that I always say what I think, and I commend that kind of life to my colleagues. You have no idea what a feeling of satisfaction it is to be absolutely unhampered and unshackled in what you say and do here in the House. I have been that way ever since I have been here—I say what I think, always. I have sense enough to know that the kind of a speech that I am going to make is unpopular with the men who sent us the two letters of instruction received by you and me this morning—mine went into the waste basket. I know that my speech is not popular with those organizations that told you a short time ago, through the newspapers, that they are card indexing you now; they are finding out what you do in your office, in your home, and everywhere else, and will use it against you on the hustings when election time comes. They say they are going to beat you when the time comes if you have not done exactly as they want you to do. My speech is not popular with the four newspapers here in Washington that make their living off the Government employees and Congress.

My speech is not going to be popular with such business concerns as the one here in Washington, so very successful that the other day it declared a dividend of 200 per cent, made here in Washington off the Government employees. I am not for a paternalistic government. I am for a government which is to be supported by the people; I am not for a government that is to support a few of the people at the expense of the many.

I have only 10 minutes, and I must pursue my line of thought, which is untrammeled, unshackled, and unhampered, in the manner in which I deem best. There are clerks here who have been permitted to grow old in the service. They have been permitted to believe that the Government owes them something more than it owes anyone else. They have been led, through the extravagant atmosphere of Washington, to eat, drink, and be merry, and to promptly spend as it comes extravagantly. Some of them have not much of this world's goods. I have as much humanity, I have as much sentiment, I have as much of the milk of human kindness in my heart as any of my colleagues in this House when it comes to spending my own money out of my own pocket, but when it comes to spending other people's money I am a little careful. I know that when I make a speech against this bill I put myself up here as the target for the darts of some of my colleagues. I realize that, but I do my duty just the same.

The fault of the whole business is in the civil-service law that we have on the statute books, which says to men and women, stay in the Government service, spend what you may at the time you get it, get your pay check to-day and spend it to-morrow, because when you get old the Government will take care of you. Go down in your districts, my friends, and take the doctors, when they get old and are not able to perform the service in competition with other doctors, they go to the scrap heap. Therefore they are thrifty, energetic, and save for old age. Take your lawyers, when they get old and can not longer win their cases in the courthouse in competition with other lawyers, they go to the scrap heap. Therefore, they are thrifty, energetic, and save for old age. Take your preachers, the men of God who faithfully serve the people in the pulpit. The great majority of them in this great Nation, when they get old, when they can not deliver the goods, when they can not keep their congregations awake 30 minutes on Sunday morning, must go to the scrap heap. They are therefore thrifty, energetic, and save for old age. Take your merchants, take your clerks in the stores, take your employees in banks, and when they get where they can not deliver the goods, in competition with others, they go to the scrap heap. And therefore they are thrifty, energetic, and save for old age. The greatest incentive there is for thrift and economy, the greatest incentive there is to fight extravagance and to produce the best there is in men and women in this country, is the fear of old age. It is the preparation for old age that makes men and women thrifty and economical in this country, and when you take from them the fear of old age, when you take from them the thought that they do not have to prepare and save for it, you take away from them the best incentive for thrift and economy there is in mankind.

I can not vote for this bill. I am going to be one of the few men who is going to vote against it. Do you know what the Government of the United States is? It is the best employer in the world. I have worked for $20 a month, at the hardest work a man ever did in his life—$20 a month. I know what money is worth. Yesterday in Chicago a man was convicted of theft by a jury before a distinguished Federal judge. Judge Landis then took occasion to criticize this Government by saying in substance that the United States Government was a poor employer of people, and by what he said led his readers to believe that, because it paid this man who was guilty of theft only $1,200 a year, therefore it was not much of a crime for a man to steal when a man was paid only $1,200 a year. I want to tell you right now that the great majority of the people of this country until lately have not made more than $1,200 a year. In my day and time $100 a month has been a big salary for a clerical employee in a bank, with responsibilities of finances running up into the millions on his shoulders. We are getting careless about what we do with public money. This Government pays some of its employees as much as $2,500, as much as $3,500 and even as much as $4,500 a year, and those who get between $3,500 and $4,500 a year, not long ago demanded of us that we should pay them a bonus of $240 a year.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman not grant me one minute more?

Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina. I yield one minute more to the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, the employees of this Government here in Washington get 30 days' vacation on full pay each year and get 30 days' more sick leave on a doctor's certificate on full pay each year. They get a half holiday every Saturday during the three summer months and get a holiday on every occasion when we have a national holiday. They get all 52 Sundays, something that I have never been able to get since I have been in Congress. They get all of the pleasures of Washington. Up to $2,500 salaries they get a bonus of $240. They go to work under pleasant environments, in comfortable buildings, work only seven hours per day, and everything is pleasant around them. Thousands of them here are rich, if you will but refer to the amount of taxes they pay. Thousands of them own their own homes, thousands of them drive their own automobiles, thousands of them are this week paying $4.40 apiece for tickets at the Follies down here at one of the theaters in this city, something I am not extravagant enough to do for my family, because I am not that careless with money, even on my salary. Uncle Sam is the finest employer in the whole world.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has again expired.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT].

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman who has just taken his seat made some observations about the scrap heap, that place of lost hope for doctors, lawyers, and preachers. I doubt very much whether he or anyone else ever heard of a doctor going on the scrap heap, which means, of course, the poorhouse, or of a lawyer ever going to the scrap heap, which is the poorhouse, and certainly the preachers are always taken care of under provisions made by the various church councils throughout the United States. That, it would seem, settles that part of his argument.

I want to call attention now to what virtually amounts to an attack upon men who are worn out in the Government service and are ready to go to what has been characterized as the scrap heap unless humane provision is made for them. And they are not all department clerks, for right now I have a case in my congressional district of a most capable and worthy young man who has gone totally blind as a consequence of his long hours engaged in that nerve-racking and brain-and-body exhausting service as a railway-mail clerk. Would any Member vote to deny this man the allowance this bill provides? God forbid.

We have seen in operation during the late war, and it is a recognized fundamental right of this Government to take everything you have, tax your land away from you, confiscate your barns gorged with the fruits of the field, take the coat from your back, and conscript you and your son into the military service to be wounded or shot, and we believe in supporting and defending the Government that that is correct. And we have submitted to it and still continue to submit to it; but, my friends, when the Government has the right to do that, and we recognize freely and cheerfully that right, it is also the right and the duty and high obligation of the Government to protect her citizens. It is the duty of the Government, not only the duty, but the very good policy to take care of the youth in the morning of life, give them a proper start, teach them how to make a living honestly so that they do not have to steal or beg or grow up in ignorance. But, on the other hand, at the end of the journey of the life, if after they have contributed all of mental power and physical strength to our good Government, in the name of all that is worthy of men where is the Member who would refuse to the aged men and women who happen to fall a little short in their ability to make enough to sustain life the pittance asked for, and send them to the scrap heap or earth's hell, the poorhouse? [Applause.] My friends, you will recall the sop handed the people after the French revolution. All the world thought and hoped and fervently prayed that following that bloody event there was something going to come to the people. We saw revealed that all the people got were parliaments where men could talk and the nobility still held the land and all things good and useful and worth while having. Quite different here. As Emerson says, this is the land of opportunity, and as a great poet adds, "Yes; and of work also." Why, my friends, would you allow your hated and despised enemy, the German Empire or Austria, to give a pension to the aged and not give it here? In England, in Switzerland, even bloody Turkey, and Venezuela and Australia give a pension to the aged people. But in an investigation of this subject as compared with our American standards and ideals it is so small as to suggest the sop and mere husks thrown to the people after the French revolution to make them contented. Let us do the big, broad, substantial, humane thing and show our humanity. Since we have the right to take the man and all he has, we should show that there is philanthrophy and justice enough in the Government of the United States to take care of him in his declining and sunset years. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to admonish the occupants of the galleries that they are not permitted under the rules of the House to indulge in demonstrations either of approval or disapproval, and that this rule will be observed. Otherwise the galleries will be cleared. The gentleman has 27 minutes remaining. If no one desires further time, the Chair will direct the Clerk to read the bill.

Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM]. [Applause.]

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, a very distinguished speaker of Baltimore in addressing a large concourse of men the other evening said:

No man can really enjoy this life and perform the duty he owes to humanity and himself until he has reached that stage when he can eliminate the fear of death.

I say to-day that no Government employee can perform the duty and service to the National Government which he should perform until after some provision is made for him which will enable him to eliminate the fear of poverty and want of himself and family in old age. [Applause.]

The retirement bill before this committee to-day is a long step in that direction. I have favored retirement legislation ever since I became a Member of Congress, nearly 10 years ago. It took only one visit to the departments of the Government, where I beheld those far beyond the age of profitable employment endeavoring to perform the work assigned them and which convinced me that certainly something should be done to enable the retirement of these superannuated employees.

I believe the present bill, whereby the Government bears about three-fifths of the retirement expense and the employees two-fifths, will enable the Government to more efficiently carry on the work and at less expense to the taxpayers. I believe that it will make Government employment more desirable by the people of our country; that we will be able to keep a steadier force instead of having so many resignations because of small pay.

When the employees realize that by entering the Government service they not only will receive a fair salary for the work performed but that they will be protected by retirement when disabled or too old to work they will be more willing to enter the service and make it their life employment. It will enable the Government to retire many of the employees who are so anxious to leave the service because of inability to perform the work owing to age. It will save the Government money rather than be an expense. It will be a protection to the old employees in time of retirement. It will make Government service an employment sought for and will redound to the great advantage, efficiency, and financial gain of the National Government, the people, and the taxpayers of the land.

Certainly if the great corporations found it advisable to establish a retirement system for financial reasons, as well as efficiency, the National Government need have no fear of its advantages. Long years ago the English Government found the retirement system necessary and beneficial and have always continued it.

Statistics plainly demonstrate the economy of the retirement system and show that the Government will be saved a very large sum in addition to efficiency.

I have been told by Government statisticians that the change of employees or their employment is most detrimental to the service and causes vast loss to the Government, as well as greatly cripples the service itself.

This retirement bill will wonderfully aid stability of employment and lead to Government work as a profession in itself. I look forward to great advantages from the passage of this bill.

The enactment of this retirement bill by the present session of the Sixty-sixth Congress is an indication of the fact that the people of this country have learned the lesson of the day and will go forward toward reconstruction and world peace in safety.

We have just learned the lesson that we can not all some day be rich and quit work, but rather that each one should ask the question, "What can I do to help in the community's work?" then find something to do and do it.

We as a great community are wresting our living from the earth, the air, and the sea. The rank and file of us must get up early and work hard and long with brain and brawn to get the kind of living we desire, * * one year's harvest will barely last till the next crop is gathered, one year's cloth is worn ere next year's yarn is woven, the paint on the roof will keep out the weather for two years at most.

When the whole community problem is viewed it is plain that any able-bodied, able-minded man or woman who does not do his or her best at some useful task is a slacker.

We can do this. We can rear and educate the children free from care. We can nurse and protect the sick and disabled. We can gently and reverently care for the aged in the land.

It has been said, and with some truth, that if we enact all demanded legislation such as this retirement bill that every man will be carrying two men on his shoulders. We are not, however, enacting all such legislation. Only this retirement bill is before us. Truthfully, though, are we not each carrying two men, and are we not remiss in our duty if we refuse?

Our years are threescore years and ten, though by reason of strength they may be fourscore years. Twenty years of that time is unproductive youth, the greater part of the years after 60 is leisurely old age. Five of the other 40 years are taken in vacation or sickness, so that we have 35 years of productivity to carry 35 years of growth, recreation, and retrospection. Every man should cheerfully be willing to carry two men on his back during his prime and not lazily depend on child labor and the aged odd-job man to ease his righteous burden.

But to advert to the phase of governmental efficiency. The civil service is the great governmental machine. We change chauffeurs, as it were, every four years, but we have found that we do not desire to get out a new model machine every time we get a new head. However, no machine can run without lubrication and replacement of worn-out parts.

The lubrication we should supply is reasonable bonus, fair pay, proper leave and sick leave, opportunity for promotion, and healthy working conditions. But with the best of lubrication parts will wear after 15 to 30 years' use, and a retirement law to revive these worn parts from this living governmental machine is absolutely essential to its proper functioning. Human scrap is far more precious than scrap iron or scrap brass, and employees who have given long years of service should be given honorable retirement with as large an annuity as the state of the Treasury and fair taxation will warrant.

Even the trees now throwing out their new leaves of opalescent green will in the fall crown these same leaves with robes of crimson and yellow and brown before they enter into their long sleep covering the roots of the trees.

The enactment of this law is in accord with all the laws of social and business life. It serves the ends of justice, efficiency, and safety. We should make it as generous as we dare, having due regard for taxation of the people, whose shoulders are bowed with war burdens and reconstruction requirements.

The truth is I believe the retirement of the aged and the enrollment of the young and vigorous will reduce the cost of government, secure more prompt service, and inure to the great advantage, in taxation and efficiency, of all the people of the land. [Loud applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I submit the following figures to justify the economy to be derived from its passage and approval:

Estimated cost to the Government of not retiring clerks inefficient through mental or physical incapacity, based upon a total number of 300,000 employees.

	Estimated number of clerks who chiefly through age are inefficient.	Annual salary of employees.		Total cost of—
		Average salary.	Total salary.	Nonretirement.	Retirement.
100 per cent inefficient..	5,202	$900	$4,681,800	$4,681,800	$3,121,200
75 per cent inefficient..	1,737	1,000	1,737,000	1,302,750	1,042,200
50 per cent inefficient...	1,256	1,200	1,507,200	753,600	753,600
Total.....	8,195	.....	7,926,000	6,738,150	4,917,000

That is, the Government is now paying annually some 8,195 employees $6,738,150 for work not performed by them but actually performed by other employees. It would cost about $4,917,000 per year to retire these employees, a net saving by retirement of about $1,821,150.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I ask leave to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. BOWERS].

Mr. BOWERS. Mr. Chairman, I rise to support the Sterling-Lehlbach bill. In the early part of this week the House passed the Fuller pension bill, a bill whose provisions will materially benefit the old veterans of the Civil War and their widows. In these days of high cost of living one should not forget the old and incapacitated who have served their country and their Government.

For nearly 16 years it was my pleasure to be at the head of an important Government bureau. I came in contact daily with governmental employees, and I want to add my testimony that as a whole they were worthy, conscientiously performed their duties, were loyal and faithful, and considering the amount of compensation they received then as compared with their present salaries in these days of prevailing high prices they are the poorest paid people in the world. Twenty years ago these employees bought the necessities of life for one-third of the amount that they pay for the same things to-day. Sugar was then 5 cents per pound; to-day it is 30 cents. Shoes were $3.50 a pair; to-day good shoes cost $14 a pair. I find employees now, messengers in the departments, who received then only $60 per month, others who received from $1,000 to $1,600 per annum, and the only stipend that has been given them in these long years of varying changes is the insignificant bonus of $240.

Mr. Chairman, this is a delayed act of justice. It is not right, it is not just and true to the traditions of this Government, the greatest and best Government on earth, that its employees should be so niggardly paid. I know of men who 20 years ago were receiving eighteen hundred and two thousand dollars a year, and in those days they lived in the good residential sections of the city, because their salaries would permit them to live there. Since that time many of these people who have come within my own observation have been demoted on account of their increasing years, and to-day, with the high cost of living and with the profiteering that is evident in Washington, these faithful employees are compelled from actual necessity to move to the more remote and less desirable sections of the city in which practically their whole life has been spent in the service of the Government. Many of these have reared large families, there have been times of sickness and death, and with the necessities of life increasing a little more from year to year it has been impossible for them to lay aside a competence for their old and declining age. It is the duty of every man in the House, irrespective of party affiliations, to support this just and beneficent measure. With a familiarity of the conditions that existed then and exist to-day, it is a step in the right direction to pass this bill. Many of the labor organizations have for years been endeavoring to bring about this legislation. They are to be commended for their efforts; every organization has a right to use its earnest endeavors to bring about a situation that will inure to the benefit of its members and to its fellow man. Members of Congress are frequently criticized for the side upon which they cast their votes. Take my own case. I have been subject to severe criticism because I voted according to my best judgment and for the good of the American people, yet I challenge a thorough investigation of my attitude toward labor. I was for years an officer in a labor organization and have always employed my best talent and means to better labor conditions wherever and whenever I have found them bad. And now that the opportunity has arisen to be of consequence to those who have spent their lives in the service of the Government, I am surprised that any Member of Congress should speak unfavorably against this bill, and it is not my purpose to sit idly by and permit an individual to malign people all of whom are better than himself. I feel it my duty as well as a pleasure to vote for this long-delayed and much-needed legislation.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I am going to speak a word in behalf of a certain group that will be beneficiaries under this bill, the railway postal clerks. We all demand a very high order of services from Government employees, and we find here the assertion made that Government employees are inefficient. I want to call your attention to a few figures which show how dependent we are as a people on the efficiency of this particular group of employees. This Government handles over 15,000,000,000 pieces of mail each year, which is one-third of the aggregate postal business of the world. The Postal Service handles more than 800,000 letters every hour of the 24 every day in the year. Aside from this, each day 250,000 money orders are handled, and thousands of tons of second, third, and fourth class mail. Now, let us see what we expect of the postal clerks.

Each clerk must be familiar with the location of from 5,000 to 20,000 post offices, and is required to be able to tell instantly on which railroad each one is located, through what junction point a letter dispatched by him from that office must pass, and a multitude of other details. Every day that we go to our office, every day a business man or professional man goes to his office, he is absolutely dependent upon the efficiency of these men. They are men who are highly specialized in a certain line of work. We have to have a certain type of men, who are accurate and efficient.

Let me give you this statement in order to show how efficient these men become: One clerk made a record of handling 17,000 cards addressed to as many post offices at the rate of 60 a minute, without putting a single card in the wrong pigeonhole in the mailing case. Every business house is interested in that type of efficiency. When a clerk becomes faithfully schooled so that he is efficient and of value to the country he is not particularly well fitted for any other position. I know a man to-day 70 years old who has the efficiency which I have just described. He is not able to do anything else. And there are thousands of them in the same position, and they should be taken care of in their old age. They have given the best they have. Look at the risk involved. The mail clerks travel in the aggregate 272,413,940 miles annually.

It is not only the risk of life and limb that is involved in these miles of travel, but it is the days and weeks that these faithful men are obliged to be away from their families. It is difficult, too, to imagine a service where longer hours of strenuous work are required. These men stand on their feet for hours handling tons of mail with a degree of skill and accuracy rarely equaled in any other service with which we are familiar.

Thousands of these railway mail clerks entered the service when comparatively young at a time when the compensation they received was sufficient for their maintenance. Time went on and they became more efficient, but their compensation was not increased in proportion to their ability. If it had not been for the fact that they had been in the service so long that they were practically unfitted for any other kind of service, they would have yielded to the opportunities which the business world of to-day has to offer. In many cases, however, it was not this fact alone that kept them in the service. The loyalty and the morale of the railway mail clerks is a matter of common knowledge. They stayed because they were in the service of their country and realized the importance of the high order of the service they were rendering to the business and social life of the Nation. It is not enlarging upon the facts at all to state that the whole business fabric of this country is dependent on efficient mail service. We can not hope to retain the younger men now engaged in this service unless the compensation is materially increased or unless in lieu of such increase this bill becomes a law and thereby protects these faithful employees in their old age. It can hardly be claimed by any person who has given any study to living conditions for some years past that these men could hope to save very much money from the meager salary that they have received. It is my firm belief that we owe far more to these faithful employees than we realize. It is not too much to say that the Railway Postal Service, with its almost 20,000 employees, constitutes the backbone of the American postal system. Every person engaged in business demands the efficient handling of the business mail of this country, and so far as the railway clerks are concerned there has never been the slightest cause to complain. This legislation will retain good men in the service, eliminate the inefficient, and provide an incentive to render good service. It will make the service appeal to men who are fitted temperamentally and mentally for this line of work. It will be a forward step in social and economic legislation. I am for this measure because I believe it is a matter of good business for the country as a whole to enact it.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. GODWIN] that there is only one more speech left on his side.

Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 11 minutes remaining.

Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina. I yield six minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON].

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, there is but little I can say in a few minutes about this question. I recollect that not many years ago gentlemen of this House cast their votes upon principle rather than on questions of expediency or to meet the wishes of a particular class. Unfortunately, that time has largely passed. Let us still stand by the doctrine announced by all the great parties of this country, that it is contrary to its best public interests to grant civil pensions to anyone. The question of granting a pension to a soldier was a mooted one, but how could the Government live without defense by its soldiers and its sailors? So it was granted. I favor the granting of pensions to all indigent soldiers and all needy and worthy soldiers, and that has been the policy of the Government. I do not favor the proposition of taking the money of the people from the Treasury and giving it to private individuals. The necessities for the existence of the Government demand a pension to the soldiers. Who can say that this is a meritorious measure? Who can say that it is honest? Who can say—who is willing to stand for the interest of the American people—that we as trustees of these people and of their funds have a right, a moral right, to go into their Treasury and take their money and give it away to the private individual in annuities?

Are there no obligations upon us to the people to economize that we may meet the great demands of Government, even if there were a right to grant these pensions under the law to private citizens? If the employees are not paid enough, pay them more that they may save something for old age. Do not make them wards of the Government. As a gratuity, if you desire to retire the superannuated on pay, do so, and make the law such that this necessity may not exist again. There may be some equity in this view, but not otherwise. The public debt amounts to $25,000,000,000. Divide it among the congressional districts and you will find an average of $60,000,000 of money that these people must raise to meet this great obligation. How can we pay it if the people's money is given away in civil pensions? We must economize. This is no time for extraordinary expenses; this is no time for building monuments; this is no time for the creation of commissions and the expenditure of public money in that way.

It would have been better had we repealed four-fifths of these Government commissions and put an end to government by commission in this country. We can and we ought to run this Government at one-third of its expense now. We, this Congress, are more largely responsible than any other body on earth for the high cost of living to-day. Why? Because you are maintaining upon the statute books the war statutes, restrictions upon trade and commerce, limitations upon the individual and the power and right of the citizens. Until you wipe away these statutes, until you bring back the normal, legal conditions which existed, there can be, and will be, no yielding to the ordinary law of supply and demand. They who produce, and especially the middleman in trade, will exact under the laws from the consumer until we turn men free to contend in commerce and trade among themselves, and thereby, under the law of supply and demand, reduce the cost of living and produce revenue from the citizen by the encouragement of business and individual prosperity so that he can pay taxes. The relief must come from your legislation. The law to restore the normal conditions by the repeal of war statutes must come. Trade and commerce must be free and restrictions removed, else the conditions that now exist will remain. [Applause.] Taxes must be reduced and the payment of the war debt spread over a long period of time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Californa is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the purposes and objects of this legislation. I am for this bill with the House amendments. I am in favor of making promises to the people, and I am as strongly in favor of carrying out to the letter these promises. When we do that, we will get results. Here is an opportunity to carry out one of the promises made by the Democratic Party in 1916, and upon which they were successful in the election. I want to read that part of the platform:

GOVERNMENT EMPLOYMENT.

We hold that the life, health, and strength of the men, women, and children of the Nation are its greatest asset, and that in the conservation of these the Federal Government, wherever it acts as the employer of labor, should, both on its own account and as an example, put into effect the following principles of just employment:

1. A living wage for all employees.
2. A working day not to exceed eight hours, with one day of rest in seven.
3. The adoption of safety appliances and the establishment of thoroughly sanitary conditions of labor.
4. Adequate compensation for industrial accidents.
5. The standards of the "uniform child-labor law" wherever minors are employed.
6. Such provisions for decency, comfort, and health in the employment of women as should be accorded the mothers of the race.
7. An equitable retirement law providing for the retirement of superannuated and disabled employees of the civil service, to the end that a higher standard of efficiency may be maintained.

We believe also that the adoption of similar principles should be urged and applied in the legislation of the States with regard to labor within their borders, and that through every possible agency the life and health of the people of the Nation should be conserved.

You will notice that No. 7 is particularly applicable to this bill:

An equitable retirement law providing for the retirement of superannuated and disabled employees of the civil service, to the end that a higher standard of efficiency may be maintained.

[Applause.]

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. RAKER. Yes; I yield for a question.

Mr. RAYBURN. Does that commit us to the proposition that the Government should pay it all or that we should simply make up a deficit?

Mr. RAKER. No; it does not require that the Government should pay it all. It is a division. It is an equitable retirement bill.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. FOCHT. Why was this delayed so long? Why did you not do it during the years when your party was in power? [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. RAKER. Oh, we were working on it, and we would have got it through beyond all question, but the war was on, and we put aside all other legislation in order to win the war, which was done. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Now the opportunity presents itself for the Democratic Party. Every Member ought to vote for this bill. I am glad that it has been presented, to the end that this legislation, which has been much needed and long delayed, might be placed upon the statute books. It is indefensible to try to defeat it. It is right and proper from every standpoint, and the Government ought to stand as an example to private employers to properly provide for and protect and make proper provision for their employees.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. The only opposition that is coming to it is coming from the Democratic side.

Mr. RAKER. Oh, I do not think so. I think there will be little opposition to the bill, and I think it will be passed in proper form. It will be voted for by the almost unanimous vote of the House.

The bill is not altogether perfect, but it should be put on the statute books, and in whatever respect it may be found to be imperfect additions and subtractions should be made later. Take these superannuated people in the various departments from the departments and place therein virile men and vigorous women, so that the work can be done and so that at the same time these old men and women who have given their lives to the Government service may be permitted to live in peace and comfort and not as paupers. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, the fundamental difficulty with the people who oppose this legislation on principle is that they conceive what they would like the conditions to be, and then they attempt to legislate or refuse to legislate in conformity with those ideal conditions which they have conceived. I have a great deal of sympathy for the proposition, the view, that the human race ought to be composed of men and women who have sufficient strength of character, self-denial, forethought, and prudence as they go through life, no matter what their situation is, to take care of themselves when they arrive at old age. But we are not considering things as we would like to have them. We must consider them as they are, and in a great proportion of the people we find that, through restricted opportunities and the want of a sufficient force of character and self-denial, the great mass of people do not in fact reach old age in such a position financially as that they are able to take care of themselves.

Now, that proposition has been recognized by the industrial and the business world of our country. Every great industry employing large numbers of people has, through experience, learned that they can have recourse to one or the other of two courses of action with respect to their employees. When these employees, after having devoted a great portion of their lives to the service of their employer, reach an age where their services are no longer efficient or competent, the employers can do either one of two things: They can discharge them and throw them upon the charity of relatives, friends, or the public, or they can provide for their retirement. Self-interest as well as the dictates of humanity have taught the industries and the great commercial enterprises of our country that it is a part of wisdom for the employer to choose the humane course as being in fact in the long run the more economical course; and so we find that there is not a railroad in the United States, there is not a big insurance company in the United States, there is not a big employer of labor in the United States, that does not as a matter of sound business practice provide an annuity for its employees on a sound basis when those employees have been in its service for a certain length of time. It is exactly as the proposition of the workmen's compensation and the employers' liability. To a very large extent, the employer's liability for accidents or disability incurred in service, whether the fault of the employer or not, has been forced upon the employer by legislation.

The retirement proposition they have with forethought and in the exercise of their own common sense burdened themselves with, and this proposition is simply that the Government as an employer should treat its employees with respect to this question exactly as every other big employer in the country has found it wise to treat its employees. [Applause.]

Now, inasmuch as we find that the employees generally, either through their restricted means or possibly their want of providence—because they are no different from the rest of the run of human beings—reach old age without adequate provision to take care of themselves, the question of the Government solving this problem presents itself. In effect the Government has unofficially already solved this problem. It has solved it in the most clumsy, uneconomic fashion that you could possibly conceive. The way the Government solves the question of taking care of employees who have reached a state of inefficiency and incompetency because of old age is simply to retain them on the pay roll and let somebody else do the work and pay them their salaries. It is unjust to the Government. It is unjust to the chief of a division or the head of a bureau to have incompetent and inefficient superannuates on the pay rolls, because they are responsible for the quantity of work done under them, and they are handicapped by these older employees. It is unjust to the old employee himself, because it places him in a precarious position, where he continues to exist and draw the means of subsistence at the will or whim of a superior.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I want to ask a question for information.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I understand and know that what the gentleman has said is true, that the old employees are still kept on the rolls even when they are unable to perform the service expected of them and the work is performed by others. Would that be true also of the rural-route carriers? If they were incapable of performing their duty, would they still be retained on the rolls and the work performed by somebody else?

Mr. LEHLBACH. As far as possible, even in the Post Office Department, men who have become inefficient and incompetent have been for humanitarian reasons retained on the roll as long as it was at all possible; but in that employment to which the gentleman refers it is more difficult to retain them on the rolls than it is in departmental work, and for that reason we find that within the last few years 37 railway mail clerks have been separated from the service because they were no longer efficient.

Mr. ROGERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes.

Mr. ROGERS. As I understand it, this bill includes only classified civil-service employees of the Government.

Mr. LEHLBACH. With certain exceptions, which, as the bill is read, will be fully explained.

Mr. ROGERS. Is there any reason, in the gentleman's opinion, why a group of men like our consuls general and consuls should not come within the provisions of such a bill as this?

Mr. LEHLBACH. There is no reason why they should not if those most conversant with the duties and qualifications of those officers should decide that they ought to be within the provisions of the bill; and the bill provides that the terms of this act may be extended to other groups by Executive order, just exactly as the classified service may be extended by Executive order.

Mr. ROGERS. In the opinion of the chairman of the committee an Executive order can be issued which will cover the consuls general and consuls of the United States?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes.

Now, the proposition that an individual should take care of himself as far as possible has been recognized in this bill. This bill is an evolution, and the result of the study of various measures that from time to time have been proposed within the last 20 years. It is by no means perfect, but it is the best measure which experiment and consideration and discussion and study for the period of the last two decades has brought forth. For that reason I bespeak for it indulgent consideration on the part of those who believe in the principle of retirement.

The bill provides that each employee shall contribute from his salary throughout the term of his employment 2½ per cent of his salary toward his retirement in old age, and it provides that when the time for retirement comes his retirement pay shall be based upon a certain percentage of his salary during the last 10 years, proportionate to his length of service; that a person who has been in the service for 30 years or more shall be entitled to an annuity of 60 per cent of his salary and a person who has been in the service of the Government from 27 to 30 years gets a smaller percentage of his salary, but there is a maximum of $720 for the annuities and a minimum of $180.

Now, the plan works out in this way, that when the time comes for the employee to retire, the accumulation of his contributions and the interest earned thereby would pay a certain portion of the annuity, and the Government contributes the difference. The less a man has an opportunity to take care of himself by means of saving from his earnings in the course of his active life the greater the Government's contribution will be, and the more a man is capable of taking care of himself by reason of higher pay, and therefore ability to save a greater amount of money toward his old age, the less the contribution of the Government is. The committee and those furthering this legislation have thought that was fair, that the Government should contribute not a constant sum to each Government employee, but a little more to those who need it most and less to those who are best able to take care of themselves.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. I notice that there is a committee amendment which says that if the amount paid by the Government employee should create a greater annuity than $720, the employee shall get that amount. Now, if that amendment is agreed to, why then, if I understand the bill, the employee who pays a greater amount will not be contributing anything to the annuity of the man who is paid a less amount, because he is guaranteed in that committee amendment to get the full face value of his contribution.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Under this bill no Government employee can possibly contribute one single penny toward the annuity of another employee. He contributes to his own annuity only.

Mr. BLACK. That is what I want to bring out. I understood the purport of the gentleman's argument to be that the man who was drawing a larger salary would in some way contribute to the man who was getting less.

Mr. LEHLBACH. No; I said in that case the contribution of the Government would be less, and if a man is getting a sufficient salary so that his contribution toward his retirement annuity is sufficient to pay the annuity provided for, the Government does not contribute anything, because it ought not to contribute anything toward the retirement of a man who through his active life has been able to take care of that himself.

Now, the age limit in the bill as reported from the committee and the age limit in the bill as originally introduced are permissive limits. There is no compulsory retirement at any specific age, for the first 10 years of the operation of this bill.

The fact is that a man or woman who for 15, 20, 25, or 30 years has been exclusively in the employment of the Government and reaches the age of 65 or more is unfit to leave the Government service and get remunerative employment on the outside. In very rare instances would that be possible, and so rare are the exceptions that no legislation need be made to cover that kind of a case.

Consequently it is to the interest of every Government employee, as he becomes old, if he is still able to work efficiently, to remain in the service, notwithstanding the fact that the permissive retirement age limit has been reached; and this bill provides that upon the application of anyone reaching the retirement age, if his superiors will certify that he is competent and efficient to do the work, he may have his term of active service extended for a period of two years, and at the end of that two years' period of extension he may have it extended again for a period of two years, and so on, except that after 10 years have elapsed the bill contemplates that every person should be retired eventually when he reaches his seventieth year. Now, the effect of this provision is that there being an overwhelming motive for an employee to remain at his salary of $1,400 or $1,600 rather than retire at a maximum annuity of $720, the Government will have the right to refuse to continue on the rolls the man at $1,400 or $1,600 who can not do the work and retire him at $720. If, on the other hand, there is an employee who is able to continue to do the work, even if he has reached the stipulated age, he will be continued on the rolls and do the work for the salary, and will not get any retirement annuity at all until he becomes inefficient to do the work for the Government and is retired.

The bill as originally introduced and as amended by the committee enables the Government to get rid of every inefficient man whether he wishes to retire or not.

Mr. HICKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I will.

Mr. HICKS. Did I understand the gentleman to say that the head of a department had the power, at his discretion, to say whether or not a man shall be continued in the service after he reaches the age of 70 years?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes; after the retirement age is reached as fixed by the bill; there are different ages for different classes.

Mr. HICKS. The question I would like to ask the gentleman is, if that be the case and that discretion is lodged in the head of the department, will not that employee who is contemplating to be retired use every pressure he can bring to bear to retain his position?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes; it is for his interest to do so. The bill provides that after this has been in operation 10 years, when an employee reaches 70 years he shall get no further extension, because cases where there is complete efficiency after that age are rare indeed.

Mr. HICKS. The bill makes it compulsory?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes; after the bill has been in operation 10 years. There is no age at which a man must retire if he can do efficient work until the bill has been in operation 10 years.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I will.

Mr. CANNON. I got an impression from a hasty glance at the bill that a Government employee who would come under its terms could quit at any time and get his money at compound interest that had been taken from him. Is that correct?

Mr. LEHLBACH. That is correct. This money is not to be used for the retirement of other employees, but he gets it back with interest. That prevents the thing that so frequently orcurs under present conditions. It prevents a man being separated from the service either with or without his own fault in a penniless condition. It makes every employee save a portion of his pay, so that when he is separated from the service he has something to live on until he can locate himself in some other pursuit. That is one of the incidental benefits.

Mr. EAGAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I will.

Mr. EAGAN. In the event that the employee takes issue with the Government head, the chief of a bureau, has he any opportunity to submit his case to any other authority than the department head?

Mr. LEHLBACH. As to his efficiency, no.

Mr. EAGAN. Is any physical examination required?

Mr. LEHLBACH. No. Naturally the man who is at the head of the department would naturally and obviously know the capacity of the man or employee to do efficient work. Somebody has got to determine it, and the man who is responsible for his work has the right to decide it.

Mr. EAGAN. Then the employee has no appeal if he insists that he is competent and the bureau chief says he is not.

Mr. LEHLBACH. The bill provides for no appeal in such an instance.

Mr. EAGAN. Does not the gentleman think it would be practicable to have some such plan worked out?

Mr. LEHLBACH. If the employer is satisfied that one of his employees is inefficient, why create some kind of machinery composed of persons who know nothing about his work that can come in and reverse it.

Mr. EAGAN. A man might claim that he was competent except for physical disability.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Then he is not competent or efficient. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word as to the cost of this proposed system of retirement. I am reading from a report from a Government actuary, Joseph S. McCoy, in the Treasury Department, transmitted by Secretary GLASS while Secretary of the Treasury, in response to inquiries from the other branch of this legislative body. He said:

> At first the burden of paying these annuities would be entirely upon the Government, those who are retired at once not having contributed at all. This would change gradually until those who are now entering the service would be retired. Finally the contribution on the part of the Government would be somewhere around 50 per cent. If entrance to the service was limited by age to those under 30 years, the Government's contribution would probably fall below 50 per cent.
> The maximum number of annuitants will not probably exceed 30,000. The total annual payment to these would be about $18,000,000, of which the Government would probably contribute not in excess of $10,000,000 annually, and this could readily be reduced to not in excess of $9,000,000 annually, much less than the bonus now paid.

In accordance with the estimates of the actuary, the cost of this system will be substantially equal upon the employees themselves and on the Government, and on the cash outlay for the annuities would be substantially in the neighborhood of $10,000,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. BOWERS. Mr. Chairman, before the Clerk begins to read, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, upon what subject?

Mr. BOWERS. Upon this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Upon what subject?

Mr. FOCHT. Upon this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all Members be allowed three days in which to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. That request is not in order in Committee of the Whole. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Be it enacted, etc., That, beginning at the expiration of 90 days next following the passage and approval of this act, all employees in the classified civil service of the United States who have on that date, or shall have on any date thereafter, reached the age of 70 years and rendered at least 15 years of service computed as prescribed in section 3 of this act, shall be eligible for retirement on an annuity as provided in section 2 hereof.
> The provisions of this act shall include superintendents of United States national cemeteries, employees of the Library of Congress, excepting persons appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, and may be extended by Executive order, upon recommendation of the Civil Service Commission, to include any employee or group of employees in the civil service of the United States and classified at the time of the passage of this act. The President shall have power, in his discretion, to exclude from the operation of this act any employee or group of employees in the classified civil service whose tenure of office or employment is intermittent or of uncertain duration.
> All regular annual employees of the municipal government of the District of Columbia, appointed directly by the commissioners, including those receiving per diem compensation paid out of general appropriations, but whose services are continuous, and including public-school employees, excepting school officers and teachers, shall be included in the provisions of this act, but members of the police and fire departments shall be excluded therefrom.
> Postmasters, and such employees of the Lighthouse Service as come within the provisions of section 6 of the act of June 20, 1918, entitled "An act to authorize aids to navigation and for other works in the Lighthouse Service, and for other purposes," shall not be included in the provisions of this act.

With the following committee amendments:

> Page 1, line 4, strike out the words "passage and."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I do not know why the committee proposed this amendment. I think what it ought to provide is "following the passage of this act." It has been very customary to say that an act takes effect upon its approval. The approval of an act means the signing of it by the President. The passage of an act is when either the President signs it or it is passed over the President's veto or it is deposited with the Secretary of State because it has not been vetoed within 10 days. I presume that the President will sign this bill; but if I were drawing it, and wished to draw it properly, I would provide that it should take effect upon its passage.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois has brought to the attention of the chairman of the committee the technique of the situation and I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to withdraw the committee amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, is not the proper procedure to vote down the committee amendment and then amend the bill as it is desired?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I think that is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the committee amendment was rejected.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the words "and approval," line 4, page 1.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Line 4, page 1, strike out the words "and approval."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Page 1, line 7, strike out the word "seventy" and insert the words "sixty-five."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I think this proposed committee amendment, to change the retirement age from 70 to 65, is a reflection upon the splendid service that has been given in this House by numerous Members. You can search the whole United States over and you can not find to-day a more valuable member of any legislative body in the world than our beloved friend the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]—84 years old, with a mind as clear as a bell, daily vigorously fighting for and against various measures on the floor of this House. [Applause.] Where is there a legislator stronger to-day than this distinguished colleague of ours? Yet you want to say that when a man gets to be 65 years old he is no longer able to attend to business affairs. Look at our distinguished colleague from Delaware [Mr. LAYTON].

Mr. LAYTON. Great Scott! [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. He hates to admit it, and none of us would think he is 65 years old. He would easily pass for 50, but if you were going to cut according to the provisions of this bill, you might reach him. Oh, I could just pick them out here and there all over this House.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. How about CHAMP CLARK?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; take the able and distinguished leader of the minority. Take them all over this House. Take my distinguished friend on the Republican side, Gen. HULINGS, who walks as straght as an Indian across this floor every time he rises from his seat. To see him walk across this floor you would think that he was not over 40, with a mind also as clear as a bell. You could pick them out all over this House, and yet you say by this bill that when a man reaches the age of 65 he is ready to step aside. I am not going to be personal with Members and friends and colleagues, whom it might embarrass, and I only mention those I have mentioned because I know it will not embarrass them. If you go to the other end of the Capitol, you find that the majority of the distinguished Members who serve in the Senate are over 65 years of age. Go to the Supreme Court of the United States, and to the Cabinet, and you will find men over 65 years of age. Go to the White House, and you will find an able man over 65 years of age——

A MEMBER. He ought to be retired.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, he will be the idol of the public eye when lots of you gentlemen on the other side are gone and forever forgotten. This is the most ridiculous provision I have ever heard of being placed in any piece of legislation.

Mr. UPSHAW. Mr. Chairman, the thought occurs to me that my friend from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] has not remembered that if all of these employees, thousands of them, were equal in ability to the very distinguished gentlemen to whom he has referred this afternoon, they all might have been in Congress or in the United States Senate.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, but they perform a different kind of service, and these distinguished gentlemen I have mentioned are here under a strain of nerves all of the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, well, the committee amendment is not worthy of discussion more than five minutes by anyone; it is so ridiculous.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, the distinguished Don Quixote of Texas has again been fighting a windmill. The committee amendment is not designed to retire a single Government employee at the age of 65 if he is efficient and competent to do his work. It is simply designed to allow the Government to retire an inefficient and incompetent man when he reaches that age.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Under the existing law that may be done now. As I understand the law now, it not only makes it possible to retire a person at that age—65 years—when he becomes incompetent, but it is the duty of the department to do it. That is the law now.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, the statute law does permit a man who reaches the age of 65 years in the Government service, because of inefficiency, to be retired out on the street without a cent and without——

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Or at 40 years of age.

Mr. LEHLBACH. And without the slightest care or consideration of the years of service he may have given the Government. But this bill, if this amendment is not adopted, will preclude any number of inefficient and incompetent between the ages of 65 and 70 from being severed from the service, and while the statute does permit the incompetent or inefficient at the age of 65 now to be severed from the service, the common law, that is founded on humanity, has made it impossible to do so.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I will.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Does the gentleman mean to say that this law repeals the provisions of the general statute now which empowers the head of a department to release from the service a person who is incompetent at any particular age?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I will ask the gentleman to show me a single instance in 10 years where a man in a department here in Washington over 65 years of age has been released for incompetency.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. I know of many of them.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I rise to seek some information of the proposed amendment. I suppose that an act for the retirement of employees in the classified service is a necessary concomitant of the classified service, but what I would like to know is the reason for the committee changing the time in the Senate bill from 70 years to 65 years, and with special reference to what investigation the committee has made as to how many more employees would be brought in the purview of this bill at 65 than at 70 years, and before the gentleman answers I want to make this slight observation on the bill. Everyone believes, of course, that efficiency should be rendered in all governmental branches, and we recognize there is an age, probably not a given age because some men are stronger at an advanced age than others, but there must be some average age of retirement, but the question is in the servive of the United States not so much of getting people in, especially the service here in the District of Columbia, but of getting them out. Now, I read the other day that over 5,000 employees in the service here were 100 per cent inefficient; I do not know whether that is true or not. Under section 6 of this bill it provides for automatic retirement, and it subsequently provides that they may be retained by the heads of the bureaus for a period of two years, and they may be retained even after they reach the age of 65 years, and then for two years after that, and so on up until 10 years after the passage of this act, and you can run them along—men and women both—from 65 to 75 years if some particular person, as a head of the bureau, will certify to their being efficient or competent. Now, that is the trouble with the whole business. There never has been an executive officer who would take it upon himself—and the reason is through their natural sympathy—there never has been a supervising officer who would undertake to discriminate and put out the old men and women. Now, if you reduce the age to 65 years and carry on this same section 6 as you are carrying it on, you carry on an age not of 65 years for retirement but a retirement age of 75 years. That is too great an age to carry even in a bill of this kind. I make these observations and trust the gentleman will answer them, because I view it to be pertinent, my position being I favor a bill of this kind but I desire to do what I can to make a proper bill.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I will say in answering the gentleman from Ohio, if he will yield——

Mr. GARD. Yes; I yield.

Mr. LEHLBACH. That there is no compulsion on the part of the Government to retire anybody at any age at all as long as he is efficient, but this bill gives the Government the option of retiring a man after he becomes 65 years of age if his services are inefficient and are so found by his superior officer. Now, it has been suggested, just as the gentleman from Ohio suggests, that possibly the benefit of a doubt in an undue number of cases will be given by the superior officer to men who wish to be retained in the service.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. GARD. I will ask for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LEHLBACH. It has been suggested that men who are really inefficient after they reach the age of 65 will be certified as efficient by their superiors because of the desire of the man to retain his full salary and his place on the roll rather than be retired on an annuity, and for that reason it has been suggested to amend that portion of the bill and make it read that the certification of efficiency must be with the approval of the Civil Service Commission, which would afford just such a check as the gentleman from Ohio suggests.

Mr. GARD. Well, under the provision of this section 6 it provides that all these men who reach the age of 65 shall automatically retire, and then they may be continued after a certain certification is made by the head of the department, branch, or independent office of the Government that he or she is qualified by reason of his or her efficiency or willingness to stay on.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes.

Mr. GARD. Now, I venture the assertion that if this language is continued and the age of 65 remains in, the gentleman will not get anybody to retire because the retirement pay is much less than the full pay, and with the difficulty of getting the head of a department to separate the inefficient now, how much more difficult is it going to be to get them to insist on automatic retirement when they migh say, Here is a man or woman 65½ years of age, and he or she is good for two or four years, and so it can run up to 10 years. So you really write in this bill now a retirement at 75 years of age. Is not that right?

Mr. LEHLBACH. It is not, because we must assume some sense of duty is implanted in a chief of a bureau or head of a division, and the motive that causes him to retain an inefficient on the pay roll is because it has become the custom recognized as such, and because it leaves a person separated from the pay roll absolutely destitute.

But with a retirement provision and annuity the strong motive for retaining an inefficient man in the service will be taken away from the bureau chief, and his sense of duty—with the motive and sanction of custom to set it aside no longer present—will govern, and we can trust the bureau chiefs and heads of divisions to not certify a man efficient who, in fact, is not at all efficient.

Mr. GARD. How many more persons are eligible to retirement at the age of 65 than at the age of 70?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I have not the exact number in such shape that I can state it. Of course, there are a large number of people between 65 and 70 in the Government service and who will be continuously reaching that age.

I want to impress upon the committee this, that with the Senate amendment you can not get a person who is inefficient between the age of 65 and 70 out of the service, but with the committee amendment you can get them out and, on the other hand, you can retain every efficient employee no matter how much older than 65 years he may be. With that statement, I trust the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, it was stated that no effort was made to relieve the department of superannuated employees. That is a mistake. Then the statement of the gentleman from Ohio, to the effect that if the bill is as the House amends it there will be no one retired, I think is a mistake, because they will receive an annuity and unquestionably the department will relieve them from the service and they will get enough to live on and can and will be retired. And gentlemen ought to remember and the committee ought to remember that some six years ago the Department of the Interior, under the supervision of a couple of new heads or directors of the various branches, thought it would have certain superannuated employees relieved because they were doing practically nothing. There was no provision made for their care. Some complained then that there were too many in there and the department should exercise the provision of the law and separate them from the service. So they proceeded to do so. The first man shot himself the next day. He had to go out on the street as a pauper. The next day the second one was taken sick and had to go to the poorhouse. And one or two more were in like position. Old people in the service in all the departments became panic-stricken. Certain old, faithful servants thought they were going to be turned out. So the department simply had to quit for humanity's sake, and the Government has been paying a salary to many old men and women who ought to have been retired and would have been retired had this bill been in force with the House amendment in it as suggested by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH].

Now is an opportunity to correct what has been done in the past, so far as the future is concerned, and so far as those old people are now in the departments. It ought to be done. And unquestionably the heads of the departments can and will separate these from the departments, because they know they will not be turned out on the streets, nor will they be compelled to go to the almshouse. And that is the very object and purpose of this legislation, namely, to give relief, first, to the Government—and it ought to be thus considered—and, second, on behalf of the good, old, faithful servants that have been giving their time and attention to this work.

While it is not in this bill, while I am not making any declaration now, if those who are interested would look into the old-age condition of the men and women of this country and observe the cost that the State, the county, and Government are paying to-day, they would find out that you could provide for them good, fair, proper homes, without sending them to the poorhouse, and the Government, the State, and the county would be the gainers in dollars and cents, to say nothing about removing the humiliation. We have not seemed to reach that yet, but we are now at a point where we can hastily pass this bill, and the provision that the committee of the House has placed in here ought to remain. The argument made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], that certain men in the House of age and experience might be affected, I do not think brings any comparison. This relieves the situation, because the automatic handling of the law would end that when the man or woman has reached that age that they could not perform the service that they ought to do at 65, and the officer in charge can and will separate them from the service, and he can do it with a good conscience; he can do it knowing that the party is going to be protected and cared for. And I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I favor the committee amendment. I think it is reasonable, proper, and right. It is the length of time the employee has served rather than the age at which he renders the service. If a gentleman or lady enter the service at 20 years of age, at 65 they will have performed 45 years of service. Now, what would be the difference in giving him or her this privilege of retirement, which reduces their pay one-half or one-quarter, voluntarily, as it would be, practically?

Now, with the privilege of being reexamined and retaining their positions, the average man or woman who is able and willing to perform the service is sure to make application to be continued, and there is no question but that the bureau chief, unless he has some grouch against an employee, would be willing to make the statement and certificate.

Now, as I said before, after a man has worked 45 years, although efficient and faithful, what difference does it make about the age at which he entered the service? I want to suggest to some of my economical friends the fact that the judges of the Federal courts may retire at the age of 70 on full pay for the balance of their lives, provided they have been on the bench for 10 years prior to that time. In the case of a poor man or a poor woman who has worn himself or herself out in the service of the public—not in so dignified and important a service, to be sure, but after all a service that has to be rendered—why should not such a person have the privilege of retiring at the age of 65? No one can get anything under this bill who has not served 15 years, but the Federal judge that has served 10 years, when he reaches the age of 70, can retire on full pay.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Does not section 5 permit any employee to retire on his own application?

Mr. SIMS. You mean after 65?

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. No; before 65.

Mr. SIMS. And get an annuity?

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. And get the annuity.

Mr. SIMS. I do not so understand.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. That is the way the bill provides.

Mr. SIMS. That is better than I thought it was. That is when he is totally disabled. But suppose a person is able, but has served for 45 years of his life and has reached the age of 65; why should he not be permitted to quit? If you bring in a younger person, you let him have the salary that the older person had. Now, half of this comes out of the salaries of the employees themselves, but in the case of the Federal judges all of it comes out of the taxpayer, and all of it continues to go to the judge for the balance of his life. How many judges retire after serving 10 years? Very few. The truth of it is they frequently remain on the bench too long. There ought to be some limit to service in a hard position where they have been bending over a desk for 40 years. They ought not to be turned out to starve. Therefore I think the committee amendment permitting retirement at the age of 65 ought to be adopted.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts rises in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, six or seven years ago, when my State created a teachers' retirement system, I was asked to serve as a member of the board intrusted with its administration, and until I came here a year ago I was in constant touch with the details of administering a system like this. If out of that personal experience I can bring to the House anything of value, I shall be very glad. Hoping that this experience might prove of help, I studied the bill with some care, and observed, among other things, that it should be changed, as it seems to me, in the matter of administrative details in respect to the very point to which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] called attention, and I have drafted an amendment which will be introduced at the proper time and which, I think, will meet the difficulty.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. Certainly.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman give us the benefit of the amendment that he intends to offer? Will he advise us now what the amendment is?

Mr. LUCE. Certainly. As the bill now stands, decision rests wholly with the superior of the man who is to be retired, and it is perfectly true that very great pressure will be brought to bear upon him. I may recall that in our experience school committees would come to us and ask that a woman might be employed beyond the age of 70 years, and in one case a woman pleaded with us that she might be permitted to work without pay, although she had reached the age of 74, because, she said, she would die if she could not continue. But our law being mandatory, we could not yield to this pressure.

This pressure is sure to come, and there ought to be added to the approval demanded of the man's superior the approval also of the Civil Service Commission, an outside body, which undoubtedly would not be affected by this pressure. The bill as drafted simply requires certification by the Civil Service Commission. My suggestion to the committee is that we make it with the approval and certification of the Civil Service Commission, which, I think, will meet the case.

And to the gentleman who has just spoken [Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska] I would say that in the Massachusetts and nearly all other retirement systems it has been found wise to permit men to retire at the age of 60, to say that retirement shall be optional from 60 to 70, and mandatory at the age of 70.

This bill gives most of the employees option until the age of 65, and therefore it is more severe and less elastic than most of the approved systems.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. Certainly.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Is it the gentleman's understanding of the bill that at the age of 65 it is wholly optional with the clerk whether he retire or not?

Mr. LUCE. No; not to that extent. At 65 the option is dependent upon his fitness, but should the suggestion of the gentleman from Nebraska prevail he could not in any event retire before the age of 70. You compel him to stay there five years longer.

I knew one case where a superintendent of schools who was in excellent health and perfect condition at the age of 60, when it was optional with him to retire, came to us and asked us to let him take advantage of his option. We expressed surprise that a man in such condition should want to stop at 60, and he gave as his answer, which I thought was a very wise answer, that he knew when it was time for him to get into some other occupation, where he could spend the rest of his days. He wanted to go out and get on a farm before he had broken down, and so took advantage at the age of 60 to avail himself of the opportunity to establish himself on his farm, whereas if he had been compelled to wait until he was 70 he might not have been able to do this.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. Certainly.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. With whom does the option at the age of 65 rest, with the head of the department or with the clerk?

Mr. LUCE. With both.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Could the head of the department retire him whether the clerk desires to retire or not?

Mr. LUCE. The head of the department can retire him if the head of the department says he is inefficient and ought to be retired.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Just as he can now.

Mr. LUCE. Oh, Mr. Chairman, it is perfectly true that it can be done now. At this very moment you can retire every one of these gentlemen standing at the doors of the galleries above this Hall, but all humanity forbids it. [Applause.] No public official has done it, and no public official ought to do it. [Applause.]

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. I hope the gentleman does not understand me as favoring retirement without the fund. I was among the first to help lay the ground for bringing about the retirement fund.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Does the gentleman's amendment contemplate that the Civil Service Commission will examine the applicant?

Mr. LUCE. It is contemplated that the word "approval" will secure from the Civil Service Commission an intelligent examination of the case.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Has the gentleman observed that in section 6 it is provided that after 10 years a continuation of 4 years of service only beyond the age of 65 or 70, whichever may be prescribed in section 1, may be permitted? So that if we adopt this age of 65 as the age of retirement, after 10 years it will be impossible to retain anybody in the service beyond the age of 69 years?

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I observed that, and made inquiry of the chairman of the committee. I shall but repeat his argument if I explain why he satisfied me on that point. He said that those who are now in the service, having held their positions up to this time without contemplation of such a provision, ought to have the opportunity, but that those who enter the service after this will face a situation which it must be presumed they have contemplated, and for which they ought to have made provision. In other words, this is a matter, shall I say, of generosity to those who are now in the service, but contemplates that those afterwards entering the service shall face the certainty that at the age of 69 they must give way to younger and more capable employees.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. What I meant to convey was that if 70 years is the proper age for actual final retirement, we will have practically that provision after the end of 10 years by making it possible to have 4 years of additional service beyond the 65-year retirement age.

Mr. LUCE. At the age of 69.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What sense is there in making age the standard of retirement? [Applause.] Ought not the standard of retirement of these people to be unfitness?

Mr. LUCE. It certainly ought, but in the affairs of life it has never been discovered that it is possible to prescribe the standard which the gentleman suggests, and for that reason many corporations, many municipalities, many States, and many nations have decided that this is the only practicable way to proceed. It is the experience of mankind to which I must advert in order to answer the gentleman, and not what I should wish and what I think he would wish.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Have not these heads of departments down the Avenue got sense enough to rig up some kind of a plan by which they can tell when a person is fit or unfit to discharge his work?

Mr. LUCE. Why, sir, I have been employing men and women for 30 years, and all through that time have wrestled with this problem of reconciling humaneness and expediency and have not succeeded in finding the solution.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn. The question is on the committee amendment.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I should like to be heard just a moment. I will not detain the House long.

I have always opposed this character of legislation, which is the beginning of a civil-service pension system, because employment in the civil service of the United States is a voluntary employment. No citizen is under compulsion to take it, and always when such employment is obtained it is considered a benefit and a favor. In addition to that, no citizen in his employment by the United States is under compulsion to remain there. He is free to quit when he sees proper; that is to say, he may quit whenever he can find a job that pays him more or suits his fancy better. But, as a matter of fact, the efficiency of the service of the United States is the thing most to be subserved by the passage of legislation like this. I was on the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service some 10 years ago when a similar bill came up. The committee disposed of that bill in short order by laying it away after considerable investigation. We had up also the proposition to try to provide an annuity or pension derived from assessments made upon the salaries of the employees. The idea was something like the amendment suggested by my friend and colleague from Texas [Mr. BLACK]. We soon reached the conclusion that that would indirectly come to the same thing, because the employees' salary would be increased enough to cover the deductions and still give ample compensation for the service.

Mr. BLACK. Will my colleague yield just there?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Yes; if I have time.

Mr. BLACK. Does the gentleman think there is any real reason for making a presumption of that kind? Does he think there ought to be any relation whatever between the amount of the salary paid to the employee and the creation of the annuity?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. We knew there was this connection, that under all circumstances the salary to be actually received by the employee would necessarily have to be ample to give him a living, and in these days of the high cost of living if we gave enough salary to give a living over and above the deduction for the purpose of the sinking fund to create this annuity we would probably have to raise the salary by the amount that we imposed in the way of an assessment, so we discarded that and discarded the bill. That at least was the way we looked at it in those days. As a matter of justice and equality we did not believe the Government employee had any more right to a pension in his old age than any other citizen who had reached old age without having accumulated a competency, and my real reason for opposing this kind of legislation was that I believed in equality of all the people before this Government and before the State governments; that if we were to help the unfortunate, the aged, the disabled, it should be a uniform and equal law. The Government of the United States, however, has no power to provide a uniform old-age pension such as other nations have provided, but it has the power to take care of those who have been in its employment. It has the power to pension its own employees.

In addition to that, our own platform at the last Democratic national convention declared that it was the duty of the Government to establish an equitable retirement law providing for the retirement of superannuated and disabled employees of the civil service.

I doubt, however, Mr. Chairman, that a man reaching the age of 65 is either superannuated or disabled. I believe that the Senate placed the right measure of age. A large percentage of the Members of this body have reached the age of 65 and are still practically in their prime; and as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM] said a moment ago to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE], it is a fact that under this bill, if we adopt the amendment and make 65 the limit, you can not extend the period of service beyond the age of 69.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks that his time be extended one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Under these circumstances, if this bill is not amended by changing the age from 70 to 65, under the plank in the platform of my party at the last election I shall be bound to support the bill.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Yes.

Mr. LEHLBACH. The gentleman realizes that 65 is merely permissive and not a limitation.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. This amendment permits the retirement at 65, and I think 65 is too young, and it forces a retirement at 69. By adopting the age of 65 as the general age of eligibility for a pension and the age of 62, and even 60 years as the age of pensionable status under this bill for certain classes of employees, you will perhaps double the number of pensioners under the law, and I therefore hope that the committee amendment will be defeated. It may be that we will be forced to grant civil employees pensions in order to secure efficiency in Government service, but I trust we will make the list no longer than absolutely necessary.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. MANN of Illinois having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Dudley, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 13108) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes; had requested a conference with the House of Representatives upon the bill and amendments and had appointed Mr. PAGE, Mr. BALL, Mr. MCCORMICK, Mr. SWANSON, and Mr. SMITH of Maryland as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the bill (S. 2977) to amend section 8 of an act to provide for the sale of desert lands in certain States and Territories, approved March 3, 1877, as amended by an act to repeal timber culture laws, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1891, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 13266) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon and had appointed Mr. CURTIS, Mr. PHIPPS, and Mr. SMITH of Maryland as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

RETIREMENT OF CIVIL-SERVICE EMPLOYEES.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that debate on this amendment has long since been exhausted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were 82 ayes and 30 noes.

So the committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 10, after the word "hereof," insert: "Provided, That mechanics, city and rural letter carriers, and post-office clerks shall be eligible for retirement at 62 years of age, and railway postal clerks at 60 years of age."

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the gentleman from New Jersey a question. The original provision of section 1 provided for the retirement at the age of 65, as amended, and it provided that the employee must have been in the service of the Government for 15 years. This proviso does not carry that provision. I desire to ask the gentleman if it is his interpretation that the 15-year provision shall also apply to rural carriers and others cared for in this proviso?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes; it applies to all mentioned in section 1.

Mr. BARKLEY. What is the principal reason for permitting the retirement of these employees at the age of 62 instead of 65?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Because of the difference in the character of employment and work that they must do, which results in an earlier superannuation and the degree of physical hardihood and strength that is necessary to perform the work which will render a man less able to do it at an earlier age than it would if performing services in the departments in Washington under pleasant surroundings in well-heated and well-lighted buildings. The gentleman knows what rural carriers and city carriers have to do.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does not the gentleman take into consideration the advantages of an outdoor life in postponing the age of incapacity as it applies to those in this class of service?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I believe that the question of the gentleman is rhetorical instead of asking for information. I believe the work of the rural or city carrier, the hardships to which he is exposed, the extreme heat of the summer, the storm and the blizzard of the winter, the 60 or 70 pound mail sack, will render him unable to do the work at an earlier age than an employee of the Department of the Interior or the Department of Commerce who works here in Washington.

Mr. BARKLEY. Under the regulations of the Post Office Department you may have an examination of rural carriers at the age of 50. He would reach the age of 62 after 12 years of service. Is he entitled to retirement?

Mr. LEHLBACH. He is not.

Mr. BARKLEY. He would have to be 65 before he could retire under the provisions of the bill?

Mr. LEHLBACH. He would.

Mr. UPSHAW. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I feel that I would be recreant to an impulse of both patriotism and humanity if I were to fail to register my hearty support of this bill. I am in favor of it, partly because of the increased efficiency it will bring, because of the replacement of old and infirm people by young and more efficient helpers; but, supremely, I am in favor of this bill because I believe that the attitude of this Government toward those who have served it long and faithfully ought to be one of gratitude and of guardianship. Only to-day I had the honor of having as my guest at luncheon Mr. M. E. Geer, of Douglasville, Ga., president of a number of cotton mills in the South. He referred to this bill and declared warmly that he hoped it would pass.

He made mention of one man, old in years but noble in record and purpose, who, he said, can not do the efficient work he one time did—indeed, he can not earn his salary—but the mill can not let him go, because such a course would be cruel. And surely this Government, as a great family corporation, if you please, of general, national fellowship, ought to sustain a relation toward its employees of a lifetime as kind and generous as that of commercial organizations. Only to-day I had a long-distance call from a noble old man down in Virginia, 84 years old, who has been an employee of the Pension Department for nearly 30 years. The weight of old age has forced him to give up his work. The long illness and recent death of his dear old wife left him with a broken heart and an empty purse. Do not tell me that the Government which this faithful old man has served so long has no concern about his present condition. With a pathos that would break your heart he said, "Do your best for us to-day." Gentlemen, if I ever err by any vote I cast on the floor of this House, I want to err trying to find that side of any provision that means the larger comfort and happiness of humanity. I know that our National Treasury is burdened now because of the new billions of debt that were added by our country's necessary part in the Great War, and I am in favor of our meeting this tremendous responsibility like brave American citizens ought to do; but we must remember that the strength and even the safety of the Republic depend on the faith and love of its citizenship. Pass this old-age retirement bill, and the Government not only does its duty to those who have blessed it by their long and faithful services but it wins that strength that comes from the living and dying gratitude of the gray-haired veterans in civil life, together with the grateful faith and love of the younger millions who shrine these aged ones in their hearts—the loyal millions who constitute the Nation's strength to-day and the hope of our national future.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the debate upon this particular amendment has been exhausted, and that gentlemen who wish to speak will have ample opportunity to do so as there are other amendments in this section.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I have a perfecting amendment which I desire to offer.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to the committee amendment which I have already sent to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate be limited to the amendment and to the amendment to the committee amendment, and that then it be voted upon.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to limit the time for debate?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this particular amendment and amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent that all debate upon this amendment and amendments thereto close in 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I want to offer an amendment to the committee amendment, and to speak to it for a moment or two.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I contemplated that the gentleman would have opportunity to discuss that, in the request that I made.

Mr. CALDWELL. I do not know. An amendment has been offered by the gentleman from Ohio and there is five minutes' debate upon that and then someone is entitled to five minutes against it.

Mr. LEHLBACH. These gentlemen will have opportunity in 10 minutes to discuss the amendment that they have offered.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. CALDWELL. I object. There will be two amendments instead of one, and five minutes is allowed for debate for and against each amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York objects, and the Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. GARD to the committee amendment: Page 2, line 2, after the word "age" strike out the period, insert a comma, and add: "if said mechanics, city and rural carriers, post-office clerks, and railway postal clerks shall have rendered at least 15 years of service, computed as prescribed in section 3 of this act."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, does not the gentleman from Ohio think that the limitation which he repeats in his proposed amendment and which is found in lines 7, 8, and 9 of the section, governs the proviso which is in the shape of a committee amendment?

Mr. GARD. There is some question in my mind, so out of caution I have offered the amendment.

Mr. LEHLBACH. There can not be any question about it. It says that anybody who has reached the age of 65 years and rendered at least 15 years of service may be retired, and it says, "provided, mechanics, city and rural letter carriers and post-office clerks shall be eligible for retirement at 62 years of age, and railway postal clerks at 60 years of age." It is entirely unnecessary.

Mr. MONTAGUE. But is the gentleman not making it possible that the word "provided" may be construed as "except"?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I have no objection to the amendment, except that it is unnecessary.

Mr. GARD. I think the amendment is necessary, because——

Mr. LEHLBACH. The committee will accept it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. Page 1, line 10, strike out the words "city and," and on page 2, line 1, after the word "clerks," the last word in the line, insert the words "and city carriers."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. City carrier is already in.

Mr. CALDWELL. I strike them out in one place and insert them in another.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment to the committee amendment offered by Mr. CALDWELL: Page 1, line 10, after the word "mechanics," strike out the words "city and." Page 2, line 1, after the word "clerks," insert the words "and city carriers."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. CALDWELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If the gentleman's amendment goes on, should it not be "city letter carriers"?

Mr. CALDWELL. I guess that would be proper, and I ask unanimous consent that the words be changed to "and city letter carriers."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to modify his language by the insertion of the additional word. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment for the purpose of putting the city letter carrier on the same status as the railway mail clerk. Now, those of us who live in the great cities and see the man in gray walking from house to house with a great pack on his back realize that when a man gets to be 60 years of age that it is very, very rare that this is not a burden that it is impossible for him to continue on. I go frequently to the meetings of the City Letter Carriers' Association in my great city. I see these old men in the declining years of their lives bowed down with these loads they have carried in the service of the people, and I say that we should endeavor to give them the justice to which they are entitled. And there is no reason in my mind that they should not be considered with the same degree of fairness and with the same degree of justice we give to the man who is in the Railway Postal Service.

Mr. BEE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CALDWELL. I yield to my friend from Texas.

Mr. BEE. Does the gentleman from New York think, though, that this provision is not one that the average employee is looking forward to except with dread? In other words, it is forcing this retirement on him when he is not able to carry himself?

Mr. CALDWELL. No; as I understand it the man if he wants to stay in can, but when a man is 60 years of age and has worked, as he will work when he goes in the letter carrier service, and considering the age he must be when he goes in you must realize that he is working the very life out of him and ought to be permitted to go on the retired list when he reaches the age of 60 years if he so desires. If the service of a railway mail clerk makes it necessary, surely the service of a letter carrier makes it necessary, and I therefore, Mr. Chairman, offer and strongly urge this amendment.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I think it will commend itself to the judgment of the committee that the city letter carrier is rather in the class of the rural carrier and other postal employees, while, on the other hand, the service of the railway postal clerk, by reason of the arduous and nerve-racking and dangerous character of such employment, is in a class by itself. I think that the divisions as contemplated by the committee amendment will commend themselves more to good judgment than the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York, and I ask for a vote on the amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield for this question? He might save time while he has the floor.

I desire to ask the gentleman on what theory he puts the post-office clerks under the 62-year age limit, while the other clerks in the Government are put at 65?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Because the post-office clerks work under different hours than the clerks here in the departments work. They have their night shifts and day shifts, and they have their work to get out in a specified time. And they are working at high pressure and, to a certain extent, excepting weather conditions, they are subject to the extra pressure that is on carriers and the other employees in the Post Office Department, which is not on the general run of Government employees and clerks.

Mr. BARKLEY. They do not work longer hours than the other Government clerks.

Mr. LEHLBACH. They have night shifts. They work at night under regular swings, and they must get their work out by the clock. They must have their work ready for trains; they must have it ready for certain hours of delivery. They should be classed with the city carriers and with the rural carriers rather than with the ordinary Government employees in the departments.

Mr. MADDEN. What they do is this: They are on duty 10 hours a day, and in that 10 hours they work 8 hours and have 2 hours of the day when they have to study distribution schemes.

Mr. RANDALL of California. And 80 per cent of the post-office clerks work at night.

Mr. LEHLBACH. That is what I said.

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word to make a few remarks on the amendment to the amendment. I think that that amendment is a proper one, for the reason that I have observed in my city that when carriers start out with their bag full of mail, since they have been loaded up with this additional parcel-post service, many times they carry a bundle of 100 pounds and more. And when men get to the age of 60 years in that kind of work, where they are subject to the heat of the summer and the cold weather of the winter, they can not stand the severe hard work after they become 60 years of age. And I think of the various men that are provided for in this committee amendment the city carriers are the hardest worked.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDWELL].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer a substitute for the entire committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky offers a substitute, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not have it written. I will state it. It is as follows:

After the word "hereof," on page 1, line 10, insert: "Provided, That mechanics, city and rural letter carriers, and post-office clerks and railway mail clerks shall be eligible for retirement at 60 years of age."

It provides a full retirement age of 60 for all classes provided in the proviso, without this little finicky difference between 60 and 70.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky offers a substitute to the amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to informally ask the chairman of the committee a question. I ask unanimous consent to speak for one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. That will not be in order until after the amendment is read. The Clerk will report the substitute offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY].

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute offered by Mr. BARKLEY for the committee amendment: After the word "hereof," page 1, line 10, insert: "Provided, That mechanics, city and rural letter carriers, and post-office clerks and railway mail clerks shall be eligible for retirement at 60 years of age."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY].

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to occupy the time now.

Mr. LEHLBACH. If the gentleman from Illinois will yield for a suggestion, I want to suggest to the gentleman from Kentucky that his amendment as it stands takes out of the amendment the amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, which has been accepted.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes. I desire to insert that at the end of it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I think this substitute would be a mistake. The gentleman from Kentucky is evidently under the impression at present that this retirement is a great benefit to these employees; but what is proposed is to retire a letter carrier at half pay at an age when he is not able, probably, to get into other employment very successfully. The majority of these officers, mechanics, rural carriers, and post-office clerks are quite competent at the age of 62 years, and there is not one of them who is competent that will desire to be retired at half pay.

Why not give them the opportunity to remain in the service at their full pay two years longer, as is provided in the bill?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. Under the provisions of the bill those who have reached the age of retirement and are still competent, or think they are, may have an extension of 10 years.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. No; not at all. They may have an extension of four years.

Mr. BARKLEY. Ten in all.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. No; not at all. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. BARKLEY. There may be a repetition.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The limitation as to four years does not take effect for 10 years. During the first 10 years the extension may be made for 10 years, or up to the limit of 10 years from now. But there are lots of clerks in the post office 60 years of age who would like to remain in the service until they are 62 and four years longer, and who are quite competent to perform the service. I do not think there is any occasion for turning them out at this time against their will.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Under the proviso on page 11 of the bill, at the end of 10 years after this act becomes effective, no employee shall be continued in the civil service beyond the age of retirement defined in section 1 for more than four years.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I have stated that while the gentleman was getting that information from somebody else. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. I thank the gentleman for the information that I get from him. I am always glad to get it. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I say for the next 10 years they can extend the time, but after 10 years from now they can not extend it under the bill for more than 10 years.

Mr. BARKLEY. Then, if this bill is a benefit to the retired employee, why should he not be permitted to take advantage of it at 60 years, if his employment has been such as to incapacitate him, without compelling him to wait until he is 65?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If he is incapacitated he gets the benefit of the retirement anyhow; but under the gentleman's amendment at the age of 64 a letter clerk, in good, efficient condition, is forcibly separated from the service at half pay.

Mr. BARKLEY. But under the amendment offered by the committee the railway mail clerk is in the same situation. My amendment seeks to make the option at the age of 60 apply to the railway postal clerk and mail clerk.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I understand railway mail clerks are in poorer condition physically at the end of their service when they reach the age of 60 than a letter clerk or a mechanic. The strain on the nerves of a postal railway clerk is the greatest strain that can be found upon any class of employees in the United States in or out of the Government service. But that is not the case with the mechanic; that is not the case with the post-office clerk; and they find places where these men can perform good service. Now, of course, it is only cutting them out of two years' salary. I do not believe that it ought to be done. They do not want it. I have more of these letter carriers in my district, I expect, than there are in the whole State of Kentucky. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY].

The question was taken, and the substitute was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the committee amendment as amended by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD].

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 2, line 3, after the word "include," insert "American employees of the Panama Canal above the grade of laborer."

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment to the amendment. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GARD to the committee amendment: Page 2, line 3, after the word "American," insert the words "citizens who are."

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have offered what I think is a necessary perfecting amendment after the word "American," on line 3 of page 2, to insert the words "citizens who are." I do it for the reason that the language of the bill is intended to include only American citizens who are employees of the Panama Canal, and not all employees who are employed by America on the canal, because it might take in employees of all nationalities.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Does the gentleman think the adjective "American" refers to the employer or the employee?

Mr. GARD. The American employee is an employee of the American Government. There can not be any other than an American employee if you say "America" refers to the employer, which is the Panama Canal Commission. The term "American employee" may be properly construed, I take it, under the terms of this bill, to mean the employees of the American Government, and not necessarily an American citizen.

Mr. LEHLBACH. What other employees of the Panama Canal can there possibly be than employees of the American Government, of which the Panama Canal is an arm? If "American" means anything, it means the nationality of the employee. However, the committee will accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment as amended.

The committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 6, after the word "Congress," insert "and the Botanic Gardens."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 18, after the word "Columbia," strike out the words "appointed directly by the commissioners."

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, in explanation of that amendment, I desire to say that that will embrace the employees and the clerks in the courts here in the District and the employees of the Municipal Public Library, who are employed, respectively, by the judges under the District of Columbia and by the library trustees, although paid by the District.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I should like to ask the chairman what were the reasons which actuated the committee in excluding school officers and school-teachers in the District of Columbia?

Mr. LEHLBACH. School-teachers already have a retirement fund. The bill includes public-school employees, except the school-teachers and officers who are already cared for in a separate retirement fund.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Referring back to the language in the fourth line on page 2, "the Panama Canal," is that the corporate name?

Mr. LEHLBACH. That is the corporate title of the activities there on the Isthmus. It is not the Panama Canal Commission, but it is called the Panama Canal.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Does it include the Panama Railroad employees?

Mr. LEHLBACH. It does not include the employees of the railroad, because the Panama Railroad is a corporation operating under the jurisdiction of the Government but employing its own railroad force as a private corporation.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. But, as a matter of fact, the Government owns the railroad?

Mr. LEHLBACH. One line of steamships plying between this country and the Panama Canal is controlled by the Panama Railroad.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. But the Panama Railroad, as a matter of fact, is owned by this Government?

Mr. LEHLBACH. A majority of the stock is owned by the Government.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. It owns the railroad.

Mr. LEHLBACH. A majority of the stock is owned by the Government, but it is a separate corporate entity, and run by directors.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I understand. I was just trying to get the mind of the chairman of the committee. Are these employees taken care of in any provision of this or any other bill?

Mr. LEHLBACH. The railroad employees?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. LEHLBACH. They are not. They are not directly Government employees.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Why are they not treated like ordinary Government employees, which they practically are?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Because they are hired and fired by the directors and managers of the railroad, which, no matter what the Government interest in it may be, is a private corporation in so far as its dealings with its employees are concerned.

Mr. KNUTSON. The Panama Railway Co. is incorporated under the laws of the State of New York.

Mr. LEHLBACH. And, furthermore, the railroad employees have not the civil-service status of the classified employees of the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARD. I ask that the gentleman may have one minute additional. I want to ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Texas be extended one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARD. Is it the gentleman's purpose, in striking out these words in lines 18 and 19, to provide for the court bailiffs and court criers and messengers and other people appointed directly by the judges of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia and the municipal court and the other courts here in the District?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Principally the clerks, and so forth, in the court. I presume the attendants would come in, if they are regular annual employees of the municipal government.

Mr. GARD. Does the gentleman think it is a wise amendment to include personal employees of the judges, like stenographers, clerks, and bailiffs?

Mr. LEHLBACH. If they are regular annual employees and have served at least 15 years, they can come in under the provisions of this act. Under those circumstances they are substantially not personal appointments, but akin to the classified civil service. The act can not affect a personal appointee who does not serve continuously at least 15 years. Therefore the personal appointee of a judge who might for the time being be an incumbent of the office would not be carried by this clause.

Mr. GARD. These employees are purely personal employees, and not under the classified civil service.

Mr. LEHLBACH. A purely personal employee changes with the personality of the appointing power. In order to get the benefit of this act at all, such an appointee must have at least 15 years of service under the Government, and that makes him a permanent employee.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the chairman of the committee one question. Will this include the clerks of the courts?

Mr. LEHLBACH. It will.

Mr. STEVENSON. And the recorder, who gets fees, and gets a very large compensation?

Mr. LEHLBACH. No. He must be either a regular annual employee, which means he is on an annual salary, or receive a per diem compensation. That excludes fee officers.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, after line 6, insert the following:

"The provisions of this act shall extend to all persons who were in the service of the Government on the 30th day of September, 1919."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: Page 3, line 9, after the figures "1919," strike out the period, insert a colon, and add the following proviso: "Provided, That none of the provisions of this act shall apply to and none of its benefits shall be received or enjoyed by any person who is a member of any association, society, organization, or union of Government employees which is affiliated with, subject to, or a member or component part of, or acknowledges the authority of, any higher or superior body or institution of organized labor; and, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, the Commissioner of Pensions shall make and enforce rules for the enforcement of this section and governing the method and character of proof required in order that employees may receive the benefits of this act."

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, is the amendment read for information or is it offered at this time?

The CHAIRMAN. It is an amendment to the committee amendment, and is offered at this time.

Mr. BLANTON. It is a proviso following the committee amendment.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane to the committee amendment that it purports to modify.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on the point of order. Mr. Chairman, the amendment to the committee amendment is clearly germane. The amendment of the committee seeks to prescribe the kind of employees to whom this provision of the bill shall extend. This is merely a limitation on the employees. The committee amendment seeks to state what employees shall have the benefit of the provisions under this act, and this amendment is merely a limitation saying that they shall have such benefits only under certain limitations.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Section 1 extends the provisions of the act, specifying the character of the employment of the various Government employees to whom the provisions of this retirement act shall apply. In each instance it deals solely with the character of the employment of the person to be affected. It does not deal with any outside activity or any activity whatsoever of the employee, but it deals with the character of the employment, provided he is of a certain age and has served a certain length of time. It relates to the classified service and those to whom it may be extended, the postal clerks, the railway mail clerks, employees of the Botanic Gardens, and all those who have been in that character of employment up to the 30th of September, 1919. It has nothing whatever to do with any characteristic adhering to the employee or any affiliation of any employee, but simply relates to his service to the Government, and therefore the amendment which limits the application of the provisions of this act to persons who do or do not do certain things has nothing to do with the character of their employment and is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. This bill seeks to retire employees in the classified service and presents certain limitations to those who may come within the provisions of the bill. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas merely provides additional limitations beyond those already provided for in the fore part of the paragraph. It seems to the Chair that the amendment offered is in order and germane, and the point of order raised by the gentleman from New Jersey is overruled.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, the whole bill deals with the subject of efficiency. If it was not for the fact that when an employee gets to be a certain age he becomes in the eyes of the legislators inefficient, he would not be retired. So, dealing with the question of efficiency is the practical subject of the legislation at this time. We have provided in this House and in the Senate, and the measure has been signed by the President of the United States, that no policeman in the city of Washington or the District of Columbia employed by the Government may belong to an organization which acknowledges any higher or superior body or institution of organized labor. Why did you pass that? On the ground of efficiency of the service here in the District of Columbia. We have gone further; we have provided that no fireman who is an employee of the Government in the District of Columbia can belong to these organizations. Why have you provided that? On the ground of efficiency of the firemen. I put in the RECORD some time ago a letter from the chief of the Bureau of Efficiency of the United States, Mr. Herbert D. Brown, wherein he tells you over his own signature that you can never expect high efficiency from the Government employee as long as they belong to the organization which this seeks to eliminate. He tells you over his signature that as long as they affiliate with this organization they will depend, not upon their service, but upon their union card, their card of affiliation, and will render service accordingly. He gives you good reasons for it. I hope my colleagues have read that letter. What reason have you for not eliminating this affiliation? What reason have you when you go home to give to your constituents and they ask you why you allow your Government employees to thus affiliate with the American Federation of Labor, when you cut off your firemen and policemen? Do you know why you waited so long to cut them off? I introduced bills to cut them off months before the House and Senate passed the provision. Why did we wait so long? I will tell you. The police strike prematurely pulled off in Boston woke you up to the danger of such affiliation, when in one night in the great city of Boston $300,000 worth of property was destroyed by thugs and lawbreakers. It woke you up, and it did not take long after that police strike in Boston for us to pass that kind of a law. What are you going to do about this? I think the time has come to insert a provision, even in a limited measure, against such a thing. Here is a special privilege that we are giving the employee, and every man here to-day knows that eventually the Government is going to pay every bit of this retirement fund, because you are going to give the employees a living wage, even after you take this little stipend out of their pay. When you do that, are you still going to let them join these bodies that come in here and send up instructions like we received this morning from Mr. Morrison, the Secretary of the American Federation of Labor? What has Mr. Morrison got to do with a question of legislation between you and the Government employees?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired. The question is on the amendment to the committee amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 22, noes 85.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, this is such an important matter that I ask for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman demands tellers. Those in favor of taking this vote by tellers will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] One gentleman has risen, not a sufficient number, and tellers are refused.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. ALMON: Page 23, line 8, strike out the words "the 30th day of September, 1919," and insert in lieu thereof "the 1st day of January, 1920."

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Chairman, there may be some good reason why this act should be retroactive. I have not heard any debate or discussion of that feature. It passed the Senate without any retroactive feature. This date, the 30th of September, of course, is fixed without any special reason, unless it be it will give those in the service about six months before the act is supposed to become a law, the benefits of the act. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] has indicated that he would make a motion to strike this entire amendment out and let the bill stand as it passed the Senate. If the chairman of the commitee has any good reason why this bill should be made retroactive in this respect and why the 30th day of September, 1919, about six months before he is expecting the law to be approved, to be fixed, I should like to hear it. Why not make it the first day of this month or the first day of the year? The bill passed the Senate some time this month. I do not know that those in the service on the 30th of September have any reason to believe that the law would be passed at that time any more than those now in the service. If the gentleman has any good reason why this time should be fixed, I would be glad to hear it.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, it was urged with considerable force before the committee that by reason of the desire to contract the expansion of the departments, due to war activities, and economy manifest in making appropriations, in order to bring about a contraction of the clerical force in the various departments, instead of dismissing in every instance those who had come here as war workers some were retained, and instead some of the old employees who were about 69, 70, and 73 years of age were let go.

And that this situation occurred about the 30th of September when the appropriation bills were beginning to be reported and acted upon and the departments were having notice that these contractions of service were expected by Congress. The total number would be 37; 6 in the Treasury, 2 in the War Department, 1 in the Navy Department, 11 in the Interior Department, 4 in the Department of Agriculture, 12 in the Department of Commerce, and 1 in the Interstate Commerce Commission, which would make 37 in all. Now, the reason why September 30 was fixed, as I say, was that this separation, due to contractions in anticipation of reduced appropriations, began about that period and continued practically the winter months. That is the reason for the amendment and why these dates were fixed.

Mr. ALMON. Has the gentleman any information of the number of the other employees who have been severed from the service other than those in the District of Columbia amount to that will be affected by this bill?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Those are all to be affected by the bill under the classified service whether in or out of the District.

Mr. ALMON. What about those who are not in the District of Columbia, rural letter carriers?

Mr. LEHLBACH. They are supposed to be included here. The committee requested from every department and every Government activity a report of cases and those are all the cases.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the gentleman a little further about this amendment. It says that the provisions of this act shall extend to all persons who were in the service of the Government on the 30th day of September, 1919. Does that mean all who were not in the service at that date are excluded from the operation of this law?

Mr. LEHLBACH. No; but all those who come into the service in the future are taken care of by section 1.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am speaking now of those who were in the service prior to September 30, 1919, in computing the 15-year period, if they should hereafter come back into the service. For instance, if any war worker who was employed and who was dismissed from the service or separated prior to September 30, 1919, having worked a year or a year and a half prior to that date and on that date was not in the service, should in the future come back in the service would he be permitted under section 3 to add his prior service before the 30th of September, 1919, to his future service in order to arrive at the 15-year period?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes; the service does not necessarily have to be continuous and they would in the instance the gentleman outlined be entitled to figure the year and a half, or whatever the time is, if they return to the service at a future date and then eventually become eligible for retirement.

Mr. BARKLEY. This amendment seems to be somewhat contradictory. Section 3 provides for a method of computation and it might be construed so as to exclude the person who did not happen to be in the Government service on that date.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I do not think that it would be reasonably susceptible to that construction, and I think that the gentleman need have no fear.

Mr. BARKLEY. I hope the gentleman is right.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I offer on behalf of the committee an additional amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 2, line 6, after the word "of," insert the words "and Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds."

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, in explanation of that amendment I wish to say that Mr. Elliott Woods, the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds, has permanent employees exactly in the same status as employees of the Library of Congress and the Botanic Gardens. They are employed to the number of 104 and take in the power plant and mechanics engaged in repairs of the building. They are not in the class known as patronage or police but are permanent employees here year in and year out and have been here for 15, 20, or 25 years. As I said, the total number will be 104, and I believe they ought to be eligible to retirement if they seek to take advantage of it, but they possibly are still efficient and will continue. There are eight of those. We might as well let them in because they have the same status practically as in the Library of Congress and the Botanic Gardens.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I am not opposed to the amendment, but I would like to make an inquiry. This covers the elevator operators in the House Office Building?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I am under the impression those gentleman are what is loosely known as "patronage."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I am under that impression myself, but I am under the impression also that they are part of the force of the Superintendent of the Capitol. And I am not sure you can make a distinction very well in the House between one class of political appointees and another class. Very likely there is no one of them who will ever acquire any benefit under the act because of a service of 15 years. Yet, if one of the employees of the House says that he has had a retirement bill passed which covers his case, how will the other employees of the House feel when their cases are not covered?

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I will.

Mr. BARKLEY. My attention has been attracted to one case. Out in the document room is Mr. Joel Grayson, who has been in the employ of the Government for many years. Is there anything in this bill that would include him?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. There is not, and I trust that Mr. Grayson will remain in the employ of the House at full salary as long as he lives. [Applause.]

Mr. BARKLEY. I hope so, too.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Because his knowledge, even if he had to be brought in a wheeled chair or brought in a bed to the document room, would be worth to us more than he draws out of the Treasury many times. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 93, noes 9.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Thereupon the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MCARTHUR, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (S. 1699) for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bills:

H. R. 13387. An act to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the St. Louis River between the States of Minnesota and Wisconsin; and

H. R. 9629. An act for the relief of the Merritt & Chapman Derrick & Wrecking Co.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 13387. An act to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the St. Louis River between the States of Minnesota and Wisconsin;

H. R. 9629. An act for the relief of the Merritt & Chapman Derrick & Wrecking Co.; and

H. R. 12610. An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 2977. An act to amend section 8 of an act to provide for the sale of desert lands in certain States and Territories, approved March 3, 1877, as amended by an act to repeal timber-culture laws, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1891; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. BRAND, for balance of week, on account of illness in family.

To Mr. GOLDFOGLE, until further notice, on account of illness.

To Mr. WELTY, indefinitely, on account of illness in his family.

To Mr. AYRES, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

POINT OF NO QUORUM.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman withhold that until I can present this bill?

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Missouri withhold that until the gentleman from Iowa can report the bill?

Mr. DYER. Not at this time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MONDELL (interrupting the count). Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Friday, April 30, 1920, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting draft of requested legislation to amend article 38 of the articles for the government of the Navy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

2. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting draft of requested legislation to authorize officers of the naval service to accept offices with compensation and emoluments from Governments of the Republics of South America; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

SENATE.

FRIDAY, April 30, 1920.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we come before Thee for the divine inspiration for this day. Whatever the vulgar mass call work may count with the mass; Thou dost look upon the spiritual qualities that sometimes can not find expression in word or act. Thou dost read the hearts of men. We come before Thee, who dost see our secret thoughts. We would be right with God at the beginning of a new day of work, that the finer qualities of service may be expressed in that which we do for our fellow men in the fear of God. To this end do Thou bless us at the beginning of this day. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Reading Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when on request of Mr. CURTIS, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

PETITIONS.

Mr. CAPPER presented a petition of Farmers' Union No. 1946, of Winfield, Kans., and a petition of the Farmers' Union of Oak Ridge, Ark., praying for the enactment of legislation granting to farmers the right of collective bargaining, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. FERNALD presented a petition of the National Association of Box Manufacturers, praying for the revision of the so-called antitrust law, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13677) making appropriations to supply a deficiency in the appropriations for the Federal control of transportation systems, and to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. GOOD, Mr. CANNON, and Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina managers of the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 9369. An act to revise and equalize rates of pension to certain soldiers, sailors, and marines of the Civil War and the War with Mexico, to certain widows, including widows of the War of 1812, former widows, dependent parents, and children of such soldiers, sailors, and marines, and to certain Army nurses, and granting pensions and increase of pensions in certain cases;

H. R. 10917. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the National Education Association of the United States" by adding thereto an additional section;

H. R. 12610. An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes;

H. R. 12956. An act extending the time for constructing a bridge across the Bayou Bartholomew, in the State of Arkansas;

H. R. 13253. An act to grant the consent of Congress to the Elmer Red River Bridge Co. to construct a bridge across the Red River; and

H. J. Res. 301. Joint resolution to authorize the Secretary of War to grant revocable licenses for the removal of sand and gravel from the Fort Douglas Military Reservation for industrial purposes.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. JONES of Washington. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 4076) to amend section 4404 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as amended by the act approved July 2, 1918, providing that the supervising inspectors of the Steamboat-Inspection Service be included under the classified civil service, and I submit a report (No. 566) thereon. I should like to ask for its immediate consideration. It is a very short bill; and it simply places the supervising inspectors of steamboats under the classified service. They have come up from the classified service, but when they become district supervisors they are not in the classified service. The bill does not increase any salaries or anything of the sort.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill be read first.

The Reading Clerk read the bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I withdraw my request for present consideration and ask that the bill may go to the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

Mr. CUMMINS, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 161) to exempt the New York State Barge Canal from the provisions of section 201 of H. R. 10453, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 567) thereon.

TERMINATION OF WAR WITH GERMANY.

Mr. LODGE. From the Committee on Foreign Relations I report back with certain amendments the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 327) terminating the state of war declared to exist April 6, 1917, between the Imperial German Government and the United States, permitting, on conditions, the resumption of reciprocal trade with Germany, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 568) thereon.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that on Wednesday next, at the conclusion of the routine morning business, with the consent of the Senate, I shall address myself to the joint resolution just reported by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be placed on the calendar.

REGULATION OF COLD STORAGE.

Mr. GRONNA. I report back favorably, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry the bill (H. R. 9521) to prevent hoarding and deterioration of and deception with respect to cold-storage foods, to regulate shipments of cold-storage foods in interstate commerce, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 569) thereon. The Senate committee wrote an entirely new bill. In order to expedite matters, we have stricken out all after the enacting clause of the House bill and substituted the Senate committee bill. I ask that the bill be placed on the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

WATER-POWER DEVELOPMENT—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I submit the conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two House on House bill 3184, known as the water-power bill. I ask that it be printed and lie on the table until action is taken in the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be printed and lie on the table.

The report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3184) to create a Federal power commission and to define its powers and duties, to provide for the improvement of navigation, for the development of water power, for the use of lands of the United States in relation thereto, to repeal section 18 of "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, approved August 8, 1917, and for other purposes," and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 17, 22, 28, 29, 31, 44, 46, and 59.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 9, 10, 12, 13, 14, 16, 18, 19, 20, 23, 24, 25, 30, 32, 33, 34, 35, 37, 39, 40, 41, 42, 47, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, and 56, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"That the commission shall appoint an executive secretary, who shall receive a salary of $5,000 a year, and prescribe his duties, and the commission may request the President of the United States to detail an officer from the United States Engineer Corps to serve the commission as engineer officer, his duties to be prescribed by the commission."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"'Navigable waters' means those parts of streams or other bodies of water over which Congress has jurisdiction under its authority to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States, and which either in their natural or improved condition, notwithstanding interruptions between the navigable parts of such streams or waters by falls, shallows, or rapids, compelling land carriage, are used or suitable for use for the transportation of persons or property in interstate or foreign commerce, including therein all such interrupting falls, shallows, or rapids; together with such other parts of streams as shall have been authorized by Congress for improvement by the United States or shall have been recommended to Congress for such improvement after investigation under its authority."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: ", and said classification of investment of the Interstate Commerce Commission shall in so far as applicable be published and promulgated as a part of the rules and regulations of the commission"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: "In order to aid the commission in determining the net investment of a licensee in any project, the licensee shall, upon oath, within a reasonable period of time, to be fixed by the commission, after the construction of the original project or any addition thereto or betterment thereof, file with the commission, in such detail as the commission may require, a statement in duplicate showing the actual legitimate cost of construction of such project, addition, or betterment, and the price paid for water rights, rights of way, lands, or interest in lands. The commission shall deposit one of said statements with the Secretary of the Treasury. The licensee shall grant to the commission or to its duly authorized agent or agents, at all reasonable times, free access to such project, addition, or betterment, and to all maps, profiles, contracts, reports of engineers, accounts, books, records, and all other papers and documents relating thereto"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: "or by its executive secretary"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 26, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: ", if it be satisfied as to the ability of the applicant to carry out such plans"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 27, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"The commission is hereby authorized and directed to investigate and, on or before the 1st day of January, 1921, report to Congress the cost and, in detail, the economic value of the power plant outlined in project No. 3 (H. Doc. No. 1400, 62d Cong., 3d sess.) in view of existing conditions, utilizing such study as may heretofore have been made by any department of the Government; also in connection with such project to submit plans and estimates of cost necessary to secure an increased and adequate water supply for the District of Columbia. For this purpose the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 36, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"That the licensee shall pay to the United States reasonable annual charges in an amount to be fixed by the commission for the purpose of reimbursing the United States for the costs of the administration of this act; for recompensing it for the use, occupancy, and enjoyment of its lands or other property; and for the expropriation to the Government of excessive profits until the respective States shall make provision for preventing excessive profits or for the expropriation thereof to themselves, or until the period of amortization as herein provided is reached, and in fixing such charges the commission shall seek to avoid increasing the price to the consumers of power by such charges, and charges for the expropriation of excessive profits may be adjusted from time to time by the commission as conditions may require: Provided, That when licenses are issued involving the use of Government dams or other structures owned by the United States or tribal lands embraced within Indian reservations the commission shall fix a reasonable annual charge for the use thereof, and such charges may be readjusted at the end of 20 years after the beginning of operations and at periods of not less than 10 years thereafter in a manner to be described in each license."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 38, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: "one hundred"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 43, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"(i) In issuing licenses for a minor part only of a complete project, or for a complete project of not more than 100-horsepower capacity, the commission may in its discretion waive such conditions, provisions, and requirements of this act, except the license period of 50 years, as it may deem to be to the public interest to waive under the circumstances: Provided, That the provisions hereof shall not apply to lands within Indian reservations."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 45, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: "may grant the application with the provision to be expressed in the license that the licensee will install the necessary navigation structures if the Government fails to make provision therefor within a time to be fixed in the license and"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 48, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: "Provided, That in the event the United States does not exercise the right to take over or does not issue a license to a new licensee, or issue a new license to the original licensee, upon reasonable terms"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 49, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"That all proceeds from any Indian reservation shall be placed to the credit of the Indians of such reservation. All other charges arising from licenses hereunder shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States, subject to the following distribution: Twelve and one-half per cent thereof is hereby appropriated to be paid into the Treasury of the United States and credited to 'Miscellaneous receipts'; 50 per cent of the charges arising from licenses hereunder for the occupancy and use of public lands, national monuments, national forests, and national parks shall be paid into, reserved, and appropriated as a part of the reclamation fund created by the act of Congress known as the reclamation act, approved June 17, 1902; and 37½ per cent of the charges arising from licenses hereunder for the occupancy and use of national forests, national parks, public lands, and national monuments, from development within the boundaries of any State shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury to such State; and 50 per cent of the charges arising from all other licenses hereunder is hereby reserved and appropriated as a special fund in the Treasury to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War in the maintenance and operation of dams and other navigation structures owned by the United States or in the construction, maintenance, or operation of headwater or other improvements of navigable waters of the United States."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 57, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: "Provided, That when application is made for a license under this section for a project or projects already constructed, the fair value of said project or projects, determined as provided in this section, shall for the purposes of this act and of said license be deemed to be the amount to be allowed as the net investment of the applicant in such project or projects as of the date of such license, or as of the date of such determination, if license has not been issued. Such fair value may, in the discretion of the commission, be determined by mutual agreement between the commission and the applicant or, in case they can not agree, jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the district court of the United States in the district within which such project or projects may be located, upon the application of either party, to hear and determine the amount of such fair value"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 58, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"That any person, association, corporation, State, or municipality intending to construct a dam or other project works across, along, over, or in any stream or part thereof, other than those defined herein as navigable waters, and over which Congress has jurisdiction under its authority to regulate commerce between foreign nations and among the several States, may in their discretion file declaration of such intention with the commission, whereupon the commission shall cause immediate investigation of such proposed construction to be made, and if upon investigation it shall find that the interests of interstate or foreign commerce would be affected by such proposed construction, such person, association, corporation, State, or municipality shall not proceed with such construction until it shall have applied for and shall have received a license under the provisions of this act. If the commission shall not so find, and if no public lands or reservations are affected, permission is hereby granted to construct such dam or other project works in such stream upon compliance with State laws."

And the Senate agree to the same.

URGENT DEFICIENCIES.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13677) making appropriations to supply a deficiency in the appropriations for the Federal control of transportation systems, and to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. WARREN. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the conference asked for by the House, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. WARREN, Mr. CURTIS, and Mr. UNDERWOOD conferees on the part of the Senate.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT (at 12 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.). The morning business is closed.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 13555, the fortifications appropriation bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 13555) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, and for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

The Reading Clerk read the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendments of the committee will be stated in their order.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "Armament of fortifications," on page 5, line 2, after the word "facilities," to strike out "$1,600,000" and insert "$2,000,000," so as to make the clause read:

For purchase, manufacture, maintenance, and test of ammunition for mountain, field, and siege cannon, including the necessary experiments in connection therewith, the machinery necessary for its manufacture, and necessary storage facilities, $2,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Proving grounds," on page 6, line 11, after the word "ranges," to strike out "$350,000" and insert "$500,000," so as to make the clause read:

For current expenses of the ordnance proving grounds, comprising the maintenance of rail and water transportation, repairs, alterations, accessories, and service of employees incidental to testing and proving ordnance and ordnance matériel, hire of assistants for the Ordnance Board, purchase of instruments and articles required for testing and experimental work, building and repairing butts and targets, clearing and grading ranges, $500,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Fortifications in insular possessions," subhead "Engineer Department," on page 8, line 19, before the word "Islands," to strike out "Philippine" and insert "Hawaiian," so as to make the clause read:

For preparation of plans for fortifications and other works of defense in the Hawaiian Islands, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Air Service," on page 11, line 15, after "$1,300,000," to insert "Provided, That the unexpended balances of the appropriations made for aviation purposes in connection with the seacoast defenses in the Insular Possessions in the act approved February 14, 1917, are hereby made available until June 30, 1921: Provided further, That in the establishment of these stations the following limits of cost of structures are authorized but shall not be exceeded: For each barracks $40,000, for each post exchange $30,000, for each seaplane hangar $87,000, for each repair shop, $30,000, for each boathouse and dock $24,000," so as to make the clause read:

For the establishment, construction, enlargement, or improvement of aviation stations for use in connection with the seacoast defenses of the Hawaiian Islands, including the acquisition of land or any interest in land by purchase, lease, condemnation, or otherwise, and the preparation necessary to make the same suitable for the purpose intended, $1,300,000: Provided, That the unexpended balances of the appropriations made for aviation purposes in connection with the seacoast defenses in the Insular Possessions in the act approved February 14, 1917, are hereby made available until June 30, 1921: Provided further, That in the establishment of these stations the following limits of cost of structures are authorized but shall not be exceeded: For each barracks $40,000, for each post exchange $30 000, for each seaplane hangar $87,000, for each repair shop, $30,000, for each boathouse and dock $24,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Panama Canal fortifications," on page 14, line 10, after "$1,985,534," to insert "Provided, That the unexpended balance of the sum of $155,000 appropriated by the act of July 8, 1918, 'For the purchase or reclamation of land required for the defense of the Panama Canal' is hereby continued and made available for obligation until June 30, 1921, and the Secretary of War may expend said balance or so much thereof as may be necessary for the purchase or reclamation of land required for the defense of the Panama Canal," so as to make the clause read:

In all, specifically for fortifications and armament thereof for the Panama Canal, $1,985,534: Provided, That the unexpended balance of the sum of $155,000 appropriated by the act of July 8, 1918, "For the purchase or reclamation of land required for the defense of the Panama Canal," is hereby continued and made available for obligation until June 30, 1921, and the Secretary of War may expend said balance or so much thereof as may be necessary for the purchase or reclamation of land required for the defense of the Panama Canal.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6, page 16, line 4, after the word "orders," to insert "or contracts," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 6. That all orders or contracts for manufacture of material pertaining to approved projects, which are placed with arsenals or other ordnance establishments and which are chargeable to armament of fortifications appropriations, shall be considered as obligations in all respects in the same manner as provided for similar orders placed with commercial manufacturers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 8, page 17, after line 3, to insert:

Supplies for seacoast defenses, $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, line 5, after the word "defenses," to strike out "$63,346.68" and insert "$88,292.88," so as to make the clause read:

Sites for fortifications and seacoast defenses, $88,292.88.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, line 13, after "$786,264,146.97," to insert "Provided, That unless specifically authorized by law no contract shall be entered into or obligation incurred or additional work undertaken at or on account of United States nitrate plants Nos. 1 and 2, situate at or in the vicinity of Muscle Shoals, Ala., except for purely maintenance purposes," so as to make the clause read:

Armament of fortifications, $786,264,146.97: Provided, That unless specifically authorized by law no contract shall be entered into or obligation incurred or additional work undertaken at or on account of United States nitrate plants Nos. 1 and 2, situate at or in the vicinity of Muscle Shoals, Ala., except for purely maintenance purposes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I desire to ask the Senator in charge of the bill for what purpose this provision was placed in it.

Mr. SMOOT. The amount turned back for armament of fortifications, as the Senator will see by the bill, is $786,264,146.97. Then we put in a proviso based upon a letter I have from Mr. GRAHAM, of the House of Representatives. Perhaps I had better read the letter for the Senator's information.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I should like to hear it read.

Mr. SMOOT. The letter is as follows:

Pursuant to the conversation with you to-day, permit me to state that the Secretary of War, in February, 1920, issued an order allotting $1,250,000 to be expended by the Ordnance Department for the purpose of building certain additions to and making certain changes in United States nitrate plant No. 2, at Muscle Shoals, Ala. Advertisements appeared in several papers asking for bids on this work, which are to be opened May 5 next. Col. J. H. Burns, of the nitrate division, appeared before our subcommittee No. 5 to-day—and testified that these improvements consisted of an allowance of $519,000 for the development of a limestone quarry, the land for which had been heretofore acquired at a cost of $60,000, and that other sums aggregating in all over $1,000,000 were to be expended for the construction of coke bins, railroad tracks and trestles, skip hoists, ash conveyors, and other improvements in the Muscle Shoals plant.

As you know, bills are now pending in the House Military Affairs Committee and in the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, by which bills it is desired by the Secretary of War to form a semi-public corporation to operate United States nitrate plant No. 2 as a fertilizer factory and calling for an appropriation of $12,500,000. No action has been taken on these bills. In addition the Select Committee on Expenditures in the War Department has been investigating this matter thoroughly, and is now about to report to the House, which report will doubtless be presented some time next week, and which will make recommendations as to future expenditures and future operation of United States nitrate plant No. 2.

In view of the situation that these bills are pending and the action of the select committee, which will suggest to the House certain recommendations that may be concurred in by the House, it seems manifest that no further expenditures of money ought to be made at Muscle Shoals until the Congress passes upon these pending matters. There has already been expended upon this plant over $69,000,000, and nothing more ought to be expended until a congressional policy has been adopted.

The Secretary of War is taking the money for this expenditure of $1,250,000 out of the fund known as armament of fortifications C, where there seems to be an unexpended balance.

That was the balance to which I referred in my opening statement.

In view of the suggestions above made I respectfully suggest that there be inserted in the pending fortifications bill now before your committee suitable limitations to prevent the expenditure of funds in the item of fortifications C provided in the present bill or preceding bills without prior authority of Congress.

That is the recommendation that was made by a Member of the other House. I was fully aware that upon the bill which was before the Agricultural Committee of the Senate no report had been made, and in view of the $1,250,000 that had been assigned for the purposes named in the letter I just read, as testified to by Col. J. H. Burns, the committee thought it would be proper at this particular place to insert the pending amendment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Now, let me ask the Senator a question. This was merely a letter from a Member of Congress. Did the committee send for Col. Burns and have him appear before the subcommittee?

Mr. SMOOT. No, Mr. President, because his testimony was before the committee.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then, let me ask the Senator if the committee sent for any man who was connected with the Ordnance Department and gave him a chance to respond to this letter?

Mr. SMOOT. No; but the committee had before it the testimony of Col. Burns, of the Ordnance Department.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But Col. Burns's testimony did not show that he wanted this improvement stopped.

Mr. SMOOT. No; but does the Senator really think that we ought now to proceed to spend $1,250,000 on plant No. 2 at Muscle Shoals for the purpose indicated?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will state my conclusions about the matter. I am utterly surprised to find this clause in the pending bill, and I should like to know how far the committee, before taking such drastic and unusual action as this, went into the proposition of hearing from the men who are interested. Did the committee call officers of the Ordnance Department of the Army before it previously to recommending the stopping of work on a Government project that related to the Army and to the safety of the country?

Mr. SMOOT. The committee desired, while legislation was pending before the committees of the Senate, to stop the expenditure of—

$519,000 for the development of a limestone quarry, the land for which had been heretofore acquired at a cost of $60,000, and that other sums aggregating in all over $1,000,000 were to be expended for the construction of coke bins, railroad tracks, trestles—

And so forth.

I understand, and so Col. Burns testifies, that there is a movement on foot to turn plant No. 2 at Muscle Shoals into a plant for the purpose of manufacturing nitrates for commercial purposes, and that the Government is not to operate it but that it is to be done by some semi-Government organization.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I am sure that shows the attitude of the committee before the Senate. It discloses how little the committee knew about this provision and how ill-advised this action is, for the Senator's statement itself discloses the fact that he does not know what the Government is attempting to do. That is very natural; I am not criticizing the Senator personally, because none of us can keep up with the endeavors of the Government or even with what is going on in other committees; but I think it was entirely without justification for the Appropriations Committee to wade into a proposition of this kind and stop the hand of the Government in a great endeavor without knowledge of the facts. The Senator's own statement shows that he does not know what is being done, because the bill now pending before the Agricultural Committee does not propose to turn this plant over to private parties; it does not propose to have an organization disconnected with the Government to run the plant.

The proposals now pending before the Agricultural Committee, which I hope will be reported to the Senate, is to establish a Government corporation, every share of the stock of which will be owned by the United States Government and voted by the Secretary of War, for the purpose of carrying on this plant for governmental purposes.

Mr. SMOOT. Bearing in mind the organization of the Fleet Corporation, does the Senator say that that is a Government organization or is it only a semi-Government organization?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. There can be no question about the matter; the bill is pending before the Agricultural Committee, and we hope that it will receive an early report to the Senate. It is not a semi-Government proposition. The reason this plant is to be run by a corporation instead of by a bureau of the Government is that after many months of careful investigation by the ablest men in the War Department, after investigation of European conditions as well as American conditions, they concluded that the plant could be more successfully run through a Government corporation than it could through a bureau of the Government; that thereby red tape would be avoided and its efforts would be more directly effective. If the proposed corporation is organized nobody can make a dollar out of the proposition except the Government; nobody will be able to control it but the Government, for every director will be selected by the Secretary of War, voting the stock.

Now, Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me for a moment, I should like to make a statement about this proposition.

Mr. SMOOT. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator, but before doing so I should like to ask the Senator a question. Is it true that Col. Burns testified that "these improvements consisted of an allowance of $519,000 for the development of a limestone quarry"?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I heard a part of Col. Burns's testimony, but the matter coming up here hastily I can not recall it all. I think, however, I can explain to the Senator the necessity for that expenditure.

Mr. SMOOT. I will be glad to hear the explanation, because there is no doubt that Col. Burns did testify to that fact; and I thought that it was a very poor proposition, particularly inasmuch as legislation was pending here to invest $519,000 in a limestone quarry and its development.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I hope the Senator will be absolutely candid with me.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, I am.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senator says that it is a poor proposition. I ask the Senator whether he has made any investigation of this matter further than the information he has obtained from Mr. GRAHAM in the letter which he has read?

Mr. SMOOT. No, I have not, any further than the testimony that was given before the House committee, and on that testimony I took it for granted that it was a very poor proposition.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senator had the opportunity when the matter was before his committee to call the officers of the Ordnance Department of the United States Army who are standing behind the bill now pending and also behind this proposition as a matter of protection not only to the Government but as an aid to the agricultural interests of America. To attempt to stay their hand and destroy this project without investigation seems to me without any justification whatever.

I wish to say a few words more, but I do not want to interrupt the Senator if he desires to speak further at this time.

Mr. SMOOT. I merely should like to call attention to the further fact that I have here a memorandum from the office of the Chief of Ordnance of the War Department dated April 28, 1920, in which he outlines the estimate of expected expenditures for the nitrate division of the Ordnance Department from January 15, 1920, to June, 1920. He estimates not only for the expenditures but for the amount of obligations of ourselves for this purpose. In the letter he states that $1,250,000 is to be used for the "completion of the limestone quarry, Waco, Ala., and alterations and additional construction of United States nitrate plant No. 2, Muscle Shoals, Ala." That is in conformity with Col. Burns's testimony, only Col. Burns goes into details as to how the money shall be expended.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am not taking issue with the Senator about the fact that the nitrate corporation proposes to spend some money, and to spend money to develop a rock quarry; I think that is all true. I do not know exactly whether his figures as to amounts are correct, but I assume they are, at least I will assume so for this argument, as I have not the figures before me to refresh my recollection. It is all true that they are trying to develop this great plant; but the real facts in the case are these: A committee was appointed by the other House of Congress to investigate war expenditures, to ascertain whether expenditures during the war were properly made. I have no criticism of the committee along that line. They investigated expenditures with reference to the building of the great nitrate plant at Muscle Shoals, but I know of no findings of fact to show that there was any great misappropriation of funds or unwarranted use of funds. I think they did find some few trivial matters, as would be found in the case of the expenditure of $60,000,000 on any project.

It is admitted that this plant at Muscle Shoals cost more money, a great deal more money, than it would have cost to have developed it in time of peace before the war; it probably cost more money than it would cost to build it to-day, but it was a rush order, contracted for and built in time of war, when our ships were scarce and we did not have sufficient tonnage on the seas to bring nitrogen from Chile. We had no supply in this country; there was no opportunity for us to get a powder supply to defend our line in France unless we had an adequate nitrogen supply. Under these stressing and dangerous conditions to the country the President ordered that the construction of this plant should be immediately undertaken and that it should be completed within one year. Of course, under those circumstances of stress, the plant cost more money than it would have cost ordinarily. The same thing is true of every other war development that occurred during the period of the war.

I have nothing to say about this committee's investigation of what happened in the past. As I say, I know of nothing to reflect seriously on the building of this plant. There may be some minor criticism as to the cost. No man can deny that for every dollar we spent during the war we got only a minor portion of the benefit that we would have received in time of peace; but this question goes far beyond that, and we might as well face it here and now.

A great nitrate plant, manufacturing nitrogen that can be used for the manufacture of powder in time of war and for the manufacture of fertilizers in time of peace, has been built at this point. It has cost sixty or seventy millions of dollars. It is there. It is a completed project. It is ready to work. It has been worked. It actually ran during the last months of the war and manufactured nitrogen for the benefit of the Government. At the present time that plant is compelled to buy its lime rock from private concerns at a high cost. The Ordnance Department conceived the idea, and properly, that it could buy its own lime-rock quarry and, with a proper expenditure of money, deliver the lime at the plant at a greatly reduced cost in comparison with what it has to pay now to private individuals. In other words, it has provided itself with a supply of raw material. There is nothing improper, nothing unusual about it. It is in the interest of economy that the plans of the Ordnance Department should be carried out. As a matter of fact, they have made a great expenditure. They have bought the land. It is there for them to develop, and what the Senator is trying to cut off is the use of the property that belongs to the Government.

I know where this fight lies. It is not in the expenditure of this money. It is not in the operation of this plant for war purposes. The whole situation comes down to this:

The Congress, before the war came on, by legislation directed the President of the United States, as a matter of preparedness in time of war, to establish a great nitrogen plant in this country; and we appropriated $20,000,000 for it and authorized him to locate one, and we said in that bill that we made this appropriation to protect the Government in time of war and to aid the farmers of America by converting this nitrogen into fertilizers for their benefit in time of peace. It is a declared policy of this Government. It is an enactment on the statute books of this country immediately preceding the war. Now, here is where this combat comes, and you might as well recognize it; it is coming here in a few weeks, anyhow.

The plant could not be built within the $20,000,000. It was not a sufficient appropriation, in the beginning, to meet the war necessities. In the next place, a dollar counted for twice as much before the war as it did during the war; and so the $20,000,000 that Congress appropriated was inadequate. But the President of the United States, carrying out the expressed legislative will of the Congress, established this plant to protect our Government in time of war, and now the plant is built. It is already operating. It makes nitrogen. That nitrogen for a few months was converted into powder for the use of the Government. The war is over now, and there is no necessity to operate this plant any longer for the purpose of manufacturing powder; but, after a careful investigation by the Ordnance Department of the War Department, they have made a report to the Congress, which is now before the Agricultural Committee of the Senate, that it will be cheaper to use this plant now for the making of nitrogen to manufacture fertilizers and aid agriculture than it will to close it down and let it run out as a dead plant. More than that, they have stated that if we keep it in operation as a going plant, manufacturing fertilizer, we can turn it over in an hour as a matter of defense to the Government if we become involved in war.

The people of this country do not seem to visualize the situation that, except as to a few small experimental plants, the absolute defense of this country in time of war is dependent on a supply of nitrogen coming from Chile; and if we became involved in war with a country that could stop our communication by sea with the nitrate beds of Chile we would have to surrender, because we would not have the powder to put into our guns.

The Ordnance Department has come before the Agricultural Committee of the Senate and said: "We have on hand 300,000 tons of sodium nitrate that we are carrying as a matter of defense in case we become involved in war"; and everybody knows now that 300,000 tons of sodium nitrate is only the supply for a few months in case we are engaged in war. There is, however, a great demand by the farmers of the North and the West and the South for sodium nitrate to-day. There is a cry against the high cost of living and a demand for greater food production in America. There is but one way in which you can get it, and that is by giving the farmers fertilizers and letting the same amount of labor raise more food.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. What is the amount of the Government's investment in this plant at the present time?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. In the plant itself? I will not attempt to give the exact figures, but in the neighborhood of $70,000,000.

Mr. POMERENE. And if the expenditure provided for in this bill is not made, what effect will it have on the further continuance of the operation of that plant?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think the plant could continue to operate as it does now by buying its raw material—the lime rock that is necessary to run the plant, because that is essential in the running of it—from private persons; but that is not the point I was making. An issue has come before the Congress. There are certain great interests in this country that have made up their minds that they are going to kill this plant.

Mr. POMERENE. That is just what I was leading up to. I had a letter the other day from a prominent business man condemning this proposition, and in substance suggesting that the Government, by the operation of this plant, would be competing with another plant, I think in Syracuse, N. Y., where they employ the Haber process of making nitrates. Can the Senator advise us as to the respective merits of the two processes? I ask that question now because probably a year ago, or longer, students of this subject—at least those with whom I came in contact—were not themselves satisfied as to the respective merits of the several processes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes; I will advise the Senator. I can not advise him as fully and as well as if I had my papers and figures before me, but, if he will allow me, as the matter has jumped up and come to me unexpectedly, if he will take a general statement from me, I have upstairs in my office ample data to show the whole thing. The Senator is not alone in receiving these letters. I have many of them in my desk right now. More than that, I have had them for a year. The same interests whose hand is shown in this bill to-day have been fighting this proposition from the beginning.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I take exception to the statement of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am not talking about the Senator from Utah. The Senator has been misled on this proposition, I am sure.

Mr. SMOOT. I will make a short statement when the Senator is through.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But I am not taking back what I say about the fight of these interests. I know what it means to make by-product coke, and who is engaged in the business. I am engaged in it myself. Every pound of coke that comes out of the plants in which I am interested is by-product coke, and some of the profits that they make out of by-products come into my pocket. They can not tell me that. I know what they are doing, and I know the fight they are making, and it is a selfish fight. It is a fight against the great agricultural interest of America, and I do not propose to be a party to it.

Here is the proposition: You can make ammonia and get nitrate out of the by-products of coal, and you do do it, and it is good ammonia, and makes good nitrogen. It is all right as far as it goes, but it is a limited supply, and always will be a limited supply, because you can only manufacture by-product coke for one purpose, and that is the purpose of making pig iron, and you can only produce pig iron to the extent of the consumption in the world's market. When you reach the maximum consumption of pig iron, then you reach the maximum of production of ammonia through the by-product process, and the ammonia that you produce through the by-product process is not adequate and sufficient to supply the present needs—nay, not adequate and sufficient to supply one-third of the present needs—of the people of America, not to take into consideration at all the growing demand of America for an adequate supply of nitrogen, on which the very food products of the people of this country are based.

This is one of the greatest problems that ever confronted any nation. There are but two causes that ever destroyed a nation's life in the history of the world. One is that it has been overwhelmed by a conquering army, and the other is that the fertility of its soil became depleted and the nation died from starvation. There is only one answer to each problem, and that is nitrogen. Inorganic fertilizers must be manufactured, and nitrogen must be had to save the country from the attack of a foreign foe.

The fertility of the soil throughout this country is being depleted every hour. Thirty or forty years ago we had the great West, with its fertile fields, but the continuous planting of crops is sapping the soil. As a boy, when I lived in the Northwest myself, I saw fields that were ripe with grain producing 40 and 50 bushels of wheat to the acre. I take it that it would be an extraordinary field to-day that would produce half of that amount. Year by year the fertility of the soil is being sapped, with no fertilizer to take the place of what is taken out of it. The only adequate supply comes from the nitrate beds of Chile, and must be taxed $11 a ton, paid as a tribute to the Chilean Government, in order that the farmers of America may produce. Here is an effort being made by our Government in a way to supply this demand. It is a belated effort. The only great nation in the world to-day which is not manufacturing this great supply of nitrogen from the air is our Government, and the manufacture at this one plant would not be adequate by any means.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GRONNA. I suggest to the Senator from Alabama also that it has been demonstrated—I think quite satisfactorily—to the Committee on Agriculture that it would cost the Government approximately a half million dollars annually to take care of this plant if it is locked up.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Surely.

Mr. GRONNA. More than that, it is not only necessary to manufacture nitrogen, but I think what the Government needs as much as anything is a great laboratory. At Muscle Shoals we shall have cheap power. There is not any question about that, when the dam is completed. We ought to have in the country to-day from 500 to 1,000 experts working on these problems. That is being done in foreign nations, as the Senator knows. Even during the war in Germany they had thousands of experts who were locked up in laboratories working and experimenting on these different compounds. I think it would be extremely unfortunate to put any provision in the bill which would stop the work of this plant.

I am not going to say what the Committee on Agriculture will do in reference to the bill before it, but I will say that, so far as I am personally concerned, I believe we will have to yield to the wishes of the Secretary of War and let him dispose of 150,000 tons of the nitrate ammonia which they have on hand. I think they have 300,000 tons on hand. It has been stated to us that it would be unsafe for us to have on hand less than 300,000 tons, unless this plant could be put in operation so that the Government would be able to go ahead and manufacture it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I thank the Senator from North Dakota for his statement. I was just coming to that point.

Mr. RANSDELL. Will the Senator from Alabama permit me to supplement very briefly to what the Senator from North Dakota has stated in regard to the value of a chemical research laboratory?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. RANSDELL. In testifying before our committee the other day one of the witnesses said that the Du Pont Co. at the present time have a great chemical research laboratory, in which they give employment to between 400 and 500 of the brightest young men of the country, and from another source I learn that as the boys graduate in the colleges of the country they are offered by the Du Pont people an excellent opportunity to enter their laboratory. They are paid a minimum of $1,500 a year, with their board and lodging, and turned loose, as it were, in that great laboratory to investigate every possible means, particularly for the eradication and cure of consumption. They are looking into all sorts of things.

That is a private institution. They are doing a great deal, I take it, for humanity in that great laboratory. But I do not imagine that the Du Pont people will feel compelled to give their secrets to the entire country if they discover any very wonderful things. They will belong to them; whereas if the research laboratory to which the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] has referred be established at Muscle Shoals, it will belong to the Government, and the scientists can find out a great many valuable things in addition to the production of nitrogen for the benefit of all the people of the country.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senator is correct. Of course this laboratory he speaks of, operated by the Du Pont Co., is of great value to the country, but it is along an entirely different plan from that of which the Senator from North Dakota speaks. The purpose of this corporation, aside from making nitrogen, is to have a laboratory there in which the making of fertilizers will be investigated, the adaptability of fertilizers, and there will be the money earned out of this corporation to pay a great staff to try to develop agriculture in this country. It is one of the greatest projects that has ever been conceived by man.

Mr. RANSDELL. I agree to that.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That anybody should stand in the way of it, should stop the course of the upbuilding of this great plant in the interest of the agricultural people of America it seems to me an is unspeakable thing.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, the provisions of the original bill, which passed in 1916, were that a plant sufficiently large should be established to supply the ammunition needs of the Government, and that it should be kept in operation to meet its ultimate requirements during times of war. It so happened that the very ingredient that is necessary to produce our explosives is also the ingredient which is indicated for the enrichment of the soil, and the bill provided that the Government should build a plant sufficiently large to meet the needs of the War Department during times of war, and during times of peace to operate and sell this product for the benefit of agriculture.

As the Senator indicated a moment ago, as we are now dependent upon a foreign country entirely for our source of supply of nitrogen, namely, the mines of Chile, and having established a plant which, according to the testimony before the Committee on Agriculture, of which I am a member, can supply, if developed, the needs of this Government, would it not be the part of folly for us, with this plant established, to lock it up? As to practically all the previous sources from which we got ammonia during all the years past—tankage, for instance, used for fertilizer purposes—they have discovered a process now by which they can purify it and use it for animal feed. Cottonseed meal, used heretofore for the purpose of making fertilizer, is now, 85 per cent of it, being used for feed. So the sources of those things adequate for enriching the soil have decreased, while the demand for ammonia has increased.

With this plant established, and, according to the testimony taken, making complete fertilizer by the combination of phosphoric acid and potash, in the process you get a thoroughly balanced fertilizer, and if war were declared, the same machinery could be put at once to the manufacture of nitric acid. On the plea of somebody, or in the fear that the Government may expend money which would not be of benefit to the American people, unless this plant is run, a total of $60,000,000 is lost; a supply of 160,000 tons of sulphate of ammonia, or, if they increase it, perhaps 300,000 tons, by running the plant at full capacity, and all this product which could be supplied to the agricultural needs of the country, will be absolutely wiped out.

Mr. SMOOT. There is nothing in the amendment suggested which will stop the plant from running.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes; but if the Senator will allow me, it gives an indication that the Senate is not in sympathy with carrying on this work, so much needed by the agricultural interests of the country.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think we might as well face the question squarely. I am not charging the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] with it, because I do not think he knew the facts in this case when he reported the amendment, but I know what is behind it. I have not a doubt in my mind as to what is behind it. The object is to destroy the usefulness of this plant to American agriculture. This is only one step in the fight that is being made against it.

More than that, as the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] said, there is no more crying need in America to-day than for sulphate of ammonia for fertilizers. The farmers of America—North, South, East, and West—are crying for an additional supply of ammonia for fertilizers. They can not get it; it is not purchasable, and officials of the War Department have come before the Committee on Agriculture and stated that out of this reserve stock, which they hold to defend us in time of war, they are willing to dispose of 150,000 tons at cost to the farmers of America to-day, which they can use in the fields this year, if Congress will act quickly and in time, provided this plant is put in a going way; if, instead of being shut down and allowed to rust and rot, the steam and the electricity be put behind it, and it be made a going concern. They say that then one-half of the present supply they hold of Chilean nitrates will be adequate, with this plant in operation. But for the defense of the Nation they can not afford to give it up unless you start the operation of this plant. Here is the $500,000 needed to put the plant in operation, with the farmers of the country crying for fertilizer, and yet this committee would absolutely stop the wheels, say that it has to go over until next year, or some time in the future, not only refusing to give an appropriation but actually taking away an appropriation which is already available.

Mr. President, there can be no more justification for that item in the bill than for a provision which would disband the Army of the United States.

But I want to say to the Senate that I know the combat is here. The great business interests in America which are making nitrogen through the process of ammonia and by-product coke contend that if we start this plant and make nitrogen out of air, it is competing with their business. I am the last man in the world to contend that the Government ought to go into business and take it away from the individual, but the men engaged in this industry do not begin to supply the needs of this Nation, because, even if they developed the by-product coke to its last analysis, their limitation is such that they can not supply the needs of America. So in the end we are going to be thrown for an adequate supply of nitrogen where we have been in the past—on the fields of Chile, with all the expense of transportation and Chilean taxes resting as a burden on the backs of the farmers of this country.

More than that, there is a chance of this plant rotting out, becoming inadequate, not ready for use in time of war, removing one of the great defensive arms which we built at great cost in the late war. As the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] suggests to me, there is business enough at the plant for both purposes.

Mr. OWEN rose.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the plant were run to its full capacity, it could not supply within a third of the present needs of America for nitrogen. Unless these gentlemen want a monopoly in order that the price of fertilizer and the price of nitrogen may soar to an untold extent, there is no reason why this plant should not be put in operation. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. OWEN. I was just going to suggest to the Senator that they not only can not supply the present demand, but that the demand for nitrogen is absolutely without any bounds whatever. It is the basis of human food.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Absolutely; there is no limit on it. The only reason why more nitrogen is not used by the farmers of America is because of the high price. Reduce the price to a reasonable extent and you will more than double the demand.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, the Senator stated a moment ago that if this plant was operated at its full capacity it could only produce about one-third of our present consumption.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Not over that. It may not produce that much.

Mr. POMERENE. What proportion of our present demand can be produced by other manufacturing facilities which we have in the country?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not like to state figures without having them before me, but my recollection is that the testimony before the Senate committee disclosed the fact that it is not possible to produce more than one-third from the other sources. I say that subject to revision. It is a small amount; I do not think it amounts to one-third.

Mr. POMERENE. If that be so, then the operation of this plant can not seriously interfere with the operation of the other plants at a reasonable profit?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Not at all, except that it may reduce the price to some extent. That is where the shoe pinches. These gentlemen are not able to supply the needs of the American people, but we have had very high prices for ammonia and nitrogen during the war, and it is natural enough, I suppose, for men who have had high prices not to want to take the chance of giving them up. However, that is not the position for the Congress of the United States to occupy. We should take steps, and take them at once.

I know that when the bill comes from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry it will be met with combat all along the line. This is not a fight of to-day or of yesterday. We have been fighting this situation for five years. Every time Congress has advanced one step it has been compelled to do it by fighting down the opposition of men who had personal interests on the other side. I do not want the Senate of the United States to commit itself to any such proposition.

This may be a small matter; it may not go to the real crux of the situation. It is merely taking away an appropriation that is being used to develop and supply the raw material for this plant. I do not say that the plant could not run without it; it will run more cheaply if it has it; but the Senate of the United States should not for one moment cast a vote that will let the people of the country think that its sympathies and its action are not going to be behind this great endeavor.

I say to the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] that there is not an organization of farmers in America, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, that has not indorsed the bill for the carrying on of this plant, the bill that is pending before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to-day. They have appeared before the committee officially. They have sent in great masses of petitions. More than that, I want to say that the arm of the Government which protects us in war, the War Department, and the Ordnance Bureau of the War Department, stand behind the bill before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry as a matter of national defense. They are standing behind it because it means the protection of the honor and the safety of the Nation. The issue involved is protection both in war and in peace and the development of the country in time of peace.

I wish to have a roll call on the amendment, Mr. President. If the Senate is not going to strike it out I want the Senators who are standing for it to take the responsibility on the record of the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the remarks of the Senator from Alabama are far afield of the amendment. I want the Senate to listen to the amendment and see what it provides. I do not propose to be put in the attitude in which the Senator from Alabama has tried to put me or the committee. I have no such intention as the Senator from Alabama has intimated, and there is nothing in the amendment other than would have been done by any business man in the world if he owned the plant himself.

This is what the amendment provides:

That unless specifically authorized by law no contract shall be entered into or obligation incurred or additional work undertaken at or on account of the United States nitrate plants Nos. 1 and 2, situate at or in the vicinity of Muscle Shoals, Ala., except for purely maintenance purposes.

That does not interfere with the operation of the plant. We find that there is before a committee of this body a bill covering the whole question as to how far the plant should be expanded and what the Government of the United States should do with it for the future. When an improvement that is made to-day will cost two and one-half or three times what it would cost in ordinary times, it seems to me it is the height of folly to make purchase or expend money for the improvement of a limestone quarry, when it has not the least effect upon the operation of the plant. There will not be one ounce of nitrate made more or less if the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. May I ask the Senator what is the specific object hoped to be obtained by the adoption of the amendment?

Mr. SMOOT. It is this. As long as legislation is to pass Congress providing a policy that is to be pursued in the operation of the plant at Muscle Shoals, why now undertake, as the Secretary of War has done, to set aside $1,250,000 for the improvement of a limestone quarry?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. But the Senator is fully aware that there are certain ingredients necessary in the production of the products that are to come from this plant. It is only in pursuance of the policy established in perfecting the plant and the product that the Secretary of War is making these investments. Not one of the bills that are pending contemplate anything else than the operation of a company after a plant is completed. They take it for granted that Congress is going to complete this necessary adjunct to our economic system; and not only that but just to interject the thought here, this plant is only the beginning, I hope, of the operation of like plants by the Government throughout the country.

The Senator from Alabama mentioned a moment ago what it means to the farmers of the country. It means one-third of the indicated demand now, whereas I stand here to assert that if the supply of ammonia were ten times what it is and the price was at all reasonable, the farmers of the country could use it for the betterment of conditions that now confront us and that are alarming.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from South Carolina need not tell the Senator from Utah that, because the Senator from Utah knows it just as well as the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The Senator from Utah looks one way and walks another. I do not understand why he should introduce an amendment here that has all the earmarks and all the indications that there is a hostile feeling in the Senate from some source toward that plant. I am not asking for an inordinate and senseless use of money. The Secretary of War is fully alive to the situation and is doing all he can to develop this plant to the point where it will produce the necessary ingredients for the farmers of this country during times of peace, and now for us to say to him, "You must stop until legislation, the chances for which are not one in ten, is passed in the Senate, stop all improvements and contemplated expenditures until the nature and character of the pending legislation becomes known."

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator is talking upon something that is not in the amendment. All that this amendment means is that there shall be no contract made or obligation entered into until specifically allowed by law, except for purely maintenance purposes.

I want to say to the Senator from Alabama that I do not care whether the amendment remains in the bill or not. So far as I am personally concerned the amendment can go out. But I am not going to stand here and be charged with opposing the manufacture of nitrates on the ground that the agricultural interests of the United States want it and certain interests are opposed to it. I have never objected to an appropriation made for the Muscle Shoals project.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have not made any charge so far as the Senator is concerned. I said in the beginning that I thought the Senator had been misled with reference to this. But I know the purpose of the men behind this thing, and I know it is to destroy this plant.

Let me call the Senator's attention to the language of the amendment. He says we are not talking to the language, but listen to this language:

That unless specifically authorized by law—

What does that mean? It means unless there is another bill passed by both Houses of Congress, after it comes out of the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no doubt that there will be such a bill, and the Senator and I will both support it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Wait a minute.

That unless specifically authorized by law no contract shall be entered into or obligation incurred or additional work undertaken at or on account of the United States nitrate plants Nos. 1 and 2, situate at or in the vicinity of Muscle Shoals, Ala., except for purely maintenance purposes.

The purpose of maintenance does not mean operation. It does not mean operation; it means a dead plant. That is all it can mean.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, Mr. President, that is so far-fetched——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It is not far-fetched.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no use in discussing the question at all if the Senator is going to place such a construction upon it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I know what maintenance means, and I know what operation means. I know that the purpose of this proposition is to wipe out the legislation of five years in the interest of the agriculture of America. The purpose is to put on the statute books a law that will absolutely tie the hands of the Government, and make them come back to Congress and fight their way through the committees and both Houses of Congress and receive the approval of the President before agriculture can get the benefit of the expenditure of over $70,000,000 on a plant that is now prepared and ready to pour out its bountiful gift. There can be no question about what this means.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator is altogether wrong. The appropriations are already made. We are not interfering with them in the least. The only object there was in the amendment was to make no further contracts until the legislation is finally agreed to in Congress as to what shall be the future policy of the Government. The Senator from Alabama need not think there is going to be opposition to any kind of legislation, passed either in the House or the Senate, that will allow the increased production of nitrates in this country.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GAY in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. Do I understand that without the amendment those in charge of the plant would have the authority to make additions or improvements?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have read the letter in reference to the matter; the War Department has already advertised; and bids are to be opened on May 5 next.

Mr. POMERENE. I understand that, but I am asking whether they now have that authority? I assume that it is the Senator's view that they have such authority?

Mr. SMOOT. They propose to take a million and a quarter dollars out of the appropriation for "Armament of fortification C" for the purpose of the completion of improvements of the limestone quarry at Waco, Ala.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. They undoubtedly have the authority; they have advertised for bids and are going to carry out the work.

Mr. SMOOT. I think they have the authority.

Mr. POMERENE. That leads to the second question which I intended to ask: If it is the Senator's desire only temporarily to interfere with further development, why does he, by his amendment, seek to take away all power in that behalf for all future time unless Congress hereafter grants it?

Mr. SMOOT. That is exactly what Congress is going to do. I have not any doubt that the bill which is before a committee of the other House or the bill before the Agricultural Committee in the Senate is going to become law, but let us wait and see what Congress is going to do, and let us wait and see what plan is finally agreed upon.

Mr. POMERENE. It seems to me there is some reason for the suspicion which appears to be in the mind of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] when he speaks as he does with respect to this amendment. If it was the desire of the proponent of the amendment simply temporarily to suspend the power to make further developments that would be one thing; but the amendment seeks to take away from the War Department all power with respect to any additional development.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, all that I know or that anybody else knows as to what the amendment will accomplish is that it will say to the Secretary of War that the bids that are to be opened on May 5 in relation to the improvement of the limestone quarry at Waco, Tex., shall not be proceeded with; that is all there is to the amendment. I do not know the extent of the limestone quarry. I know that nitrates are being made at the plant and they have had no trouble in the past. I know that the amendment will not in any way interfere with the future operations of the plant and never was intended to do so.

The Senator from Alabama says that great interests are back of this amendment with a view of killing the plant. I have not had a person call on me in behalf of the amendment or in relation to the killing of the plant, either lately or at any other time. The Senator from Alabama knows that there is no interest in the United States that can kill the plant.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I hope I know it; but I know I have battled with them for a long time, and I know the difficulties which we have had to face.

Mr. SMOOT. I know my statement is correct.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am not making any charge against the Senator from Utah, but I know that the purpose of the amendment, if accomplished, would stop the plant and absolutely force new legislation before a wheel could be turned, for I know what the word "maintenance" means. It does not mean operation, and this amendment prohibits the use of any money except for maintenance. Now, the authorization is here; has been granted; the law has provided for the operation of this plant; and the money has been appropriated by Congress. The amendment seeks to take it away; there can not be any doubt about what the situation is. I think somebody has fooled the Senator from Utah; but I am not at all fooled as to what the men who are standing behind the amendment intend by it.

Mr. SMOOT. So far as I am concerned, I will again say that I do not care whether the amendment stays in the bill or is stricken out; but it appeared to me that the amendment only followed the course that any business man in the world would follow. I know that if the Senator from Alabama himself owned the plant or was a manager of the same and a contemplated change was under consideration by himself or by a board of directors, he would never spend $1,250,000 until a final decision was reached. I know he would not do so. That is exactly the situation at the plant at Muscle Shoals. The Congress of the United States is the board of directors; it is considering plans to-day as to what shall be done; and now we are asked to allow the expenditure in a certain way of $1,250,000.

It is not the amount of money alone that is involved. Perhaps it would be better to have the $519,000 for the limestone quarry expended than to have a feeling created in the minds of any class of people against Congress or Members of Congress, who are trying, at least, to save every dollar possible to the Treasury of the United States. The sum involved is small and insignificant compared to what we have already expended on the Muscle Shoals plant. The sum of $70,000,000 has been expended there, and no human being can tell how much more will be spent. So far as I am concerned, I want to see appropriated whatever amount is necessary to make the plant a success. I recognize, as well as does any man living, the necessity of the manufacture of nitrates in the United States. I know what nitrates mean to the agricultural interests of the country, and I am aware of the situation the farmers have confronted during the recent war for the lack of such nitrates; but that is no reason, Mr. President, why we should squander money; and there is no reason why, if by withholding the appropriation for a month or two we may be able to save this money, we should not do so. What legislation passes or what is contained in the amendment will not affect the agricultural interests of this country for this year in any way, shape, or form.

Mr. President, with that statement I am going to ask the Senate to disagree to the amendment. I do not desire the amendment to be adopted with any such intimation as has been made with respect to the purpose for which it was incorporated in the bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I wish to say again that I make no charges against the Senator from Utah, but if all that was being attempted was to prevent the operation of a rock quarry, it would be very easy to say so and to specifically designate the rock quarry; but the amendment in its broad detail says that no money shall be expended "except for purely maintenance purposes." The plant at Muscle Shoals has been authorized; it has been provided by legislation that it shall be operated; the money is already in the hands of the executive branch of the Government to carry it on, and this amendment would not only stop the operation of the rock quarry but stop the whole operation of the plant. It means that nothing can be done with it but allow it to lie there; that the Government shall police it and oil the machinery, but if anything further is to be done it will be necessary to come back to Congress for legislation in the future with all the attendant delays. I know what the amendment means just as well as does the Senator from Utah. He may interpret it differently, but the man who reads the words "no money shall be used except for maintenance purposes" knows what the meaning is. He can read it as he runs.

Mr. SMOOT. Would the Senator be satisfied if we inserted the words "and operation," so as to read "for maintenance and operation purposes"?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No, sir; I do not want any limitation. The Senator admits that he has only heard from one side of this case; the great Ordnance Department, which has it in charge, were not called by the committee; the committee and the Congress have had no opportunity to hear from the Government. There is but one thing that can be done properly with this amendment, and that is to throw it out of the bill, and I am glad to hear the Senator say that he consents to its being thrown out of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I am perfectly willing, as I have already said, that the amendment shall be eliminated, but I still say that the construction put upon the amendment by the Senator from Alabama is not as I construe it and not as it is intended to be construed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CUMMINS. I suggest to the Senator from Alabama that he withdraw his request, the Senator from Utah having said that he was willing that the amendment should be disagreed to.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Very well; I will withdraw the request with that understanding.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

INTEREST RATES.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, a few days ago I received a very strenuous telegram from a bank calling attention to the fact that the Federal Reserve Board was very severely pressing them to sell the Liberty bonds which they hold, and was charging them a higher rate of interest for loans on the Liberty bonds than the Liberty bonds bore.

This particular bank, whose name I intentionally omit because I do not wish to prejudice the bank, had acquired for patriotic reasons much more than its quota of Liberty bonds; moreover, there happened to be large Government works near by whose employees were induced, for patriotic purposes, to subscribe to Liberty bonds on partial payment plan, and the bank practically underwrote them, taking the notes of the employees with the bonds as security. The war stopped, and thousands of these employees left the neighborhood and unloaded the whole matter upon the bank.

If the bank should be forced to sell these bonds now, they would lose 15 per cent on several millions of dollars, and would suffer a very, very serious loss. Moreover, the bank is now losing the difference between the rate of interest the bonds bear and the rate of interest the reserve bank is charging on the loans which the bank is compelled to carry with the reserve bank.

LIBERTY BONDS.

In the meantime the Liberty bonds have undergone a severe depreciation. It is impossible for the banks to advantageously sell the bonds. We have the right to inquire into the cause of this depreciation of these Government bonds.

Before the war United States bonds bearing 2 per cent, with the circulation privilege, sold above par. Belgium for 50 years before the war had a 3 per cent rate of interest for merchants and business men. France had a like rate. The banks of the United States pay their depositors 2 and 3 per cent, and in some cases 4 per cent interest. The savings banks pay 4 per cent interest. The banks of America paying 4 per cent interest can not be expected to lend their money for less than 5 or 6 per cent, and they were lending money very freely at 5 per cent previous to the war.

The practice in New York of charging extortionate interest rates for call loans—10, 15, 20, and 30 per cent—has had a bad psychological effect on interest rates throughout the United States. The people have ceased to feel shocked at a high interest rate of 10 per cent when the New York papers quote call money, for immediate payment, at the rate of 15 and 20 per cent. A call loan, subject to immediate payment, is entitled to the lowest possible rate. Indeed in normal times the rate of interest on call loans frequently went to 2 per cent, sometimes to 1½ per cent per annum, and when call loans are quoted at 20 per cent it seems only fair that the people should be contented to pay a very high rate for time loans. These artificial high interest rates on call loans secured by New York Stock Exchange collateral have not been held as technical usury, because the New York law was changed so as to permit any rate of interest to be charged on call loans of $5,000 and upward.

The men who fix these high rates justify themselves on the ground that the high rate is necessary to check and repress undue speculation in stocks.

Undue speculation in stocks is an evil. It absorbs credits that ought to be used in industry and commerce. Loans on investment securities exceeded $1,900,000,000 a few months ago in New York City. They have now been somewhat reduced, but the true remedy is not high interest rates.

The banks of New York can stop speculation very easily:

First. By refusing to make new loans for speculative purposes, and this should be demanded of them by the Comptroller of the Currency and by the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve bank.

Second. The banks can require the gradual liquidation of speculative loans, giving reasonable time in which to accomplish it without great injury to the borrowers.

Third. The banks can demand more collateral as margins, and in that way check the tendency to speculation. Of course, they do practice this to some extent.

Fourth. They can gradually raise the rate of interest on speculative loans as a penalty for such loans, without raising the rate of interest on manufacturing and commercial loans.

Induced by the argument that it would tend to check speculation, the Federal Reserve Board has raised the rates of interest to member banks from 4 to 6 and 7 per cent. The member banks borrow money from their depositors to whom they pay 2 and 3 per cent, and these deposits are loaned out at 5 and 6 per cent, or a margin of approximately 3 per cent. The Federal reserve banks pay no interest to their depositors. The Federal reserve banks made nearly a hundred per cent profit last year on an interest rate lower than the present rate. The member banks who receive no interest on their deposits are entitled to a rate, in my opinion, of 3 per cent, where the member bank is only asking the use of a part of its reserves. When aggressive borrowing banks ask in excess of their own reserves, the Federal reserve bank is justified in imposing a rate that will penalize those banks, thus automatically checking the abuse; and I understand they are putting into effect an arrangement of this kind, certainly at the Kansas City reserve bank.

Before the Federal Reserve Board raised the rate of interest I took the liberty of writing a letter to the chairman of the reserve board expressing the hope that the board would not raise the rate of interest. I will insert that letter without reading, Mr. President, if it is agreeable to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter referred to is as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
April 27, 1920.

Hon. W. P. G. HARDING,
Governor Federal Reserve Board, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR GOVERNOR: I have been intending to call to see you and beg of you and of the Federal Reserve Board to consider the injurious effects of raising the interest rates in America in its relation to adding to the high cost of living and in its relation to bearing down the market value of Government bonds.

I have just received a telegram from the president of an important national bank. He explained to me that his bank had bought and underwritten a much larger volume of Government bonds than they would have done normally because of important Government works put up in his city. Thousands of employees who were compelled to buy Government bonds unloaded them on the bank when the war suddenly ended, and he has been unable to sell these bonds on a falling market, and the market is falling because the reserve board has raised the rate of interest and set the example to the banks of the United States and justified them to their own conscience and to their customers in raising the rate approximately 2 per cent throughout the Union. For your consideration I quote the telegram:

> Can nothing be done to give Liberty bonds some standing? The Federal reserve bank is pressing us unmercifully to sell what we have, and has served notice that they will rediscount no commercial paper until we do so, and as you know this can only be done in the New York Exchange at panic prices, it makes a serious and very embarrassing situation which might be very far-reaching.

The reserve banks should be cautioned in pressing the banks too far to sell these bonds on a falling market. This particular bank, I invite you to observe, would receive a great injury, and you will be unable to repair it afterwards.

The Federal Reserve Board can not permit itself to be held responsible for the consequences that will ensue if it persists in this policy of raising the interest rates as a remedy for speculation. This remedy is worse than the disease.

This remedy is not necessary because there are other available remedies whose consequences will be harmless. I venture to suggest several:

First. That the banks be advised to require loans for speculative purposes to be gradually reduced;

Second. That the banks be required to demand increased margins on such loans;

Third. That the banks be invited to raise the rate on such speculative loans, and not raise the rates on loans upon which the manufacturer, the commercial, and industrial life of the Nation depend; and Fourth. That the banks be invited and required to refuse new speculative loans on investment securities.

My dear Governor, the bondholders of the United States have already suffered a loss in the market value of their bonds of over $2,000,000,000. Bonds which they bought as a patriotic duty; bonds which they bought on borrowed money; bonds which they bought at a sacrifice.

The Government should not through its own agencies destroy the value of these securities by pursuing a policy of raising the interest rates, and I beg you, and I beg the board through you, to change this policy.

Moreover, my dear Governor, I call your attention to the unpardonable and scandalous practice of the usurious charges current in New York City, where on call loans, the stock-exchange collateral, the rates have been running as high as 30 per cent. I enter my solemn protest against this, and on behalf of the people of my State and the people of the United States I call upon the Federal Reserve Board to put an end to this nefarious practice which sets a false standard to the people of the United States in the matter of interest rates, and which has been used to justify the Federal Reserve Board to raise the rates on the whole country for the avowed purpose of stopping speculation when no such remedy was necessary.

Yours, very respectfully,

ROBERT L. OWEN.

Mr. OWEN. The Federal reserve banks were not intended as money-making banks. They were intended as public institutions to secure stability in credits. They appear to be proceeding upon the theory that it is their business to make all the money they can, which I regard as a serious misconception of the purpose of the reserve act.

When the Federal Reserve Board raised the rate to 6 and 7 per cent, it was perfectly natural that the member banks throughout the country should raise their rates to 8 and 10 per cent, and when the rates were thus raised an average of 3 per cent on the $25,000,000,000 of loans, an immediate increase of interest charge in the amount of $750,000,000 was levied on the people of the United States with a consequent increase in the cost of living.

In addition to this, a charge was made by the merchant, by the manufacturer, by the wholesaler, and by the retailer for his profits on the extra cost of handling the business of the country; so that there was an added charge on the people of the United States, in addition to the interest charges raised, as I have pointed out, of probably over a billion and one-half dollars. In addition to this, the railroads of the country have found themselves compelled to pay 7 per cent interest, plus commissions and discounts, all of which is a charge upon the people of the country in the form of freight and high passenger rates, adding another enormous extra charge to the cost of living.

The charging of these high rates of interest, regarded as necessary, has the effect of depreciating the market value of United States bonds. Already the depreciation of 15 per cent on twenty-six billions of bonds amounts to nearly $3,000,000,000. When the Secretary of the Treasury appealed to all the banks of the United States to put on the drive for the sale of Liberty bonds and Victory bonds at par, with 4¼ per cent interest, the people bought them for patriotic reasons. Many of them borrowed money with which to buy these bonds.

I do not think it wise, I do not think it just, I do not think it decent or ethical for the Government agencies to pursue a policy which causes a loss of $3,000,000,000 to these patriotic bondholders, and more especially when the policy is otherwise injurious and harmful in the most serious way.

The people of this country are entitled to have these bonds brought back to par. The banks are entitled to have these bonds brought back to par, and I most vigorously object to the Federal reserve act being administered in such a manner as to bring about these serious losses to the patriotic people of the country.

Mr. President, on February 16 I called the attention of the Senate to this matter and had printed in the RECORD my letter of February 13 to the President calling it to his attention. I know of no action to correct the matter complained of.

This world, Mr. President, is a world of cause and effect, and adequate causes will invariably produce a fixed result. Raising the normal rate of interest to a higher point is a sufficient cause to bring about the low market value of the Liberty bonds. The only remedy for this condition is an appeal to public opinion, and to that opinion I appeal.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13555) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, and for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 18, after line 1, to insert:

Submarine mine structures, $15,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, line 8, after the word "defense," to strike out "$800,534,992.93" and insert "$800,615,139.13," so as to make the clause read:

Total appropriations to be covered into the Treasury, fortifications and other works of defense, $800,615,139.13.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 8, line 13, it is proposed to strike out "$130,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$560,000."

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am just in receipt of a letter from the Secretary of War advising me of the receipt of a cablegram from the commanding general of the Hawaiian Department on this item, and the Secretary says:

It is the opinion of the War Department that the commencement of the work on roads in Oahu is the most necessary single item on the fortification bill, on account of the strategic importance of the Hawaiian Islands to our Navy in both defensive and offensive operations in the Pacific. The retention of this item in the bill to be submitted by your committee to the Senate is recommended.

I hope the amendment will be agreed to, and that it may go into conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, and which I hope will be acceptable to the Senator from Utah.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. It is proposed to add a new section, to be known as section 9, to come at the end of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 9. That no part of the moneys appropriated in this or any previous act shall be expended to abolish or remove from any one of the arsenals of the United States any permanent department or shop established by legislative act prior to April 6, 1917, unless such removal is authorized by act of Congress.

Mr. SMOOT. I see no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

NATIONAL BUDGET SYSTEM.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, at the conclusion of yesterday's business House bill 9783 was under consideration by the Senate. I ask unanimous consent that we may proceed to its consideration prior to the conclusion of the morning hour, because if we do so I feel certain that the amendments yet to be offered can be disposed of shortly and that the bill can proceed to a vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9783) to provide a national budget system and an independent audit of Government accounts, and for other purposes.

Mr. RANSDELL obtained the floor.

Mr. SMOOT. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Glass	McKellar	Smith,Ariz.
Brandegee	Gronna	McLean	Smith,Ga.
Capper	Hale	McNary	Smoot
Chamberlain	Harris	Moses	Sterling
Colt	Harrison	New	Sutherland
Comer	Henderson	Nugent	Thomas
Culberson	Jones,N.Mex.	Overman	Townsend
Cummins	Jones,Wash.	Owen	Trammell
Curtis	Kellogg	Page	Underwood
Dial	Kendrick	Phipps	Walsh,Mass.
Edge	Keyes	Pomerene	Warren
Fall	King	Ransdell	Watson
Frelinghuysen	Lodge	Reed
Gay	McCormick	Sheppard
Gerry	McCumber	Simmons

Mr. GRONNA. I was requested to announce that the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is absent due to illness. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. MCKELLAR. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] on official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-seven Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The Senator from Louisiana will proceed.

VALUE OF COTTON CONTRACTS.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I wish to discuss the Comer amendment to the cotton-futures act, inserted in the Agricultural appropriation bill. This amendment was agreed to some time ago and is now in conference. In order that the Senate may understand it, I will first read the amendment agreed to by the Senate on the motion of the Agricultural Committee, which is very brief. I read from page 92 of the bill, amendment No. 249:

Provided, That the amendments relating to cotton provided for in section 6 of the act known as the wheat guarantee act, approved March 4, 1919, are hereby recognized and declared to be permanent legislation.

To this amendment of the committee the Senator from Alabama [Mr. COMER] induced the Senate to accept the following amendment:

That hereafter each lot of cotton classified as tenderable in whole or in part on a section 5 contract of said act as amended, shall give to the buyer the right to demand that one half of the contract shall be delivered in the official cotton standard grades of the United States from the grades of middling fair, strict good middling, good middling, strict middling, and middling, and that the seller shall have the option of delivering the other half of said contract from any of the official cotton standard grades as established in said act.

Mr. President, I wish to discuss this question for two reasons. In the first place, I am a cotton grower myself. It is the only business in which I am engaged at the present time aside from my duties as a United States Senator, and Louisiana produces a large quantity of cotton.

In the second place, the city of New Orleans, the largest city in my State, has a big institution, known as the New Orleans Cotton Exchange, which has been severely criticized and commented upon in several speeches made by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. COMER]. I feel it my duty, therefore, to make some explanation and defense of this great business of my State.

Former Solicitor Francis G. Caffey, of the United States Department of Agriculture, in an address delivered before the Alabama State Bar Association at Montgomery, Ala., July 10, 1915 (refer S. R. A. Markets No. 5, issued August 11, 1915, Department of Agriculture), stated that, since 1884, 120 bills dealing with the regulation of cotton futures had been introduced at various sessions of Congress, and previous to the Sixty-third Congress three passed the House. Since then the Smith-Lever bill was enacted into law, and was further amended by the act of March 4, 1919. The trade is now operating under the law which became final August 18, 1914, known as the Smith-Lever bill, and amended March 4, 1919. Senator COMER has introduced an amendment to H. R. 12272, which amendment shall give to the buyer the right to demand that one half of the contract shall be delivered in the official cotton standard grades of the United States from the grades of middling fair, strict good middling, good middling, strict middling, and middling, and that the seller shall have the option of delivering the other half of said contract from any of the official cotton standard grades as established in said act.

Mr. President, the president of the New Orleans Cotton Exchange was in this city yesterday and I had a discussion with him about the effect of the Comer amendment. He stated that the amendment was couched in language which, to him, was ambiguous, that he did not understand exactly what it meant, and he was very fearful that if the amendment should be agreed to and become a part of the law the cotton exchange would not know how to carry it out, and people making contracts for future delivery of cotton would be uncertain as to what meaning the law intended to convey. I asked him to put his statement in writing, which he did, and I will read it. It is addressed to me, dated yesterday, and reads:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 29, 1920.

Hon. JOSEPH E. RANSDELL,
United States Senator from Louisiana, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: After carefully reading and considering Senator COMER'S amendment to bill H. R. 12272 I have come to the conclusion, although I have not had legal advice, that the ambiguity of the language of the said amendment is such as to cause considerable confusion and litigation and the probable closing of the cotton exchanges until a final decision would be rendered by the Supreme Court of the United States if it should be adopted.

I would like to state at this point that I talked yesterday with another member of the New Orleans Cotton Exchange, Mr. Wolfe, who said that in his judgment, if this amendment were agreed to as written, there would be no transactions on the exchange until the matter had been submitted to the Supreme Court for a construction of its language, which he thought would take at least two years; therefore the exchange would be closed for practically two years. I continue reading:

1. I quote from the amendment, as follows:
"That hereafter each lot of cotton classified as tenderable in whole or in part on a section 5 contract of said act as amended shall give to the buyer the right to demand," etc.
You will note that the wording states that cotton shall give to the buyer the right to demand. How can cotton, which is an inanimate thing, possess the power to give the buyer a right to demand?
2. A matter of much greater importance is the following:
"That hereafter each lot of cotton classified as tenderable in whole or in part on a section 5 contract of said act as amended shall give to the buyer the right to demand that one half of the contract shall be delivered in the official cotton standard grades of the United States from the grades of middling fair, strict good middling, good middling, strict middling, and middling."
It is not clear whether the buyer has the right to demand that one-half of the contract is to be delivered proportionately or in unequal percentages of the grades of middling fair, strict good middling, good middling, strict middling, and middling, or whether the buyer can demand 50 per cent of any one of these five grades.
3. The particular part of this act which is most ambiguous and one sure to be questioned is as follows:
"And that the seller shall have the option of delivering the other half of said contract from any of the official cotton standard grades as established in said act."
The cotton exchanges are now operating under the United States cotton-futures act and the amendment thereto contained in the wheat-guaranty bill of March 4, 1919.
Neither of these acts establishes any "official cotton standard grades" which you will note the language of the Comer amendment requires.
However, the United States cotton-futures act, section 9, states:
"SEC. 9. That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized from time to time to establish and promulgate standards of cotton by which its quality or value may be judged or determined, including its grade, length of staple, strength of staple, color, and such other qualities, properties, and conditions as may be standardized in practical form, which, for the purposes of this act, shall be known as the official cotton standards of the United States."
I therefore contend that the seller has the option under the Comer amendment of delivering 50 per cent of the contract from the 20 grades established and promulgated by the Secretary of Agriculture under section 9 of the United States cotton-futures act, because the amendment thereto of March 4, 1919, does not establish or authorize the making of official standards, and the words contained in the Comer amendment—"of the official cotton-standard grades as established in said act"—must refer to the grades established and promulgated by the Secretary of Agriculture under the United States cotton-futures act, section 9, because, as before stated, the amendment of March 4, 1919, contains no such provision.
Respectfully submitted.

EDW. J. BUTLER,
President New Orleans Cotton Exchange.

Mr. President, I have looked as carefully as I can into the statements contained in Mr. Butler's letter and I believe he is entirely correct. The reference in the amendment of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. COMER] is clearly to the act of 1919, not the original Smith-Lever Act of 1914. It was under the original act of 1914, section 9, that the Secretary of Agriculture was authorized to establish standards and grades of cotton. Hence if the Senate is to adopt the amendment of the Senator from Alabama it should clarify the language, it should rewrite and make clear what is meant.

To confirm my own opinion in this matter, I called up the Bureau of Markets this morning, read this letter to them, and asked what construction they placed upon it? They replied that they had no right whatsoever as an administrative bureau to be giving any advice on legislation, but if I asked them how they construed the Comer amendment as it now appears in the bill pending before the conferees, they would say that it is ambiguous; that they do not understand quite what it means; and that if Congress is to pass this amendment they would respectfully suggest that it be corrected so as to make its meaning clear.

Mr. President, I shall discuss a number of the features of the bill before I get through, but that criticism of Mr. Butler, backed up by what the Bureau of Markets says, illustrates the point which a number of us have made in regard to the amendment; that it is a hasty and ill-considered piece of legislation; that it was not submitted to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry when the bill was being prepared; that the friends and foes of the measure had no opportunity to discuss it fully before its presentation to the Senate. It came up first on the floor; it came up in the rush of legislation; it came up when many of those who are particularly interested—Senators representing cotton States—were absent from the Senate, and it was agreed to without that full and careful consideration which should be given to important legislation like this.

Bear in mind, sir, that if the amendment passes it will practically nullify the Smith-Lever cotton-futures act passed in 1914, fully six years ago, an act which has been functioning very well indeed; an act which has corrected many, I might say most all, of the great evils which were complained of in the cotton-futures business, to wit, the practice, especially on the New York Exchange, of delivering on contract a very low grade of nearly worthless cotton, the value of which was fixed by a committee of the exchange not at its real value as compared with middling, the basis of the contract, but a very much higher price than its real value.

It was the iniquities of the old contract which were sought to be corrected by the Smith-Lever bill, and they were corrected by it. All the cotton tenderable under the Smith-Lever bill was good, spinnable cotton. The lowest grade was good ordinary. But last year, to make assurance doubly sure, Congress amended the original Smith-Lever bill and removed good ordinary from the tenderable grades, so that now nothing can be delivered below the grade of low middling.

In defending his amendment the Senator from Alabama [Mr. COMER] is recorded in the RECORD of the 17th of this month as saying:

> The greatest objection the exchanges have to the amendment is that in a great measure it takes the "bear" out of the transaction. The exchanges want the low grades kept in the tender, not for the purpose of helping the low grades, not for the purpose of benefiting legitimate trading, but for the purpose of increasing the opportunity to "bear" the market. They know what is the reason. They know it. This is all they have used the low grades for the past year and all the years back, and they know it, and all this stuff about a spinner's contract as against the farmer's and dealer's contract is simply intended to retain an advantage in which the game can be played with marked cards, and they know it.
> They never like the game unless they can mark the cards. It is worse than a negro crap game where loaded dice are used.

Those are pretty strong words when applied to many of the high-grade men of the New Orleans Cotton Exchange. There are no better men in America than they, no more honorable, able, upright men. We have just selected one of them governor of the State of Louisiana after a great political contest, in which he was opposed by a very fine man. This gentleman has been for many years a big cotton factor in New Orleans—a leading cotton merchant, also a large cotton planter—perhaps the largest cotton commission merchant in the United States, for I believe his firm sells more cotton than any other. He made his campaign for election as governor mainly as a friend of the farmer and was elected on that program. I refer to Hon. John M. Parker, one of the strongest, truest, and best men in the South. You have all heard of him. He was elected governor of my State as the farmers' friend, and is himself a big cotton producer and merchant, who for some years was president of the cotton exchange.

It gives me pleasure to testify to Mr. Parker's high character in every particular as a man, a merchant, a cotton producer, a citizen of whom the State of Louisiana and the Nation ought to be proud. And there are many just as good in the New Orleans Cotton Exchange.

Mr. COMER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. RANSDELL. Certainly.

Mr. COMER. I believe the Senator said just now that on the New York Cotton Exchange several years ago a very bad, ugly game was played, in which they used punk cotton to depress the market.

Mr. RANSDELL. I have understood that to have been the case. I can not testify personally, but that charge was made on the floor of the Senate when we were discussing the Smith-Lever bill, and it was largely on the statements made at that time that we changed the former rule.

Mr. COMER. I will give the Senator a little further information on that point. Two years ago on the New York Cotton Exchange there was an operator who had sold 10,000 bales and had this low-grade cotton to threaten a tender, and reaped a harvest on New York exchange on that kind of a transaction. He then sent the cotton to New Orleans to deliver on a similar transaction. It had been understood for years that this low-grade cotton assembled in New York was used for that purpose, and it was also written in the Knox corporation report that in New York some of the exchange members who had the fixing of differences in the prices of the cotton to be tendered, the low grade and otherwise, had sold the market and made the differences out less than the commercial price and reaped a big harvest on that account.

I want to ask the Senator, if I may, if they were honorable, honest men? Were they good men? On that exchange you have the same men in New York that you have in New Orleans, and you have some of the very best merchants—you have Hubbard and Carpenter and McFadden, and all of those. The question is, Were they honorable men, too, or were they dishonorable men?

I just want to get what you are stating here. What I am charging is that a game was played and with marked cards or loaded dice.

Mr. RANSDELL. I know nothing whatsoever——

Mr. COMER. But you ought to know. You are charging this. You charge that it was wrong in New York and yet I charge the same thing in New Orleans.

Mr. RANSDELL. I demand proof of you or of anyone else, because in New Orleans——

Mr. COMER. I will give it to you.

Mr. RANSDELL. If you have their names, I should like to have them put in the RECORD.

Mr. COMER. I will do it. I will say that two years ago we bought some cotton in New Orleans——

Mr. RANSDELL. From whom?

Mr. COMER. I do not remember just this minute.

Mr. RANSDELL. I should like to have the details, the place, the circumstances.

Mr. COMER. You will get the facts.

Mr. RANSDELL. It is for the Senator to show them.

Mr. COMER. What I am stating is the fact. We had delivered to us 100 bales on contract, and in this delivery of 100 bales there were 16 different styles of low-grade cotton, impossible of almost any kind of use. I sent the statement to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]—I sent him the name and the list of the cotton—and also to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], and called attention to the outrageous dealings that were perpetrated on those exchanges by the men. I am not attacking their character. I am attacking their method of business, a method we are demanding should be changed, and it is right that it should be changed.

Mr. RANSDELL. Does not the Senator think that after making such a serious charge as that he ought to tell the Senate the firm that sent him that 100 bales of this very low cotton, this cotton which was not tenderable under the contract?

The Senator is a man of considerable wealth, or reputed to be, and is a man certainly of great intelligence. Why did he not prosecute the people for that? They certainly had no right to tender such cotton as that under the terms of the Smith-Lever Act, passed in 1914. The Senator said it was two years ago. Do not generalize. Particularize!

An ordinary criminal when charged with murder is entitled to be told the time, the place, the circumstances of the alleged crime; that he, John Brown, did on a certain day kill and murder Bill Jenks. Now, the Senator has made this charge against the New Orleans Cotton Exchange, and I demand of him to name the men who did it, and to say why he did not prosecute them.

Mr. COMER. May I interrupt the Senator there?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. RANSDELL. Yes; the Senator may interrupt me.

Mr. COMER. I did not prosecute, because the whole transaction was done within the law, the law which we are proposing right now to amend, and which should be changed; that is why I did not do so.

Mr. RANSDELL. How could that be done within the terms of the Smith-Lever law?

Mr. COMER. Because the law authorized the delivery of that kind of cotton.

Mr. RANSDELL. The Smith-Lever Act says——

Mr. COMER. The Smith-Lever Act authorized it, or it was so construed, at any rate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair wishes to remind Senators of Rule XIX of the Senate.

Mr. COMER. I thank the Chair very much, indeed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is impossible for the Reporter to report the debate.

Mr. RANSDELL. I should like to remind the Senator from Alabama that there is no reason why we should get excited. Under the terms of the Smith-Lever law—and I should like to read it and show the Senator what the Smith-Lever law provides—no other cotton than "good ordinary" can be delivered under the terms of the contract. That law was passed in 1914, and was reenacted——

Mr. COMER. If the Senator will allow me——

Mr. RANSDELL. If the Senator will pardon me, I will yield him the floor in a moment. The law was first passed in 1914, and was reenacted in the Agricultural appropriation bill of 1916. Here is what it says. I will let any Senator decide the matter for himself. The act after referring to the contract then provides:

> Fifth. Provide that cotton that, because of the presence of extraneous matter of any character or irregularities or defects is reduced in value below that of "good ordinary," or cotton that is below the grade of "good ordinary," or, if tinged, cotton that is below the grade of "low middling," or, if stained, cotton that is below the grade of "middling," the grades mentioned being of the official cotton standards of the United States—

And so on.

As I have stated, the Smith-Lever law was passed in 1914; and under the terms of that law one can not contract on any of the exchanges in this country for cotton below "good ordinary." I say, though I am not a spinner, on information received, that "good ordinary" is spinnable cotton. There are many grades of cotton below "good ordinary." The cotton to which reference has been made and which it is said was tendered on the New York market years ago was far below the grade of "good ordinary." I do not see how it was possible for the Senator from Alabama to have cotton tendered to him under the future contract provided for in the Smith-Lever law which was below "good ordinary."

Mr. COMER. May I interrupt the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. RANSDELL. I shall be very glad to have the Senator interrupt me.

Mr. COMER. If the Senator from Louisiana will excuse me, I will say that a majority of the mills do not use cotton below middling. That is why the grades middling and above are comparatively high now. There are middling, strict low middling, low middling, strict ordinary, and good ordinary. "Good ordinary" is pretty low down, and nine-tenths of the mills do not use "good ordinary."

In addition to that you have in low middling, not low middling white, but low middling yellows, low middling spotted, low middling tinged—three grades; you have strict low middling yellows, strict low middling spotted, and strict low middling tinged; you have in middling, middling tinged, middling yellows, middling spotted, middling stains, a grade of cotton through which runs a deep yellow color. Very few of the mills can use it. Then you have strict middling stains, and so on. With all of these grades I am perfectly familiar, and when I make a statement, Senators, it is right along the line of direct facts; I mean, I have been in contact or seen others in contact with the actual transaction. Under the Smith-Lever law, allowing the 21 grades, there are 5 grades of middling and above, and there are 16 low grades, you understand, and when you get those 16 grades together and conglomerate them, the man who delivers them, I do not care who he is, intended the cotton should not be used. Such a transaction as that is not business; such a transaction as that ought to be outlawed. The cotton people of the South demand of you that you give us a contract that will be honest to the buyer and to the seller, a business contract under which business men can use the cotton. That is what we ask. We are not attacking the character of the men who make such sales any more than the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] has attacked the character of the men who operate the corn exchanges, the grain exchanges, and the meat exchanges. We are not attacking their character at all; we are attacking the practice of the exchanges, as the methods are authorized and carried on in the exchanges. It is wrong that these practices should continue.

This is not a new idea; this is a continuation of a fight that has been going on for years; it is, I repeat, not a new thing, but is, in fact, old.

Mr. RANSDELL. May I ask the Senator if he will not kindly tell us what the 21 grades, to which he refers, are?

Mr. COMER. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANSDELL. As I read the law, there are only 10 grades provided for in the Smith-Lever Act, everything above and including "good ordinary."

Mr. COMER. The difficulty lies in the way the Bureau of Markets has construed the law; it was the Bureau of Markets that murdered it; and I told them so myself; I told them, "You have ruined the law, and it is all wrong."

Mr. RANSDELL. Then, does the Senator charge that the United States Bureau of Markets, as well as the New Orleans Cotton Exchange and the New York Cotton Exchange, have been guilty of gross misdoings in this matter?

Mr. COMER. Not only do I charge it, but I wrote them so. I had a correspondence with them two years ago and openly charged that the law was being administered for the use of the speculators and the gamblers. I openly made that charge, and they have it on their files.

Mr. RANSDELL. One question, please. The Senator has been talking considerably, and I have been very generous, I think, in yielding time to him.

Mr. COMER. I thank the Senator very much.

Mr. RANSDELL. I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that he has neglected to name the criminal. He states that he had this contract for 100 bales. Now, I ask him to name the criminal, the time, and the place.

Mr. COMER. We did most of our business during that year through Lowry & Co. They delivered the cotton according to the law; they did not deliver it unlawfully; it was lawful cotton; but the law which permits such transactions we demand shall be changed.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President and Senators, the Senator from Alabama says that this transaction, affecting 100 bales of cotton, was so utterly vicious and bad——

Mr. COMER. It was vicious and bad.

Mr. RANSDELL. That he actually wrote to the Senator from Georgia about it. It surely must have made sufficient impression upon him to remember the firm which swindled him so badly on this hundred bales of cotton.

Mr. COMER. Let us get that back——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. RANSDELL. I yield.

Mr. COMER. I ask to be excused for my impetuosity, perhaps; I am not accustomed to debate here; it is all new to me.

Mr. RANSDELL. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. COMER. I never said I was swindled.

Mr. RANSDELL. I understood the Senator in that way.

Mr. COMER. I did not intimate that I was swindled; I said the whole transaction was within the law; but that the law which allowed such infamous transactions ought to be repealed, for it is wrong. That is what I said.

Mr. RANSDELL. Did not the Senator intimate——

Mr. COMER. I did not intimate anything at all.

Mr. RANSDELL. Well, let me ask the Senator, then, did he not indicate to the Senate that in this transaction, in connection with 100 bales of cotton on the New Orleans Exchange, he had been very badly treated?

Mr. COMER. No, sir.

Mr. RANSDELL. Very well; if the Senator retracts what he has just stated——

Mr. COMER. I do not retract.

Mr. RANSDELL. Then I will go ahead.

Mr. COMER. I said I had been treated badly by the law; that is what I said.

Now, if the Senator will permit me to make the matter a little bit wider. At the same time we took a hundred bales of cotton in New York through Carpenter & Co. we took up a hundred bales through Hubbard Bros., nice men, good men, but each one of those hundred bales had 12 different styles of low-grade cotton which was tendered for the purpose of preventing its use. We kept that cotton in New York for three months, with instructions to them to sell it, but they could not get a buyer, and after keeping it there for three months and being unable to sell it, or to make a price on it, we sold it back to the exchange, and delivered it. Now, what kind of a transaction is that?

Mr. RANSDELL. I am not attempting to prove that all exchanges and the members thereof are white-robed angels; I am simply trying to show that, in a general way, the transactions of the exchanges are legitimate; and I believe that Senators in the main will agree that they are.

Mr. COMER. Excuse me, please——

Mr. RANSDELL. There may be some rascally transactions conducted there, just as there are in every business of life.

Mr. COMER. I never said "rascally"; I said within the law they perpetrated a transaction that was not business; that is what I said.

Mr. RANSDELL. Let me ask the Senator if within the law these exchanges did something the result of which was to deprive a man of his property, would not that be rascally? It looks to me like it would; I can not look at it in any other way.

Mr. President, in consequence of this attack on the cotton exchanges, it may be well for the Members of the Senate to know what the report of the Committee on Agriculture on the Smith-Lever bill, Sixty-third Congress, second session (H. Rept. 765), says of the functions and economic uses of the cotton exchanges. This is a congressional document issued recently; listen to it, Senators:

> It is the opinion of the committee that the abolition of the cotton exchanges would result inevitably in the monopolizing of the entire cotton crop into the hands of a very few powerful interests, with the force and means to fix the price at which the farmer would be compelled to sell his cotton. Fully 75 per cent of American produced cotton leaves the hands of the producer during the four months of September, October, November, and December. It takes no stretch of the imagination to foresee how utterly helpless the farmer, as a class, would be in his present disorganized condition as a factor in fixing the price of his own products, as against the organized genius and money of the spinners and powerful spot-cotton dealers.

Let me repeat those words:

> As against the organized genius and money of the spinners and powerful spot-cotton dealers.

Mr. COMER. Mr. President——

Mr. RANSDELL. I decline to yield for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana declines to yield.

Mr. RANSDELL. Let me finish this thought, and then I will gladly yield.

Any legislation, therefore, which eliminates from the cotton trade the element of legitimate speculation and legitimate speculators, must, in the opinion of the committee, result disastrously to the producers.

That is not what a cotton man said; it is what the committee of the United States Congress reported, namely, that the elimination of these exchanges would result disastrously to the cotton producers. But to continue—especially at that season of the year when the bulk of the crop is moving from him into the channels of commerce. Cotton exchanges properly regulated in their operations, in that they afford opportunities for legitimate speculation, may be made to be of real benefit to farmers, merchants, and spinners. The legitimate speculator, operating through the exchanges, is the only buffer standing between the helpless producer and the powerful buyer of his product.

I now yield for a question. I would remind the Senator that I am willing to yield for a question, but not for a speech.

Mr. COMER. I would like to ask the Senator a question. Does he think the stabilizing of the value of cotton on the exchange, and the proper functioning of the exchange in representing the true value of cotton, would tend to destroy it? The exchanges, as the Senator knows, are supposed to be an index of prices, and are not supposed to be anything else. Does not the Senator think that the law of supply and demand governs the price of cotton everywhere?

I believe in the exchanges. I believe, when they are functioning right, that they are first-class propositions. All on earth that these measures are trying to do is to have the exchanges do just what they purport to do, and that is to render a true index of the value of cotton, which, as the Senator knows, they have not done for a long time.

Mr. RANSDELL. I can not admit the last statement at all. I believe they have functioned satisfactorily, certainly since the passage of the Smith-Lever Act.

Mr. COMER. Can I convince the Senator?

Mr. RANSDELL. No; I want to try to answer the Senator's question. The Senator has asked me, as I understood the question, if the price of cotton is not regulated solely by the law of supply and demand, or certainly very largely. There is no dispute between us on that proposition. Supply and demand is the great regulator of all prices; but, Mr. President and Senators, cotton is a commodity that is handled throughout the entire year. It is gathered by the producer in two or three fall months, and it should be marketed very gradually for the next 12 months, until the cotton comes in again. Ordinarily the farmer is not a man of large means. The producer, the farmer, should have some kind of stabilizing influence or agency—some kind of insurance, if you please. I may say to the Senator from Alabama that I should be a very unhappy man if I could not insure my property, my ginhouse, barns, dwellings, store property, and so forth. I find it necessary to insure every dollar's worth of property that I have, and so does every prudent business man. Now, the spirit of the exchange, I say—there may be some people in it who violate that spirit, but the proper spirit back of the exchange—is to create an insurance agency, a vehicle of stabilizing, by means of insurance, the transactions in cotton. That is exactly what it does; and in that connection I wish to read at this time a very interesting letter from a gentleman who was referred to yesterday by the Senator from Alabama in rather derogatory terms.

He read a letter from Mr. Helgason, of Vicksburg, in which Mr. W. B. Thompson, of New Orleans, was spoken of as a man who, in connection with "that New Orleans bunch," would "not hesitate at anything to perpetuate gambling in cotton in its worst form," and so forth. I wish to say that I have known Mr. Thompson for many years and enjoy the honor and pleasure of his friendship. There is not in the city of Washington at this moment a more intellectual man than W. B. Thompson. I have never heard even a reflection against his character for probity and fair dealing in every way. He is a big cotton commission merchant and sells cotton for the producers. He has been for years a large cotton producer himself. I do not know that he is to-day, but until three years ago he owned three plantations in my home parish—East Carroll, La.—and I know that there is hardly to be found anywhere a better or a more intellectual man than Mr. Thompson.

If you will listen to this letter you will find that he is a man of a high ability. It is a letter addressed on the 9th of this month to Mr. J. C. Wannamaker, president of the American Cotton Association, St. Matthews, S. C., and signed by Mr. Thompson in his capacity as chairman of the Louisiana division of the American Cotton Association.

I will state that Mr. Thompson has taken the greatest interest in building up this association of cotton producers in Louisiana; not spinners, but men who produce the cotton from the ground by the sweat of their brow. I have the honor myself of being one of its charter members in Louisiana, and I can not stand quietly by and see letters put in the RECORD assailing—and I do not believe it was the intention of the Senator from Alabama to assail—the character of that excellent man; but that was the purport of the letter which the Senator inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. COMER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. RANSDELL. I will yield when I finish this letter.

The letter to Mr. Wannamaker reads:

[American Cotton Association, Louisiana division. Membership campaign headquarters, 806 Perdido Street, New Orleans, La. Phone Maine 6836.]

APRIL 2, 1920.

Mr. J. S. WANNAMAKER,
President American Cotton Association,
St. Matthews, S. C.

DEAR MR. WANNAMAKER: I am in receipt of your wire of the 29th instant, as follows:

"Comer amendment offered without our knowledge. Please write fully your judgment of disadvantage to same. Many strong friends in favor amendment, stating will improve value of contract, preventing depression of prices; that producer will have extra inducement for improving production and harvesting. Especially anxious to have your judgment on account profound regard for same."

That was the telegram Mr. Wannamaker sent to Mr. Thompson, and here is his reply:

In times past I have made a rather close study of the future contract and I have long since come to the conclusion that its chief and, indeed, its only value lies in the protection it affords buyers and sellers of cotton and manufacturers of cotton goods. When the future contract market functions normally, the owner of cotton, pending such time as he can market the same, or, if he be a farmer, before he has made the same, can insure himself against loss by selling a future contract hedge; the cotton buyer can make forward contracts with the spinner before he has any cotton in hand and protect himself against loss by buying a future contract hedge; and the manufacturer may make forward contracts for the sale of his product before he has cotton in hand or a specific grade contract with spot merchant or broker and insure himself against loss by buying a future contract hedge.

Senators, this is somewhat academic, but it is a most difficult and intricate subject, so I trust you will be patient while I read this letter:

It is this hedge or price insurance function of the future contract which makes it valuable to the trade. It was never intended nor will it ever be possible to make the future contracts for cotton bought and sold around the rings of the exchanges take the place of direct dealings for specific grades and staples between the manufacturer and the spot merchant.

I may interlard here that the Smith-Lever bill contains definite provision for specific contracts set out in full in paragraph 10. One can make a contract for future delivery under the terms of that bill, but it is a specific contract, not a future contract. To proceed:

These contracts, which provide the protection aforesaid to those who do not want to speculate, are supplied primarily by those who want to speculate and whose business it is to speculate. These latter are the underwriters, who assume the risk. From this postulate it is obvious, therefore, that the form of the contract or the character and extent of the obligation to which the speculative seller or buyer is called upon to commit himself becomes the determining factor in the existence of a future-contract market. If the contract is too narrow, or if it contains conditions which place the seller at a disadvantage, then there will always be more buyers than sellers, and in consequence the contract will go to an artificial premium, and if these disadvantages are exaggerated the price of contracts, irrespective of the value of cotton, will go through the roof, and you will no longer have any contract market, because nobody will be willing to take the short side of the contract. If, on the other hand, the contract be too broad and the advantages all lie with the seller, buyers will be driven from the market, and the whole system of future trading will be destroyed.

In order, therefore, that supply of contracts may be forthcoming and a future-contract market possible, it is necessary that the authorized contract shall be one to which both the speculative buyer and seller will be willing to commit himself. It must be a basis contract, because no speculative seller of future contracts would commit himself to an obligation to deliver a specific grade which it might be impossible to obtain, and the range of deliverable grades should be sufficiently wide to give him a reasonable assurance that he could secure the cotton necessary to liquidate his contract should he be called upon to do so. On the other hand, the buyer must have assurance that he will not be called upon to take delivery of unmarketable cotton or of any cotton at artificial price differences.

I indulge in this somewhat prolonged academic discussion in order that you may understand the reason for my opposition to the Comer amendment.

I am very much in favor of the future-contract market properly regulated. In fact it is my opinion that it would be a great calamity to the producer if the future markets were destroyed or impaired.

Mr. Thompson agrees in that particular with the committees of Congress in their recent report, to which I have already alluded.

He continues:

I am opposed to the Comer amendment because, in my opinion, it so narrows the contract that its effect would be to drive out sellers, which would have the effect of running up the prices of the contract to abnormal premiums, which in turn would eventually destroy the future contract as a trade agency for hedging purposes. If this were the case, there would then be no reason for the existence of a future-contract market and it would not be tolerated.

It is true that under the present grade limitations the future contract has been ruling at a discount under the spots, but this discount is not, in my opinion, due to the grade limits. Low-middling white cotton, the lowest grade deliverable, is in spinning value a very good grade of cotton. It does not by any means belong in the category of those worthless grades which have been in times past used under the fixed difference system of the New York Exchange prior to the Smith-Lever law for the purpose of manipulation. It is true that low middling is not and has not been in active demand, but if all grades are to be eliminated from contract deliveries because they temporarily are not in demand, regardless of spinning value, then we would have a most unstable and erratic contract, which would be of no use whatsoever to the cotton trade.

The reason for the discount of contracts under spots is primarily because the speculative element which looks for deflation and lower prices is in the majority. You will recall that these discounts are larger as the maturity of the contracts is extended and grow less as approach is made to the current month. As a matter of fact, it is the history of the future-contract movement that the current-month contracts run up to a parity, or approximately so, and, in the recent New York March case, to a premium. This proves conclusively that the contract as it now stands is a perfectly good contract and the future discounts are not the results of any vice in the contract, but rather of the psychology of the speculative trade in respect to future developments.

I am just as much opposed to broadening the contract as I am to narrowing it. We must remember that these are abnormal times in all lines of business and that we can not expect the future contracts to function as in normal times. It is as much a mistake to try to rectify abnormal conditions by meddling with the future contract as it is to try to restore a fever patient by doctoring the thermometer which registers his temperature.

The present contract is not sufficiently wide to admit of delivery of grades intrinsically valueless, nor is it so narrow as to deter any reasonable trader from selling under its terms of delivery. It is a good contract, and if we meddle with it we might, and probably would, bring consequences of which the meddlers do not dream.

Of course, the spinners desire a narrower contract. Those who do not use anything lower than strict middling cotton would favor even a strict middling contract, but they do not seem to understand that the future contracts entered into around the ring can not possibly take the place of direct contracts for specific grades and staples made between themselves and spot merchants. The function of a future contract is to supply protection and not specific performance. It is an insurance policy. The insured under a fire policy receives remuneration for his loss, not the rebuilding of just such a house as his fancy might dictate. If the men who want insurance should pass a law which would require the underwriters to furnish a particular kind of house in accord with the wishes of the insured, the result would be that he would deprive himself of all insurance, because the underwriters would not write such a policy.

Of course, you and I and the producers want a high price for cotton, but if we drive the short sellers out of the market we will advance the price of contracts without increasing the amount realized by the producer, and we will destroy a trade system which is and has been of the greatest value in the problem of marketing cotton.

I think therefore that we should let the contract stand as it is to-day and defer the consideration of any experiments until the trade situation shall have been adjusted to a nearer approach to the normal. In the meantime we should try to reduce the patient's temperature by direct application rather than by monkeying with the thermometer.

With all good wishes,

Sincerely, yours,

W. B. THOMPSON,
Chairman Louisiana Division.

Mr. COMER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCCORMICK in the chair). Does the Senator yield?

Mr. RANSDELL. I yield to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. COMER] for a question.

Mr. COMER. The Senator has just read a letter from Col. Thompson. He is a member of the cotton exchange, is he not?

Mr. RANSDELL. Yes.

Mr. COMER. An ex-president of it?

Mr. RANSDELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. COMER. Fully imbued, of course, with all the cotton exchange ideas.

Mr. RANSDELL. Perhaps so, but a friend of the farmers nevertheless; and above all an honest, patriotic man.

To the casual reader or layman the Comer amendment would appear as an equitable contract to both buyer and seller alike, that is, a 50-50 proposition, but when carefully analyzed it will be noted that the buyer has the right to demand delivery of one-half of the contract from the grades of middling fair, strict good middling, good middling, strict middling, and middling, that is, five grades, whereas the seller has the option of delivering the other half of said contract from the grades of low middling and strict low middling, which are the only grades which he can deliver below middling of the so-called low grades.

Mr. COMER. Mr. President——

Mr. RANSDELL. I will yield to the Senator as soon as I make this statement.

Mr. COMER. Excuse me.

Mr. RANSDELL. But besides the five grades of middling and above from which the seller is compelled to deliver, he may in addition tender good middling tinged, strict middling tinged, and good middling yellow stained. However, the additional grades, with the exception of good middling yellow stained, always command a handsome premium over middling cotton and are generally known in the cotton trade as good grade cotton. The seller in the fulfillment of his option is entitled to use only two of the grades below middling. Therefore it can readily be seen that only 20 per cent of the grades deliverable are those below middling, and not 50 per cent of the grades below middling, as would be indicated by the casual reading of the amendment. As an illustration, the average grade of the 1918–19 crop was below middling, and it is generally conceded by the trade that the 1919–20 crop, which records will be available by August 1, 1920, is lower than the preceding crop.

I now yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. COMER. I just wanted to state that in the deliverable lower grades strict middling tinges are of no better value, possibly, than strict low middling white. A tinged cotton and a stained cotton are not very desirable in the manufacture of goods, and the five lower grades, except the one, good middling tinged, are not desirable cotton, and there are four of them out of which they have been delivering all these years, and I will state to the Senator that practically all exchange deliveries have been made out of those four grades—low middling, strict low middling, strict middling tinged, and good middling. Mills call for these three grades: Low middling, strict low middling, and strict middling tinged. Whenever you get colored cotton it is not good for spinning.

Mr. RANSDELL. I do not know what effect color has on the spinning value, but I would not place my judgment against that of the Senator, who has had such large experience as a manufacturer. People who are experts in the matter, and in whom I have implicit confidence, assure me that these tinges are really more valuable than middling, and sell higher; but I may possibly have been misinformed.

Mr. COMER. The Senator has been misinformed. A strict middling tinge is no more valuable than the strict low white. The price on the market this season has not been as good. I will just add this, that the four grades I mentioned are grades deliverable under all contracts, and it has been generally understood these were the grades that would be tendered, as the tender is of the lower grades.

Mr. RANSDELL. I repeat that all I know about the matter is what I have been told by the president and two other very prominent members of the New Orleans Cotton Exchange, namely, that these other grades are above middling. That is a difference of opinion, however, and again, Mr. President, fortifies my argument that full hearings ought to be held on this bill. There is such a great dispute as to facts, so much difference of opinion among the doctors. When all the doctors agree, they may put the patient to death without very much criticism by anybody; but if the doctors disagree seriously and the patient dies somebody is going to be criticized sharply; and I am afraid they are going to kill this patient on account of the wide diversity of opinion among themselves, unless the matter can be delayed and discussed very fully. I am sure the urbane and kindly chairman of the Committee on Agriculture will permit this matter to be postponed for an impartial hearing.

He always wants both sides to be fully heard, and he never makes up his mind until he hears both sides.

Owing to the shortage of labor it is likely that future crops for several years will be low grades, as it will be impossible to gather the crop before weather conditions lower the grades, and as only 20 per cent of the deliverable grades are below middling, it will be impossible to get sufficient good grades to warrant the selling of contracts as a price insurance or hedge, and trading will soon become so restricted, particularly during the spring and summer months, when all of the good grades have generally gone into consumption, that the contract will cease to function.

Senators, I beg of you to remember that the legitimate and proper function of this contract is as a hedge, so called, or an insurance, as the ordinary man would understand it. Price insurance will be destroyed and a chaotic condition will exist for the producer, merchant, and cotton banker. As a result the market will be at the mercy of the spinner.

Owing to the large number of low grades grown the Comer amendment is not sufficiently comprehensive and does not allow a sufficient percentage of the low grades specified in the contract to be delivered. It is, therefore, of little use to the producer and I fear it will have a tendency to greatly reduce in price those grades below middling. To the merchant who uses the Comer contract to protect his forward sales of actual cotton this contract has little value as a hedge or price insurance, for unless he can dispose of the low grades he may have received on the contract he will be unable to use the future market as a hedge or price insurance, for the cotton remaining in his hands is undeliverable without the required 50 per cent of middling and above.

As I have tried to indicate, where is he going to get that 50 per cent? There is so much low grade, how are you going to find 50 per cent of middling and above?

If the Comer amendment is passed and put into immediate effect the trade will be completely demoralized, as all forward sales up to and including December have been made and hedged upon an entirely different basis of price insurance.

All merchants' stocks have also been hedged on an entirely different basis of price insurance. The result of this confusion would be to greatly depress values of actual cotton to the detriment of the producer, merchant, and cotton banker, and to the great benefit of the spinner.

Another effect of the passage of the Comer amendment will be to greatly increase the expense to the producer of marketing his cotton, as the interior or country buyer who at present buys direct from the producer on his farm or on the country square of the small interior market would not buy any qualities below middling white, unless he had an order for that specific quality, for he could get no price insurance on the grades below middling white or tinges above middling allowed in the contract without carrying bale for bale of the grades of middling and above required by the Comer amendment.

Mr. COMER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. RANSDELL. I will yield in a moment.

The economic evolution in the cotton trade has been enabling the farmer to carry, finance, and sell his cotton at home to the interior buyer. Under the Comer amendment the interior buyer is seriously handicapped so the producer will be compelled to consign his cotton to the commission merchant far from home, and must assume the many charges incident thereto in order to lighten the burden of financing. He is deprived of selling his cotton at home which is more remunerative.

I now yield to the Senator.

Mr. COMER. Who makes that statement?

Mr. RANSDELL. I make that statement.

Mr. COMER. Yourself?

Mr. RANSDELL. Yes. That is my understanding. I gather it from my investigation of the subject.

Mr. COMER. I desire to know if that was spoken by an experienced person, an experienced cotton man, or an inexperienced one. The reason I ask the question was because it is contrary to every fact in the case.

Mr. RANSDELL. I will answer the Senator by stating that these facts are given to me by members of the New Orleans Cotton Exchange.

Mr. COMER. I thought so.

Mr. RANSDELL. I am not a member of that exchange; I am not a cotton merchant; I am not a cotton spinner; I am simply an humble farmer, who produces cotton, and I sell it the best I can.

But, while I am talking about the exchange, I want to say, Mr. President, that it seems to me, as it has always seemed, that the cotton merchants in New Orleans who sell my cotton—for I am obliged to sell through them very largely—on commission usually of 2½ per cent of its value have the same interest to get a good price for it that I have. The cotton exchange of New Orleans is very largely made up of the cotton merchants of New Orleans—I understand fully 50 per cent cotton merchants. I know W. B. Thompson and John M. Parker, the two gentlemen to whom I have already alluded and of whom I shall speak again, are big cotton merchants. These men are interested in getting as high a price as possible for cotton. It stands to reason that if cotton brings 20 cents a pound, or $100 per bale, 2½ per cent thereon amounts to $2.50 per bale. If cotton brings 40 cents per pound, or $200 per bale, 2½ per cent thereon nets $5 per bale.

So these cotton merchants are interested in a big price for the product of the producer. But is the same true of the spinner? Is the spinner interested in paying an enormous price for cotton? It is perfectly natural—and I would pursue the same course if I were a spinner—for him to buy it as cheaply as he can, and certainly prudent business men who are spinners want cotton as cheap as possible. The grower, the producer, of cotton wants to get a good price, and the man who uses the staple wishes to buy it at a low price; the producer on the one hand versus the spinner on the other. The cotton merchant, the intermediary, the man who is paid a commission on his sale, certainly is very much interested in getting a good price for the farmer's cotton, and even if the merchants be the unscrupulous men that some gentlemen would make believe, even if the dealers on the exchange be such vicious persons, I would rather trust my little cotton crop to their tender mercies than to the tender mercies of the men who are going to spin it and sell it as woven goods.

In connection with the same matter I wish to say that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. COMER] has alluded frequently to the great cotton convention recently held in his State at the capital city of Montgomery. That convention passed a unanimous resolution that while they did not pretend to try to fix the price of cotton, nor did they attempt to say how much acreage should be planted in cotton this year, nature having done that—in addition to the shortage of labor—but they did say that the spinners could well afford to pay at least 60 cents a pound for cotton when we consider the unprecedented price received for their manufactured articles.

Mr. COMER. Mr. President——

Mr. RANSDELL. I yield for a question.

Mr. COMER. The only question I wish to suggest to the Senator is that he has confounded commission merchant and the exchange. You sell your cotton through the commission merchant?

Mr. RANSDELL. I do.

Mr. COMER. That is spot cotton. Exchange cotton is a different thing entirely. There is no relation between the cotton merchant and the exchange at all—one selling spot cotton, and the exchange merchant is selling or buying contract cotton. There is no relation at all.

Mr. RANSDELL. I think there is a very close relation. I have known them in New Orleans for a great many years, and I never knew a commission merchant there who was not a member of the exchange and very closely connected with it. I have just read what one large merchant, Mr. W. B. Thompson, who is also a member of the exchange, has said.

I yield further for a question only.

Mr. COMER. The exchange transaction and the commission merchant transaction are two different things.

Mr. RANSDELL. Why adopt the Comer amendment, with its many dangerous features, when the country to-day is getting the highest price for cotton since the Civil War, and the producer, merchant, banker, and spinner are all reaping the benefits? Further, it was only on March 4, 1919, that the present contract was adopted and has not been in force one complete crop year. It has functioned normally and has contributed to continue the splendid trade conditions referred to above. It was amended for the purpose of creating a closer relationship between future contracts and spot cotton, and in this respect it has been eminently successful. I wish to call attention to the values of the current month since March, 1919, as recorded in the New Orleans contract market, and its comparative value to the quotation of middling cotton in the New Orleans spot market.

Mr. President, I will not attempt to read the entire table showing that middling cotton in May, July, October, December, 1919, and January and March, 1920, were practically the same as the contract cotton for the same months, a difference of perhaps 1 cent; but I ask that it be printed in full.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, permission is granted.

The tabulation is as follows:

Date.	Middling spot quotation.	Current contract month.
	Cents.
May 26, 1919	32.00	May, 33.40 cents.
July 14, 1919	34.25	July, 35.50 cents.
Oct. 22, 1919	36.88	October, 37.52 cents.
Dec. —, 1919	40.00	December, 40.85 cents.
Jan. 22, 1920	39.75	January, 40.30 cents.
Mar. 18, 1920	41.00	March, 40.10 cents.

Mr. RANSDELL. This tabulation is not intended to convey the idea that the relationship between spots and futures exists every day during the option of the months traded in, but does conclusively show that at some time during the life of the option the close relationship between spots and futures actually exists.

The amendment of March 4, 1919, from the foregoing facts appears to have established the extreme relationship between contracts and spot quotations, and any effort to further restrict the percentage of grades tenderable would create a fictitious value for contracts; and while the Comer amendment would put up the price of future contracts, they would be of no value to the trade any more than the price of a specialty like sea-island cotton, which is a very small percentage of the crop grown, reflects the price obtainable for the great bulk of the cotton crop.

Discounts between near months and distant positions in the cotton market have existed for some time. I may mention that at times during preceding seasons even when cotton was as low as 9 cents per pound comparative discounts existed. The explanation of this fact is purely psychological. At all times a great many consumers have no confidence in prices; therefore, to induce them to buy to fulfill their commitments for a future date one must discount the price. The illustration above given of the close relation existing at times during the current month between spots and futures proves that those who have sold discounts have paid the penalty. This has been the rule rather than the exception since 1914, the price of cotton continually advancing from below 6 cents per pound to over 42 cents per pound for middling cotton.

Dealing in cotton is not an exact science, nor is the hedge afforded by the contract market a complete protection, but it is as good a price insurance as any insurance company would underwrite for fire or other risks. Further, the Smith-Lever bill as amended March 4, 1919, under section 10, permits the trading in specific grade contracts, and if any buyer can find a seller who will sell him such a contract upon the exchanges he is permitted to conclude such a contract.

Mr. President, I ask permission to print section 10 as a part of my remarks without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

SEC. 10. That no tax shall be levied under this act on any contract of sale mentioned in section 3 hereof if the contract comply with each of the following conditions:

First. Conform to the rules and regulations made pursuant to this act.

Second. Specify the grade, type, sample, or description of the cotton involved in the contract, the price per pound at which such cotton is contracted to be bought or sold, the date of the purchase or sale, and the time when shipment or delivery of such cotton is to be made.

Third. Provide that cotton of or within the grade or of the type, or according to the sample or description specified in the contract shall be delivered thereunder, and that no cotton which does not conform to the type, sample, or description, or which is not of or within the grade specified in the contract shall be tendered or delivered thereunder.

Fourth. Provide that the delivery of cotton under the contract shall not be affected by means of "set-off" or "ring" settlement, but only by the actual transfer of the specified cotton mentioned in the contract.

The provisions of the first, third, and fourth subdivisions of this section shall be deemed fully incorporated into any such contract if there be written or printed thereon, or on the document or memorandum evidencing the same, at or prior to the time the same is entered into, the words "Subject to United States cotton futures act, section 10."

This act shall not be construed to impose a tax on any sale of spot cotton.

This section shall not be construed to apply to any contract of sale made in compliance with section 5 of this act.

Mr. RANSDELL. This contract you will perceive is infinitely stronger than that provided in the Comer amendment, but it was never intended and has never been used as a price insurance but to permit the trading in specific grades of cotton under the rules of the exchanges and the rules and regulations promulgated by the Bureau of Markets.

Specific contracts permitted under section 10 are traded in largely between producers, merchants, and spinners, but have never been used as price insurance because no seller will undertake the restrictions of such a contract, and consequently no one can buy them across the pit.

In the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 17, Sixty-sixth Congress, second session, Senator COMER, in discussing his bill, is quoted as follows, pages 5769 and 5770:

The exchanges have not sold a bale of middling cotton in years. They do not intend to sell that kind of cotton. There has not been any middling or above delivered to the exchanges for years. I say notwithstanding this, through the demand of the spinners for that class of cotton, the high grades are much higher relatively than the low grades, which do pass through the exchanges.

The low grades pass through the exchange, and they themselves say it is too low, too comparatively low. The high grades do not pass through the exchanges at all. The price is made by the demand, just like all other prices on all commodities are made.

Of course not; the Cotton Exchange of New Orleans does not buy, sell, or deal in cotton at all. It is an institution through whose medium and rules and regulations, under the supervision of the United States Department of Agriculture, trading in cotton is facilitated. I presume that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. COMER] refers to transactions made on the exchange between members in receiving and delivering cotton on future contracts under section 5.

May I ask the Senator from Alabama if that is not what he meant? Of course, the Senator did not mean the exchange itself dealt in cotton; he meant contracts between members of the exchange.

Mr. COMER. I also meant what I said in that speech, that in tenderable cotton while the five upper grades were tenderable, it was not used for tender; that the lower grades were used. For instance, we got 200 bales this week, and I dare say there was not a single grade of middling and above.

Mr. RANSDELL. Does the Senator mean the lower grades were not certificated?

Mr. COMER. Oh, yes; they are certificated, but the basis middling is so much lower than the price of middling that they deliver the lower cotton and let the higher cotton go by the boards.

Mr. RANSDELL. I am glad to have the Senator's definition. In order to prove the inaccuracy of the Senator's statement, I submit the figures obtained from the Bureau of Markets of cotton classified and certificated from March, 1919, to December 1, 1919, on the New Orleans Cotton Exchange:

	Bales.
Middling fair	3
Strict good middling	399
Good middling	3,226
Strict middling	6,071
Middling	5,866
Good middling, tinged	232
Strict middling, tinged	121
Good middling, yellow stained	2
	15,920
Strict low middling	3,442
Low middling	1,382
Grand total	20,744

Therefore, it will be seen that out of 20,744 bales, 15,920 bales of middling and above and 4,824 bales below middling have been certificated by the Bureau of Markets in New Orleans since the adoption of the Smith-Lever bill, as amended March 4, for the period above mentioned. This should dispel any idea that this exchange is used simply for the purpose of tendering undesirable low grades to depress the value of the balance of the cotton grown.

I may mention that the Liverpool cotton market has adopted and is now trading in the same contract as that traded upon in the American exchanges to-day under the Smith-Lever bill, as amended March 4, 1919, and there is no assurance that Liverpool would change their contract, assuming that Senator COMER's proposed amendment should become a law. I refer to Liverpool because over 50 per cent of our crop is exported and is settled for through the rules of the Liverpool Cotton Association. Surely a large bulk of this business which has been put through for next fall and winter should at least enjoy the advantages of being finally liquidated without having the price insurance on which the business was originally based entirely changed.

Several large organizations have expressed their opinions on the Comer amendment. The board of directors of the American Cotton Association, in convention at Montgomery, Ala., during the week beginning April 11, instant, passed the following resolution:

Board of directors recommends this matter be referred to new committee on legislation enactment with instructions that said committee shall make a full investigation of the matter and make recommendations to executive committee. The executive committee shall instruct said legislative committee in the premises after a full hearing has been given all parties in interest—

I hope the Senators will listen to this. The board of directors of the great American Cotton Association advise that a "full hearing" be given all parties in interest—on the merits of the proposed legislation, due and proper notice of which hearing shall be given before action is taken by executive committee.

Mr. COMER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HENDERSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Louisiana yield?

Mr. RANSDELL. Let me complete this statement, and then I shall yield.

Mr. COMER. Very well.

Mr. RANSDELL. Notwithstanding this wise policy suggested by the board of directors, the convention itself on its last day, with only a small percentage of the attendance present, passed a resolution by a vote of 16 to 15 indorsing the Comer amendment. The closeness of this vote indicates the great differences of opinion existing over this important question.

I wish now to read an extract from a letter to me from Mr. T. J. Appleyard, jr., of New Orleans, campaign director of the Louisiana division, American Cotton Association, dated the 22d instant. I do not know Mr. Appleyard very well; I have met him several times, and he is a very agreeable gentleman. I do not think he is a citizen of Louisiana unless he has recently become so; but he is certainly a very bright, intelligent man. He states:

While the vote—

On the Comer amendment—

was not a representative one in that the attendance at the convention during the last day was simply a matter of about 50 men, and while the amendment was favored by the convention, so far as the vote by States was concerned, yet I can not feel that it in any wise represents an expression of the actual membership of the organization for this reason, that in totaling the number of members that each State is now supposed to have on its roster, by the vote of Arkansas, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, and South Carolina, 31,445 members expressed themselves as against the amendment, whereas Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Oklahoma, and Tennessee, voting in favor of the amendment, only expressed the opinion of 2,545 members of the association. Perhaps this may be interesting information for you.

Then I have a very brief extract from a statement made to me by Mr. W. M. Steele, of New Orleans, a former newspaper man of very high grade, who attended that convention as publicity manager or director of the Louisiana division of the cotton association. Here is what he says about that vote of 16 to 15. The Louisiana division, Senators, is a very large one. Here is what Steele says about the way the vote was obtained:

Questions arose as to the apportionment of the vote of the States, and no one seemed to have the correct or official apportionment. Finally the vote was taken on the basis of an undisputed apportionment in a vote of the day before, and resulted in the adoption of the indorsement by a vote of 16 to 15, as follows:

For amendment: Alabama, 3; Florida, 1; Georgia, 5; Oklahoma, 4; Tennessee, 3; total, 16.

Against: Arkansas, 3; Louisiana, 3; North Carolina, 3; Mississippi 2; South Carolina, 4; total, 15.

According to the statement of Mr. Appleyard, the overwhelming majority of the members of the cotton association, represented at the convention, so far as the State rosters go, was against the amendment. It was carried by a majority of one. How was that majority secured? By allowing Tennessee 3 votes and giving to Mississippi only 2 votes. Everybody knows that Mississippi raises a great deal more cotton than Tennessee. That was an unfair apportionment. However, be that as it may, Mr. President and Senators, that vote of 16 to 15 indicates that, among the producers of cotton in the greatest cotton convention ever held in America—I had the pleasure of attending its sessions for three days, and I have never seen a better gathering of cotton growers, from practically every State in the South—at that convention there was a majority of only one favoring the amendment; and the directors of the association at that great convention, passed by a practically unanimous vote—so far as I am informed—a resolution suggesting that the whole matter be referred to the future, and that both sides be given a chance to be heard. So it can not be said that the association went on record as favoring the Comer amendment.

I now yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. COMER. I should like to ask if Mr. Thompson was not there and most active in the arrangement, direction, and management of the convention?

Mr. RANSDELL. Yes, Mr. Thompson was there, and he was very active indeed. Mr. Thompson is always found where there is being discussed any matter affecting cotton interests. When anything tending to promote the upbuilding of American cotton, production on the farm, and the interests of the farmer is under consideration, Mr. Thompson is there with his wise head and eloquent voice speaking for the American cotton farmer. I have heard him time and again.

Mr. COMER. And for the cotton exchange?

Mr. RANSDELL. Possibly he speaks for the cotton exchange; it would be strange if he should not, for he used to be president of the exchange; he is now one of its prominent members, and that exchange is one of the big institutions of the greatest city in the South. No man, however, can intimate or indicate that W. B. Thompson is not as honorable, high-toned a man and as strongly inclined to do right as any other citizen of America. I hope the Senator from Alabama does not mean to intimate to the contrary.

Mr. COMER. He had a great deal to do with that convention; that is the very thing I am talking about.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GAY in the chair). Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. RANSDELL. I yield to the Senator from Alabama for a question.

Mr. COMER. I have here a letter from ex-Senator Frank S. White, who was a Member of this body, and one of the finest men of whom I know. He is running for election to the Senate to succeed the late Senator Bankhead, and I trust he will be elected, because I do not know of a better man. I will ask the Senator from Louisiana if he will allow me to read the letter now?

Mr. RANSDELL. I do not wish to yield my time for the reading of a long letter. When the Senator replies to me, if he cares to do so, he can read the letter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana yielded to the Senator from Alabama for a question.

Mr. RANSDELL. I decline to yield my time for the reading of a long letter.

Mr. COMER. It is a short letter, and simply tells that Mr. Thompson and the exchange crowd with him took hold of that convention and ran it to the best of their ability. I should like to have the letter read.

Mr. RANSDELL. The Senator can put it in the RECORD in his own time. I shall have no objection to his doing so; but I will say that I was at the convention, and Mr. Thompson was there and took a very active part; but I can not conceive of anyone intimating that any man, no matter how able, could run that magnificent aggregation of the bone and brawn and intellect of American cotton farmers. I myself would not dare to make any such intimation, and I can hardly believe that the ex-Senator from Alabama, Mr. White, whom I held in very high esteem when we were brother Members of this body, has done so. The Senator, however, can put the letter in the RECORD in his own time. I must proceed.

Mr. COMER. I will be glad to put the letter in the RECORD.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I wish also to read an extract from a resolution passed by the Mississippi Valley Association, in convention at St. Louis on the 20th instant, just a few days ago. The resolution was adopted unanimously at a big convention composed of delegates from 28 States, the entire Mississippi Valley being represented. This is the resolution:

In view of the vital importance to the cotton producers and other cotton interests of the Mississippi Valley and that of the Nation, we respectfully request and urge that no final action be taken on the Comer amendment to the Agricultural appropriation bill without a full and public hearing.

Senators, can such a request as that be denied? What caused our Revolutionary ancestors to break away from Great Britain 145 years ago? What caused us to enter into the mighty struggle which gave freedom to this Republic but the refusal on the part of Great Britain to allow us any hearing whatsoever in the British Parliament, which taxed us without representation and without a hearing? The people of the Mississippi Valley ask for a hearing before Congress undertakes to repeal a most important law, a law which, to my personal knowledge, was considered for months and months before its enactment. We did not pass the Smith-Lever bill hastily. We considered it in the committees of the House and of the Senate; we considered it on the floor of each body for a long time. Members of the Agricultural Committee know the absolute truth of my statements. Now we are asked to repeal that important law by an amendment submitted on the floor of the Senate for the first time, when Senators like ELLISON SMITH, of South Carolina, whose name, in conjunction with Congressman Lever's, was given to the great piece of legislation which it is now proposed to repeal, was absent from the Chamber; when HOKE SMITH, of Georgia, was absent; and when I, too, was absent from my seat. I make no charge of any improper action on the part of the Senator from Alabama in bringing up the amendment at that time. He had a right to do so. It was perhaps our duty to have been here; but unfortunately we were called away. I am, however, simply stating the fact that we were not here, and this measure came up in our absence. It completely changes, I repeat, a most important piece of carefully considered legislation. It is not right, Senators, to put such a measure through without a hearing, and all we ask is that it be heard fully and fairly.

I am not a specialist on these matters; the proposed legislation may be good; but, so far as I have been able to study it, I do not think so. However, I may be wrong. I am in the position here of a lawmaker, willing to listen to all the arguments pro and con on this subject; willing to have a special committee, if necessary, appointed to study it. It affects vitally the greatest money crop on earth, the cotton crop of the South, which for years has given this country such a wonderful balance of trade; and it is most unwise, unbusinesslike, and unstatesmanlike to legislate on a measure of this magnitude without a full hearing of both sides.

Mr. President, I will now read a few lines from a letter of Hon. John M. Parker, recently elected governor of my State, to whom I have just referred. It is dated New Orleans, April 13, 1920, and is addressed to Hon. L. LAZARO, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C. It was published in full in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 19, page 5851, so I will merely read an extract from it:

DEAR DR. LAZARO: From what I understand of the Comer amendment, it provides that at least 50 per cent of any cotton tendered for delivery on contract in the New York or New Orleans markets shall be middling or above, the remainder to be of any other of the standard grades, at option of deliverer. This would tend to restrict the quality and character of cotton that is tenderable on contract and would naturally handicap the deliverer and benefit the receiver. The result would be a contract more favorable to the spinner and possibly less favorable to the producer. It would probably enhance the value of the contract as compared with the spot basis.

Any further restriction as to the kind of cotton that may be delivered on contract will naturally make that much less ready outlet for the producer.

Could anything be stronger from an honest conservative than that statement of Governor elect Parker? Furthermore, I am informed that at the Mississippi Valley convention in St. Louis on the 22d Mr. Parker delivered a strong speech and spoke in unequivocal language in opposition to the Comer amendment, insisting upon delay in regard to it.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. RANSDELL. I yield.

Mr. DIAL. My views on this amendment have already been expressed upon the floor of the Senate some time ago; but the Senator stated a while ago that he would as soon trust his interests to the cotton exchange as he would to the spinners of this country, the manufacturers, and I see occasional references in this letter of Mr. Parker's trying to create a prejudice against the mills.

I want to say to the Senator that I am interested in milling myself, not only in farming but also in manufacturing, and that I know of no higher class of men in the United States than the presidents of cotton mills in the South. I know pretty well when this industry was started; I remember the first modern mill that was ever built in South Carolina, and I do not claim to be very old. The mills have been built up by home people, home capital, a large amount of it being furnished by the farmers themselves, and they have conferred a great benefit on the producers in making a market for their cotton; so I resent any insinuation whatever that the manufacturers are in any way tricky or in any way unreliable.

I have no war to make on the exchanges, when conducted in a proper way, but the manufacturers of this country could not manipulate the market if they were disposed to do so. I do not deny that they want to make money, the same as the farmer, the same as the merchant, the same as the doctor or the lawyer or anybody else; but if they were disposed to try to take any undue advantage in buying cotton they could not do it. They have to compete with the world. The United States has to compete with England, and Liverpool, as the Senator knows, fixes the price of cotton. We compete with Japan and we compete with the whole world, and the manufacturers of the North are in the same position as those of the South.

In our country, in my State, where we now manufacture about the amount of cotton that we raise—I do not think this enterprise has grown to such a great extent in the Senator's State; they have, I believe, a mill or two in New Orleans—in my country it is a great industry. We have large stockholders. The stockholders get together and they want to build a mill to benefit their community and to make a market for their produce. It is not only for their cotton, but for their trucking and other interests, and no other industry in modern times has developed the country as manufacturing has developed the South. So his remarks, if he means any reflection whatever upon that kind of industry, are entirely out of place and uncalled-for and unjustifiable.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, the Senator from South Carolina can not point to a single word uttered by me in reflection on the spinners. I have not uttered one word in criticism of the spinners, and no one who heard what I have said could infer such a thing. I have said, and I repeat—and I have spinners in my State, though not as many as the Senator from South Carolina has—that the interest of the producer to get a good price for his product is one thing and the interest of the man who spins that cotton into cloth for sale is another thing. That is all I have said, and the Senator can put that in his pipe and smoke it, if he wishes. I have not intimated anything derogatory against the spinner, nor would I do so. I have tried to show that the cotton exchange is composed very largely of merchants who are interested in getting a good price for the cotton of the farmer, and believe I have shown to any fair mind that the spinner is interested in buying this cotton as cheaply as he can. I do not mean to reflect on anyone.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I have such a high regard for the Senator from Louisiana that I did not suppose he would intentionally reflect upon anyone; but the colloquy came about in his answer to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. COMER], in which he said that the Alabama Senator accused the cotton exchange of manipulation, and the Senator from Louisiana said that he would as soon trust his interests in the hands of the cotton exchange or the cotton broker as he would in the hands of the manufacturer.

Mr. RANSDELL. If the Senator considers it a reflection on the spinner to say that I would as soon trust these honorable men of my State as the honorable men of his State, I certainly have no excuse or apology to make for that remark. I stand by it, but I again say that I did not intend any reflection on the spinners.

Mr. DIAL. Very well. I am glad the Senator did not mean any reflection. I did not think he did.

Mr. RANSDELL. I certainly did not; but I again say that I would rather trust my individual cotton to the hands of the men who are interested to get just as much as they can for it, because they sell on commission, than to people who are buying it to manufacture.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana further yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. RANSDELL. I decline to yield further. Let the Senator speak in his own time.

Mr. President, the Senator from Alabama has read from a letter of a nice man in the State of Mississippi, whom I know and esteem. He is a friend of mine—Mr. Helgason. I think he is mistaken in the views he has on this bill, but we can not all agree. I have here, however, a letter from another very good man in Mississippi, Mr. A. B. Learned, of Natchez. Nobody in the State of Mississippi stands any higher than A. B. Learned. If the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] were here, or any of its Members of Congress, they would confirm what I say about him. He owns some property in Louisiana, but his home is in Mississippi. He is a big manufacturer of lumber, as well as a banker and cotton grower. He wrote me from the city of St. Louis on April 19, 1920. I do not know what cotton-exchange people may have influenced him to write this letter. Perhaps he was enticed to do so by some of those fellows from New Orleans who belong to the cotton exchange; but, at any rate, he wrote this letter:

HOTEL STATLER,
St. Louis, Mo., April 19, 1920.

Senator JOSEPH E. RANSDELL,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: I just had my attention called to the fact that Senator COMER has introduced an amendment to the Agricultural appropriation bill, and that it has gone to conference, which, if it becomes a law, will require that 50 per cent of cotton tendered on contracts must be of a grade of middling or above, and 50 per cent below middling.

As a cotton planter of your State—

I think this gentleman owns some plantation property over in Concordia Parish, and possibly some in Tensas Parish—

it strikes me that this would be extremely detrimental to the interests of the growers. To get the other side of the matter, I asked my friend, Mr. J. W. Sanders, who manages and practically owns the cotton mills at Meridian, Kosciusko, Yazoo City, and Natchez, what he thought of it. He replied that it would be strictly to the interests of the cotton mills manufacturers, but would be very detrimental to the grower. The differential between the price of middling and low middling is now about 8 cents, while the actual spinnable difference is only about 2 cents or 3 cents. Mr. Sanders confirms my opinion that the 8-cent differential would be very greatly increased if the Comer amendment became a law.

Your own experience the last few years has shown you that frequently the crop will not go as much as 50 per cent middling and above, and the last two years it has been much less than 50 per cent. Yet, under the Comer amendment, all in excess of 50 per cent would be outlawed.

I wish you would think this matter over seriously, and if possible see that the cotton-growing interests are given a full hearing before the amendment is allowed to become a law.

Sincerely yours,

A. B. LEARNED,
Natchez, Miss.

I now ask permission, without reading, to insert in the RECORD an able editorial on this subject, entitled "COMER praises his pet," which appeared in the Times-Picayune of New Orleans under date of the 27th instant.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the editorial will be printed.

The editorial is as follows:

[From the Times-Picayune, New Orleans, La., of Apr. 27, 1920.]

COMER PRAISES HIS PET.

Recently the Times-Picayune went to the defense of the cotton interests of the South in opposition to a measure, both fathered and mothered by United States Senator B. B. COMER of Alabama, designed to permit cotton spinners to skim the cream off of the cotton crop and leave the milk as a by-product in the farmers' hands, without a definite market and minus the protections now thrown around many hundreds of thousands of bales of merchantable, spinnable cotton. As we explained in our editorial, Senator COMER is a prominent, a millionaire, spinner, and the term "spinners' contract" was long ago accepted as a trade term in the cotton business meaning but one thing—a contract worded to place the whip handle in the mill man's hand wherewith to drive those who plow and plant and work and harvest the South's great crop.

We pointed out some reasons why the Alabama legislator was taking an astigmatic view of the South's interests, and in our position, we scarce need add, we are in accord with the great majority of the cotton growers of the South. Those who take Senator COMER'S view are very largely those near enough the cotton mill districts of the Appalachian slope to come under the influence of mill domination.

Our editorial evidently touched the quick, for the Senator arose in the Senate Chamber and went into an extended discussion of his proposed measure and "strafed" violently all who would not remain blind to the trap set by his reenforced "spinners' contract."

The Senator's argument, and a one-sided discussion by others from the mill sector, brought out no new facts, and by their involutions and deviations managed to avoid the real point of our criticism. In fact, we only wish we commanded editorial space to give the Senator's talk paragraph by paragraph in order to point out seriatim their faulty reasoning.

The germ of his defense, apparently, was that the exclusion from tenderability on contract of cottons grading below middling would tend to stabilize contracts by forcing spot cotton and futures into a closer unity of price. This, Senator COMER said, would make hedges safer and, as he saw it, would benefit all branches of the trade.

Now, if the latter fact is true, pray how would the planter benefit who, by the chances of season and fate, had produced a crop of cotton that would grade below low middling and middling? According to the "Comer rider," this cotton, in spite of the fact that Senator COMER'S own six cotton mills do spin such staple, would remain in the planter's hands until taken at their own price by buyers from the Avondale Mills or some others of their kind. We say "at their own price," because, having grown cotton grading below the tenderable limit, the planter would be unable to protect his holdings by hedges, and without such hedges could not borrow on his holdings and await a better market.

One of Senator COMER'S first statements was that his company had made use of 25,000 bales of hedges during the season. Presumably this was not done merely as a pastime but because such transactions had a value—as, indeed, they most certainly had—and yet by means of his "rider" the Senator is striving to take away from the trade at large the possibility of such hedges in transactions involving many hundreds of thousands of bales of cotton now protected under the Lever law.

In his effort to make a point the speaker returned to an outworn attack on the cotton exchanges, although his own statement as to the value of the hedge was enough in itself to disprove the old contention. Indeed, one has but to hark back to those distressful months at the beginning of the war, when the exchanges were closed, to recall in what an impasse the planters found themselves when there were no exchanges open to serve as a clearing house for cotton prices. We recall the "buy a bale" campaign, and the values that went almost to nothing at all because there existed no machinery to harmonize beliefs and melt them into that consensus that would determine price.

"It is buying and consumption," said Senator COMER, "that make the price. It is not the power of tendering it on the exchange."

In reply to that, and in its disproof, we have but to quote the statistics showing that the spread between good ordinary and middling cotton in 1918, when the former was still tenderable on contract, was 4½ cents a pound, whereas on April 8 of the present year that spread was 13½ cents. Such was the depressing effect of nontenderability. The figures are eloquent!

Mr. RANSDELL. I now have a letter from former Senator LeRoy Percy, of Greenville, Miss. It is a copy of a letter which was addressed by Senator Percy to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. COMER] on the 7th of this month. This copy was handed to me by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] at my request. I asked the Senator from Alabama if he would have any objection to my reading it in connection with my remarks, and he very kindly replied that he had no objection, although he said that the situation had changed in many particulars since this letter of Senator Percy was written, on the 7th of this month.

The letter is dated Greenville, Miss., April 7, 1920, and I call the attention of Senators who knew ex-Senator Percy to it, because he is one of the ablest men who ever sat in this body. He served here only a brief time, but he impressed his great intellectuality, independence of thought, and high character on everyone who met him.

Senator B. B. COMER,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter in regard to your amendment to the cotton-futures act and I appreciate your writing me in reference to the matter, and I have read with much interest the synopsis of your argument in favor of the amendment.

I am in thorough accord with you as to the purpose to be subserved by the cotton exchanges. They are intended to be a barometer of the market and the business usufruct of the futures market consists in its being a barometer of prices on the hedging of sales and purchases; and I further agree with you that there should be no modification in the sense of making looser the present contract. Our only point of difference is, I believe, that the present contract makes the exchange a better barometer of actual conditions than the contract with your proposed amendment.

The present contract makes the exchange a better barometer, says Senator Percy, than the proposed amendment.

The present contract is the result of some years of effort to secure the passage of legislation which would prevent cotton prices from reckless manipulation by gamblers.

Senators thought that we had accomplished that when we put through the Smith-Lever bill several years ago. We worked at it hard, as I have already stated, and we thought we had accomplished it. Senator Percy evidently thought the same. He proceeds:

The present contract is the result of some years of effort to secure the passage of legislation which would prevent cotton prices from reckless manipulation by gamblers, their chief weapon for depressing prices being their ability to tender on future contracts junk which nobody wanted. The fear of such tenders kept the price of futures below the price of spots, and the making of such tenders frequently stampede the market. Under the present contract, while a purchaser may not get the grade that he needs in his business, he either gets the grade which he needs or one which can be disposed of.

Under the present contract, if you do not take the grade you need in your business, you get one you can sell; you do not get junk, as they used to get before the Smith-Lever law was enacted.

Mr. COMER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCCORMICK in the chair). Does the Senator yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. RANSDELL. Just let me finish this sentence, and then I will yield.

Junk cotton can not be tendered on contracts, and yet the range given the seller in grades is sufficient to permit of his always being able to fill his contracts.

I yield now to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. COMER. The Senator said just now that only 20,000 bales had been put on the New Orleans Exchange, certificated by the Bureau of Markets.

Mr. RANSDELL. That is what the Bureau of Markets furnished me a statement of, 20,744 bales.

Mr. COMER. Say, 25,000?

Mr. RANSDELL. No; 20,744.

Mr. COMER. All right, say, 20,744. What I wish to bring out is that, of course, they have sold millions of bales, and they have had certificated only 20,744 bales. I am saying that to show you that the exchange does not propose to deliver any cotton. That is what I am after, and when I said very few bales had been delivered, practically none, that is what I meant. I meant comparatively none of the higher grade had been delivered. They have 20,744 certificated, but they have sold millions of bales, and they do not mention what they have done in New York. There are less than 10,000 bales of cotton there certificated, and yet there are millions sold, thus showing the absurdity of delivering cotton through the exchanges to the spinner or anyone else. I gave you permission to read the Percy letter, and I am glad you did, but will you read Mr. Welsh's letter also?

Mr. RANSDELL. I have not his letter.

Mr. COMER. I will give it to you.

Mr. RANSDELL. You can read it in your own time. I am going to yield the floor in a few moments, and then you can read anything you desire.

In reply to the Senator, I do not care to go into the explanation again. I have made it once, and I do not care to repeat it. But the Senator gave the impression very plainly, in the extract from his speech which I have quoted, that the New Orleans Cotton Exchange did not have anything to do with any but the low grades, nothing except middling and above, and I got from the Bureau of Markets the certification for the past year, since the amendment to the Smith-Lever law went into effect, and I read it. Now, I am going to let the Senator make his own explanation in his own time. I decline to yield further. I have certainly been very generous, and the Senator can go ahead in his own time.

Mr. COMER. I thank the Senator.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. Percy goes on to say:

Without accurate data on hand, I am inclined to question the statement that two-thirds of the cotton crop runs middling to good middling. My impression is that more than 50 per cent is below middling. That the present price of futures is below spots and the fact that the distant months are lower than the near months is not due to the ability to tender low-grade cotton on the contracts. This is shown by the fact that there is no low-grade cotton in New York; no tenderable cotton sufficient to depress prices.

The former normal conditions which made the distant months carry higher prices to represent the carrying charges on cotton do not exist, for the reason that the world is slow to concede—

Here is the sort of a statesman he is—that present prices are justified—

A great cotton convention in Alabama said that the manufacturers could afford to pay 60 cents for cotton. Mr. Percy says:

The world is slow to concede that present prices are justified, and the expectation is that there will be a break in the price of spot cotton which will be reflected in lower prices of contracts, and this expectation operates to make distant months have lower values, each month as it is reached, being forced up to the value of spot cotton, because each month the bears find that they have been disappointed in the price of spot cotton being lowered, and that no spot cotton can be bought to tender on the contracts.

I believe that the amendment to the present contract would make dealings fewer, and the frequency of transactions on the exchanges is beneficial to the producer simply as affording information as to prices and their fluctuation. Since the present contract has been made there has been no breaking of the market on tenders in any considerable amount of spot cotton. To make the contract harder to fill for the seller would lessen the number of transactions, and would in all probability make the contracts reflect a higher value than the average value of spot cotton that the trade has become accustomed to; furthermore, the trade has become accustomed to the present contract, and it is the same conract which is in use in Liverpool. I do not believe it would be made a better barometer in reflecting the prices of the actual cotton by the amendment.

This gentleman is certainly not one of those members of the cotton exchange referred to by the Senator. He was an ornament to the Senate some years ago. He is one of the best lawyers in the South, one of its largest cotton producers, one of the men who has the greatest quantity of spot cotton to sell, and he has been a very close student all his life of all the problems connected with cotton, for he lives in the city of Greenville, Miss., in the center of the finest cotton belt on earth. There is nothing comparable anywhere to the Delta lands of the Mississippi Valley. The city of Greenville is in the center of this rich section, and Leroy Percy has all of his life been connected in the most intimate way with cotton, as a producer, as a handler, as a lawyer representing cotton people, and he certainly knows whereof he speaks. He adds:

However, I do not believe that any grave disaster would result from the adoption of the amendment. It is simply a case that well enough had better be let alone. My own interest is as a cotton producer. I do not entertain the idea that there is anything sinister in the amendment or that it is designed to operate in favor of the spinners. It is a pleasure to find a law proposed by one who has made a careful study of the subject, as you have evidently done. The ends which we both desire are the same.

Cordially, yours, LEROY PERCY.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a question?

Mr. RANSDELL. In just one second I will yield. I wish to indorse most heartily the closing paragraph of this letter of Senator Percy. I know not whether the amendment is going to produce good. I certainly do not believe that the able and honorable Senator from Alabama had any sinister motive in offering it. I am certain that he did not. I am making no charge against the spinners. I am simply asking that this great question be studied with care, every opportunity being given to both sides to be heard before it is acted upon.

I now yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. MOSES. I understood the Senator a short time ago to state that at a convention of cotton growers held last week in Alabama it was set forth that the manufacturers could well afford to pay 60 cents a pound for their product.

Mr. RANSDELL. I said that they passed a resolution saying that in substance. They did not state cotton ought to bring 60 cents a pound, but that, considering the prices at which the manufactured products are being sold, the manufacturers could well afford to pay 60 cents a pound for raw cotton. That was said in that convention.

Mr. MOSES. In the course of the discussion which took place in that convention was there given any basis of cost of production of the finished textiles which led to that conclusion?

Mr. RANSDELL. I did not attend that meeting of the convention, and can not say whether there was or not. I know that a great many people were there from the big cotton manufacturing States of North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, and Mississippi, all of which manufacture a considerable amount of cotton. I met some of the manufacturers myself, but I was not present at the meeting where this resolution was passed, and I can not say what discussions were held in regard to it.

Mr. MOSES. Nor can the Senator state whether the manufacturers who were there offered any protest against this effort?

Mr. RANSDELL. I can not say that. All I know is that the resolution was passed.

Mr. MOSES. I merely wish to remark, Mr. President, that if that price were to obtain for cotton, I happen to know of a single manufacturing establishment in the State which I have the honor in part to represent where the raw material for a year's supply would be increased about $30,000,000, if such an increase should take place as the Senator has indicated.

Mr. RANSDELL. In conclusion I wish to state that the Smith-Lever bill as amended March 4, 1919, is the result of several years of careful study and consideration of the subject and that the cotton-future market and the cotton trade generally, including the producer and spinner, are enjoying a period of great prosperity.

I am opposed to the Comer amendment, for I maintain that it will have the opposite effect upon the producer than that which Senator COMER contends. If such a bill is enacted into law, the trading in price-insurance contracts will become so restricted as to ultimately destroy entirely the functions of cotton exchanges as useful and necessary bodies to the trade at large.

The Comer amendment should be given a general hearing of all interests in every branch of the cotton trade before the proper committees of Congress. If after such a hearing and due investigation it is found that it has the merits claimed for it by its author and adherents, it should be enacted into law. On the contrary, if it has no merit, and I contend that it has not, it should be discarded, certainly for the present.

NATIONAL BUDGET SYSTEM.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9783) to provide a national budget system and an independent audit of Government accounts, and for other purposes.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I thoroughly appreciate the great importance of trying to settle any disputed questions relating to cotton production and sale. It seems to me impossible, however, following the debate, and the colloquy which resulted from it, to settle it this afternoon; and inasmuch as the unfinished business before the Senate happens to be the consideration of the bill known as the budget bill, I thought perhaps it would not be entirely out of place to consume a few moments of the afternoon to discuss the question actually before the Senate.

Also, not to draw a parallel exactly but repeating my full appreciation of the importance of everything connected with cotton production and the cotton industry, I wish to modestly draw the attention of the Senate to a situation that I think must be obvious and self-evident, that there is no question, not excluding cotton, so important to the American people to-day as to make an honest endeavor, and it must be made by Congress, to lower the expense of maintaining and administering the Government.

I feel, Mr. President, that the adoption of a businesslike budget will have a direct effect upon all the difficult problems that are now facing Congress and which, to a great extent, are responsible for the unrest in the country. Upon the amount of expenditures on the part of the Government, of course, depends entirely the amount of taxes we must exact from the public. To-day the great spirit of unrest, while it can be traced of course to many causes, fundamentally, I believe, is based on this cause—a realization upon the part of all classes of people, rich and poor alike, that the Government is not administered economically and that the public is receiving but a small proportion in results for the amount of money they are paying the Government. I do not believe the American people would greatly complain of their taxes if they were not convinced by so many evidences that in actual results but a small percentage of the money expended benefits them or that we receive in even a small degree our money's worth.

The budget bill, as prepared by the special committee and generally outlined by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK] yesterday, is not a panacea for all the evils of extravagance of government, but it will do one thing, and the accomplishment of that one thing, in my judgment, is more important to-day in connection with all our responsibilities than perhaps the passage of any individual measure, to whatever subject it may relate, and that is the centralizing of responsibility.

My short experience in Washington causes me to believe that the greatest activity here is evading responsibility—I do not mean in the Houses of Congress, but in the various executive departments of the Government—what we call on the street "passing the buck." It is absolutely impossible for the Government ever to conduct its affairs on anything resembling a business plan or business principle unless we centralize responsibility and can call on some departmental official as being actually responsible for matters connected with his department.

In our investigations in preparing the budget bill or in some allied investigations, just as an illustration, we discovered that there were forty-odd departments, boards, bureaus, or commissions engaged in activities connected with public health. There were twenty-odd boards, departments, and commissions engaged in matters of commerce.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

Mr. EDGE. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CURTIS. May I ask the Senator to repeat the number they found engaged in public-health work?

Mr. EDGE. If I am correct in my recollection it was 47.

Mr. CURTIS. I may state that I asked the question of one of the representatives of the Health Department before the Committee on Appropriations, and he stated to that committee that there were 47 in the District of Columbia engaged in health-service work or work related to that subject.

Mr. EDGE. I appreciate the confirmation from the Senator from Kansas. Of course it is perfectly obvious that with such a condition existing proper results can not be obtained. As I recall, these 47 different bureaus, boards, commissions, or departments were under three or four different Cabinet portfolios absolutely unrelated to each other, naturally in no way concerned with each other's activities, overlapping in such manner that of course the result can be nothing but waste of public money, and, in addition to the waste of public money, and which is equally as important, gross inefficiency.

I believe, returning to the main point, that it will have a wonderful moral effect on the present state of mind of all the American people if we do adopt the budget plan of administering the Government, and through that action they recognize that their Congress is preparing to transform the Government of their country, their Government, into something resembling a business organization, with its consequent saving.

Taxes—again may I draw attention to that certainly self-evident fact—must represent expenditures. The Government can not make money. The Government's function is to spend money. Whenever the Government attempts to make money, as evidenced by our railroad experiment, we lose money. Therefore there is no way ever to cut down the present range of taxation unless it is by reducing the expenditures through the Congress in Washington.

In defense of this body it is not in a position to systematically or scientifically reduce expenditures until the demands are brought to Congress after and with a careful, businesslike review, that every successful business organization must have if the business is to be successful.

The system under the bill is perfectly simple. To sum it all up in a few words, it provides, in effect, that when boards, bureaus, departments, and commissions apply for appropriations through the heads of their departments they are assembled in the Treasury Department, selected for the purpose of a general consideration of the demands. There they are taken in hand by a department of the budget, which department should be equipped, of course, with a staff prepared to give carefwl consideration to the requests and the demands of all the activities of the Government. A certain time is given for that consideration.

For the first time, so far as I know, in the history of the Government, one board with one head is enabled to put down on the table the entire business of the United States and is able to say where it is overlapping and is able to determine where its responsibilities could be brought together and properly consolidated. Then the Secretary of the Treasury, with that information all in detail carefully prepared, showing the business of the Government altogether, is permitted under the bill to make changes, to make reductions, to make consolidations, or to otherwise change the general budget as it appears to him it justifies.

It then goes to the President. The President, the head of the Government, of course it is assumed, has been giving some care and attention to the preliminary making up of the budget, so that when it actually reaches him as the head of the business he discusses it with his Cabinet officers, the Secretary of the Treasury particularly. He has his own ideas of the policy of the Government, or he should have, with the result that he also has the power to prune these estimates, to suggest actual changes, to recommend consolidations, and to generally assemble the business of the Government for the second time, and then he transmits it to Congress.

In no way is Congress curtailed in its opportunity or power to change the budget. Personally I think that is a mistake, but I am not going to discuss that because that is probably going a little too far. I would not adopt exactly the English system, or the British system, where Parliament can make, only under certain conditions, changes, but I would to some extent adopt it, and ultimately this Government, in my judgment, will adopt it. But for the present we are going perhaps far enough to have the benefit of a careful investigation of all requests made by the budget bureau, supervised by the head of the budget, revised by the Secretary of the Treasury, again considered by the President of the United States, and then sent to Congress.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] presented an amendment to the bill yesterday which I think, if constitutional—I sincerely hope it is—will be helpful to Congress, providing that the Bureau of Efficiency, I think it is called, shall be more directly under the control, or at least at the call, of Congress than it is under present conditions, so that when we receive this budget we can call in the Efficiency Bureau and ask to have further investigations made of certain items or certain departments of which we are not entirely satisfied as it appears to us. Then Congress, of course, can exercise its function, as it always has.

I think the Appropriation Committees in Congress could be reduced, but that can come in the future, especially if we have this scientific budget actually presented to us in this form.

Mr. President, I would have preferred what is generally termed an Executive budget. My idea may not be entirely practical for a large unit like the Government of the United States or a great country such as ours, but I believe absolutely, as I said at the outset, in centering responsibility. I would like to see the President of the United States not alone carrying out those responsibilities which we all know, of course, under the Constitution he must assume, but I would like to see him the actual head of the great big business of the United States. There is no greater business on earth than the business of government, and there is no business on earth that has greater opportunity to help all classes of business in the country than has the Government business of the country.

We are only confined within the limits of the Constitution, and that is a fairly liberal document. I would like to see the President of the United States realize, through such legislation, that he was the head of this big business, and that when he presented a budget he presented with it his ideas of the policy for the coming year, which would be administered by his separate departments, the seven or eight portfolios represented by his Cabinet officers, and that Congress would have that complete scheme brought before them, and would, I believe, as a result, to some extent at least, enter into the enthusiasm and possibilities of conducting the Government from that angle. Congress would be giving up none of its prerogatives, but would be working more in harmony with the spirit of this progressive age.

But we are getting nearer it under this bill. We are placing the responsibility solely first with the Secretary of the Treasury, and I do not think it is a bad plan as a starter, because I appreciate that the Government of the country is a very, very large affair, with many ramifications and responsibilities.

So, Mr. President, I do hope that the Senate will expeditiously consider and pass the bill, and that the conferees of the two Houses, the House already having passed a bill, will, without unnecessary or needless delay, agree on a conference report, and that there will radiate out to the country a realization of the fact that Congress has met the demand of many years; that Congress is establishing what you might now call a real policy in the conduct and administration of its business, that must attract and receive the approval of all classes of citizens and members of every political party.

I think the moral effect of the passage of the bill for the establishment of a budget system will be wonderful, especially in view of the feeling that now prevails throughout the country of waste and extravagance. The mere fact that under it the people will recognize that taxes must be ultimately reduced through the curtailment of expenses by wiping out, I hope, many useless activities and consolidating others, will in itself have an effect which must be a great satisfaction to the country in these days when there is so much unrest.

Only a few years before the recent war, as we well remember, a Congress was referred to in the newspapers throughout the land as a "billion-dollar Congress." To-day we face in this Congress requests for appropriations amounting to over $5,000,000,000. We are cutting expenditures down as best we can with the meager information under which we have to operate—and the paucity of the information is absolutely indefensible—but we can not cut down taxes or talk about cutting down taxes until we cut down expenditures permanently. And we can not cut down expenditures materially until we install a common-sense business management in this great Government of the people of the United States.

I am confident the final adoption of this proposed act in both Houses of Congress will have an effect on the country generally and instill a confidence that will be of great, enduring, and lasting benefit.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I think this is a time for congratulation. The question of the establishment of a national budget has been agitated for a great many years. The necessities for it have been apparent to everyone who has given any study to the question. It now appears as though we are going to establish a budget system; it seems that the pending bill is going to pass the Senate practically without opposition. I repeat, I think this is a time for congratulation, and I feel glad that I have had an opportunity, in an humble way, to serve upon the committee which has presented the bill. The bill itself has been discussed at great length by our able chairman, the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK], and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] has just made an excellent presentation of some of the features of the bill and the necessities for it; so at this late hour I do not believe that I should take up the time of the Senate by any general discussion.

I believe, however, that the country would like to know just what the material features of the bill are, and I do not know of any better way of getting that information before the country in a concise form than by having printed in the RECORD a portion of the report of the committee which reported the bill. It is not long, but it sets forth the contents of the bill and analyzes the purpose of each particular section. I therefore ask unanimous consent that there may be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks that portion of the report of the committee down to where the comparative tables are stated on page 10.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KENDRICK in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Report to accompany H. R. 9783.

The Special Committee on the National Budget, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9783) to provide a national budget system and an independent audit of Government accounts, and for other purposes, which passed the House October 21, 1919, having considered the same, report favorably thereon with the recommendation that the bill do pass with an amendment.

The committee feel that it is unnecessary to present in this report facts or arguments in favor of a national budget system for the Federal Government. The need for budgetary reform is obvious and we are wholly in sympathy with the general purpose sought to be accomplished by the House bill. The problem for the committee has been one of method—of how best to adopt the budget idea to our existing practices in financial administration.

The committee has heard the opinions of persons familiar with the problem of budget legislation and has carefully studied the several aspects of budget making. While agreeing with the general theory of the House bill, fixing upon the President the ultimate responsibility for the preparation and submission of the annual budget, the committee deemed it advisable to redraft that portion of the bill which deals with the preparation of estimates and to revise in great part the other portion which provides for an accounting and audit office independent of the Treasury. The provisions of the House bill are written in rather more general terms than those recommended by the committee of the Senate. The bill as revised by the Senate committee is carefully related to existing law, a considerable portion of the bill being actual reenactment, with such revision as was obviously necessary.

THE BUDGET BUREAU.

The House bill provides that the budget bureau shall be placed in the office of the President of the United States and immediately under his personal direction. This must be upon the assumption that the President himself would prepare the budget, with the assistance of the director of the budget bureau and his staff, who would serve as the President's agents in gathering the necessary facts. The President himself would be required frequently to make decisions upon various questions arising in the several departments of the Government.

The committee has recommended (sec. 3) that the budget bureau be placed in the Treasury Department instead of in the President's office for reasons which to the committee seem conclusive. The committee believe that the President, who is the most heavily burdened Executive in the world, would not be able to give the personal attention necessary to the proper oversight of the budget bureau without slighting the conduct of the general business of the country abroad and at home. If, under these circumstances, a large measure of responsibility were assumed by the director of the budget bureau, there would arise certain very obvious difficulties. The director of the budget would not be a member of the Cabinet, in conference with which the President would formulate his budget policy. As a subordinate officer he would be called upon from time to time to set his judgment against that of a member of the Cabinet. He could maintain that judgment against the judgment of the heads of the several departments only by constant appeals to the President. If the President were to maintain the opinion of the director of the budget against that of the head of the department upon any serious issue, the resignation of the member of the Cabinet would naturally follow. In short, a budget bureau in the office of the President would be an anomaly in the Government.

The committee believe that if the budget bureau were in the Treasury Department the greater number of differences between the Treasury and the other departments regarding the estimates of expenditure would be adjusted without appeal to the President. It is the practice of other Governments, as it was formerly the practice of the Government of the United States, to vest in the treasury or finance department the responsibility for the collection of revenues and for the preparation of estimates of expenditure. The Secretary of the Treasury, under the bill, would resume the powers and responsibilities exercised by Alexander Hamilton and his immediate successors, the responsibilities exercised by the corresponding officer in other Governments, and would survey the whole field of revenue and expenditure. He would be present in Cabinet meeting during the formulation of the budget plans of the administration, and present at the successive meetings when the plans might be modified to meet any exigencies which might arise. The great burden of taxation now imposed, and the great burden of taxation likely to be laid on the people, even though great economies may be achieved in the next ensuing years, require a more constant and intimate correlation of expenditure to income than has been necessary during the last generation.

The committee at first believed that it would be wise to provide in the bill that the Treasury should be divested of certain duties not germane to its primary functions, and planned to transfer the Bureau of Public Health, the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, the General Supply Committee, and the Office of the Supervising Architect from the Treasury to the Interior Department. But in view of the probability of general legislation looking to the reorganization and better coordination of the executive departments it was decided that it would be inadvisable at this time to anticipate such general reorganization by removing these bureaus and services from the Treasury. The committee calls the attention of the Senate to the fact that the bill provides for a restoration, rather than a new grant, of authority to the Treasury. Under the act of September 2, 1789, establishing the Treasury Department, the Secretary had the powers and duties regarding the estimates of expenditures and revenue now proposed to be restored to him. This act was confirmed by the act of May 10, 1800, which appears to have been recognized by the act of August 26, 1842, which established the fiscal year of the Treasury, as well as by the act of January 7, 1846, which provided for the printing of the annual estimates. Indeed, it appears that this grant of authority was never directly repealed, although the exercise of the authority was gradually relinquished and its continued exercise, therefore, was not provided for in the revision of the statutes of 1874.

Other variations from the House bill may be noted as follows:

1. There is provided instead of the director and an assistant director of the budget bureau, a commissioner, and two assistant commissioners, who shall be appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, and who shall hold office for a term of six years. All other employees of the bureau are placed under the civil-service rules. (Sec. 3.)

2. There is provided in each of the departments and establishments of the Government "a general financial secretary," who shall have supervision over the formulation and the preparation of the budget estimates for his respective department or establishment. This is to insure careful scrutiny and coordination of effort in arriving at the financial needs of the spending departments. (Sec. 5.)

3. The head of each department and establishment is further required to study, analyze, and revise his budget estimates before they are finally submitted to the commissioner of the budget. This is in order to fix the responsibility upon the department heads for the financial demands which they propose to make upon the Treasury. (Sec. 6.)

4. On or before October 1 each year the head of each department and establishment is required to submit to the commissioner of the budget "his final revised budget estimates for the ensuing fiscal year." (Sec. 6.)

5. The head of the departments are further required, when their budget estimates are in excess of existing appropriations, or when they are entirely new, to set forth in detail, by means of a note, the reasons why such increase or new item is requested. (Sec. 9.)

6. It is made the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to prescribe a uniform system of rules and regulations regarding the form and the method of the preparation and submission of budget estimates. (Sec. 10.)

7. The commissioner of the budget takes over the functions of the Division of Bookkeeping and Warrants in so far as they relate to the estimates. (Sec. 11.)

8. On or before November 1 of each year the commissioner of the budget is required to report the results of his investigations regarding the organization activities and methods of business of the various services of the Government in the interest of securing economy and efficiency to the Secretary of the Treasury. He is also required on that date to submit to the Secretary of the Treasury the budget estimates which have been submitted to him. (Sec. 12.)

9. It is made the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to "revise, consolidate, unify, coordinate, reduce, or otherwise to change any item or items of the budget estimates submitted to him" in the interest of economy and to prevent waste, extravagance, loss, or duplication. (Sec. 13.)

10. On or before November 20 each year the Secretary of the Treasury is required to submit to the President the budget estimates in the form of a national budget. The bill prescribes the general form and content of this budget. This is done to insure the submission to Congress of a real budget setting forth the condition of the Treasury, both as to expenditure, revenue, and public debt; past, present, and recommended appropriations; comparative tables and such other financial data as may seem advisable. (Sec. 15.)

11. The President is given explicit authority to change the form or the contents of the budget in any respect as he may deem proper. The purpose of this provision is more completely to fix upon the President the responsibility for the budget recommendations. (Sec. 17.)

12. The President is required, on or before December 10, to submit the budget to Congress. (Sec. 18.)

13. The Secretary of the Treasury is required to prepare a codification of the laws relating to the expenditures of the Government. (Sec. 20.)

It is the general purpose of the bill to fix upon the President and his administration the legal and political responsibility for the sum and the detail of the estimates of expenditure proposed to Congress, and to fix no less clearly upon Congress responsibility for the appropriations authorized.

The bill, if it become law, in no sense will impair either the authority or the responsibility of Congress. It presumes that the President, in conference with his Cabinet, will adopt a fiscal policy conformable to his general program; it presumes that there will be laid before the Cabinet the estimates of the revenues for the ensuing fiscal year, as well as preliminary and tentative estimates for expenditure by the several departments. The President, in conference with his Cabinet, must determine the sum of the budget—the total of expenditure to be proposed to Congress—as well as the sums proposed to be expended by the several executive departments of the Government. This will require at the same time decision whether recommendation shall be made to Congress to continue the existing sum of taxation, to reduce, or to increase it.

Doubtless no preliminary estimate of revenue and expenditure will be absolutely accurate. As time elapses during the preparation of the budget the allotments proposed for the several departments and their subdivisions will be subject to modification. It is here that the Secretary of the Treasury, the commissioner of the budget, and his staff will render their most useful service, in association with the heads of departments and the "general financial secretary" or departmental budget officer provided in the bill.

A BUDGET POLICY.

As the President and Cabinet in conference will necessarily determine not only the general budgetary policy of the administration but the sums to be allotted to the several departments or establishments, so will the head of each department or establishment, through his "financial secretary," begin the preparation of the estimates for the department or establishment. The budget bureau, through its representative, will bring to the several departments, their bureau chiefs and "financial secretaries," the experience and practice of all the other departments, drawing attention to duplications or multiplications of work, to economies achieved or achievable, and to examples of administrative efficiency or inefficiency. It should be manifest that the budget bureau is not concerned with policy, but with its fulfillment; with the collection and correlation of information for the benefit of the departments.

The bureau, through its continuing contact with the various departments, will be in a position to criticize extravagance and to bring information and pressure to bear in the interest of economy. It will be within the province of the commissioner of the budget to call to the attention of the Secretary of the Treasury any waste, extravagance, or duplication of work which he discovered in order that the Secretary of the Treasury may call his colleagues' attention to the subject, and, if necessary, exercise the authority to revise and eliminate items which is conferred upon him by the bill.

THE SUBMISSION OF ESTIMATES.

On or before October 1 each year the heads of the departments will submit their budget estimates to the commissioner of the budget according to the rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury. The commissioner of the budget, with his staff, having been in contact with the spending departments throughout the entire year, will be already familiar with the budget estimates, many of which will have been under discussion from time to time. The estimates will to this extent be in the nature of summaries of decisions arrived at by conference between the budget bureau and the bureau chiefs and between the heads of departments and the Secretary of the Treasury. The bill provides for this interplay of human contact and the exercise of common sense in arriving at an economical and businesslike program of expenditure.

Between October 1 and November 20 the commissioner of the budget, with his assistants, working under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, will carefully go over all of the estimates and work them up into proper budgetary form, making such revisions and changes as necessary. During this time further conferences with the spending departments will be necessary. By November 20 the budget will have reached that stage where it has been approved not only by the Secretary of the Treasury but also by his colleagues in the Cabinet, ready for the consideration of the President.

On or before November 20 the Secretary of the Treasury is required to submit to the President this budget according to the form and method provided in the bill. The President is given explicit authority to make any revisions, modifications, or changes as he may see fit. From this date it becomes the President's budget in fact as well as in theory. On or before December 10 the President is required to submit the budget to Congress.

THE PRESIDENT'S RECOMMENDATIONS OF THE BUDGET.

Congress will thus have before it the recommendations of the President in the form of a national budget, setting forth the financial needs of the Government in a clearly understandable form, with such additional facts and figures as may be necessary to throw light upon past and prospective transactions. The estimates, instead of coming to Congress uncompared, unrelated, and unrevised, representing the personal views and aspirations of bureau chiefs, will be laid before Congress in the form of a proposed business program of government, already revised and coordinated in the interest of economy and efficiency and the reduction of taxation.

This bill does not in any way abridge the authority of Congress over appropriations. Congress will be at liberty, as now, to revise or increase the budget estimates or add new items to them. What attitude Congress takes on this question is not a matter of legislation but of rule. It is within the sole province of each House of Congress to decide whether it will modify the existing rules and committees established for the consideration of appropriation bills.

THE GENERAL ACCOUNTING OFFICE.

The committee is in entire harmony with the principle given expression in the House bill that an independent audit is an essental part of any budget program; and provision has been made accordingly in the committee bill.

The House bill proposes to transfer to an independent accounting department the duties and functions as well as the personnel of the offices of the Comptroller of the Treasury and the six auditors of the Treasury Department. The same provision appears in the committee bill. This independent accounting establishment, however, is designated in the committee bill as the general accounting office instead of the accounting department as in the House bill. This change is made in view of the special significance which attaches in Government terminology to the word "department."

Although the committee is in agreement with the proposal contained in the House bill to transfer the so-called accounting officers of the Treasury to an independent establishment, it feels strongly that such a change will only partially satisfy the deficiencies now existing in the audit of public accounts. The House proposals merely bring together under one head, independent of the executive departments, a number of powers now exercised by separate offices in the Treasury Department. It seems to the committee that it is no less important to extend the authority of the accounting officers than to concentrate powers which already exist.

Such a concentration of powers and authority is, of course, very desirable and should be effected; but it is questionable whether this step alone would result in any considerable improvement, since it would affect only that portion of the accounting work of the Government which is involved in the audit and settlement of accounts of fiscal officers and claims against the United States.

THE ACCOUNTING ESTABLISHMENT OF THE GOVERNMENT.

Generally, speaking, the financial and accounting establishment of the United States Government includes: (a) The collecting, disbursing, and depositary agencies attached to the various executive branches; (b) the bookkeeping divisions of bureaus and offices, which are designed to maintain adequate records of the appropriations and funds of the respective bureaus and offices for administrative purposes as well as to facilitate the preparation of estimates and reports to Congress; (c) the reviewing organizations established within the departments to insure administrative supervision of the financial transactions of subordinate officers; and (d) the accounting and recording offices of the Treasury whose function it is to settle all accounts of fiscal officers and claims against the various departments, and to maintain complete summary records of appropriations and funds, of revenues and expenditures, of the public debt, and of balances of fiscal officers.

THE HOUSE BILL.

The House bill affects only the offices last mentioned; that is, the accounting offices of the Treasury, including the office of the Comptroller of the Treasury, the Auditor for the War Department, the Auditor for the Navy Department, the Auditor for the Interior Department, the Auditor for the Treasury Department, the Auditor for the Post Office Department, and the Auditor for the State and Other Departments.

It has been repeatedly pointed out that the principal defects of the Government accounting system result from the absence of unified control and from the diffusion of accounting authority and responsibility among numerous officials each of whom has effectually exclusive jurisdiction in his own field. Any satisfactory system of Government accounting should have as its underlying principle the investment of final and exclusive authority and responsibility over all accounting and auditing operations in a single official; and this principle should be applied to the furthest extent consistent with the exercise of an undivided control over strictly administrative matters by the heads of departments and establishments.

LACK OF UNIFORM ACCOUNTING.

The Government has become notorious for lack of uniformity in its accounting methods. Administrative accounting procedures in the departments are, practically speaking, left to the ingenuity of individual employees, and as a result each bureau and office now keeps its books in accordance with its own peculiar ideas. Federal disbursing and collecting officers in the District of Columbia and throughout the United States are largely permitted to keep their local records to suit their own tastes and notions of system and procedure. Such small uniformity as may be found in these offices has been brought about by regulations emanating from the heads of the several departments and establishments. Only in the manner and form of accounting to the auditors of the Treasury is there a semblance of accounting uniformity and regularity.

The law requires that the accounts of fiscal officers and claims against the United States shall receive two separate and independent audits—one by the department or establishment concerned, spoken of as the administrative examination; the other by the accounting officers of the Treasury, usually alluded to as the Treasury examination.

With respect to the administrative examination it would be fair to say that as many systems and plans of auditing the accounts of disbursing and collecting officers and claims against the United States are in vogue to-day as there are separate agencies of government. In some cases the administrative examination is a complete and full examination; in some cases it is woefully inadequate; and in other cases it exists in name only.

The conduct of the Treasury examination is divided along departmental lines among six auditors, each one of whom has exclusive jurisdiction in the audit and settlement of the accounts which are required to be submitted to him. Although nominally the six auditors are under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, they have the responsibility for the settlement of accounts. The control exercised by the Secretary is purely administrative. Each auditor is left to develop his own methods of examining and settling the public accounts. The Comptroller of the Treasury bears an appellate relationship to the six auditors. He reviews, on appeal, settlements made by them in the first instance, and modifies and revises such settlements in his discretion. He renders advance decisions at the request of disbursing officers and heads of departments and establishments on the applicability of appropriations to specific purposes and on other matters relating to the expenditure of public funds.

WANT OF COORDINATION.

Since the auditing and accounting functions are scattered among seven offices, there is little coordination of effort among the Treasury accounting officers. The House bill would correct this particular defect. But this is probably the least important of the defects of the present arrangement.

If new provisions are to be made for the accounting establishment of the United States at this or any other time, they should accomplish a concentration of authority over all Federal accounting activities. They should confer upon a single official the power to prescribe and to supervise departmental methods of bookkeeping and of examining claims and accounts of fiscal officers. They should require this official to keep the Government's books of general accounts of appropriations and funds, of revenues and expenditures, of the public debt, and of fiscal officers. And they should provide for advance decisions to fiscal officers and to heads of departments, and for the review upon appeal of the settlement of accounts and claims made in routine order. It is the feeling of the committee that the House bill is deficient in that it accomplishes none of these things. The committee has, therefore, inserted in the bill additional provisions, which it believes necessary to bring about a proper reorganization of the accounting system of the Government.

THE SENATE BILL.

The bill as revised proposes to create an independent establishment to be known as the general accounting office, which will take over the powers and duties now exercised and performed by the Comptroller of the Treasury and the six Auditors of the Treasury Department in precisely the same fashion as is prescribed by the provisions of the House bill. The committee bill, however, goes further, and confers upon the general accounting office the authority and power to prescribe and to supervise methods of accounting in the departments; to prescribe and supervise the methods employed in the administrative examination of accounts and claims; and to exercise in general a control over all the accounting procedures of the Government.

While the committee bill goes into considerable detail in describing the duties of the head of the general accounting office and of his principal assistants, the actual effect of the enactment of the bill would be to remove many hampering restrictions which now inhere in the accounting laws which serve only to surround Government accounting procedures with endless red tape. Existing accounting procedures in the Government practically follow the specifications laid down by Alexander Hamilton, who was the designer and author of the original Federal accounting system. While methods in the commercial world, where executives have been given a free hand, have steadily improved, and continue to improve, the Government's accounting system remains practically as it was originally put into effect, hemmed in on all sides by statutory limitations and age-old traditions. It is believed that the provisions of the committee bill will go far toward breaking down these limitations and will result in putting the accounting and auditing work of the Government upon a modern basis.

THE COMPTROLLER GENERAL.

In the committee bill the comptroller general of the United States is given exclusive jurisdiction over all matters relating to auditing and accounting forms, systems, and procedures. His powers and authority, however, will be exercised through three assistant comptrollers general, who will act under his direction and with his approval. The general accounting office is to be organized into three branches. The auditing branch proper will be in charge of the first assistant comptroller general.

This officer will receive, audit, and settle the accounts of all disbursing and collecting offices of the Government and all claims against the United States. He will perform generally the duties now intrusted to the auditors for the various departments. The constructive accounting branch will be under the second assistant comptroller general. This officer will prescribe and supervise accounting and bookkeeping procedures in the departments. The general bookkeeping branch will be under the third assistant comptroller general, to whom will be intrusted the duties now performed by the Secretary of the Treasury through the Division of Bookkeeping and Warrants. This officer will keep the general accounts of appropriations, of fiscal officers, of special funds, of trust funds, and of the public debt.

A BOARD OF APPEALS.

The committee bill further provides that a board of appeals will be attached to the general accounting office, to exercise the appellate authority now vested in the Comptroller of the Treasury. This board will pass upon all appeals from settlements of accounts and claims made by the auditing branch. It will render advance decisions and will decide for the comptroller general all questions involving construction of statutes. The board is to be made up of three members. The chairman will be known as the solicitor of the general accounting office; the other members will be the second and third comptrollers general. The creation of this board will round out the organization of the accounting establishment.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Now, Mr. President, I desire to call attention particularly to one or two provisions of the bill. The Senator from New Jersey has just stated that the people of this country are looking to Congress and to the administration to bring about an economical use of the public funds. The country wants to secure a full return for every dollar raised by taxation. To my mind the pending bill proposes to create one part, at any rate, of a system to bring about a great reduction in public expenditures.

The situation in the administration of governmental affairs does not merely happen to be the situation at the present moment. The existing method of conducting the affairs of this Government has been the result of progressive growth. The system started many years ago, and has been added to here and there by Congress, from session to session, until we now have the present unwieldy and very confusing and complex system of administration. I submit that there is not a large business concern in this country or elsewhere that would tolerate its business being conducted in the manner in which the business of this country has been carried on. I wish, however, to emphasize the fact that no particular administration is responsible for the situation which we now confront. It is a system which has grown up during the years. It has become unwieldy with the mere processes of time and the necessary temporizing with the administrative side of the Government. I am glad to know that now there seems to be a concerted and earnest effort on the part of Congress—I know there is such an effort in the Senate—to bring about a reformation of these conditions.

This bill, as I have said, is one step. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] has introduced a resolution which, to my mind, ought to bring about a material and beneficial result. He seeks to coordinate the various services of the Government, and I can not imagine any one thing which will tend more to bring about a thoroughgoing business administration than the carrying out of the purposes which the resolution of the Senator from Utah seeks to accomplish. There is in this bill a step in that same direction, but I do not believe that it will take the place of the commission which the Senator from Utah seeks to have appointed. I believe that the proposed commission should be appointed; I believe that it should have full support; and I believe that its work will redound to a substantial benefit to the Government. However, I desire to call attention to the features of the pending bill bearing upon that same subject.

Section 12 of the pending bill, page 17, makes it—the duty of the commissioner of the budget, in the period prior to and upon submission to him of the budget estimates of the several departments and establishments, to make a detail study of the organization, activities, and methods of business of the several administrative services of the Government for the purpose of determining those changes which, in his opinion, should be made in the existing organization, activities, and methods of business of such services, or in the appropriation of moneys for the support and conduct of the work of such services, or in the assignment of particular activities to particular services, or in the regrouping of services departmentally with a view to securing greater efficiency and economy in the conduct of public affairs.

This bill will establish a bureau whose specific duty it will be to make a detailed study of these very matters. In the very nature of the process through which that bureau will pass it is true that it can not reform all of these matters at one time, nor do I believe that the commission which the Senator from Utah seeks to have established can accomplish everything. There is no doubt that such a commission will find many branches of the service which should be coordinated, and will make valuable suggestions and recommend proposed legislation of inestimable value; but no commission in any one investigation can reach every one of the irregularities or improperly conducted activities of the Government. It is necessary that there shall be a continuing body whose duty it shall be, as stated in the bill, to make a detailed study, not for one year but every year, and which shall always be prepared to make suggestions and changes for the benefit of the administration of public affairs.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. There is not a business concern of any size in the United States that does not follow the practice referred to by the Senator; but the Government of the United States, expending billions of dollars where corporations expend hundreds of thousands of dollars, has no agency whatever to look after just such vital matters as those to which the Senator is now referring.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The Senator from Utah has undoubtedly made a correct statement. No business man would tolerate the situation that we find existing in the governmental departments to-day. It is necessary to be ever awake lest there be a loosening up of business methods in conducting public affairs, and particularly is this true now when the national budget has assumed such tremendous proportions.

Before the war our yearly expenditures altogether were only about $1,000,000,000 a year. I am satisfied that for some years to come they will aggregate four or five billion dollars. It is important that the taxpayers of this country get full value received for every dollar which they contribute if it is possible to bring such a condition about. As the Senator from New Jersey has said, the Government is not a money-making institution, and it has no assets or resources except what it secures from the taxpayers of the country. It is not expected to engage in any business enterprise for the purpose of making money.

Mr. President, I find on examination of this bill that after the detailed study has been made there is no specific direction that the budget bureau or the commissioner of the budget shall transmit the result of the study to the Secretary of the Treasury. Of course, it was contemplated that that would be done, together with the recommendations of the commissioner of the budget as to the changes which he might think should be made. I therefore move, after the word "with," on line 15 of page 17, section 12, to insert the words "the results of such detailed study and," so that the last sentence of that section will read:

The budget estimates for the ensuing fiscal year, together with the results of such detailed study and the recommendations of the commissioner of the budget, shall be submitted to the Secretary of the Treasury on or before November 1 of each year.

I suggest that amendment.

Mr. McCORMICK. Both of those amendments only make more manifest the intent of the two sections. I not only see no objection to the amendments, but I very readily accept them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, section 13 does not give to the Secretary of the Treasury any authority to include in this budget any changes in the way of combination of activities; but under section 17, after the budget is transmitted to the President, the President has authority—to revise the budget submitted to him by the Secretary of the Treasury, by the increase, reduction, or elimination of any item therein contained, by the addition of new items which, in his opinion, are needed for the proper conduct of the affairs of the Government, by the consolidation or regrouping of items, or by making any other changes in the way of the assignment of specific duties to particular services, the regrouping of services, the consolidation or elimination of field stations or other units of organization, or in any other feature of the organization and operations of the several services which in his opinion, will lead to increased economy and efficiency in the conduct of public affairs.

That gives to the President the right to put into this budget any of these modifications that he sees fit; and thus there will come to the Congress, with the recommendations of the President, any changes which he may have to suggest, and to that extent the responsibility is fully placed upon the administration to bring about these economic changes and better administration of the Government; but there seems to me again—if I may call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the matter—a necessity for making it a little clearer that the results of this detailed study by the commissioner of these various activities, which according to the amendment now go to the Secretary of the Treasury, shall go on up to the President, so that he shall have all the information before him. He will have before him this detailed study, with the results and recommendations of the commissioner of the bureau. He will have before him the recommendations of the Secretary of the Treasury, full information; and, having that, if he fails to act the country will hold him responsible. But in order to make that clear, on page 20, line 10, part of section 15, I suggest that there be inserted another paragraph "(h)," as follows:

The Secretary of the Treasury shall also submit, together with his recommendations thereon, to the President the results of the detailed study authorized and directed by section 12 hereof.

That amendment will make it perfectly clear that these matters should all finally go to the President for his ultimate action.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, I see no objection to the amendment. I trust that the Senator will send the two amendments to the desk in order that they may be submitted to the Committee of the Whole and voted upon.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I will send up my copy of the bill later. I have some other notes upon it, and I will give it to the desk a little later.

Mr. McCORMICK. If the Senator will just read it again, the Secretary can get it, and we can take a vote on it right away.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I have read the amendment:

(h) The Secretary of the Treasury shall also submit, together with his recommendations thereon, to the President the results of the detailed study authorized and directed by section 12 hereof.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Now, Mr. President, for just a few moments I desire to refer to one other provision of this bill, not because of any criticism of it, but because it is a concrete example of another situation which exists in the business affairs of our Government.

For instance, section 4 of this bill provides:

That the commissioner shall employ and fix the compensation of such attorneys, economists, accountants, special experts, examiners, clerks, and other employees, and make such expenditures for rent, printing, books, periodicals, office equipment and supplies, and other expenses of the bureau as he may find necessary to carry out the provisions of this act, and as may from time to time be provided for by law: Provided, That not more than $200,000 per annum shall be expended under the provisions of this section and not more than four persons shall be employed by the commissioner at a salary of $5,000 per annum, and no person shall be employed by him at a salary in excess of that sum.

There is another section of this bill, section 29, which appropriates $150,000 for the use of the comptroller general's department or office, and the bill proposes that that shall be expended in substantially the same way that the commissioner of the budget is authorized to expend this $200,000. To my mind, that presents another evil which is upon a parity, at least, with the evil sought to be remedied by this bill.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an interruption upon that point?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I am very glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. McCORMICK. I do not seek to defend in principle the character of general appropriation herein provided for, but I ask the Senator to bear in mind that this service is absolutely new. We have no exact experience upon which to base a schedule of detailed expenditure and appropriation therefor. The Senator, I think, will bear in mind one meeting of the committee when we discussed the sums to be appropriated under the head of the commissioner of the budget and of the comptroller general, and the circumstances under which we fixed this limitation. The limitation is in the act. We did not feel that at this time we could define it more particularly, and so we were satisfied to incorporate the aggregate sum in the body of the bill.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, the chairman of the committee has just made precisely the kind of a speech that I intended to make. I think the committee was thoroughly justified in putting this provision in the bill precisely as it is. I do not believe it would have been practical at all to do otherwise; but this is only one new agency of government which is being created. There have been hundreds of others, and under existing law there is no means that I know of by which such a question can be handled in any better way than it is handled right in this bill. Under existing law you have to give discretion to somebody to employ those people, and not only as to their employment but they must have the right to fix salaries. But, Mr. President, that presents a woeful spectacle. We create a new agency here. Undoubtedly this agency will need the same kind of official assistance and the same kind of work done in its branch of the service as is needed in many other services of the Government; and criticism has been sounded from this floor day after day calling attention to the evils of one department of the Government bidding against another department of the Government for the same kind of employee. We have the conflict between the Shipping Board and the merchant marine; we have the conflict between the War Department and all the other departments; and so, from one side of governmental administration to another, you are continually bringing about a conflict of interest. You are bringing about a rivalry to get the same kind of employee, and something ought to be done to prevent that. You are also having one department pay one salary and another department another for the same kind of service—salaries which vary as much as 200 per cent.

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON] on yesterday called attention to these inequities in the present administration. I say "the present administration," but it has reached back through all of the administrations of which I have had any knowledge.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator stated that in the different departments different salaries are paid for people who do like work. I want to call his attention to the fact that in the same department clerks who are doing exacly the same work are paid salaries differing from one hundred to five hundred dollars.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The Senator is quite right about that, and I thank him for calling attention to it. Where these lump-sum appropriations are made, such as are proposed in this bill, of course the officials of the Government pay the market price for labor; they pay the general price prevailing throughout he country for various professional men and officials and employees; they come in direct competition with all of the old bureaus and activities which have existed in the governmental service for a generation or more. There is this direct conflict. Now, Mr. President, it seems to me that while we are enacting this most necessary bill—a bill which will bring about salutary reforms—we should also realize that there are other difficulties in this Government.

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON] yesterday discussed at some length the report of the Reclassification Commission, which worked over a year in studying the situation to which I now allude. Up to the present time, of course, the Congress has been so busy with other matters that it could not give to that report any careful consideration; but I want to impress upon Senators that while we are taking this step there are other steps to be taken. We have passed a retirement bill. That is one long stride. I hope it will soon become a law. We shall undoubtedly pass this budget bill. I hope the conferees will get together so that it may become a law; and then I want the Senate to take the third step and adopt the report of the Reclassification Commission, in substance.

I do not claim that that report is perfect by any means. You can not make any big job perfect in one trial, but you can lay the foundation and build on it and aid the business administration of the Government. What you want is to have a clear perspective of the receipts and expenditures of the Government. You want efficiency in Government; you want service. By the retirement bill, by the reclassification bill, and by this bill I believe you will substantially get it.

I sincerely trust that this bill will pass and that then we may give some consideration to the other measure.

Yesterday evening I received a letter from the National Civil Service Reform League referring to the report of the Reclassification Commission. It is very interesting as showing a full and unqualified indorsement of the commission's report and the necessity for its consideration and adoption. I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONAL CIVIL SERVICE REFORM LEAGUE,
New York, April 29, 1920.

Hon. ANDRIEUS A. JONES,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The National Civil Service Reform League, through its committee on legislation, urges your favorable consideration of the recommendations in the report of the Joint Committee on Reclassification of Salaries. The league's committee has given careful consideration to the report and believes that it points the way to a distinct step in advance in the Government service.

The civil service is in serious need of attention on all of the points enumerated in the commission's report. At present many of the best employees are resigning from the service, and it is evident that something must be done to retain the more efficient of those who have not resigned.

Particular attention is called to the recommendation in paragraph 4 of the summary of recommendations "that the Congress directs an existing agency, logically and preferably the Civil Service Commission, to make a final allocation of individual positions to the classes set forth in the recommended plan of classification," and also that in paragraph 6 of the same summary of recommendations "that the permanent administration of the classification and schedules of compensation be delegated by law to an existing independent agency of the Government, logically and preferably the Civil Service Commission."

We are of the opinion that the Civil Service Commission is the only agency which by its character and position in the scheme of Government organization is at all fitted to perform these functions. A comprehensive and uniform employment policy for the Government can hardly be brought about unless the work outlined in the above-quoted recommendations is included within the scope of the commission's activities. The Civil Service Commission, by the nature of its present duties, is the only Government department that deals directly with every other department. It is in a position, if it is given authority to do so, to secure with the least possible friction, the necessary information to enable it to specify standard rates of compensation and to develop a classification of the service which will be common to all departments.

The league is also of the opinion that the Civil Service Commission should have specific responsibility placed upon it for the establishment and the maintenance of a uniform service record system throughout all Government departments. Such a service record should be made available for use in connection with all promotions, and the commission should be given jurisdiction over all promotions throughout the service.

Without such centralized control over the graded service of the Government, there will always be injustice because of inequalities in the treatment of employees in different departments. The discontent and resultant enormous labor turnover which is cited in the Reclassification Commission's report is evidence of the deplorable injustice worked upon the average employee at the present time.

We respectfully suggest that the draft of a bill proposed by the Reclassification Commission is capable of improvement in certain respects. For example, sections 9 and 10 of the bill provide an elaborate scheme for the control of appointments, promotions, reinstatement, and transfer of employees within the classified service, such scheme to be administered by the Civil Service Commission with the cooperation of the heads of departments. We believe that these functions should properly be performed by the Civil Service Commission, but that it is of questionable value to stipulate in a statute all of the details as to how the Civil Service Commission should function in this respect. We believe that a better method of presenting this legislation would be the mere enunciation of the principle that so far as practicable vacancies should be filled, first, by transfer; second, by reinstatement; third, by promotion; and, finally, by original appointment to the service; and that the determination of the practicability of these various methods of filling vacancies should be left in the hands of the Civil Service Commission, who shall work in cooperation with the heads of departments on all questions of examination and appointment.

We therefore reserve the privilege of discussing any proposed legislation along the lines of the recommendations made in the report of the Reclassification Commission and of suggesting amendments which would improve the language of such legislation.

Respectfully, yours,

CHARLES V. ROBERTS,
Chairman,
RUSSELL WHITMAN,
MAYO FISLER,
Committee on Legislation.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I do not desire to discuss the bill, but I do wish to say, as a member of the committee which framed it, that I do not think any committee in this body charged with the framing of new legislation has devoted more earnest consideration to the subject than was given to this measure by the committee. Every member of that committee felt profoundly the responsibility that had been placed upon him in the framing of the measure. Every member of that committee felt that the country at large, without regard to party, had declared itself in favor of some effective legislation of this character.

I think the bill is admirably worked out to accomplish the general purpose which the country has with reference to the establishment of a budget system. I do not think there ought to be any party divisions about the measure. I think both parties are thoroughly committed to the principle of the bill. I hope that there will be no prolonged discussion of it, and that we may speedily pass it. I think the people of this country will appreciate speedy action upon it. The state of public sentiment with reference to this bill has so completely crystallized in favor of it that there ought to be no division in this body or in the other body with respect to it, unless, of course, some defect in the method provided for carrying out the general principle can be pointed out.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I want to assure the Senator who has just spoken that if his admonition is directed to me, I have no intention whatever of opposing the bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I hope the Senator does not think I was referring in any way to him. I certainly was not.

Mr. THOMAS. It would have been perfectly proper if he had, as far as that is concerned. I am explaining more for the Senator's own comfort than for mine, if he had any such opinion or impression.

I have no doubt that, as has been stated, the bill is the best which the committee was able to frame, agree upon, and report. I have no doubt that if they had remained longer in session they would still have encountered obstacles to the preparation of a more desirable measure, and for a reason to which I will refer in my brief discussion of some of its features.

A budget bill, Mr. President, is designed for the systematic operation of governmental processes. It is a business arrangement, primarily designed to square receipts and expenditures, thus enabling appropriations to be intelligently made, and all of them confined to the revenues which are estimated for the particular fiscal year. A budget bill which accomplishes that is a good bill. A budget bill which fails to accomplish that is not a good bill, and must result in disappointment to the public and to those who attempt to administer it.

As far as this bill goes, it is admirable, it is systematic, and I hope that it may ultimate in better subsequent legislation. But if the people of the United States have been led to believe that their expenses are going to be reduced by the operation of the bill, then they are facing a great disappointment, because it will do nothing of the sort.

In Great Britain and in other countries operating under budgets, the amounts requested by the budget authorities constitute a maximum of expenditure and the legislature can not go beyond that maximum, although they may reduce these estimates just as extensively as in their judgment the situation demands. The estimates will come to Congress under the bill, and we will be informed with considerable accuracy of the amount of the revenue for the succeeding fiscal year and of the requirements of the various departments and divisions of the Government, and the Appropriations Committees having the various items of appropriations to dispose of will undoubtedly square their work with the estimates thus received. The bills thus prepared will come to the two Houses, where they will be subjected to the identical abuses which have so long disfigured appropriation bills in Congress, and when they finally reach conference committees their own fathers will have difficulty in recognizing them. Senator Smith, Jones, or Brown, if you please, having specific appropriations in mind in which their constituents are interested, will offer amendments carrying them, and in the Senate, particularly, they will get them, since otherwise, under the rules of the Senate, obstructions can be easily placed in the pathway of any legislation, however desirable.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. THOMAS. In just a moment. And in the House, Mr. President, hereafter as heretofore, Representatives interested in similar extra appropriations will see that they are placed upon the bill in the absence of legislation to the contrary. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The Special Committee on the National Budget gave very careful consideration to the point to which the Senator is now referring and fully appreciated the difficulties which occur to the Senator. We did not see how, by legislation, the point could be met. We did not see how, by legislation, we could put in a restriction upon Congress, except by a constitutional amendment, and, of course, that would be impracticable for any immediate relief.

But the plan which has been under consideration and which will doubtless be proposed later is to amend the rules of the Senate so that such additions can not be made to the budget except by a two-thirds vote of the Senate, for instance. Of course, we all realize that the rules of the Senate may be changed also, but as they now exist such a rule seems to have been efficacious in some respects, as the rule which provides that you can not propose an amendment to a general appropriation bill unless it has been estimated for or reported by a committee.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, there may be some constitutional objections to such a scheme. There are also constitutional objections which might be urged to any budget scheme. The Senator is doubtless convinced, for he is a very good lawyer and a most conscientious Senator, that a constitutional limitation interferes between what the committee desired to accomplish and what they have accomplished. If he lays the flattering unction to his soul that the difficulty can be overcome by amending the Senate rules, then he, too, is doomed to a very serious disappointment, for the Senate rules, like the laws of the Medes and Persians, have been made, and admit of little change, the difficulty being that the same character of opposition and filibuster can be opposed to a proposed amendment to a Senate rule which can be offered to any measure pending before us.

During my term of service in this body, comparatively recent, extending over a period of something more than seven years, I have butted my head against a stone wall in the effort to obtain amendments of the Senate rules. Several other Senators have done the same thing. With the single exception of a so-called cloture rule, we have accomplished nothing.

Mr. President, it is not the constitutional objection, in my judgment, so much as it is the senatorial and congressional prerogative which makes an effective budget bill at this time practically impossible.

I will join the Senator from New Mexico in an effort to amend the Senate rules, notwithstanding my pessimism about it; but the man who has the power under the present system of rules and procedure to force appropriations out of the Public Treasury for his constituency is not going to surrender that power very easily. It is a prerogative, Mr. President, of enormous value, particularly as it results in getting public money, which constitutes a vast reservoir for contributions to everything under the sun, and which draws the people of the United States, individuals, associations, and masses, as a magnet draws the needle, and finds the most successful operations in amendments to appropriation bills.

The Senator calls my attention to an existing rule under which a point of order can be made against a proposed amendment for an appropriation which has not been estimated for or reported from a committee. It is very easy, in my experience, to get a report from a committee. I am just as guilty as the rest of you. I take advantage of the rule, and I suppose I will do it as long as I am here. I have some friends who believe in getting while the getting is good and who are also disposed to criticize laxity of effort upon the part of their representatives. The rule, as the Senator knows, when it is invoked, is frequently set aside by a vote of the Senate. On the other hand, Senators hesitate to invoke it lest, when the time comes for the consideration of their amendment, some one who has suffered from the application of the rule may seek to extend that application so as to include the offender.

Mr. SMOOT. That always happens on a river and harbor bill.

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly, it always happens on a river and harbor bill, and all other bills where the amendments are representative of different parts of the country, and which, of course, brings into play the good old doctrine of "you pat my back and I will pat yours," to the tune of "God Save the King" and "God Help the Country."

I want to see some budget system which will prevent that, if possible, and until we have it budget bills will not protect the Treasury of the United States against needless and extravagant appropriations. The estimates sent to us by the proper authorities will be exceeded in the future just as they have been exceeded in the past.

I confess a keen sense of disappointment on reading the bill, that in a vital particular it is sadly deficient.

I shall vote for it and I sincerely trust it will prove more efficacious than I am afraid it will. No man will be more gratified if, in our experience under it, it does prove to be a scientific, systematic method of dealing with the public finances.

Mr. KING obtained the floor.

Mr. McCORMICK. Will the Senator from Utah yield that I may move a recess?

Mr. KING. I yield for that purpose.

RECESS.

Mr. McCORMICK. In view of the lateness of the hour, I move that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Saturday, May 1, 1920, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, April 30, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Come, Thou Almighty Spirit, enter into our souls with all Thy transforming power, clarify our vision, quicken our sensibilities, that we may walk worthy of the vocation wherewith we are called and hallow Thy name in thought and deed, conscientiously, efficiently, and receive at the end of this day Thy benediction; for Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

THE COMER COTTON "RIDER."

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting an editorial on the Comer cotton "rider."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

The editorial is as follows:

[From the Times-Picayune, New Orleans, La., Apr. 27, 1920.]

COMER PRAISES HIS PET.

Recently the Times-Picayune went to the defense of the cotton interests of the South in opposition to a measure, both fathered and mothered by United States Senator B. B. COMER, of Alabama, designed to permit cotton spinners to skim the cream off of the cotton crop and leave the milk as a by-product in the farmers' hands, without a definite market and minus the protections now thrown around many hundreds of thousands of bales of merchantable, spinnable cotton. As we explained in our editorial, Senator COMER is a prominent spinner, and the term "spinner's contract" was long ago accepted as a trade term in the cotton business meaning but one thing—a contract worded to place the whip handle in the mill man's hand wherewith to drive those who plow and plant and work and harvest the South's great crop.

We pointed out some reasons why the Alabama legislator was taking an astigmatic view of the South's interests, and in our position, we scarce need add, we are in accord with the great majority of the cotton growers of the South. Those who take Senator COMER'S view are very largely those near enough the cotton mill districts of the Appalachian slope to come under the influence of mill domination.

Our editorial evidently touched the quick, for the Senator arose in the Senate Chamber and went into an extended discussion of his proposed measure, and "strafed" violently all who would not remain blind to the trap set by his reinforced "spinner's contract."

The Senator's argument, and a one-sided discussion by others from the mill sector, brought out no new facts, and by their involutions and deviations managed to avoid the real point of our criticism. In fact we only wish we commanded editorial space to give the Senator's talk paragraph by paragraph, in order to point out seriatim their faulty reasoning.

The germ of his defense apparently was that the exclusion from tenderability on contract of cottons grading below middling would tend to stabilize contracts by forcing spot cotton and futures into a closer unity of price. This, Senator COMER said, would make hedges safer and, as he saw it, would benefit all branches of the trade.

Now, if the latter fact is true, pray how would the planter benefit who, by the chances of season and fate, had produced a crop of cotton that would grade below low middling and middling? According to the "Comer rider," this cotton, in spite of the fact that Senator COMER'S own six cotton mills do spin such staple, would remain in the planter's hands until taken at their own price by buyers from the Avondale Mills or some others of their kind. We say "at their own price" because, having grown cotton grading below the tenderable limit, the planter would be unable to protect his holdings by hedges, and without such hedges could not borrow on his holdings and await a better market.

One of Senator COMER'S first statements was that his company had made use of 25,000 bales of hedges during the season. Presumably this was not done merely as a pastime, but because such transactions had a value—as, indeed, they most certainly had—and yet by means of his "rider" the Senator is striving to take away from the trade at large the possibility of such hedges in transactions involving many hundreds of thousands of bales of cotton now protected under the Lever law.

In his effort to make a point the speaker returned to an outworn attack on the cotton exchanges, although his own statement as to the value of the hedge was enough in itself to disprove the old contention. Indeed one has but to hark back to those distressful months at the beginning of the war, when the exchanges were closed, to recall in what an impasse the planters found themselves when there were no exchanges open to serve as a clearing house for cotton prices. We recall the "buy-a-bale" campaign, and the values that went almost to nothing at all because there existed no machinery to harmonize beliefs and melt them into that consensus that would determine price.

"It is buying and consumption," said Senator COMER, "that make the price. It is not the power of tendering it on the exchange."

In reply to that, and in its disproof, we have but to quote the statistics showing that the spread between good, ordinary, and middling cotton in 1918, when the former was still tenderable on contract, was 4½ cents a pound, whereas on April 8 of the present year that spread was 13½ cents. Such was the depressing effect of nontenderability. The figures are eloquent.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolution of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 13253. An act to grant the consent of Congress to the Elmer Red River Bridge Co. to construct a bridge across the Red River;

H. R. 9369. An act to revise and equalize rates of pension to certain soldiers, sailors, and marines of the Civil War and the War with Mexico, to certain widows, including widows of the War of 1812, former widows, dependent parents and children of such soldiers, sailors, and marines, and to certain Army nurses, and granting pensions and increase of pensions in certain cases;

H. J. Res. 301. Joint resolution to authorize the Secretary of War to grant revocable licenses for the removal of sand and gravel from the Fort Douglas Military Reservation for industrial purposes;

H. R. 10917. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the National Education Association of the United States" by adding thereto an additional section; and

H. R. 12956. An act extending the time for constructing a bridge across the Bayou Bartholomew, in the State of Arkansas.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GOOD, by direction of the Committee on Appropriations, reported the bill (H. R. 13870) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes, which was read a first and second time and, with the accompanying report, was ordered printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee reserves all points of order on the bill.

RAILROAD DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 13677, the railroad deficiency appropriation bill, disagree to all the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 13677, the railroad deficiency appropriation bill, disagree to all the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

There was no objection; and the Speaker announced as the conferees on the part of the House Mr. GOOD, Mr. CANNON, and Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina.

RETIREMENT OF CIVIL-SERVICE EMPLOYEES.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (S. 1699) for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill S. 1699. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MCARTHUR] will please take the chair.

Thereupon the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (S. 1699) for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes, with Mr. MCARTHUR in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill S. 1699, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 1699) for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose last evening the first section of the bill had been concluded. The second section has not yet been taken up.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BEGG: On page 3, line 9, strike out the period, insert in lieu thereof a comma, and add "and to employees of the Railway Mail Service who have been removed from the classified service without prejudice, provided they were qualified as required by sections 1 and 2 hereof at the time they were separated from the classified service."

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I want to call the attention of the members of the committee to this fact, this bill provides a radical departure from anything that the Government has ever undertaken in this country heretofore. I am in entire sympathy with the idea so far as it applies to aged employees who have given their service to the Government.

However, the question that we might just as well face is the question of a bigger proposition in the way of an old-age insurance. I am not so sure that I am not in entire sympathy with the proposition. As an economic proposition, it seems to me that it would be better to make the individual in a way responsible for his own destiny during all periods of his life rather than to make an absolute dependent out of him.

Now, if I had more than five minutes I would like to elaborate on that phase, but it is of value to at least touch upon it in this particular five-minute discussion, and hence I will call attention to the fact that whenever a human being becomes a dependent on the social body he handicaps the progress of the whole social unit, and on that basis and for that reason we can afford to assume this sort of a protectorate over the aged.

I want to direct your attention to this fact in this amendment: The Railway Mail Service, as everybody admits, is the most hazardous business in the Government service. There are men who are excluded from the provision of this act by virtue of their having been severed from the service without cause and without blame, so far as they are responsible for it, other than that they have arrived at the age of 60 or 65 years.

Now, I have evidence of the fact that men have been suspended without cause and not because they are inefficient, for in a number of these cases where I have looked up the records I find that they were not discharged because of inefficiency. If this Congress and this committee wants the evidence, I will submit the examination papers in every case right up to the immediate month preceding their separation from the service, and I will show you that every one of these men has a rating above 96 per cent, and that they were discharged not because of inefficiency, but in order to make room for some younger employee. I want to insert those letters in the RECORD as evidence of the truth of that statement.

Some of these men have died since they were separated from the service. I personally know one man who to-day is lying on what in all probability will be his deathbed, who has given his entire life to the Railway Mail Service, who has no income other than that to be derived from the mere pittance that he was able to lay away through the strictest kind of economy when he was in the service.

I want to direct your attention to the fact that the railway mail clerks are, by virtue of their position, compelled to spend more of their salaries than the man who has a job where he has established his home, because a railway mail clerk gets on his train, goes a hundred or five hundred miles away from his home, and is compelled to put up there and pay hotel or lodging expense, while the man who gets $1,000 or $1,200 salary in the post office or in the police department or in any other governmental agency is actually getting at least $250 or $300 a year more than the railway mail clerk whose salary is the same figure.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. I will be glad to yield.

Mr. BLACK. The gentleman is probably aware of the fact that the average annual allowance to the railway mail clerk for travel is $190 per annum.

Mr. BEGG. I am aware of that, I will say to the gentleman, and my statement still holds good in reference to that allowance.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I ask for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BEGG. The number of people affected by this amendment if it passes—and I may say that the chairman of the committee has accepted the amendment, so that there is no opposition from the committee.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I did not say I would accept it, but I said I would not oppose it.

Mr. BEGG. The gentleman says he did not accept it, but that he would not oppose it. This proposition is nothing more than a humane idea. Every single argument that you can offer as a reason for the passage of this bill can be offered for the incorporation of this small number of people who will be affected by it.

Mr. WELLING. How many will there be?

Mr. BEGG. I can not give the exact number, but I am advised by the railway postal clerks that the number will be less than 50. They are dying rapidly. These men are at the age of 68 and 70 years now. The number of people who will be affected is small, and every single argument you can offer for the bill can be offered more forcibly for this class of people.

The passage of a measure of this kind is only in line with our treatment of the dumb brutes. In 1916, in the War Department, they had an old war horse named Rodney, I believe, that had given his service and his life for over 20 years to the War Department. He was useless. They did not send him to the fertilizer factory and make fertilizer out of him. They were too humane. They found a way, without coming to Congress, whereby they could pension that old horse for the rest of his days. I ask you if the war horses in the Postal Service do not deserve the same consideration as an actual animal that pulled a truck or probably carried an officer of the War Department? [Applause.] It seems to me it is a mere humanitarian idea and can have no opposition.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. GARD. I am interested in the gentleman's amendment, and I confess I do not understand exactly the application of exemption to these railway postal employees. Does it apply to railway mail clerks who have been separated from the service?

Mr. BEGG. Without cause—only those who in their notice of dismissal have had it stated that they are removed without prejudice. I will go further. It says that their civil-service status shall not be affected in any way to preclude their being put on in some other position.

Mr. GARD. It is not intended to include those men who have been removed for some cause?

Mr. BEGG. Not in any case.

Mr. GARD. Why were they removed?

Mr. ANDERSON. For age disability.

Mr. BEGG. I can only quote the letters of removal.

Mr. GARD. Does it mean that they were removed because they were too old to perform their duties?

Mr. BEGG. Not necessarily, because their examination papers showed 96 per cent efficiency.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time may be extended one minute. I want to ask him a question.

Mr. BEGG. Make it three minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman wants two minutes more. So I ask that his time be extended three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks that the time of the gentleman from Ohio be extended three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BEGG. My amendment refers only to those who have been removed without prejudice. You ask me why they have been removed. I only know what the letters written by the Railway Mail Service say:

> In the reorganization that has taken place you are hereby notified that you will no longer be continued on the pay roll, but this removal is without any prejudice as to your civil-service status.

And their examination papers, of which I have a number, show that their grades, even the month before they were removed, were as high as 98 per cent, and none of them below 90 per cent.

Mr. GARD. What is the number of these men who will be affected?

Mr. BEGG. I can not give the definite number, but my information is that it is under 50.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. I will.

Mr. BLANTON. In the gentleman's State of Ohio he will find a few deserving farmers who have been on the same farm 40 long years who have devoted their lives to raising foodstuffs to feed people in cities. Now, would not the gentleman be willing to include in the provisions of this bill those particular farmers who have devoted 40 years of their lives to feeding the public?

Mr. BEGG. In reply to the gentleman I will say that his proposition is not far wrong, and without stopping to discuss it it seems to me this is only the first step in the direction of old-age pensions. I have no time to discuss that further than to say that we seem to be stampeded here to raise salaries because we are losing good, competent men. That is the only argument we hear. When the personnel officer testified before a committee of which I happened to be a member investigating a certain department he said that the average salaries of the people in commercial life in Washington were from $20 to $30 a month less than those of Government officers. Yet we are being stampeded every day to raise the salaries of Government employees. But that does not argue against the passage of this retirement bill or old-age pensions, and I am for it.

Mr. WELLING. Are not many of these gentlemen who have been removed without prejudice very much under 60 years of age?

Mr. BEGG. No; not one of them is under 65 years of age.

Mr. KEARNS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. KEARNS. I understand the gentleman is offering this amendment because there are so many efficient clerks leaving the employ of the Government because of the low salaries?

Mr. BEGG. No; I am not introducing it for any such purpose.

Mr. KEARNS. The gentleman made that statement.

Mr. BEGG. No; I beg the gentleman's pardon; I introduced it because the bill is going to pass, and I think it is right that it should pass, to take care of these aged men.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I ask for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. FAIRFIELD. I shall not object, but I think it is about time that we concluded debate on this amendment.

Mr. BEGG. I surrendered my time in general debate to the gentleman, and I have not consumed any time at all. So I think the gentleman might be at least fair.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEARNS. What was the gentleman's statement about the testimony before the committee?

Mr. BEGG. I said that the testimony of the personnel representative before the committee was that he had made investigation of salaries paid in Washington for similar positions and found them to be from $20 to $30 a month less than the Government paid, and that the Government is the pacemaker in salaries, in spite of the fact that we hear every day that employees are leaving the Government service because the pay is too small. I said in spite of that being the fact I was in favor of the old-age pension bill, which, on humanitarian grounds, is right, and because of that fact I want to incorporate into the benefits of this bill these people who have been severed from the service for no reason except that they have become old. It seems to me that that is clear enough for anybody to understand. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The following are the letters referred to by Mr. BEGG:

RAILWAY MAIL SERVICE,
OFFICE OF SUPERINTENDENT NINTH DIVISION,
Cleveland, Ohio, July 14, 1917.

JOHN E. WEST, Railway Postal Clerk:

On account of the reorganization of the New York and Chicago railway post office, whereby a large number of clerks are to be released therefrom, you have been selected to be dropped on account of your inability to perform satisfactory service in the Railway Mail Service, due to inefficiency.

This will be effective with the close of July 15, 1917.

C. V. MCCHESNEY, Superintendent.

(Copy to the General Superintendent.)
(Examinations show 95 per cent or better.)

RAILWAY MAIL SERVICE,
OFFICE OF SUPERINTENDENT NINTH DIVISION,
Cleveland, Ohio, July 24, 1917.

Mr. LOUIS SCHERZ, Sandusky, Ohio.

DEAR SIR: In connection with my letter of July 14, advising you that you would be dropped from the service, I desire to state that no order of removal has been issued, but your services and pay were discontinued because you were not needed, and your civil-service status is not affected so far as concerns your application for reinstatement to any position for which you may be found capable of filling in the Postal Service or in any other department of the Government.

Yours, very truly,

C. V. MCCHESNEY, Superintendent.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to say a word about this legislation. There are 110,000,000 people in this country. Civilization is founded on the selfishness of the unit, of all the units. It rests on the hearthstone, it rests on the efficiency, the good manhood and womanhood of all the people. We propose to pension the people who were engaged in the war. We have legislation pending that dwarfs this legislation in its importance and in the amount it costs.

Who pays these taxes? The consumers, the 110,000,000 of people. What is the condition in the factories, on the farm, the condition everywhere where people, if they are of any account and normal, live in the sweat of their faces? The gentleman just said that he stands for old-age pensions. What is the effect of old-age pensions? He also announced that this is the open sesame for old-age pensions. If civilization rests on the hearthstone, what makes people toil, what makes them care for the family, what makes them save? It is the desire to bring up the family as it ought to be brought up, to add their help to civilization and to the Government. It is to enable them to pay their just taxes. You can never make taxation that acts exactly equal. One man is unfortunate, one man is born simple-minded; the State takes care of him. One man goes insane, and the State takes care of him. That is all taken care of in every State.

Now, how many are there—farmers, tenants, those that are not tenants—how many of them are in the railway service that are unfortunate? The fortunate people—and I measure my words—in the great mass during my service of almost 50 years in the House of Representatives—the fortunate people are the people who have civil employment from Uncle Sam. [Applause.]

The registers of the Civil Service Commission are wonderfully crowded—they are piling up and piling up. Can they all get in? No. They grumble. We had to pass a law that no Member of Congress should interfere in the operation of the civil-service act.

Now, I know it is ungracious; I know it is not popular; I know, perhaps, I am not benefiting myself personally, but I feel this way about it: My personal life and my political life are not worth three hoots. There are better men than I am who could succeed me, and probably more competent men. And all of us have constituents, if one went out with a search warrant, in the event of the death or defeat, who might succeed us and be our superior.

Oh, how it appeals to the heart. These poor men! I know cases where men who were in the Civil War, where they were in the War with Spain; I know many cases where they have been dropped from their civil positions on account of old age. But we have cared for them with a pension. We have just passed the Fuller bill, and I believe it has gone to the President. The bill for the Spanish War veterans, I believe, has been reported favorably in the Senate. I am for all proper pensions; but, first and above all, I am for keeping the law that this Congress and former Congresses have enacted in recent years that where people are in the Army or the Navy and become sightless or armless, where a hundred thousand rest in France, leaving widows with dependents, we are caring for them as never people were cared for before. We are giving to these widows and dependents, and with the inflation of our credit, with the inflation of our currency, they have a far greater claim upon all the people in asking for $30 a month, or $5 for the first child, $10 for the second, and so on. You pass this kind of legislation, at times illy considered, and the dollar goes down in purchasing capacity, but in God's chancery you have got to increase and make it good. All these things are to be thought of. I know it is useless to talk about this. I may see the duty and the wisdom and the propriety of it, and my voice may be lifted up, but they will say, "Oh, CANNON, what are you talking about; we are going to pass it." The gentleman from Ohio says it is the foundation for old-age pensions. When you make old-age pensions you make men say, "Oh, it is not necessary for me to save; if I live to be 60 or 70, the Government is going to take care of me; I will get a pension." Civilization, I say again, rests on the selfishness of the unit and upon the hearthstone. [Applause.]

There is where it rests, but here it will be proposed to follow that up so that everybody who gets to be a certain age will have a pension, and who is to pay it? Oh, it is to be paid by taxation, it is said; and when you do that, then I fear you beget inefficiency. [Applause.]

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I trust the gentleman will not forget the pending amendment, which is retroactive for a particular class of employees. It does honor to the humanitarian ideas of the gentleman who presented it, and it may be unfortunate that this legislation was not sooner put upon the statute books, but nobody knows how much is involved, although we are assured that not a great many people will be affected. I have no doubt there could be presented just as good arguments in favor of the rural mail carrier to go back to 1917, in favor of the city carrier to go back to 1917, and in favor of every other clerk who has been severed from the service since 1917. The committee does not recommend this legislation. The chairman said only that he would not personally oppose it. I think it very unwise, and I trust that the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I have been in favor of a retirement law for many years, believing it is a concomitant of the nonpartisan method of appointment under the civil service. There are two dangers with respect to the proposition. One is that after it becomes a law there will be an organized force of Government employees to use political pressure everywhere they can get it for the purpose of increasing the amount which they will receive out of the Treasury, and also of increasing the salaries which they are to receive to more than compensate for the amount which is to be deducted from their salary as a part of the sum to be raised. The other danger is that everyone who has been in the Government service heretofore will seek to be covered under the provisions of this bill, to receive the pension allowed, but to make no contribution at all to the fund. That is the proposition that is mildly stated as to a particular class in the pending amendment. If this amendment shall be agreed to, no one can well refuse hereafter to extend the time as to this class of employees back of 1917, or to include within the provisions of the law other employees in other branches of the service.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. I just want to make the statement that I quite agree with the gentleman upon the proposition of not paying in anything. I have an amendment that I expect to offer that no man shall be permitted to receive the benefits of this law until he has paid in at least 2½ per cent of the total salary for two years preceding.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is a matter of discussion.

Mr. BEGG. That puts him upon a par with the man who has been in for 10 years.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. You can not include everyone in a particular class unless you go back many years, and you can not select out one class without receiving pressure hereafter from every other class. I think the Government employees now in the service ought to receive the status provided by this law for the benefit of the public service, not merely for their own benefit. I think it is unwise to commence to tamper with the provisions by including other classes now out of the Government service, because we all know that if we commence we can not stop.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

There was no objection, and the Clerk again reported the Begg amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. HUDSPETH: Page 3, line 1, after the word "postmasters," insert "of the second, third, and fourth class," and strike out in line 5, page 3, the word "not."

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, this is a retirement bill, and it occurs to me that the second, third, and fourth class postmasters ought to come under the benefits of the bill. I agree with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that this bill ought to be in the interest of the public service. I want to say to the Members of this House that fourth-class postmasters in many portions of the country have resigned, and the people of the local communities have to supplement the salary in many instances out of their own pockets in order to get the benefits of mail delivery. I can see no reason why the second, third, and fourth class postmasters should not come under the benefits of this bill.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDSPETH. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. There are about 55,000 of them, are there not?

Mr. HUDSPETH. I do not know.

Mr. CANNON. Take the fourth-class postmasters; there are 40,000 of them, at least?

Mr. HUDSPETH. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. They were put under the civil service by order of President Taft?

Mr. HUDSPETH. I understood it was by order of President Wilson.

Mr. CANNON. I think Taft first, then I think Mr. Wilson followed suit.

Mr. HUDSPETH. He ratified it, I am sure.

Mr. CANNON. He ratified it.

Mr. HUDSPETH. And very properly.

Mr. CANNON. They were turned out almost universally by people who wanted their places, were they not?

Mr. HUDSPETH. I want to state to the gentleman from Illinois that they have not been turned out in my district. I have been trying to get one of them turned out for inefficiency, but they told me they were all under the civil service. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. Maybe the gentleman was not here when they were appointed.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I have been here for about a year, and I have been very energetically trying to get one of them out, because he failed to serve the Nation efficiently, and have not been able to do so, because they said they were under the civil service and it could not be done. But the rest of the postmasters in my district are efficient, patriotic men and women, and the Government is paying them a niggardly salary.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDSPETH. Yes.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Are there not others who are willing to take their places?

Mr. HUDSPETH. Not in many instances, I will say to the gentleman. The people in some of the local communities make up a fund in order to have their mail delivered in many cases, and you can not find many men who can afford to work for $175 a year in Texas in the arduous work as postmaster. It is one of the most important positions to the general public of any Uncle Sam has to bestow.

And I want to state to you that it is hard work. I make that statement in reply to some gentleman on the Republican side who says postmasters do not work.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDSPETH. I will.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Would it not be better to amend the law compensating the postmaster and give him a compensation that would be attractive?

Mr. HUDSPETH. Yes; that is a nice song they have been singing here for about three years, but it has not been any benefit to the second, third, and fourth class postmasters.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. If the amendment of the gentleman were adopted, he would retire a man on an allowance of $180 where the income from the post office was perhaps only $1.

Mr. HUDSPETH. And that dollar would buy a little coffee, at the present price at least 1 pound of sugar, and help to that extent. I will say to my friend that possibly in his State also postmasters, good men and true, are resigning every day because they can not live on the salary.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I think that is true, and they should be better compensated.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Then let us never miss an opportunity to help them.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. The gentleman's amendment proposes to compensate those retired from the service, not those occupying the position now.

Mr. HUDSPETH. That is some inducement, I will state to my friend, to stay there and serve the public at a loss, as many do from the West, as the gentleman knows, if he is conversant with conditions in the West. I do not want to miss an opportunity to help this kind of people, because you have got to have good public service. Somebody has got to serve as postmaster, and this great big, splendid Government of ours ought not to continue to require the postmasters who serve it and serve an expectant and hard-to-please public on Mexican sheep-herder's wages. You Republicans have been promising to raise salaries of second, third, and fourth class postmasters ever since I came here. Now make good on one single promise in your entire life.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDSPETH. I will.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. In reference to the form of the gentleman's amendment, does the gentleman desire to repeal the law now providing for the retired list in the Lighthouse Service?

Mr. HUDSPETH. No, sir.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman's amendment would do that as presented.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I do not think so. It does not put them in the present bill.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes; but the gentleman's amendment would do that.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Well, I did not intend to do that. I am trying to help these postmasters back in the sticks.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I was not referring to that. The gentleman's amendment to the bill as it stands excludes the Lighthouse Service.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I did not intend that. What would the gentleman from Illinois suggest?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If I were offering the amendment the gentleman has introduced here, I would say that hereafter postmasters of the first class shall not be included in the provisions of the act. I think that would accomplish the gentleman's purpose.

Mr. HUDSPETH. My sole purpose is to help these second, third, and fourth class postmasters, the hardest worked and poorest paid people on this earth, let me say to you, my good friends on both sides. The position of postmaster is one of great importance to every community. Measured by the service he renders, I think the people who receive mail—and most everyone does receive some character of mail—expect more at the hands of a postmaster than any other public servant. He does not get half enough pay. I am a young man yet. If my people permit, I am going to stay right here and hammer for more pay for our postmasters until I get it. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out lines 7, 8, and 9, page 3.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is trying to strike out an amendment which the committee adopted on yesterday.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained, and the Clerk will read.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. STRONG of Kansas having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Dudley, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 3218. An act for the relief of Martina Sena, Luis E. Armijo, and Maria Baca de Romero.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 12869) for the construction of a bridge across the Pentwater River or Pentwater Lake, Mich.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 9228) to authorize the establishment of a Coast Guard station on the coast of Lake Superior in Cook County, Minn.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 13677) making appropriations to supply a deficiency in the appropriations for the Federal control of transportation systems and to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WARREN, Mr. CURTIS, and Mr. UNDERWOOD as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

RETIREMENT OF CIVIL-SERVICE EMPLOYEES.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That for the purpose of determining the amount of annuity which retired employees shall receive, the following classifications and rates shall be established:

Class A shall include all employees to whom this act applies who shall have served the United States for a total period of 30 years or more. The annuity to a retired employee in this class shall equal 60 per cent of such employee's average annual basic salary, pay, or compensation from the United States for the 10 years next preceding the date on which he or she shall retire: Provided, That in no case shall an annuity in this class exceed $720 per annum or be less than $360 per annum.

Class B shall include all employees to whom this act applies who shall have served the United States for a total period of 27 years or more, but less than 30 years. The annuity to a retired employee in this class shall equal 54 per cent of such employee's average annual basic salary, pay, or compensation from the United States for the 10 years next preceding the date on which he or she shall retire: Provided, That in no case shall an annuity in this class exceed $648 per annum, or be less than $324 per annum.

Class C shall include all employees to whom this act applies who shall have served the United States for a total period of 24 years or more, but less than 27 years. The annuity to a retired employee in this class shall equal 48 per cent of such employee's average annual basic salary, pay, or compensation from the United States for the 10 years next preceding the date on which he or she shall retire: Provided, That in no case shall an annuity in this class exceed $576 per annum, or be less than $288 per annum.

Class D shall include all employees to whom this act applies who shall have served the United States for a total period of 21 years or more, but less than 24 years. The annuity to a retired employee in this class shall equal 42 per cent of such employee's average annual basic salary, pay, or compensation from the United States for the 10 years next preceding the date on which he or she shall retire: Provided, That in no case shall an annuity in this class exceed $504 per annum, or be less than $252 per annum.

Class E shall include all employees to whom this act applies who shall have served the United States for a total period of 18 years or more, but less than 21 years. The annuity to a retired employee in this class shall equal 36 per cent of such employee's average annual basic salary, pay, or compensation from the United States for the 10 years next preceding the date on which he or she shall retire: Provided, That in no case shall an annuity in this class exceed $432 per annum, or be less than $216 per annum.

Class F shall include all employees to whom this act applies who shall have served the United States for a total period of 15 years or more, but less than 18 years. The annuity to a retired employee in this class shall equal 30 per cent of such employee's average annual basic salary, pay, or compensation from the United States for the 10 years next preceding the date on which he or she shall retire: Provided, That in no case shall an annuity in this class exceed $360 per annum, or be less than $180 per annum.

The term "basic salary, pay, or compensation" wherever used in this act shall be so construed as to exclude from the operation of the act all bonuses, allowances, overtime pay, or salary, pay, or compensation given in addition to the base pay of the positions as fixed by law or regulation.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Page 5, after the word "regulation," line 25, insert: "Whenever the contribution, with interest, of the employee at the age of retirement will purchase an annuity of the kind provided for herein in excess of the annuity herein provided, the employee shall receive an annuity of the amount his contributions with interest will purchase."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska and Mr. OSBORNE rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 21, after the words "per annum," insert the following: "Any employee included in this class may upon his or her own application be eligible for retirement on the annuity herein provided."

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Chairman, the object of this provision is that one who has served 30 years, even if he has not reached the age of 65 or 70 years, whatever the limit is, may be eligible for retirement. It is based upon the provision of law which applies to officers in the Army and the Navy, section 1243 of the Revised Statutes, which makes them eligible to retire after 30 years' service. The amendment is drawn as nearly like the section referred to as the difference in conditions will permit—nearly in the language of that section. However, I will state that that section of the Revised Statutes leaves retirement within the discretion of the President——

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OSBORNE. I will.

Mr. CANNON. Can not these employees retire immediately and get their money back, with compound interest, if they want to retire before the retiring age? Are they not provided for otherwise in the bill?

Mr. OSBORNE. I do not so understand it.

Mr. CANNON. I think that is the case.

Mr. LEHLBACH. They draw their money down when they quit the service, with interest compounded.

Mr. CANNON. So that it would seem that ought to care for them.

Mr. LEHLBACH and Mr. GARD rose.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I was going to rise to oppose the amendment, but I will yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GARD. The gentleman from New Jersey is chairman of the committee, and I will defer to him.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I merely desire to say, Mr. Chairman, that such a provision is foreign to the fundamental purposes of this bill, which is to provide for efficiency in our departments of Government and give a practical opportunity to get rid of incompetency and inefficiency due to superannuation and old age. There is no merit in the proposition that a man 50 years of age who had entered the service at the age of 20 should be retired and draw pay from the Government when he is perfectly capable of earning his living. These annuities are not largesses or rewards to the workers for the Government, but they are to take care of those who no longer are able to take care of and provide for themselves, and manifestly the people coming under such an amendment would not be in that class.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I think the idea as expressed by the gentleman from California [Mr. OSBORNE] is not in accord with what should be the purpose of the bill. I am of those who believe in the merit of this bill as a concomitant of the classified civil-service work, because I believe where we establish a system of Government employment, where clerks are necessarily unable to compete in higher branches of private employment, in order to make it attractive to the highest class of men and women we are compelled to put in measures which will provide for them in time of illness or old age. But the test of the matter is efficiency and in providing increased compensation for persons in the service. Nor is the amendment offered by the gentleman from California comparable with the military and naval service of which he speaks. So it seems to me that in every other point of view we can not so enlarge this bill as to provide for the authorization of these annuities to persons who do not come within the period of disability or inefficiency. When disability occurs, when inefficiency exists, then the purpose of this bill is to protect the United States; but it is not the purpose of the bill—it should not be the purpose of the bill, at least—to bring in vast numbers of persons who by reason of a service of 30 years will take advantage of that service when they can render efficient service, take advantage of 30 years performance of duty to accept an annuity, when in reality they can do the work. I trust the amendment will not be agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. OSBORNE].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska: Page 3, line 18, after the word "next," strike out the remainder of line 18 and all of line 19 down to and including the word "retire" and insert in lieu thereof the words "following the first 10 years of service."

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, the question of the retirement of civil-service employees has been under serious consideration for several years.

On the 27th of September, 1905, the Treasury branch of the Civil Service Retirement Association held the first of their public meetings in Washington for the advocacy of that movement. At that time the clerks of the various departments were proceeding upon the presumption that the fund should be created by contributions from the clerks under the classified service and thus release the National Treasury entirely from any expense in connection with the movement.

At a later date some began to advocate the opinion that the National Treasury should bear the entire expense of the plan.

For several years those conflicting opinions delayed action, but they did serve the purpose of agitating the question before the country and the committees in Congress.

The plan now under consideration in the pending bill proposes to secure the major portion of this fund through contributions from the beneficiaries. The proponents of this bill have figured out the whole question to a satisfactory conclusion in their own minds and tell us that the Government will save money by the enactment of this bill. I hope that result will be achieved.

I am heartily in sympathy with the proposition to provide a fund from which payment can be made to worthy clerks whose disabilities compel them to withdraw from active duties. The existence of such a fund will enable the heads of the departments to grant release from service to several persons who really desire to retire with a moderate compensation.

While this is a very unfavorable time to support any plan that contemplates even in appearance a civil pension list, the arrangement furnished by the advocates of the bill seems to be very satisfactory on the lines of practical economy for the Government. For these reasons and accepting their conclusions as valid, I shall be glad to favor the passage of this bill.

I am heartily in favor of the Senate provision relative to the age of retirement; that is, 70 years. The House committee amendment fixed the age at 65, which would be far more expensive than the Senate provision. The Government would also lose in efficient service rather than gain. Hence I shall oppose the adoption of the committee amendment.

Moreover, I think this committee amendment is unfair to the Government from the standpoint of economy. It is unfair to those who are between the ages of 65 and 70. I could accept the theory underlying the explanation of the committee amendment were it not for my observations that stand emphatically against it.

Let me illustrate. You may go into the Government service—I speak of clerks in the departments rather than those in other lines of Government employment—and take all of the men and women in the departments of the Government between 65 and 70 years of age and then take an equal number, or take the whole number, if you wish, between 25 and 35 years of age. The first group, 65 to 70 years, will furnish a higher average grade of efficiency than the latter group—25 to 35. I know that from observation, not as a matter of theory. Knowing it as I do from the standpoint of observation, I can not support the proposition of the committee on the ground of governmental economy. Moreover, when you take men and women from 65 to 70 who have won their way up to that point and they have physical and mental ability to go on with their work, the Government is the gainer, rather than the clerks themselves, by their continuance.

I agree fully in the provision of the bill which furnishes relief for those whose physical condition may require a separation from the service. Under the law as it stands now and the provisions carried in this bill, the head of any department can meet the situation and meet it with the same relief that this bill provides for a compensation at retirement. I want to say to you, gentlemen, that I was among the first to begin the agitation for a retirement fund. I had the honor and pleasure of addressing the first large group of Government clerks that assembled in the city of Washington on September 27, 1905, to begin the campaign for this legislation. I am not going to abandon the principle where I find it of practical application now, but upon the basis of economy for the Government and fair and just dealing with the men and women between 65 and 70 years of age I stand for the Senate provision.

The second 10 years of service should be made the test period for retirement compensation, because the clerk will be at his best during those years.

The last 10 years of service preceding 65 will be the period in which a number of embarrassments may appear through ill health. The second 10 years of service comprise a period in which the real value of the clerk can be intelligently measured. In the last 10 years preceding 65 you will find more instances in which health fails, and the sick record of the clerk will disclose the fact that a considerable portion of time has been lost and reduction in grade will follow because of a reduction in physical ability to maintain oneself in the discharge of the average amount of service when the health and strength were good. This rule, if applied, will, I believe, be fair and just and give the proper measure for the proper period when the actual work of the clerk to the Government can be intelligently and wisely determined.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I confess that I have not heretofore given this question the attention that it merits. Members of Congress are too busy with public matters to specialize in all subjects. I do not enjoy the privilege of being a member of the committee that has been giving this bill close study.

The question of retiring Government employees has been discussed at intervals for many years. It has been taken up and discussed more or less informally on numerous occasions since I have been a Member of Congress. I am sure that people generally throughout the country do not fully appreciate the necessity for legislation along the lines of this bill. Our citizens are far removed from governmental activities and do not come into contact with the work of the various departments. Therefore they do not have an opportunity to see these employees and judge of their efficiency. I have had some prejudice against their retirement and have felt that it would entail an extra drain upon the United States Treasury at a time when every effort should be made to economize.

After a more careful study of the principle involved in the bill and the report on it by the committee I am thoroughly convinced that a vote for this bill can be justified on the three grounds of efficiency, economy, and humanity.

One of the reasons why there is so much complaint against delays in the Government service is because there are so many old, infirm, and inactive employees. Everybody knows that private offices transact business very much more expeditiously than Government offices. Of course, Government employees can not afford to make mistakes. They must guard against criticism and must be exceptionally careful. With alert, active, and young employees there is no question but what the efficiency of the service would be greatly increased. One inefficient employee delays many others, as everyone knows. It would also be more economical for the Government to retire these employees at the pay indicated for the various classes in this bill or even at full pay rather than to keep them on the pay roll. Our experience in private life is that inefficient clerical help is never economical.

I believe it would effect a large saving of money for the Government if only the very best clerical assistance that could be obtained were employed. All the leading corporations are adopting a retirement system, and this same policy is recommended for governmental employees. There is no economy in slow help or inefficient service. Everyone is demanding expeditious action.

Again, this bill can be justified from a purely humanitarian standpoint. You may say what you will, but no head of a bureau is going to take the responsibility of retiring old and infirm clerks. Members of Congress think that they would do so if they were the heads of bureaus and the responsibility were placed upon them. However, the fact remains that no head of a department has done so in the past, which is sufficient to convince me that no head of a department will take the responsibility in the future of turning these old employees out. I think, therefore, that it would add to the efficiency of the service to pass this retirement bill. It would be more economical for the Government and would be humane.

I do not think we should deceive ourselves. I believe that the amounts allowed the various clerks under section 2 of this bill will be increased in time. Old and infirm retired employees can not live upon the amounts provided, and amendments will be asked of Congress to increase them. I do not doubt but what Congress, responding to public sentiment, will feel justified in granting the increases.

I do not know that I fully agree with all the details of the bill. With the little study that I have been able to give it, I am inclined to think that there should be automatic retirement at a certain age. I believe that the provision in the bill allowing employees to make application to remain longer will be abused. I believe that the head of every department or bureau who has aged clerks will yield to their importunities and permit them to remain in the service as long as the law will allow them. When an exception is made for one employee it is very difficult not to make an exception of another. I do not believe that any elasticity should be given in the act. Government employees will then know that there is not a chance of their remaining upon the pay roll any longer, and that they are to be retired at a certain definite specified time. They will begin to make provision against that time, and there will be no uncertainty about it.

It has been stated on the floor in this debate that the heads of the various departments can now dismiss inefficient clerks. However, this authority has never been exercised. My fear is that under the elastic provision of section 6 of this bill, inefficient employees will be retained after the age limit has been reached. I want to utter a word of warning against this provision. It will be abused and will permit discrimination. I would much prefer to have a definite age limit fixed. I grant you there are men and women over the age limit who could serve the Government efficiently and well after they become 65, but an arbitrary limit ought to be fixed. If 65 years is not the correct one, then the experience of other countries and business establishments should be drawn upon and the proper age limit should be fixed. What I am arguing is for a definite limit, so that employees will know years in advance when they are to be retired. They will then begin to make preparations for it. They would know that there is absolutely no uncertainty about it and that there is no chance to remain in the Government service.

I am not so sure that I would place the administrative features of the bill under the Commissioner of Pensions. My judgment is that a new bureau in the Department of the Interior or some other department should be created. The responsibility should then be placed upon the head of that particular bureau to carry out the purposes of this measure. Placing the responsibility upon the Commissioner of Pensions means that it will fall largely upon some subordinate in his office. I object to this as the matter is too important. The responsibility should be placed upon some person who is able to give it his undivided attention, so that the best results can be obtained. He ought not to have any other duties and should be given an opportunity to study this question alone. Other legislation supplemental to this will be required, and he should collect all the data called for or required by the various committees of Congress.

In order to further supplement my remarks showing the necessity for this legislation, I submit the following statement clipped from the Washington Star, which is a most convincing argument, in my judgment, in favor of retirement legislation:

AGED WORKERS ILLUSTRATE NEED FOR RETIREMENT LAW—TWENTY-SEVEN EMPLOYEES OVER 80 YEARS OLD AT WORK IN PENSION BUREAU, UNABLE, AFTER YEARS OF SERVICE, TO RESIGN.

As a concrete example of the necessity for the enactment of a retirement law for civil-service employees, Commissioner Gaylord M. Saltzgaber, of the Pension Bureau, to-day pointed out that there are 27 employees of his bureau who are over 80 years old.

Speaking as of April 1, 1920, Commissioner Saltzgaber declared that there were 844 employees in the classified civil service in the Pension Bureau, of which number 27 were over 80 years of age, 78 were between 75 and 80, 91 were between 70 and 75 years, and 86 were between 65 and 70 years, a total of 282, or 33.41 per cent over 65 years old. The average age of all employees is about 58½ years.

"The oldest male employee was born March 17, 1831, and has consequently just celebrated his eighty-ninth birthday," said Mr. Saltzgaber. "He is a Civil War veteran, and has been in the civil service nearly 37 years. The oldest female employee was born August 25, 1834, and is therefore in her eighty-sixth year. Her husband served in the United States Marine Corps, and she has been in the civil service nearly 30 years."

SERVED 57 YEARS.

"In respect to length of service, it is found that one employee has been in the civil service more than 57 years, another for more than 53½ years, and still another for more than 52 years. In addition to these, 50 others have been in the service for periods ranging from 40 to 50 years and 261 have been in the service from 30 to 40 years. The average period of service for all employees in the bureau is 26.15 years.

"It has been estimated that there would be a clear saving to the Government of $136,550 annually by retiring all those in the Bureau of Pensions over 70 years of age. This amount represents the difference between the aggregate base pay and the aggregate annuities; it does not include, however, any allowance for bonus. Should a bonus of $240 for the next fiscal year be granted, then the saving would be increased by $47,040, or a total saving during the next fiscal year of $183,590. This estimate is based upon the assumption that none of the vacancies caused by retiring those over 70 will be filled," continued Mr. Saltzgaber.

The foregoing is a striking example of the necessity for a retirement law, and it is believed that similar conditions may be found in many other branches of the Government service, especially in this city.

There are in the Government service thousands of employees who have served their Government faithfully, many of them for 30, 40, or 50 years or more, and who now find themselves in the evening of life unable to leave the service and live upon their meager accumulations. In many instances it has been impossible for them to accumulate a sufficient sum to provide for old age, and consequently they are compelled to remain in the service in order to eke out a living. Many of them are suffering from infirmities due to age and in some instances from incurable diseases.

MANY UNABLE TO WORK.

"A great many are wholly or in large part inefficient and should be retired, but it may be said to the credit of the administrative officials that not one of them could be so heartless as to discharge these aged employees so long as it is possible to retain them on the rolls under existing laws and regulations," declared an official.

"These old people have been watching Congress year by year, hoping and praying that a retirement law will be enacted. Some are bedridden and are being carried on the rolls without pay in the hope that the retirement bill will be enacted into a law and will afford them some measure of relief in their last days.

"I have an abiding faith that this Congress will recognize that a retirement law will make for real efficiency and economy in the service and that as a measure of justice to the employees its enactment should no longer be delayed. The preponderance of evidence presented by Government officials at the hearings as well as recommendations incorporated in their annual reports warrants the statement that the administrative officers of the Government are practically unanimous in support of retirement legislation."

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I hope this amendment will not be adopted. It is peculiarly worded, but it is intended in effect to mean that in case of a man's retirement the compensation will be based upon the second 10 years preceding the date upon which he shall retire. I am a little bit surprised at the argument of my friend from Nebraska [Mr. ANDREWS] to-day and yesterday. Yesterday he stated that in the years from 25 to 35 the party would not give the service that he would between the years of 35 and 45.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I will.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. The period of 25 to 35 compared with the period of 65 to 75, average service.

Mr. RAKER. I understood the gentleman to say from 35 to 45. But be that as it may, if the party is in 10 years and then another period of 10 years, you ought to figure on the last 10 years of the service and not upon the first 10 years, for this reason: Let us be frank. In the last 10 years they will know that they must keep up an efficiency in work so as not to be demoted, but if they make the first 10 years good they will then begin to put on the soft pedal. Instead of being virile and giving all the energy that they ought to give to the Government during the last 10 years of their service they can well afford to change the status.

Mr. VAILE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I will.

Mr. VAILE. I did not understand that the amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska was based on the first 10 years.

Mr. RAKER. It does not say that, but that is what it means.

Mr. VAILE. The gentleman is referring to the second 10 years.

Mr. RAKER. I am hitting the first 10 years first, and then I will come to the second 10 years.

Mr. LEHLBACH. If the gentleman will yield, a man may be only 20 years in the service, and that would be the first 10 years.

Mr. RAKER. That is right. The point I am getting at is whether it is the first 10 years or the second 10 years that ought to be the standard. It ought to be the last 10 years. If you fix the prior 10 years, anyone can see that there will be a breaking down. There will be a slack, there will be a reason to slack, because it is wholly immaterial what they get during the last 10 years, because their compensation will be fixed upon the prior 10 years instead of the last 10 years.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. It means that the period for fixing the average rate will be 10 to 20 years after 10 years have been actually served.

Mr. RAKER. That is the point. Let us fix it as the bill has it. Leave it that the compensation will be according to the average service for the 10 years next preceding the time of separation from the service, and the party, then, will all the time have an interest in himself and have an interest in the Government, so that he will get the highest wage that his ability commands in the department. Do not leave it so that he may constantly and continually be slacking in the work.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I will.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. Is it not also a fact that even if an employee is efficient during the last 10 years, he receives the highest salary during the term?

Mr. RAKER. That is true. But I still wanted to get this before the committee again. That ought to be the fact; necessarily it should be the fact; but if you fix the prior period before the 10 years in which he resigns, it is human nature, so far as retirement is concerned, to slack in the work, because if a man is demoted from a $1,500 job to a $1,400 and then to $1,300 and then to $1,200——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RAKER. I ask unanimous consent for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to proceed for one minute more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RAKER. Then if you retire, your compensation will be fixed not upon your last 10 years' work but upon the 10 years prior, when you had established your record and ought to have maintained it. That is not right. Let us tote fair on this measure.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I will.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. Is it not a fact that all astute and sound business men make it an invariable rule never to demote an employee or reduce his salary, but, rather, prefer to discharge him? They never place before an employee any obstacle, but always seek to give him encouragement.

Mr. RAKER. That must be of necessity the final result. Where an inducement is held out——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has again expired.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment be now closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey moves that all debate on the amendment be now closed. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. ANDREWS].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That for the purposes of this act and subject to the provisions of section 10 hereof, the period of service shall be computed from the date of original employment, whether as a classified or unclassified employee in the civil service of the United States, and shall include periods of service at different times and services in one or more departments, branches, or independent offices of the Government, and shall also include service performed under authority of the United States beyond seas, and honorable service in the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard of the United States: Provided, That in the case of an employee who is eligible for and elects to receive a pension under any law, or compensation under the war-risk insurance act, the period of his or her military or naval service shall not be included for the purpose of assignment to classes defined in section 2 hereof, but nothing contained in this act shall be so construed as to affect in any manner his or her right to a pension, or to compensation under the war-risk insurance act, in addition to the annuity herein provided.

It is further provided that in computing length of service for the purposes of this act all periods of separation from the service shall be excluded, and that in the case of substitutes in the Postal Service only periods of active employment shall be included.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 6, line 19, after the word "service," insert the words "upon which such pension or compensation is based."

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of the amendment is simply to clarify the meaning and to render certain what was intended by this proviso.

The provisions of this section are that in computing the length of service on which the retirement annuity is to be based all service for the United States, including military and naval service, shall be added in, but if based on that military or naval service a pension or compensation is being received from the Government, that period upon which the pension or compensation is based would not also be included in figuring what civil pension or retirement the individual is to receive.

Now, it has been suggested that possibly all military or naval service would be treated as an entity and not as different periods considered as separate. A situation might arise like this, that a Civil War veteran having served in the Civil War may be drawing a pension, and he may subsequently be employed in substantially a civil capacity, but theoretically and technically in the Army, under the act of 1886, which provides for the enlistment of general-service clerks who perform clerical service; and if it be construed that the military service be considered as a whole, because a man is drawing a pension based on his war service in the Civil War, you will not be entitled to add in his service as a clerk subsequent to and in accordance with the act of 1886. That, of course, is manifestly not the intention. It is to clarify that that the amendment is offered.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New Jersey yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes.

Mr. GARD. I did not catch the gentleman's amendment. Will he kindly advise me what it is?

Mr. LEHLBACH. In line 19, page 6, where it says the period of his military or naval service shall not be included, after the word "service" are inserted the words "upon which such pension or compensation is based," so that it will read, "the period of his or her military or naval service upon which such pension or compensation is based shall not be included," so that if a man subsequently serves in what is construed to be a military or naval capacity, the service outside of that service upon which the pension is based shall not be excluded.

Mr. BEE. Let me suggest to the gentleman from New Jersey that a general-service clerk is an enlisted man under the law.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes.

Mr. BEE. And, although he renders no military service, yet his time is running on in the service of the United States.

Mr. LEHLBACH. And such time so running is included in the computation of the service. Otherwise this other service to the Government is entitled to be added in. If he was a Civil War veteran, he could not include that Civil War service, but he ought not to be debarred from including the other clerical service.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Chairman, I find myself approaching this bill with great difficulty. I can not reconcile myself in its entirety to the question of a civil pension, yet I realize that often in Government we reach "a condition, and not theory."

When we established a system of civil-service employment in the Government we paved the way eventually and certainly for legislation of this character. I have sometimes wondered whether the Government would not thrive better, whether its citizenship would not be better subserved if we wiped from the statute books the civil-service provisions altogether.

Allow me to suggest to the committee that under our present system we appoint a man to a civil-service position and say to him, "Your appointment is for your natural life, during good behavior." Thereby we take away from him all initiative, all ambition, all desire to improve himself in the certain knowledge that as the years roll on he will have employment. Therefore the time comes when he is no longer needed by the Government; his efficiency is so impaired by age or infirmity that he can no longer carry on his duties and functions. Then the question comes what to do with him. It is all right to say, "Turn him out." I had service on a school board for many years and many a time has the school board in solemn conclave discharged an old teacher merely to have him come into the office the next morning and be put back, because you just simply can not do otherwise. But I do think there ought to be provision by which the machinery of this legislation should be assumed by the Government and the expense of that machinery borne by the Government and that the employees themselves should raise the fund necessary for the compensation. That will not be a great deal to pay out on the administration.

What I fear is the future. I fear the time is going to come when we are going to establish a system of civil pensions in this country, just as the suggestion was made here a few months ago when the bill was passed by which any man who had ever been in the service of the United States and was injured in any kind of accident should be cared for by the Government. We are facing too much paternalism in our Government.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEE. Yes.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. Is the gentleman informed as to whether or not there was a less percentage of old employees under the old rule of "to the victors belong the spoils" than under the civil-service régime?

Mr. BEE. I do not know as to that. I will say to the gentleman that when I was a very young man I was employed as a general-service clerk in the Army of the United States for three years. I saw coming over me that spirit of lack of endeavor, destining me as certainly as the sun shines to spend the rest of my life as a service clerk.

Just a few days ago I had a letter from three men, with whom in my boyhood I worked side by side. They were older than I was. To-day they are still working as service clerks at $100 or $125 a month, with their families to support. The point I seek to urge is this, that the only purpose of this legislation is to increase the efficiency of the Government service, and as the gentleman from Oklahoma well said a few minutes ago, it is not only to promote the efficiency of the Government but the economy of it in getting rid of aged and infirm men whom you have not the heart to turn out in the street. It is all right to say that men should accumulate, but in this country men do not accumulate on salaries. You can not build salaries big enough for men to accumulate upon them. The result is that you have got in the Government service hundreds and hundreds of old men and women whom we have simply got to take care of, and the fundamental reason why we must take care of them is because we established the civil-service system originally.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BEE. I ask unanimous consent that my time be extended one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that his time be extended one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. The gentleman is aware of the fact that every business house figures that a change of employees results in an expense to the business.

Mr. BEE. Oh, I understand that.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. And that the fewer changes you have the greater the efficiency and the less the expense.

Mr. BEE. I understand that, and I can see that the civil-service system is a permanent thing. I am not talking about the civil service in that light, except to say that the men who wrote the civil-service law on the statute books of this Government laid the foundation for the retirement law, because they fixed it so that the men who went into the Government service, with the certainty of a lifetime tenure, lost the ambition and initiative that other men in other lines of endeavor are stimulated to have. Therefore we must have something of this kind in order to promote efficiency in the Government.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, in calling attention to the proposed amendment submitted by the chairman of the committee [Mr. LEHLBACH] I desire to have made more clear, if possible, the meaning of section 3, with particular respect to line 9 on page 6.

The purpose of the bill, as I take it, is for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and I can only repeat that it has always seemed to me that when once we have established the civil service, when once we have made a service of the United States based upon merit, and have thereby created a system of permanent employment not depending upon political change or the whim or caprice of the appointing person; when we have established a permanency of employment, necessarily we are forced to pass some legislation affecting disability and retirement. But I note in section 3, page 6—

That for the purposes of this act and subject to the provisions of section 10 hereof, the period of service shall be computed from the date of original employment, whether as a classified or unclassified employee in the civil service of the United States, and shall include periods of service at different times and services in one or more departments, branches, or independent offices of the Government.

I desire to ask the chairman of the committee if it be his idea to include in the benefits of this retirement act one who was entirely in the unclassified service and who never got into the real classified civil service? Because there may be such a case. I do not know that there is, but there may be such a case as an unclassified employee serving the required length of time, but never getting into the civil service at all. Is he now, by virtue of the provisions of section 3, in line 9, included in the provisions of this civil-service retirement bill?

Mr. LEHLBACH. If the gentleman will yield, I will be glad to answer him.

Mr. GARD. Yes; I will be glad to yield.

Mr. LEHLBACH. He is not; and no person is included who is not in the classified civil service, unless he comes within the few exceptions in the paragraph on page 2, where the exceptions are stated to include American employees of the Panama Canal above the grade of laborer, superintendents of United States national cemeteries, employees of the Library of Congress, and the Botanic Gardens. With those few exceptions no one who is not in the classified civil service of the United States is entitled to retire under the provisions of this act. He must be in the classified civil service. Now, when the time comes for his retirement, his annuity is based upon the length of his service to the Government. It may be that a person who has served in the classified service, and who in that service has reached the retirement age has in the past, for the period of a few years, possibly, begun his service as an unclassified employee, having been afterwards transferred to the classified service, or he may have been in the late war in the military or naval service, and has from that entered the classified service, so that the various services to the Government in which he has engaged may be included in the period of service upon which the annuity is based. But the annuity only applies to him if he is, at the time he becomes eligible, a classified civil-service employee. The act further provides in section 10 that if a person in the unclassified service comes into the classified service and becomes eligible to retirement, but as an unclassified employee has not made those contributions which those in the classified service have made, he can not take advantage of his service in the unclassified position in getting his annuity without paying into the retirement fund such an amount as he would have paid had he been in the classified service for that period. I think that covers the case.

Mr. GARD. The point to which I desire to call the attention of the gentleman for further information is this: Of course, I am sympathetic, as everyone is, with the inclusion of the military and naval service. That ought to be granted. But suppose a person was in the unclassified service, say, for 14 years and only in the classified service for 1 year. By the provisions of section 3 and the other provisions of the act he comes within the purview of the act, notwithstanding the fact that only for a very limited period has he been in the classified civil service.

Mr. LEHLBACH. But in order to take advantage of that unclassified tenure he must pay into the fund those contributions which he would have made had the position which he was occupying been classified.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired, and the question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, line 3, after the word "service," insert "and so much of any period of leave of absence as may exceed six months."

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, the committee has no objection to that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That any employee to whom this act applies who shall have served for a total period of not less than 15 years, and who, before reaching the retirement age as fixed in section 1 hereof, becomes totally disabled for useful and efficient service by reason of disease or injury not due to vicious habits, intemperance, or willful misconduct on the part of the employee, shall upon his or her own application or upon the request or order of the head of the department, branch, or independent office concerned, be retired on an annuity under the provisions of section 2 hereof: Provided, however, That no employee shall be retired under the provisions of this section until examined by a medical officer of the United States or a duly qualified physician or surgeon or board of physicians or surgeons designated by the Commissioner of Pensions for that purpose and found to be disabled in the degree and in the manner specified herein.

Every annuitant retired under the provisions of this section, unless the disability for which retired is permanent in character, shall, at the expiration of one year from the date of such retirement and annually thereafter until reaching the retirement age as defined in section 1 hereof, be examined under direction of the Commissioner of Pensions by a medical officer of the United States, or a duly qualified physician or surgeon or board of physicians or surgeons designated by the Commissioner of Pensions for that purpose, in order to ascertain the nature and degree of the annuitant's disability, if any; if the annuitant recovers and is restored to his or her former earning capacity before reaching the retirement age, payment of the annuity shall be discontinued from the date of the medical examination showing such recovery; if the annuitant fails to appear for examination as required under this section, payment of the annuity shall be suspended until continuance of the disability has been satisfactorily established. The Commissioner of Pensions is hereby authorized to order or direct at any time such medical or other examination as he shall deem necessary to determine the facts relative to the nature and degree of disability of any employee retired on an annuity under this section.

Fees for examinations made under the provisions of this section by physicians or surgeons who are not medical officers of the United States shall be fixed by the Commissioner of Pensions, and such fees, together with the employee's reasonable traveling and other expenses incurred in order to submit to such examinations, shall be paid out of the appropriations for the cost of administering this act.

In all cases where the annuity is discontinued under the provisions of this section before the annuitant has received a sum equal to the total amount of his or her contributions, with accrued interest, the difference shall be paid to the retired employee, or to his or her estate, upon, application therefor in such form and manner as the Commissioner of Pensions may direct.

No person shall be entitled to receive an annuity under the provisions of this act, and compensation under the provisions of the act of September 7, 1916, entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," covering the same period of time; but this provision shall not be so construed as to bar the right of any claimant to the greater benefit conferred by either act for any part of the same period of time.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of calling the gentleman's attention to the beginning of section 5, that any employee who shall have served for a total period of not less than 15 years who becomes totally disabled for useful and efficient service by reason of disease or injury not due to vicious habits, intemperance, or willful misconduct shall be entitled to the benefits of section 2 of the bill, and so forth. Why should this section limit the relief to an employee who has served 15 years and the relief be denied to a man who has served 13 years, 12 years, or 9 years, if he is injured in the service and becomes disabled?

Mr. LEHLBACH. For this reason: This is not a workman's compensation act, but is a retirement act, and retirement is in part based on the length of service to the Government. If a man has served 15 years or more and becomes of a certain age, by reason of that age he is deemed no longer able to render able and efficient service and he is retired on an annuity. If by reason of disease or injury, having served that length of time, he becomes disabled, he is entitled to the annuity, notwithstanding he has not reached the age. In other words, because he is disabled by disease or injury rather than by old age, under this section he is entitled to the benefits of the act. In the case that the gentleman speaks of, that has been provided for by Congress in the compensation act, which compensates a man for that injury. This is not compensation for injury, but it is retirement on an annuity for disability.

Mr. JUUL. I understand that; but where the man becomes totally disabled by disease or injury, not through vicious habits, intemperance, or willful misconduct on his part, and he has been in the service only 14 years he is not entitled to the benefits of the act. Why should you deny him the benefits of the act if he has been in the service 14 years and give it to the man who has been in 15 years?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Because the retirement is based largely on the fact that he has served the Government a certain length of time. You must draw the line somewhere, and we draw it at 15 years instead of 14 years. A man might be in the Government service six months and if he was disabled, according to the gentleman's view he would be entitled to the benefits of the act.

Mr. JUUL. If he was disabled in the service of the Government, he ought to be cared for, whether it is 10 years or 15 years.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I do not agree with the gentleman.

Mr. JUUL. There is where the chairman and I disagree.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment: Section 5, page 7, line 22, strike out the words "for useful and efficient service."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, line 22, strike out the words "for useful and efficient service."

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, the provisions of section 5, as I read them, are intended to afford protection for one who becomes totally disabled in some respects outside the service. Because I take it if he is injured in the service the provisions of the United States workman's compensation law applies to all classes of Federal employees. But if he is injured or has some illness not a matter in the performance of his official duties, then section 5 provides that if he becomes totally disabled for efficient and useful service by reason of disease or injury not due to his vicious habits, intemperance, or willful misconduct, he shall on his own application become the beneficiary of section 2. What I am led to inquire in offering the amendment is whether it is the intention of the committee to put a hard and fast rule of finding of a medical disability, or is it the intent to have a varying rule of disability with a qualification that one may be disabled for useful and efficient service? It would seem to me, and I offer it for the judgment of the chairman and the members of the committee, that if one is to come within the provisions of this law of retirement without reaching the retirement age, the disability should be permanent. The qualifying words "disabled for useful and efficient service" may be such as to include a man who is on the actual border line of service, whereas if force and compulsion of the medical finding is total disability, then it would seem to me that in that event a reason would be established for their retirement when they have not in fact reached the retirement age.

Mr. LEHLBACH. In the first place, Mr. Chairman, this does not exclude one who has sustained injury in the course of employment. The person so injured has his election whether he will come under the terms of this act or under the act of September, 1916.

Mr. GARD. He can take the one that pays him the most.

Mr. LEHLBACH. He has that right. In the second place, the total disability need not be permanent. The gentleman will notice that the section provides that if on the examination they find that it is not a total disability, then the annuity ceases, because the man ought to be back at work.

But the words "total disability" must have reference to his disability to do something, or must be something to which they have reference. Disability from what? Disability from doing useful and efficient service. I think it leaves the nature of the disability hanging in the air to strike out the words the gentleman from Ohio suggests.

Mr. GARD. The gentleman thinks they should not be stricken out?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I think they should not be.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That all employees to whom this act applies shall, upon the expiration of 90 days next succeeding its passage, if of retirement age, or thereafter on arriving at retirement age as defined in section 1 hereof, be automatically separated from the service, and all salary, pay, or compensation shall cease from that date, and it shall be the duty of the head of each department, branch, or independent office of the Government to notify such employees under his direction of the date of such separation from the service at least 60 days in advance thereof: Provided, That if within 60 days after the passage of this act or not less than 30 days before the arrival of an employee at the age of retirement, the head of the department, branch, or independent office of the Government in which he or she is employed certifies to the Civil Service Commission that by reason of his or her efficiency and willingness to remain in the civil service of the United States the continuance of such employee therein would be advantageous to the public service, such employee may be retained for a term not exceeding two years upon certification by the Civil Service Commission, and at the end of the two years he or she may, by similar certification, be continued for an additional term not exceeding two years, and so on: Provided, however, That at the end of 10 years after this act becomes effective no employee shall be continued in the civil service of the United States beyond the age of retirement defined in section 1 hereof for more than four years.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. LUCE: Page 11, line 1, insert before the word "certification," the words "approval and," and in line 2 of the same page before the word "certification" the words "approval and."

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, this is the amendment that I said yesterday would be suggested at the proper place.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I desire to state that the committee approves the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] is the amendment to which I called attention yesterday in the discussion of this bill. I have no purpose now except to further the discussion so that we may thoroughly understand what is necessary to be done in the matter. It seemed to me then, and it seems to me now, that there always has been a difficulty, and always will be a difficulty, in having the head of a department, upon his own initiative, strike a deserving and aged person from the rolls of employment, notwithstanding the fact that that person may not be of the proper degree of efficiency. There must be in my opinion some method of separating superannuated and inefficient employees from the service other than through the head of a department. I realize that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts goes in the right direction. Whether it goes sufficiently far or not is the purpose to which I am now speaking.

I would state that the successful operation of this law must depend upon a board of retirement. In other words, I believe that before a bill can be made to operate successfully you must take away from the heads of the divisions, the immediate employer of the men or women, the pressure of influence, personal and political, which would be brought upon them to continue the inefficient servant in office, and I think it is essential to the carrying out of the provisions of the bill to establish either an independent board of retirement, or to say that the Civil Service Commission is the body that must determine whether or not these persons shall be continued in the service. My suggestion is, and I confess that I have not got it sufficiently worked out except to offer it to the committee as a suggestion, that instead of limiting it, even so far as the gentleman from Massachusetts limits it, I would go so far as to strike out the provisions of the approval or finding of the head of the department and place the matter in the hands of the Civil Service Commission as a board of retirement. I have been preparing an amendment of that kind but I have not got it sufficiently worked out to present it finally. I am hopeful that the matter may be discussed by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] and by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. ANDREWS] who have had great experience in matters along this line. Is it advisable at all to have any discretion of continuation of employment left in the person at the head of a department, or is it better to have the entire discretion or continuance of employment left, say, in the Civil Service Commission? I would be glad to hear from both the gentleman from Massachusetts and the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. If this were simply a matter of retirement, I should not perhaps take issue at all with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD], but this is not only retirement, but retention, and the purpose of the section is to handle this question of whether men shall be retained. In this particular it seems to me that the superior of the employee ought certainly be given opportunity to say whether he wants the man retained or not. For that reason I would have both concur, the superior and the Civil Service Commission. The gentleman has suggested the creation of a board of retirement. It seems to me that this provision in effect turns the Civil Service Commission into such a board, and saves us from the necessity of adding another board to the roster of the Government. For my own part I should be quite willing that the Civil Service Commission assume this function.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. Yes.

Mr. JUUL. I want to ask the gentleman what he thinks will be the effect of this bill, whether the employee will seek to sever his connection with the service when he may under this act, or seek to be retained in the service, taking into consideration that there is a provision here for about 60 per cent of the pay.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, our experience in Massachusetts with the teachers' system is that some teachers desire to stay and some desire to go.

Mr. JUUL. On a similar basis?

Mr. LUCE. On a similar basis. It depends very largely upon the physical condition of the person.

Mr. JUUL. Does not the gentleman think that the average individual between 60 and 70 years of age can go out in life and earn the missing 40 per cent, and do it more easily than he could earning the total 100 per cent by remaining in the service?

Mr. LUCE. That brings in the personal equation. Conditions vary so much it is impossible to generalize. Some persons have lost all initiative and practically all power of self-reliance through long retention in the public service. A few perhaps have enterprise and confidence and courage enough to do what the gentleman suggests, but I fancy most of them are lacking in that power.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman from Nebraska yield to have the amendment again reported?

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

There was no objection.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] proposes to use the Civil Service Commission as a political "bumper."

Mr. Chairman, at this point some wise provision should be made for the determination of the question at issue. If you adopt the amendment as proposed, you bring in the Civil Service Commission to determine a question which is outside the legal jurisdiction and primary purpose of that commission. Moreover, you are inviting into the affairs of the executive departments an agency that might become the greatest trouble maker that can be imagined. It may seem strange that I should make a remark of that character, but having had some direct observation I may cite one or two instances. I remember very distinctly that when the President of the United States and the Secretary of the Treasury had decided that a certain course was proper in regard to certain appointments, the Civil Service Commission, taking issue in the matter, went across lots and called upon the accounting officers to disallow the salaries of the officers in question upon the dictum of the commission itself. Any organization that will go to that limit is willing to assume unwarranted jurisdiction where great trouble might follow. Take another instance. The merit system is discussed with a great deal of fluency even by members of the Civil Service Commission after they enter upon that commission. Not long since a former Member of this House went to the Treasury Department and urged the promotion of a clerk from $1,400 to $1,600 per annum. Unfortunately the appointment clerk, or somebody in the division of appointments, gave to that former Member of Congress all the files in the case, and he traveled the town for a day and a half. He went to the office in which the clerk was employed and for an hour or two hours sought to secure a reversal of the recommendation of the officer who had given a recommendation in favor of somebody else for the promotion. That man to-day is at the head of the Civil Service Commission. And there is the merit system; there is an illustration as to the outcome of a policy embodied in this amendment. With these graphic examples in my mind and knowing them to be facts, I can not support the amendment. Of course, political pressure will manifest itself in connection with the administration of this act. The Civil Service Commission, however, is not the proper agency to deal with this question. There should be a retirement board whose members are thoroughly acquainted with the conditions and requirements of departmental life. All cases should be referred to that board as they reach the ages of retirement. At least one member of that board should be a competent physician.

The findings of such a board would be far more valuable than those of the Civil Service Commission. It would operate in harmony with the needs and policies of the executive branches of the service. It would not in any sense become a trouble maker, as the Civil Service Commission surely would. Such a board could be kept in close touch with the needs of the various branches of the service, the abilities and qualifications of the clerks arriving at the ages of retirement, and also the scope of the demands upon the retirement fund. Wise discretion exercised along those lines would become very economical in the interests of the Government and also the clerks. At best, the work of the Civil Service Commission would be largely perfunctory, while that of the board could be directed along lines of careful investigation in perfect accord with the heads of the various departments and independent organizations. With such an arrangement the retirement law can be enforced in such a way as to deal equitably and justly with the clerks on the one hand and the Government on the other and thus contribute very largely toward increased efficiency and economy.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Tennessee rise?

Mr. MOON. For the purpose of moving to amend by striking out this whole section.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I have a perfecting amendment to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska has a perfecting amendment and will be recognized.

Mr. MOON. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the gentleman from Tennessee will be recognized. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. EVANS of Nebraska: Page 10, line 16, after the word "thereof" insert "provided that the head of a department, branch, or independent office of the Government from which any employee or employees are automatically retired shall certify to the Civil Service Commission the names, ages, position, class, and percentage of inefficiency of such employees, and in all cases where such percentage is 90 or over no employee shall be permitted in such department, branch, or independent office by reason of the retirement of any such employee or employees.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, it has been stated that one of the chief purposes of this bill is to dispose of inefficient employees and to produce economical administration. It has been stated and has been suggested that the Committee on Appropriations can control this question when they come to make the general appropriations. There is one condition, however, which should be borne in mind. This bill by its terms upon its passage immediately becomes effective and under the statements which have been distributed to the Members there are at least 5,000 employees to be effected by this bill who are 100 per cent inefficient, and yet having the difficulties which have been brought to our attention by the chairmen of the committees which make appropriations we know the difficulty——

Mr. JUUL. Will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Certainly.

Mr. JUUL. I want to ask the gentleman, what does the gentleman consider 100 per cent inefficient; that there are 5,000 men drawing salaries who render no service at all?

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. I take that to be exactly the statement that has been made by those who are advocating the passage of this bill. I hold in my hand a statement which was circulated which states that there are 5,202 persons in the service 100 per cent inefficient, and it has been stated on the floor of this House repeatedly that there are over 6,000 of such inefficient employees. Now, to go on. The chairmen of Committees on Appropriations have repeatedly stated that they can not secure accurate information as to the needs of the various bureaus and departments, and if that fact is true, and I take it that it is and that they speak with knowledge, then the heads of these departments immediately upon the retirement of the 5,000 or 6,000 inefficient employees will at once fill their places with other persons, and when you come to make your appropriations for the next year you will be confronted with the fact that there are persons in those places, and it is so much easier to keep them out than to get them out after they are in, and therefore I have offered this amendment. There is another purpose. The departments which are inefficient and about which complaints have been made have stated that they are loaded up with inefficient employees. If that is true, now is their time to make good and certify to the Civil Service Commission the names, ages, position, class, and inefficiency of those persons, so that there shall be a record upon that question. And it has been suggested that if these employees are 100 per cent inefficient, or even 90 per cent inefficient, as we know how they wander around these departments doing nothing, there can be no loss to the department to have removed timber which obstructs the ways and keeps back efficient work in the department. I think the amendment should be adopted, and I understand the chairman of the committee does not object thereto.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I am in sympathy with the purpose that the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. EVANS] seeks to effect by his amendment. I think that in so far as reporting the degree of efficiency of every employee who is retired to the Civil Service Commission it is an excellent suggestion, and I think that portion of the gentleman's amendment would come in better where the act provides that all employees, and their grade and status, and so forth, shall be reported to the Civil Service Commission. That comes later in the act, and that would be a good place for it. But I want to suggest this to the gentleman from Nebraska, that a bureau chief or the head of a division is subject to control and discipline, and that if he allows in his department the retirement of a clerk for inefficiency and then employs some one to replace the inefficient clerk he renders himself by that act subject to stricture and criticism, and, if he does it in a flagrant manner, subject to removal.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Does the gentleman see any reason, then, why it should not be so stated in the bill here, so that he will be put on his guard against doing such a thing?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I merely want to say this: The gentleman says there shall be no replacement where the employee replaced is 90 per cent inefficient. I want the committee to consider whether that is not an invitation to the chief of a bureau to replace those inefficient in a less degree?

Mr. LAYTON. If there are 5,000 who are 100 per cent inefficient and if the various bureaus having them upon the roll are discharging such persons from their bureaus, why should those 5,000 places be filled?

Mr. LEHLBACH. There is not any reason on earth for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I ask for two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LEHLBACH. There is no reason on earth why those places should be filled. It is to get these people out of the departments and keep them out and reduce the force to the lowest point consistent with efficiency that this bill is reported and its passage urged. That is one of the reasons for the legislation.

Mr. LAYTON. Is there anything in this bill that will prevent the filling of 5,000 places of those 5,000 inefficients?

Mr. LEHLBACH. It is not in this bill, because it is not in the province of this bill to regulate that matter in the departments.

Mr. LAYTON. If this bill goes into effect, immediately upon its passage the department can fill those 5,000 places at once, and then, after they are in there, you can not break them loose.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Any person who has ten 100 per cent inefficient employees in his division, and those 10, who are 100 per cent inefficient, are separated from the service, and he should employ 10 others to take the place of the totally inefficient people who have not been doing work, that man ought to be at least discharged from the service.

Mr. McKEOWN. Will the gentleman from New Jersey yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes.

Mr. McKEOWN. Would that amendment preclude a subordinate clerk who has been doing the work for a man who is inefficient, holding a higher position, from being promoted to that position?

Mr. LEHLBACH. No. I think the amendment merely means a replacement into the service from the outside, but I think if such an amendment is to be passed as the gentleman suggests, there ought to be a lower limit than 90 per cent. I see no reason why in the replacement of people 75 per cent should not be made.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I would like one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I think the amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. EVANS] prohibiting replacement where there is a 90 per cent degree of inefficiency, would be a tacit sanction for replacement whether they were needed or not, when the efficiency is in a less degree. That is the only criticism I might make of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended one minute in order to answer a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. If the amendment is amended so that it would read 75 per cent, would that be satisfactory?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I would rather see it go through prohibiting replacements at 75 per cent than prohibiting replacements at 90 per cent. I would rather have no replacements except where it is necessary, and the place to do that through the action of Congress is through the Appropriations Committee and through the activities of the agencies which the budget system will create. I do not think we can effectively do it, and for that reason I express my doubts as to this amendment. But I am in hearty accord and sympathy with the purpose of it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment again reported?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again read.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I am fully in sympathy with the purpose that the gentleman has in his mind, but I doubt the efficacy of the proposition. For many years we carried a provision in the appropriation bills, or, at least, in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, that no part of the money appropriated should be paid to any superannuated or inefficient employee, or words to that effect. I think it was acknowledged and frequently stated that no person was ever separated from the service because of that provision in the law. That covered all of the branches of the public service in Washington except the Agricultural Department, and in spite of a positive provision forbidding the payment of any of the money appropriated as salary to any employee who was superannuated or inefficient the heads of the departments every year would recommend the pension system, because they had so many employees under their bureau or branch of the service who by reason of age were practically inefficient. Now, I do not think you will get a department officer who wants to replace anyone to report that some one let out is 90 per cent inefficient. I question very much whether you will get the head of a department to report that anyone who has been retained in the service under that head, practically contrary to law, when that person is separated from the service, is 90 per cent inefficient, no matter what the facts may be. The men who are going out of the service will not like to have it said that they are 90 per cent inefficient. They will be separated from the service without any such statement as that, because in order to remain in the service the head of the department has to certify that they are efficient, and there is quite a difference between a bureau chief certifying that a man is efficient in order to keep him in the service and certifying that he is inefficient in order to cast a blot upon him—not only upon the man who is separated from the service but the man who has kept him in the service.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. Does not what the distinguished gentleman says demonstrate fully that the main inefficiency begins with the chiefs of the departments?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, it begins with the hearts of men. That is where it begins. [Applause.] And you can not change the hearts of men by legislation.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Delaware?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I yield.

Mr. LAYTON. Is it not possible to put into this bill a provision against the filling of any of these 5,000 places where they are 100 per cent inefficient?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I think possibly you might put into the bill without any injury to the service a provision forbidding the filling of any places where they are separated under the provisions of this bill for the next fiscal year.

Mr. LAYTON. I hope the gentleman, with his long experience, will put that in.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Well, I do not expect to. But I shall vote for such a proposition if anybody else offers it.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, if we retire 5,000 men drawing on an average, say, $1,500 per year, we thereby save $7,500,000. Now, if we place them on half pay, we pay out $3,750,000. But if we employ an equal number of men to the number of men retired, we will pay out $3,500,000 in annuities and spend an additional $7,500,000 for new salaries to men to perform work that is not now being performed. It seems to me, as we are sitting here legislating away millions of money, retiring with one piece of paper 5,000 men and paying these 5,000 men $3,750,000, in the rough, and probably more, there ought to be some provision here by which the additional $7,500,000 should not be paid out.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JUUL. I yield to the gentleman from Delaware.

Mr. LAYTON. That is the very point I wanted to make. I thoroughly agree with the gentleman. We are passing a bill here in these times of financial depression and tremendous cost and expense in this country, and we are going to spend a lot of money in still other ways, and yet we are confronted with the fact that neither the chairman of the committee nor any other Member of this House with parliamentary experience seems to be willing to correct what is manifestly a radical defect in this bill. If these 5,000 men are manifestly inefficient to the extent of a 100 per cent inefficiency, we ought to take time enough now to amend this bill so that these 5,000 places can not be filled.

Mr. JUUL. The gentleman from Delaware is somehow consuming my five minutes. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois yielded to the gentleman from Delaware.

Mr. JUUL. I yielded to the gentleman from Delaware for a question.

I would suggest the following amendment: "Provided, That for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, no person shall be employed to take the place of the superannuated men retired who are not now performing any active service." The chairman can use any language he wants to, and place it anywhere in the bill he wants to; but it seems to me his bill ought to contain it.

Mr. BLANTON. Silence! [Laughter.]

Mr. MOON rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I desire to oppose the amendment in detail. I do not know whether that ought to be carried in preference to a motion to strike out the enacting clause. One section of this bill is about as bad as any other section. There is not one that is good. There is not one that is Democratic. There is not one that is Republican. There is not one that is American in this whole bill. [Applause.]

If you have a lot of superannuated employees who have been made so by reasons of conditions that have existed without their fault, you should have the courage to give them a sufficient pension or some money to retire them and get them out of the way and put new fresh men in their places. But you should enact the law in such a shape that that condition can not arise again. [Applause.]

What right have we to take the people's money year in and year out and pay it for civil pensions—giving away millions of public money? We are the trustees of the people's money. We have the right to collect taxes for the purpose of administering the Government honestly under the terms of the Constitution. While we may have power in our legislative discretion to give away money, it is not moral and it is not honest to do it. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, bear with me for a moment. I do not believe in this civil-service business at all. I do not believe in the life tenure of office. I looked around over this body a few minutes ago and I saw 40 men sitting here—400 vacant seats—as if with prizes lifting up the Treasury door, and standing behind them I seemed to see a class with a whip lashing them like cowards because they hesitated to steal the money of the people and give it to them. [Applause.]

Now, it is an old-time principle that honesty is the best policy. Let us treat these superannuated men as we ought to treat them and put an end hereafter to superannuation in office. We ought not to have it. It is contrary to the genius of a free State to have any life offices or have any men who may draw civil annuities from the Government. These have been the means in the countries of the world of suppressing liberty and destroying the rights of the private citizen everywhere.

Let me make, in the few minutes I have, one simple illustration: Here are two young men, 21 years of age, who enter life together. They are both tempted by office at Washington. They apply to the civil service. One succeeds in the examination and the other fails. The successful one comes to Washington, receives a salary, say, of $1,800 or $2,000 or more a year. He enjoys the pleasures and allurements of the city. He lives well; he flourishes; he enters society; he gets an increase in his salary as he becomes more proficient. He passes on through life with all the pleasures of a great Capital. Sixty-five years of age comes to him. He has not been provident. He has saved no money. He is to be retired now at that age on half pay, the ward of a nation, and he has received three times, perhaps, the compensation for his services that his services were worth. Now, let us take the other man, his companion in youth. He does not obtain office. He gets a place in a blacksmith's shop or in a store or on a farm. He works along through life. He makes a living, barely, without any of its pleasures. He comes down to 65 years of age. Although he may be weak, although his family may be in need, there is no beneficent Government to extend the hand of liberality or generosity to him. He must bear the burden of the hard life he lives and go down to the grave without the consideration of his country. Yet he may be a producer who was worth five times as much to mankind as the man who held an official position. He gets nothing. The other is rewarded under a system that is not democratic.

Ah, what more? The little pittance that this nonoffice-holder may have saved in the great struggle of life is taxed. All he has had to live upon through life is taxed; and what for? Not alone to support his Government, economically administered, but in part to be given in annuities to the favored officials. That very man contributes a part of his hard earnings to the life support, after 65 years of age, of the man who has held office all his life, practically, and shown his unfitness by his incapacity to reserve a cent for his old age. Under one section of this bill a man may retire after 36 years and get a greater pension the balance of his life than a disabled soldier in some cases. I protest against such wrong to the private citizen. I protest against collecting millions of dollars from the people to give to able-bodied officials. I protest against this base plundering of the Public Treasury.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. EVANS].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] offers a substitute, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa as a substitute for the amendment offered by Mr. EVANS of Nebraska: Page 10, line 16, after the word "thereof," insert "Provided, That no person retired by reason of the provisions of this act during the present fiscal year shall be replaced by additional employees, except railway postal clerks."

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to change the amendment by saying "fiscal year ending June 30, 1921."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, that correction will be made.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I reserve the right to object. This bill may become a law by the middle of May.

Mr. LEHLBACH. It does not go into operation until 90 days after its passage.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the correction will be made in accordance with the suggestion of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I believe this meets the objection that was made to the other amendment, and it seems to me that it prevents the reemployment of additional help to take the place of men retired on account of being 100 per cent inefficient or less if retired under the provisions of this act.

Mr. BLACK. If I caught the effect of the gentleman's amendment, if a rural carrier is retired under this bill the Post Office Department can not replace that carrier.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. A rural carrier, if he is 100 per cent inefficient, can not be carrying the mail, can he?

Mr. BLACK. Perhaps I did not correctly get the effect of the gentleman's amendment. May I have it reported again?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa as a substitute for the amendment offered by Mr. EVANS of Nebraska: Page 10, line 16, after the word "thereof," insert "Provided, That no person except railway postal employees retired by reason of the provisions of this act during the present fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, shall be replaced by additional employees."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The word "present" before "fiscal year" should go out.

Mr. BLACK. The gentleman says a man does not necessarily have to be inefficient in order to retire under this act. When a rural carrier, for instance, reaches the age of 62 he has the absolute right to retire, even though he is 100 per cent efficient.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. He is retired.

Mr. BLACK. Not necessarily. He may go on if he gets permission.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. He is retired unless he is permitted to remain.

Mr. BLACK. But he may retire anyway.

Mr. MADDEN. He may want to retire anyhow.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The same would be true of letter carriers in a city undoubtedly. I do not think you will strike very many rural carriers who have been 15 years in the service, but you will strike a great many city carriers who have been 15 years in the service. Of course, we do not want to say that they can not appoint any city carriers during the year, or any new clerks. As far as I am concerned, I am willing to vote for the gentleman's amendment if I can feel assured—and I suppose I can—that it will be rewritten in conference between the two bodies. Here is the situation. We have made the appropriations for the executive departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921. The clerks are provided for. Now, it is a natural tendency everywhere to fill the places if they are authorized. If they are filled, it is very hard to cut them off. I think the gentleman would be safe if, instead of restricting it as he has, he should make the amendment apply only to employees right here in the District of Columbia. What he wants to cover is the executive departments. There are not many inefficient people elsewhere.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise the substitute by striking out the words "except railway postal clerks," and to say:

Provided, That no person employed in the District of Columbia retired under the provisions of this act—

And so forth.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the substitute will be amended in accordance with the request.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask recognition in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Pending that, will the gentleman allow me to move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in five minutes?

Mr. GARD. I have an amendment which I have passed into the hands of the Clerk.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Then all debate on this amendment and amendments thereto.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey moves that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I am going to vote for the gentleman's amendment. I think it is the sanest proposition that has been offered in, about, or around this piece of legislation. I think that this bill is well denominated a retirement measure. I think it is just such paternalistic measures as this that are going to cause retirements, not of clerks, but eventually, when the people get to card indexing us, it is going to retire some of us Congressmen if we keep it up, because some day the people are going to begin watching and finding out just exactly what it is that is making it cost so much to live in this land. Retirement measure, yes. That is one of the incidents that will make taxes higher. It is one of the expensive incidents that make Congress and Congressmen looked down upon and brought into disrepute over the country. The postmaster at the House Office Building the other day received a package in the mail addressed to "The rotten bunch in Congress." He opened it up and what do you suppose he found? He found a great big club, sent by somebody.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Did he deliver it to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. BLANTON. No, sir; because the gentleman from Texas did not come within that bunch. I have been voting to keep the money in the Treasury. The gentleman from Iowa knows how he voted, and knows whether he comes within that category. The club still remains there. But some of these days the people are going to wield that club and there is going to be retirement here.

The other day we concluded legislation that has gone to the President which will expend in the next fiscal year for pensions, not to soldiers of the late war but to alleged survivors and widows, young and old, of previous wars, $291,000,000 in one year.

I believe in pensions for our disabled and indigent soldiers of all wars. I do not begrudge one single dollar that goes to a needy soldier who has defended the flag of our country. I have voted against pension bills ever since I have been here, but not because dollars were going into the pockets of men who defended our flag, but because dollars have been going out of the Treasury of the United States into the pockets of men who never fought a day in their lives for the flag of their country or for any other good purpose in life. I have voted against pension measures, because in foreign lands, in Austria and Germany, there are hundreds of men who have not been in the United States for 40 years who have been drawing annually from this Government, from the Treasury of the United States, money that has gone a long way in the late war to fight against the purposes of that flag.

I am fighting this kind of a measure because it is paternalistic, but I am in favor of the gentleman's amendment. I think it is a good amendment. We must keep watch on the little points. I am sorry the chairman did not offer it. It was suggested by the distinguished gentleman from Delaware [Mr. LAYTON] who called on the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] to offer it, but the distinguished gentleman from Illinois can not do everything on that side of the House, he has got to depend on some of you younger fellows to do part of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired, all time has expired, and the question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska.

The question was taken, and the amendment as a substitute was adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska as amended by the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, line 4, strike out "10" and insert "5," and on page 11, line 7, strike out all of the section after the word "hereof."

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I think the weakness of this bill is the elasticity that is given in this section. The purpose of this amendment is that after five years to provide for automatic retirement. We have heard a good deal said here about the "hearts" of men and the "heads" of the various bureaus allowing inefficient clerks to remain in the public service. Yet that is exactly what you provide for in section 6. Let me warn the Members of the House and particularly the chairman of the committee that if this section remains as it is the "hearts" of the heads of the various bureaus will not be changed; they will be importuned by the old and infirm clerk to be permitted to remain two years longer and still two years longer, and not a single one of the heads of these bureaus will turn them out.

The maximum amount that a man in class A can receive is $720. Here comes an old infirm clerk getting $1,200 or $1,400, and he says are you going to turn him adrift; that he could not live on $720; that he had worked for the Government, lo, these 30 years. Now, I want to say that the "hearts" of the heads of the bureaus are going to be just as they have been for the last 20 years.

I would say to these employees that at the expiration of five years that they will be retired, and that they must make preparation for retirement at the end of five years. At the end of that time you can not make application to the "heart" of the head of the bureau to be continued two years longer.

Mr. JUUL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HASTINGS. Yes.

Mr. JUUL. The gentleman suggests that the present employee must make provision for the future. How can they do it when they can not live on what they now get?

Mr. HASTINGS. This is not a salary proposition. If the gentleman wants an answer, why does he not go to the proper committee and provide for increases in salaries. That is not in the pending question. You are retiring these men on a maximum salary of $720, and what I am arguing and trying to impress on the Members of the House is as to the elastic provision in section 6 that will permit every one of these employees, instead of being retired, to come to the head of the bureau and prevail on him to let him remain two years longer, and every employee will do it.

It has been said many times on the floor that there has been a provision permitting the heads of bureaus to discharge inefficient clerks, but that has not been done and will not under this section.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HASTINGS. Yes.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. They can only be retained by the Civil Service Commission; it is removed from the control of the bureau.

Mr. HASTINGS. Yes; but they will rely upon the recommendation of the head of the bureau. I think it would be much better if it were left so that these employees when they enter the Government service will know that they will be retired at the end of a certain time when they reach a certain age. Let it be 65 years or 67 years or 70 years, but some definite time beyond which an employee can not remain, and then you will have no discretion in the "hearts" or the heads of the bureaus. [Applause.]

Mr. JONES of Texas. Inasmuch as the bill provides 65 years as the retirement feature, does not the gentleman think that is a pretty low age to have the absolute requirement of retirement?

Mr. HASTINGS. If 65 years is too low, amend it and make it 70 years. What I am insisting upon is that there ought to be some definite age and no elasticity to it. Everyone will know when he is to be retired; there will be no favoritism and no disappointments and no heartaches.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, there have been numerous suggestions of amendments which the committee from time to time has accepted and of which it has expressed its disapproval and others which it has left to the judgment of the committee, but with regard to this amendment now offered the chairman of the committee can not too strenuously voice his opposition to it. This amendment with regard to the age of retirement, so far as the protection of the Government is concerned, would take the heart out of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the amendment divided, if it can be.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas demands a division of the amendment.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It is subject to division.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I want to divide it for this reason: I think the first part of the amendment is very good—that is, to change it from 10 to 5 years—but the amendment in toto as it is presented makes the 65-year limit absolute.

Mr. HASTINGS. That is what I want to do.

Mr. JONES of Texas. It seems to me there is a good deal more reason for the first part of the amendment than for the last part. Certainly there are some men who are 65 years of age who are qualified to remain; not only qualified, but who ought to remain in the service. I shall favor the first part of the amendment, but I do not think the latter part should be adopted. I ask for a division of the amendment.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I yielded the floor under the impression that the Chair was putting the question for a vote, but my time had by no means expired. I wish to say that after consideration 10 years seems to be a reasonable time for those who are now in the service or who have reached or are about to reach the retirement age to have the privilege, if they are capable of rendering efficient service to continue, and for those who in the course of 10 years come along and reach in that period of time the retirement age to have the chance for repeated extensions. I see no very great advantage to be gained by cutting that period down from 10 years to 5 years, and I trust it will not be done. But to strike out the latter part of this provision making retirement absolute for railway-mail clerks at 60; for postal employees, mechanics, rural and city letter carriers at 62; and for all other classified employees at 65, no matter how efficient a man who has reached that age might be, is to act without reason.

There is no reason why the Government should pay retirement pay to a man who is able and willing to render service for pay, and it is in order to get rid of those who are inefficient that these age limits are tentatively placed, and in order to retain those who are willing and able to work for a salary that the two years' extension periods are provided for. The only reason that can be urged for abolishing the two-year extension periods is that our department heads and bureau and division chiefs are inefficient and are violating the law and will not carry out the duties of their office with a reasonable degree of honesty.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes.

Mr. HASTINGS. Do you not provide at the end of 10 years for automatic retirement?

Mr. LEHLBACH. We do not. We provide that at the end of 10 years there shall be only two periods of two years' extension.

Mr. HASTINGS. The periods can not be extended for a longer time than 4 years at the end of 10 years.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, just one moment more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HASTINGS. Suppose a man is efficient and you add the 4 years to the 62, making it 66 for a rural carrier, but he is still efficient at that time, you then provide for his retirement?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Of course, there must be some limit. You can not legislate so that every single instance in over 300,000 employees can be taken care of, but you can use your judgment and try to legislate so that the great bulk of them will be properly included.

Mr. PARRISH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES]. I have been studying this bill very carefully, and I have especially been studying the provisions of the bill affected by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS]. I wish to say that I believe that the amendment of the gentleman from Oklahoma would very materially take the heart out of this bill. In the first place, I am not in favor of taking out of the public service any man who can render efficient service, and I am not willing to concede that when a man gets to be 60 years of age as a railway mail clerk, or 62 years of age as a rural or city carrier, or to 65 years as a clerk he is incompetent. I personally favor the extension of the age of voluntary retirement to 70 years. This provision of the bill here on page 11, however, permits the extension of the time of voluntary retirement with approval in the case of the railway mail clerk to 64 years and in the case of the rural and city carriers to 66 and in the case of the regular clerk to 69. Some of the best service that this world has ever received has been rendered by men who have passed those ages, those milestones in their lives. As a matter of fact, I favor the extension of the four-year period to a six-year period rather than to cut it down, and I prepared an amendment awhile ago which would extend it to six years rather than limiting it to a shorter period.

Mr. MCKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARRISH. Yes.

Mr. MCKEOWN. Those who advocate this bill from the standpoint of economy contend that it will put out of the service inefficient men, and, therefore, improve the service and be of great value to the Government. Does the gentleman think that under this liberal provision in this section we will do any more putting out of the service than in the past?

Mr. PARRISH. I do not think so, but I think this. A bill which forces out of the service a man at 60 not only costs the Government an annuity which will be a burden upon the Government but at the same time deprives the Government of some man's useful service that he wants to and is able to render good and efficient service. If you put a similar age limit on this House and undertake to follow the committee you would no doubt cut out of this House some of the most useful and beneficial Members. Now, I take it the age limit——

Mr. JONES of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARRISH. I will yield.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Does the gentleman intend to offer his amendment later? I rather think it ought to be increased from four years, and I wondered if the gentleman still intended to offer it?

Mr. PARRISH. I will offer my amendment to make it six years instead of four at the proper time. If you apply the age limit, as attempted by this bill, to the Supreme Court of the United States at this time, what service will the United States be deprived of? I am for efficiency in the Government service. I do not want any man to misunderstand me. I believe when the time comes in a man's life when he can not render efficient service he ought to be retired, and I believe under the provisions of this bill that there will be more retired in the future than otherwise in cases of inefficiency.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARRISH. I will.

Mr. HASTINGS. If that be true, why should they put any years in at all—65, 62, and 60? Why not create an efficiency commission to pass upon that without putting any age in at all? And why did the committee bring in any age limit at all? I am not so much discussing the 65 years as I am discussing the years they brought in themselves and recommended to this House.

Mr. PARRISH. In reply to that I will say I do not know just the reasons the committee had for it, but I do believe when you put an ironclad rule, such as the amendment of my friend attempts to do, and force these men out of the service at 60, 62, and 65, you are going not only to cause the expense to this Government to be increased unnecessarily by carrying efficient men on the retired list but you are going to deprive the Government of the services of good men who are still worth while. If the employee desires to stay in the service after reaching the ages stated in the respective provisions of the bill, and the head of the department in which he is working and the Civil Service Commission approves his claim of efficiency, he should be retained for at least six years above the said respective ages. I therefore offer my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto be now closed.

Mr. GARD. I have an amendment, but I do not desire to debate that.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I know, but that will not preclude the offering of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey moves that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto be now closed.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment of the gentleman from Oklahoma, on which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] has demanded a division. The question is upon the first part of the amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, line 4, strike out "10" and insert "5."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the adoption of that part of the amendment which the Clerk has just reported.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. BLACK) there were—ayes 28, noes 75.

So the first portion of the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the second portion of the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, line 7, after the word "hereof," strike out "for more than four years."

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PARRISH. Mr. Chairman, my amendment is at the Clerk's desk, and I now offer it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio has an amendment which is ahead of that of the gentleman from Texas, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, line 4, strike out the words "and so on" and insert "but in no case shall such certification of retention apply to any employee who has reached the age of 70 years."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. HASTINGS) there were—ayes 32, noes 74.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. PARRISH] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, line 7, after the word "than," strike out "four" and insert in lieu thereof "six."

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, the committee will accept that amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. That every employee who is or hereafter becomes eligible for retirement because of age as provided in this act, shall, within 60 days after its passage or 30 days before reaching the retirement age, or at any time thereafter, file with the Commissioner of Pensions, in such form as he may prescribe, an application for an annuity, supported by a certificate from the head of the department, branch, or independent office of the Government in which the applicant has been employed, stating the age and period or periods of service of the applicant and salary, pay, or compensation received during such periods, as shown by the official records: Provided, however, That in the case of an employee who is to be continued in the civil service of the United States beyond the retirement age as provided in section 6 hereof, he or she may make application for retirement at any time within such period of continuance in the service, but nothing contained in this act shall be construed to prevent the compulsory retirement of such employee when in the judgment of the head of the department, branch, or independent office in which he or she is employed such retirement would promote the best interests of the service.

Upon receipt of satisfactory evidence the Commissioner of Pensions shall forthwith adjudicate the claim of the applicant, and if title to annuity be established, a proper certificate shall be issued to the annuitant under the seal of the Department of the Interior.

Annuities granted under this act for retirement on account of age shall commence from the date of separation from the service on or after the date this act shall take effect, and shall continue during the life of the annuitant. Annuities granted for disability under the provisions of section 5 hereof shall be subject to the limitations specified in said section.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I desire to congratulate the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service and its able chairman, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH], on this consummation of the many months of the most faithful and painstaking zeal for the welfare of a large class of our citizens who have not been very liberally treated in the past. In fact, I know that the gentleman from New Jersey has worked on this matter not only for months but for years. He certainly deserves the applause and commendation of his own constituents and of the country.

As has been observed by others in this debate, we have, in effect, been pensioning many old civil-service employees for some time, merely because the simplest dictates of humanity forbade throwing out upon the street or into the poorhouse old people who had faithfully served the Government for years, even though they were no longer able to earn their pay. One among many such cases was described by Mr. Ayres, chief clerk of the Department of the Interior, in his testimony before the committee having this bill in charge. Mr. Ayres, speaking of a superannuated and feeble-minded employee who had difficulty in even counting his monthly pay, but who was, nevertheless, retained in charity, said:

His mind is cloudy in other respects, but the one straw that he clings to is that he did his duty faithfully while he had his health and strength, and now that both are gone Congress will surely enable him to live in decency the few years remaining to him.

Mr. Henry Sterling, presenting this matter from the standpoint of organized labor, said:

How an employer can take a young man and carry him all through the period of his working life and wring him dry and throw him away like a worn-out dishrag and conceive that he has done anything of justice is more than I can understand. That is what the United States, as an employer, is doing all the time, except when it keeps a man in service when he is not earning his money, to the detriment and suffering of others who are on the pay roll.

As a result of the untiring efforts of Mr. LEHLBACH and his committee, we are now about to substitute for this haphazard, unofficial, and inequitable, although well-intentioned, system of pensioning a scientific system affecting all alike.

We have now come to section 8, which provides for the deduction of 2½ per cent per month from each employee's basic salary for the purpose of providing a fund for the payment of this compensation. Of course, we realize the several purposes which the committee had in mind in the insertion of this provision. We realize that one of the purposes was that the whole bill might not be choked to death for a lack of an appropriation, that we may start this very useful and necessary legislation off properly with the provision of a fund right at the start.

There was also another reason, a reason of policy, to promote thrift on the part of the employee to make him save this 2½ per cent and to give him a vested interest in the fund. But, gentlemen of the committee, I do hope that that is not going to be our permanent policy in regard to this retirement pay. If the employee could pay 2½ per cent per month without hurting himself it would be a different proposition; but when many Federal employees are receiving less than $100 per month, even 2½ per cent of it—two-thirds of a day's wage—is very hard for a man to save. Every penny must be used for rent and groceries and clothing in these days. Every penny is often spent before it is received. Now, let me call attention to this consideration in regard to the pay of Government employees: Their pay always lags behind the pay of employees in private industry, and there are several reasons for that that will be obvious. In the first place, in the ordinary industry wages are fixed by agreement, which are usually for not a very great length of time—six months to a year. In the Government the Federal employees' salaries are fixed by regulations and extend over a considerable period. In the second place, many Government jobs are of a sort involving no competition with other employers for labor. Such a situation always tends to keep wages down. The Federal employee is also unable to get an increase of his earnings by work outside. That is often prohibited by law. So the earnings of a Federal employee always lag behind those of an employee in outside industries.

Mr. BLANTON. Will my distinguished colleague yield?

Mr. VAILE. I will be glad to do so.

Mr. BLANTON. Why, the gentleman surely knows there are thousands of employees here in the District of Columbia now who work either for private individuals, firms, or corporations every single afternoon after 4.30 or 5 o'clock?

Mr. VAILE. That may apply to some departments where it is not specifically prohibited by law or is permitted by regulation. But ordinarily clerks can not work outside.

Mr. MADDEN. I think the gentleman is mistaken, because they do work outside.

Mr. VAILE. They are not supposed to do so.

Mr. MOONEY. Is it not a sad commentary on the Government that it is necessary for its employees to seek work outside?

Mr. VAILE. That is what I was about to suggest—that if they do that it is a pretty sad commentary on the Government's treatment of those men.

Mr. BLANTON. I have already called attention to the fact that the chief chemist of this Government, Mr. Parsons, while receiving a salary of $4,800, at the same time received $3,500 from a chemical corporation. Is that a sad commentary on the Government as a paymaster?

Mr. VAILE. It may not be in the case of a chief chemist, but it is in the case of a bureau clerk that gets only $100 or less per month. The average clerk in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing gets less than $100 a month. The average wage of 4,000 women in that bureau is less than $1,000 a year, including the bonus. They could not save 2½ per cent a month from their salary. I think if this legislation is desirable at all—which most of us in the House concede it is—it is a fair proposition, even if it is a sort of additional compensation. I realize it is additional compensation. I realize that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] spoke truly when he said that we will be confronted with an organization of employees that will try to make their compensation sufficient to pay for this deduction.

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VAILE. Not now. I wish to finish this thought first. We can not stop that. Whether we provide retirement pay or not, we would be sure to have organizations of Federal employees who would try to raise their compensation to something like the compensation received in private industry. They can not be blamed for that. They ought to feel they have a right to urge the Government to give them what they can receive from a private corporation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VAILE. Certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. I call my friend's attention to the report made here, which forms a public document now on file, in response to one of the resolutions introduced by me and which passed this House, showing that in the city of Washington there is one family, by the name of Graham, where one son gets $250 a month, a sister $100 a month plus the $240 bonus, the father $100 a month plus the $240 bonus, the mother $95 a month plus the $240 bonus, and another brother gets $350 a month—all one family. When this one family draws that much, is the Government a parsimonious paymaster and a parsimonious employer in that case?

Mr. VAILE. If those members of that family earn it, they ought to have it, even though they have the misfortune of relationship with each other. [Applause.]

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VAILE. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. Did I understand the gentleman to say that he objected to taking this 2½ per cent out of the salaries of the clerks?

Mr. VAILE. I said that I hoped it would not be the permanent policy of the Government. I realize there are cogent reasons for it now.

Mr. CARTER. Does not the gentleman think it the fair, candid, and honorable way to give the clerk a salary to which he is entitled, and then take out of the salary sufficient for this retirement fund, and place him on his own resources, rather than to make him a pensioner upon the Government?

Mr. VAILE. I think it is one of the duties of the Government to induce these people to remain in service as long as they are willing to serve. Their experience is a benefit, an asset, to the service. If they can be protected from the specter of want and hardship in their old age, who would wish to prevent that?

Mr. CARTER. If their salaries would warrant it, the gentleman would not take the position that the Federal Government, in addition to paying them an adequate salary, ought to pension them also?

Mr. VAILE. I think the pension, plus the salary they are receiving, ought to be commensurate with the salaries received in private industry.

Mr. CARTER. I agree with the gentleman on that. The viewpoint I am trying to get is, Does not the gentleman think it would be better to pay these clerks the salary to which they are entitled, including in that enough for their retirement fund, and then take it out of the refund, in order that the fellow will not get the idea that the Government is supporting him, but that he is somewhat self-sustaining?

Mr. VAILE. That would be all right if we can do that. The gentleman knows from his experience as a legislator that in practically all the Government service the pay of the employee lags behind the pay of similar employees in private industry. We can not expect to change that. As I have endeavored to show, it is practically an unavoidable condition of a service where wages are fixed, fixed for long periods, in advance, and where there is little competition for labor.

It is said that "republics are ungrateful." I do not believe the statement is true, broadly speaking, but the way to disprove it is for the Republic to be just to those who serve it.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, may I have unanimous consent to discuss the bill generally and not the paragraph under consideration?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to proceed out of order for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, and I shall not object——

Mr. MONDELL. I want to discuss the bill, but not this paragraph.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to ask the distinguished gentleman from Wyoming whether or not he is going to enlarge upon the statement which he should have made yesterday had the sundry civil bill been introduced, and which inadvertently the newspapers printed yesterday afternoon?

Mr. MONDELL. The newspapers did not prematurely print anything so far as I know. I gave out a statement which reflected very great credit on this Congress—the Democratic as well as the Republican side of the Congress—showing the great saving we have made, and that was generally published. I hope it will have the effect of inclining the public to a more favorable view of the Congress than some portions of the public have sometimes had in the past.

Mr. Chairman, I rose to congratulate the House on the fact that a civil-service retirement law would soon be on the statute books. I have one matter of keen regret with regard to the situation, and I feel it my duty to express it, because I am somewhat responsible for that situation. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH] has long been devoted to the cause and to the purposes of this legislation. He understands thoroughly the principles underlying the legislation. He has worked faithfully to promote legislation of this character. His committee, working faithfully with him, reported a bill as long ago as May 26, 1919. I was in favor of the legislation, but at that time I was not certain that the sentiment of the House was as favorable to the legislation as it now is. In fact, I was not entirely satisfied at that time that we could pass the bill in the form proposed by the committee. Later we took up our program of appropriations at the beginning of this session, and it seemed wise to bring in general legislation after we got our appropriation program well along.

Under those circumstances the bill that is to become a law may not bear the name of the gentleman from New Jersey, because the Senate passed their bill first. I hope it may, notwithstanding the fact that we are now acting upon a Senate title. I am a little responsible for the fact that it is the Senate bill that we are now acting upon. I have long been in favor of this legislation, and yet I have felt that we should not take it up until the appropriation program was well along. Hence the gentleman from New Jersey may not be known as widely as he ought to be in the future in connection with this legislation. I hope, however, if the bill is known in the future by the name of the Member of the Senate who introduced the Senate bill, it may also bear the name of the gentleman from New Jersey. [Applause.] He is certainly entitled to great credit for the legislation.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let me say again that I congratulate the Congress on both sides, and I congratulate the country, that we are to have a civil-service retirement law. Many good and honest people have striven for that sort of legislation for many years. There has been much difference of opinion in this country relative to its wisdom, but gradually public opinion came to the point where the great majority of the people believe in legislation of this kind, believe in the principle of this bill as applied to employees generally, not only in the public service but in private employment. I do not pretend to be an expert on the details of this class of legislation. I have on several occasions raised questions with the gentleman from New Jersey relative to certain features of his bill, only to discover that so well grounded was he in the principles upon which the bill is based, so well informed was he in the arguments for the provisions of the bill as they stand, that he convinced me in every case that the bill was sound in detail as well as in principle.

Mr. Chairman, I am so much interested in the passage of this legislation that I shall not delay its passage by taking the time of the committee longer to discuss it. I entertain the hope that before the gavel falls this evening this bill will have passed the House and be on the last lap toward final enactment. [Applause.]

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. HASTINGS. I do so for the purpose of making an inquiry of the chairman as to why the administration of this bill was placed under the Commissioner of Pensions. And before he answers, let me say that as a friend of this legislation I had hoped that some bureau, some independent bureau, either under the Department of the Interior or some other department of the Government, would be created and that the head of it would be given the sole responsibility for the administration of this act. It is a very great responsibility, and I do not believe it ought to be left to subordinates. What I fear is that, being administered under the Commissioner of Pensions, with all the other duties that the commissioner has, the details of the administration of this bill will be largely left to subordinate officials. I want to ask the chairman if consideration was given to that question by the committee?

Mr. LEHLBACH. The committee not only gave careful consideration to the question, but it had before it full information, not only as to the availability of the Commissioner of Pensions office but of other bureaus and departments of the Government that might possibly be charged with the duty of the administration of the provisions of this act. But the Commissioner of Pensions is equipped for the duties that are imposed upon him by this act, and with but a small increase of personnel and at a minimum cost will be able efficiently and completely to perform the duties, and for that reason the committee placed the administration of the law in his hands.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. That beginning on the first day of the third month next following the passage of this act and monthly thereafter there shall be deducted and withheld from the basic salary, pay, or compensation of each employee to whom this act applies a sum equal to 2½ per cent of such employee's basic salary, pay, or compensation. The Secretary of the Treasury shall cause the said deductions to be withheld from all specific appropriations for the particular salaries or compensation from which the deductions are made and from all allotments out of lump-sum appropriations for payments of such salaries or compensation for each fiscal year, and said sums shall be transferred on the books of the Treasury Department to the credit of a special fund to be known as the "civil-service retirement and disability fund," and said fund is hereby appropriated for the payment of annuities, refunds, and allowances as provided in this act.

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to invest from time to time, in interest-bearing securities of the United States, such portions of the "civil-service retirement and disability fund" hereby created as in his judgment may not be immediately required for the payment of annuities, refunds, and allowances as herein provided, and the income derived from such investments shall constitute a part of said fund for the purpose of paying annuities and of carrying out the provisions of section 11 of this act.

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and empowered in carrying out the provisions of this act to supplement the individual contributions of employees with moneys received in the form of donations, gifts, legacies, bequests, or otherwise, and to receive, invest, and disburse for the purposes of this act all moneys which may be contributed by private individuals or corporations or organizations for the benefit of civil-service employees generally or any special class of employees.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I have prepared an amendment which I have sent to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLACK: Page 12, line 22, after the word "to," strike out the figures "2½" and insert the figure "6."

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, if I may have the attention of the committee, I can state very briefly the purport and effect of my amendment if it should be adopted.

The amendment, in short, is intended to make the rate of contribution on the part of the Government employees sufficient to create their retirement fund out of their own contributions. And competent experts have estimated that an assessment of 6 per cent of their annual compensation will be sufficient for that purpose.

Now, it is true that this 6 per cent will not pay the overhead expenses of administering the fund, and it will not take care of the expense of retiring those aged employees who are now in the service and who would have to be retired under the provisions of the bill. Those are expenses which, I think, the Government should properly pay.

Now, some gentlemen who have argued in support of this bill have related this proposed measure to the question of compensation to the Government employees. For instance, the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. VAILE], who spoke just a moment ago, based his argument upon that viewpoint. Well, now, Mr. Chairman, I do not think that in the consideration of the retirement question the two ought to be grouped together at all, because we do not expect to carry forward indefinitely the present scale of salaries. I take it that before this Congress adjourns, or at least not further than the next session of Congress, we shall take up a measure to reclassify the salaries of all Government employees, following the report of the Reclassification Commission which was submitted to Congress only a short time ago, and when we do that there are two paramount things that we ought to consider and bear in mind and hold to with a steadfast purpose. The first of these is that we should make careful investigation and see to it as nearly as may be that every unnecessary office in the Government is abolished, and that every unnecessary official or employee is eliminated from the service. There is not a bit of doubt in my mind that there are now on the Government pay roll a considerable number of officials and employees which are unnecessary and do not perform any useful public service.

Their elimination is the first thing that we should bear in mind. The next is we ought to see that for those who do remain in the service—and, of course, that will be a very large number—a salary or wage is fixed sufficient to enable them to support their families in reasonable comfort according to the average standard of American living. And not only ought it to be a living wage, but it ought to be large enough to enable them to lay aside a sufficient fund to support themselves and dependent members of their family in their old age.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BLACK. I will be very glad to. Probably I can get a little more time.

Mr. BARKLEY. I was wondering whether it really would make any difference in the long run whether we eliminated any contribution on the part of the Government and compelled the employees to contribute the whole of it, with the result that in the future their salaries would be increased sufficiently to take care of that and leave their compensation practically what it is now.

Mr. BLACK. The point I make is that this Congress should be considerate enough, it ought to have judgment enough, it ought to have courage enough, not to relate the two propositions at all. The reclassification of salaries should be taken up as a separate and independent matter and dealt with in a spirit of absolute fairness to the Government employees. Fair and generous payment should be provided for honest and efficient service performed.

Mr. OLIVER. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. BLACK. Yes; I am glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. OLIVER. I was very much interested in the gentleman's statement that in the reclassification the two things to be borne in mind were to get rid of the inefficient——

Mr. BLACK. And the unnecessary.

Mr. OLIVER. And to give adequate pay to those who remain.

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER. Now, ought not that to be attended to before a bill of this kind is considered?

Mr. BLACK. Undoubtedly it should have been. I do not think the retirement bill should have been brought before the House until after the passage of the reclassification bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLACK. May I have five minutes more?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman yield to me to move to close debate?

Mr. BLACK. I will ask the gentleman to wait until the conclusion of my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLACK. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have stated what I think we ought to do with respect to the matter of levying an assessment to provide for this retirement fund, and I will admit that, from the standpoint of ordinary logic, the more desirable thing to do would be to require the Government employee to make his own accumulation by his own private economy and industry. I admit that a compulsory retirement law is in a sense a paternalistic measure. I admit that; but it is a more sensible paternalism than the present method that we have of keeping these aged employees on the roll after they have passed the age of efficiency. And therefore I do not think we ought to write a bill in anticipation of the reclassification bill that will cause the Government to contribute 65 per cent and the employees only 35 per cent, unless we are going to write it upon the assumption that we are going to do an injustice to these employees when we come to reclassify their salaries; because if we do justice to them in the fixing of their salaries and pay them that which they are entitled to receive, then I contend that we have no right to call upon the general taxpayers, many of whom will receive less salaries than these Government employees will receive, and make them create a fund to pay these pensions.

Some of my Democratic friends have referred to our national platform as advocating the passage of this Lehlbach bill. The Democratic platform did not advocate the passage of a law like this. Here is what it says:

We favor an equitable retirement law providing for the retirement of superannuated and disabled employees of the civil service, to the end that a higher standard of efficiency may prevail.

Now, that word "equitable" means a law which will be fair to the taxpayer as well as to the Government employee, and I submit that it is not equity to ask the taxpayer to put up 65 per cent of the retirement fund.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Let me finish this statement. If it is equity to cause the Government to put up 65 per cent, I have got about the same idea of such equity as an old fellow had whom I used to hear Judge Greene, law professor at Lebanon, Tenn., tell about. The old fellow had a suit on the equity side of the docket, and in explaining to him why he lost the judge told him that equity was on the other side, and he said, "Well, damn equity." [Laughter.]

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The gentleman, I dare say, has had some experience in writing platforms. I suppose he appreciates the great virtue there is in writing into a platform such a word as "equitable," so as to leave every individual voter free to define it to himself in testing any special measure.

Mr. BLACK. Especially in writing Republican platforms, that would undoubtedly be true.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. No; in writing Democratic platforms.

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen will confine themselves to the matter at issue.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. A Democratic platform never is an issue.

Mr. BLACK. Gentlemen of the House in giving the Democratic platform as a reason for voting for this measure in its present form ought to remember that we had another plank in our platform at St. Louis that I do not think receives an over amount of consideration. That platform plank was this:

We demand careful economy in all expenditures for the support of the Government.

Mr. Chairman, I want to emphasize that on such occasions as this we ought to give consideration to that plank in our platform.

Now, I want to read an observation made by a very distinguished citizen from my State a few days ago, a man with whom I do not always agree, but whom we all recognize as a man of great ability, ex-Senator Bailey. In discussing this very measure he had this to say, in speaking of the Government employees:

They receive 12 months' pay for 11 months' work; and why should the taxpayers of this country be required, after paying them a salary while they work, to still pay them a salary after they have ceased to work? The laborer is worthy of his hire, but the hire is worthy of the laborer. Who will take care of the taxpayers when they quit work?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the time of his colleague be extended two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLACK. I will not take the two minutes. I will just finish reading this quotation, and then I am through. Ex-Senator Bailey continued to say:

The Government can not support the people. It may, of course, support a part of the people; but if it does, it must do so at the expense of the other part.

Mr. Chairman, let me say in conclusion, one of the oldest maxims is that "any unnecessary taxation is unjust taxation," and I submit that if the Government employees receive the salaries which they are entitled to receive, then any contribution on the part of the Government is unnecessary and therefore unjust. If they do not receive the rate of compensation to which they are entitled, then it is our duty to see that they do receive it, and we will not discharge the obligation by passing this retirement law. [Applause.]

Mr. SWOPE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SWOPE. Mr. Chairman, there used to be an old maxim to the effect that one half of the world does not know how the other half lives. But if this bill is passed and amended and extended from time to time it will not be long before the old maxim will have no application, because one half will know exactly how the other half lives. The first half will know that the second half is living on pensions and taxes that the first half is paying. [Laughter and applause.]

The Federal Government of late has been reaching out until its employees are legion. Every year more are added to the pay roll and only a few taken off. And now it is proposed to retire all of these employees with pensions upon their arrival at certain ages. I am against putting such a burden upon the taxpayers of this country. The war has been over 18 months, and yet the city of Washington is swarmed with thousands of Government employees who are doing practically nothing but drawing their pay, which the taxpayers of this country are compelled to furnish. The present administration is responsible for this excess of employees at the expense of the public, and if it shows no desire to cut down on them I refuse to vote to pension those we have. It has been argued that to give this pension to these employees will save the Government money. Such an argument is preposterous, and I can prove it by their own argument and figures. The advocates of this bill have stated that there are to-day 5,202 clerks who are 100 per cent inefficient on the pay rolls at a yearly cost of $4,681,800 to the taxpayers of this country.

In other words, there are to-day 5,202 employees who draw salaries, but "they toil not, neither do they spin." Why are the taxpayers of this country called upon to hereafter furnish pensions not only for these but for all others? It will cost the taxpayers $3,121,200 the first year it goes into operation, to say nothing of the cost of each succeeding year. The advocates of this bill claim that it will cost less to pension these men than it does to employ them. If that is so, why are they being employed at all? Under what authority have these different departmental heads kept on the pay rolls of this Government 5,202 persons who do not work? There is nothing political in what I am saying, Mr. Chairman, because both Democrats and Republicans have admitted that these figures are correct, because they were furnished by the departments themselves. But that is not all. There are 1,737 clerks who are 75 per cent inefficient, and it will cost $1,042,200 to retire them on pensions just for the first year. Then there are 1,256 who are 50 per cent inefficient, and it will cost $753,600 to retire these the first year. In all, it will cost something like $4,917,000 for the first year. Now where is all of this money to come from? Right out of the pockets of the taxpayers. I think it is about time to give the taxpayers a chance, and am therefore against this bill. Practically everyone believes that we should pension our disabled soldiers and their dependents, and that it might be advisable to retire on pensions aged employees who are engaged in hazardous work, such as railway mail clerks; but to pension all of the Government employees here in Washington and elsewhere is out of the question. That statement may not be popular, but it is the truth. [Applause.]

My idea is that we are proceeding in the wrong direction with this problem. The main argument that is made in favor of this bill is that these employees do not receive enough, and that they finally reach an age when they neither possess funds nor efficiency or health, and because of those facts they should be pensioned. In most instances these people are under obligation to the Government, because it has fed and clothed them for years. Their relation to the Government is simply a contractual relation. They chose that work of their own free will at a time when Government employees were the best paid employees in the United States. Most of them got their positions by some political pull, and they regarded themselves as fortunate. But by and by as the country developed and a greater premium was paid on individual thrift and initiative the men who stayed out of the Government employ and worked harder and longer hours than the Government employees began to make more money than the Government employees; and to-day it is claimed that the Government employees are poorly paid.

I do not know of a Member of this House who could perform his work in the hours of a Government employee here in Washington. I say to you that I could not make a living practicing law only seven hours a day. You could not, and you could not make a living in any of your lines of work on seven hours a day. Their working conditions are good as compared with men in other vocations. If these employees are not paid sufficient wages, the remedy for this condition is adequate pay and not pensions. I am always in favor of good wages, reasonable hours, and healthy working conditions. If these employees are paid fair wages, then it would be up to them whether they would lay up for their old age or not instead of hanging on and waiting for a pension.

NOT FOUNDED ON MERIT.

Moreover, this bill draws no distinction between the competent and the needy. It takes in all of the civil-service employees regardless of what they possess. Government employees are like everyone else. Some have saved and others have wasted. Their pay until of recent years has been unusually good and many have saved up considerable estates. There are several right here in Washington who will draw these pensions and who are worth over $100,000. There are several worth over $50,000, and many worth over $10,000. Now, I contend that those employees should not be permitted to draw one cent under this bill. I am unwilling to vote to tax the people I represent to pay pensions to this class of employees, because in many cases it would be taxing the poor to pay the rich. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH] in presenting this bill has stated that it will have the effect of reducing the number of employees. I claim that it will have the opposite effect, because all of them will strain every effort to stay in so as to remain the required time to be entitled to a pension. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH] has also stated that there will be something like 8,000 employees to resign if this bill is passed, but, Mr. Chairman, we all know that as soon as they resign there will be others to take their places.

This bill also draws a class distinction expressly stating that its provisions shall apply to "American employees of the Panama Canal above the grade of laborer." The laborer will have to bear his burden of the taxes, but will not be permitted to reap any of the benefits.

Take two young men starting in the country. One is making $1 a day 10 or 15 years ago. The other man has a place in Washington, for he perhaps had some friend here who was a Member of Congress who got him a job. He draws $100 a month. A few years ago that was mighty good pay. The other man may be a tenant, a laborer, a miner, a farmer, but he helps to feed and clothe the country, and is just as honorable and does as efficient and necessary work as the man in the Government departments. But when he gets old and perhaps dependent, what are you going to say to him? You say to his boys and his girls, "You have to take care of your father, and you not only have to take care of him but you have to pay taxes to provide a pension for the other man who happened to be in the Government employ." Such a practice is not consistent with our principles of government.

NOT THE PROPER TIME.

I do not agree that this is the proper time to bring up a bill like this. Up to date we never have had any legislation of this kind. And to pass a bill like this at a time when the country is deeper in debt and levying more taxes than ever before in its 144 years of independence seems to me very unwise. I want to know how many votes this bill would receive if there was a tax proposition tied on it. It would not receive a baker's dozen. [Applause.] Well, the money has to be raised from some source, and whether a tax provision is tied on it or not the money will be raised by taxation.

Now, with all due respect to the Members who favor the bill as drawn, I can not help from stating that my belief is that a good many arguments are founded on sympathy. One Member said he had been at a funeral of an old employee who died financially stranded. I will say that for every employee you find in that condition I can go out in the country and find 100 who are not drawing pensions and who have never held a Government job, yet they and their family would have to be taxed to furnish a pension for the Government employee.

RETIREMENT TERM TOO SHORT.

Another thing I do not approve of is retiring a man after only 15 years' service. That is too short a service to entitle an employee to retire on a pension. A man working 7 hours a day for only 15 years is not entitled to retire at the age of 65 or any other age. There is no corporation or private business concern that would adopt that principle. You are retiring men in the Government employ on a shorter term of service than you would retire them in the service of the United States Army. The officer in the United States Army has to put in 30 years of hard service before he is retired. A man can come here to Washington, get into the department under this bill, put in 15 years of work, and retire with an annuity. In other words, he might have been a loafer all his life, but if he finally put in 15 years with the Government and reached the age of 65 he would be entitled to retire on a pension under this bill.

Mr. CALDWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWOPE. I will.

Mr. CALDWELL. Did the gentleman vote for the Army reorganization bill passed the other day?

Mr. SWOPE. I certainly did.

Mr. CALDWELL. Does the gentleman remember the provision in relation to retiring Army officers—that it was considerably less than 30 years?

Mr. SWOPE. It was considerably greater than 15 years. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kentucky have one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. CALDWELL. The gentleman is in error; that provision provided for retirement of an officer for five years on a percentage basis.

Mr. SWOPE. For disability.

Mr. CALDWELL. For inefficiency.

Mr. SWOPE. Mr. Chairman, I repeat that the basic retirement provision in the Army bill is 30 years' service and is graded downward in cases of inefficiency and disability, as the gentleman from New York has kindly stated, but the bill we are discussing expressly states that a Government employee can be retired after 15 years of service on reaching 65, which neither takes into account disability or inefficiency. This bill proceeds upon the wrong principle and is too great a burden to the taxpayers, and I am compelled to vote against it. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MACCRATE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I suppose anyone who knows something of pension systems in our municipalities, especially in the city of New York, realizes that the pension is not an unmixed benefit to the employee. As a matter of fact one of the greatest deterrents we have in the city of New York to men leaving our fire and police departments to better themselves is the fact that some day they will get a pension. Personally I would like to see men in all walks of life get enough so that they could themselves lay aside for a rainy day, and, if I were a Government employee, I am not sure that I would be as hopeful for good from this retirement bill as many of the employees are. I am going to support this measure not because it helps the employee only, but because I believe it will help greatly in the administration of the Government's business. It is beside the question to talk of some part of the people supporting another part of the people under the terms of this legislation. To properly consider the matter, we must distinguish between acts of government which are governmental in their nature and acts which are purely matters of administration. On the administration side the Government is an employer dealing with employees who must be recompensed and dealt with as employees and not only as citizens of the Republic. When you suggest, therefore, that the employee shall pay the full amount of whatever he shall get at the end of his service, you are giving him nothing except a compulsory savings system, and you take from him the right to say how much he shall or shall not save. If you do that, you will have demands for increased compensation every year, because out of the wages paid the employees can not pay the full cost of their retirement pension.

For the good of the employees of this Government, I trust no one will ever suggest in their behalf that they make no contribution to the retirement fund. We hear now on every occasion when increased pay is justly due them that they get 30 days' sick leave and 30 days' vacation, and should they contribute nothing to the retirement fund, we would hear added "and they get a pension." It is difficult enough now to get fair pay for efficient service rendered to the Government, and in the future it will be well if the employees can continue to say that, "We are contributing to this fund."

In discussing what the Government shall do for the employees, it is well to ask what the relation between the Government and its employees is as compared with the private employer and his employees. When a man becomes attached to the Government service, in most instances he gets into a line in which there is no competition with the Government. He limits his opportunities for advancement, because he can not find a competitor to the Government. Like the Post Office, the various departments of Government have a monopoly in their special line. On the other hand, the man outside of Government employment finds plenty of competitors of his employer. He has the opportunity to start in business for himself. When you put a man in the employ of the Government he must abandon the hope of ever becoming his own "boss." He goes into a place and stays there, as a rule, till death, and at a salary of from $1,000 to $2,000 per year. [Applause.]

It is useless to talk of people saving for old age when you do not provide enough for their present wants. We must be fair in dealing with our own employees if we expect to have influence with private employers in the attitude they shall take to their employees.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this section and all amendments thereto shall close in 20 minutes, with the understanding that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] is to have 10 minutes, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MCKEOWN] 5 minutes, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] is recognized.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I never like to disappoint anybody if I can help it, especially I do not like to disappoint the people of the district that I seek to represent here. On this occasion I shall not disappoint the people whom I represent, for the reason that nobody who knows me believes that I will vote for this bill. [Applause.] I want to say this further, and that is that I indorse in toto the very fearless and very able remarks of my distinguished and well-beloved friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] which he made this morning. I know that this bill is going to pass. I feel entirely certain that the amendment of my colleague from Texas [Mr. BLACK] will be defeated. I would with much misgiving vote for this bill even if the amendment of my colleague were adopted. But I sought this opportunity, Mr. Chairman, for the sole reason of placing in the RECORD at this time my solemn protest against such legislation as this. [Applause.] You talk about platforms. You talk about what the Democratic Party stood for. If the Democratic Party since its organization has stood for anything, it has stood for equality of all men before the law of this land. [Applause.] It has stood always against dividing people into classes in this land and allowing a part of them to believe that they should by legislation be treated as a special class.

Those who have been in this House for the past two years know that I stand for the Government of the United States taking care of men whom it should take care of; that it should take care of the dependents of the men who laid down their lives that this country's honor might be defended; that it shall take care generously of the men who came back from battle scarred and maimed; but I shall not upon this occasion, I never will as long as I live, vote to tax the people, all the people of this country, to pay civil pensions to a special class. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK].

Mr. BLACK. May I ask that it be reported again?

The amendment was again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 43, noes 64.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BLACK and Mr. LEHLBACH took their places as tellers.

The committee again divided; and there were—ayes 40, noes 80.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 11. That in the case of an employee in the classified civil service of the United States who shall be transferred to an unclassified position, and in the case of any employee to whom this act applies who shall become absolutely separated from the service before becoming eligible for retirement on an annuity, the total amount of deductions of salary, pay, or compensation with accrued interest computed at the rate of 4 per cent per annum, compounded on June 30 of each fiscal year, shall, upon application, be returned to such employee: Provided, That all money so returned to an employee must be redeposited, before such employee may derive any benefit under the provisions of this act, upon reinstatement or retransfer to a classified position; and in case an annuitant shall die without having received in annuities an amount equal to the total amount of the deductions from his or her salary, pay, or compensation, together with interest thereon at 4 per cent per annum compounded as herein provided up to the time of his or her death, the excess of the said accumulated deductions over the said annuity payments shall be paid in one sum to his or her legal representatives upon the establishment of a valid claim therefor; and in case an employee shall die without having reached the retirement age or without having established a valid claim for annuity, the total amount of deductions with accrued interest as herein provided shall be paid to the legal representatives of such employee.

Also the following committee amendments were read and agreed to:

Page 15, line 10, after the word "before" strike out the words "reaching the retiring age" and insert in lieu thereof the words, "becoming eligible for retirement on an annuity."

Page 15, line 15, after the word "employee" insert:

"Provided, That all money so returned to an employee must be redeposited before such employee may derive any benefit under the provisions of this act, upon reinstatement or retransfer to a classified position."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the spelling of the word "classified" in line 19 will be corrected by the Clerk.

There was no objection.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Massachusetts rise?

Mr. LUCE. To offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LUCE: Page 16, line 7, change the period to a colon and add the following words:

"Provided, That if in case of death the amount of deductions to be paid under the provisions of this section does not exceed $300, and if there has been no demand upon the Commissioner of Pensions by a duly appointed executor or administrator, the payment may be made after the expiration of three months from date of death to such person or persons as may appear in the judgment of the Commissioner of Pensions to be entitled to the proceeds of the estate, and such payment shall be a bar to recovery by any other person.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, the committee accepts the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 15. That for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, from any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $100,000 for salaries and for clerical and other services, the purchase of books, office equipment, stationery, and other supplies, and all other expenses necessary in carrying out the provisions of this act, including traveling expenses and expenses of medical and other examinations as provided in section 5 hereof.

The Secretary of the Interior shall submit annually to the Secretary of the Treasury estimates of the appropriations necessary to continue this act in full force and effect.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. On page 18, line 3, strike out, after the word "That," in line 3, the words "for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

An amendment offered by Mr. LEHLBACH: Page 18, line 3, after the word "That," strike out "for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 16. That the Commissioner of Pensions, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, is hereby authorized and directed to select three actuaries, one of whom shall be the Government actuary, to be known as the board of actuaries, whose duty it shall be to annually report upon the actual operations of this act, with authority to recommend to the Commissioner of Pensions such changes as in its judgment may be deemed necessary to protect the public interest and maintain the system upon a sound financial basis. It shall be the duty of the Commissioner of Pensions to submit with his annual report to Congress the recommendations of the board of actuaries. It shall be the duty of the board of actuaries to make a valuation of the "civil-service retirement and disability fund" at the end of the first year following the passage of this act and at intervals of every five years thereafter, or oftener, if deemed necessary by the Commissioner of Pensions. The compensation of the members of the board of actuaries, exclusive of the Government actuary, shall be fixed by the Commissioner of Pensions, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

Page 18, line 22, after the word "to," strike out the words, "protect the public interest and."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I desire to discuss the committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, the committee has seen fit to strike out the words "protect the public interest and," so that it will read:

As in its judgment may be deemed necessary to maintain the system upon a sound financial basis.

I assumed and thought probably that that portion of the paragraph was synonymous with the words stricken out, and that to maintain it on a sound financial basis would be protecting the public interest.

Mr. LEHLBACH. That was not exactly the thought.

Mr. WALSH. Then what was the reason?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Because the presumption is that every employee of the Government or anyone connected with the Govenrment of the country in any capacity is there for the purpose of protecting the public interest. That is the presumption, that he will so act, and the law is that he is there to protect the public interest, and the words are absolutely meaningless in the statute, and mar the statute, and ought not to be in it. Those who have any connection with the Government are all there to protect the Government interest. Why write those words into a statute when they are ridiculous?

Mr. WALSH. Well, the gentleman says that the presumption is that that is what these employees are to do. It is a pretty violent presumption, I think, in the case of a great many.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the gentleman permit me to suggest that if the argument of the gentleman from New Jersey is sound there is no necessity for the remaining words on line 23, that these employees shall have the duty of maintaining the system on a sound financial basis?

Mr. LEHLBACH. They may need information as to the proper course to pursue with regard to the appropriations under this bill in order to maintain it on a sound financial basis; but the words "to protect the public interest" do not indicate any activity whatsoever to a Government employee or Government official.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Then all you need is "what is deemed to be necessary." That is all.

Mr. WALSH. They will probably construe that to mean "maintain themselves on a sound financial basis." That is what a great many of the public employees are most interested in, and they do not care a snap for the public interest, whether it is written in the statute or not. [Applause.] We have a vast horde of employees. We even had to offer to pay their railroad fare home from here immediately after the signing of the armistice in order to separate them from the service——

Mr. BLANTON. And then you did not do it.

Mr. WALSH. And a suggestion is made in another body that, in order to reduce the great force we now have, we should repeat that experiment and offer to pay their railroad fare home as an inducement, if you please, for them to submissively quit their positions.

The time has come when the Congress ought to assert itself. We ought to eliminate these employees by curtailing the appropriations, and get rid of some of these employees that we have down here filling up a number of these buildings that were constructed during the war time for emergencies, to be located there temporarily. There are a great many of us here who will not live, I think, to see the day when some of these buildings are removed. They ought to be taken down. Those public properties here ought to be once more restored to the purpose for which they were intended and be made beautiful parks again instead of being cluttered up with buildings for these useless employees.

Now, I submit to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH], who has shown great skill and ability in directing this measure through the House, that it might be well if we permitted this language, even though it does perhaps in his view somewhat mar the statute, to remain in there in order to recall to some of the beneficiaries of this legislation the fact that they do have a duty to protect the public interest. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. CALDWELL. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee what was the moving reason on the part of the committee for not fixing the salaries of these actuaries? We have been talking about economy here, and asserting that Congress ought to keep its hands on the expense account, and that kind of thing, and yet we say, on page 19, "The compensation of the members of the board of actuaries, exclusive of the Government actuary, shall be fixed by the Commissioner of Pensions, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior." Why could not Congress fix that?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Because after this law goes into effect and the machinery for it is being established it can be told with much more certainty just what the functions of these actuaries will be, what degree of skill and expertness will be required, and the amount of time these outside actuaries will have to put on the work in order effectively to fulfill the functions imposed upon them by the section, and that information upon which the salary should be based can not be ascertained until they begin the work. For that reason it was deemed inexpedient and impracticable for the committee arbitrarily to fix a salary, but a salary commensurate with the amount of work and the character of work to be done could be ascertained and left to the commissioner who assigned these people and under whom they work, with the approval of the chief of the department, the Cabinet officer, the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. CALDWELL. I hope the gentleman will remember this when we come with the appropriation bill next time, following this bill. If the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Pensions do not fix the salary according to what Congress ought to fix it, I hope the gentleman from New Jersey will call the attention of the House to that fact.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I would like to call the attention of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH] to this paragraph of the section where it is proposed to strike out the words "to protect the public interest."

This section provides for the appointment of a commission of actuaries, one of whom is to be the Government actuary and two are to be taken from the outside. I suppose they will not be in service all the time. The section directs them to recommend changes in the law, to recommend changes in the system to the Commissioner of Pensions; and the Commissioner of Pensions is required to submit their report to Congress, "with authority to recommend to the Commissioner of Pensions such changes as in his judgment may be necessary to protect the public interest and maintain the system upon a sound financial basis." The committee have recommended that you strike out the words "to protect the public interest." It seems to me that this board of actuaries, in reporting upon what changes they think ought to be made, ought to have in mind the fact that they are directed to report changes to protect the public interest as well as to maintain the system upon a sound financial basis.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Just in a moment.

Mr. BEE. Very well.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The statement of the gentleman from New Jersey a while ago was that it was their duty to do that anyway. That is erroneous. If we give the commission specific direction as to what they are to report upon, that is the only duty they are to have; and if this language is stricken out, the only changes they can report are as to what is necessary to maintain the system upon a sound financial basis. It seems to me they ought to have authority in their report to report recommendations for changes in the law to protect the public interest. What objection can there be to that?

Mr. LEHLBACH. If the gentleman will yield, I will simply state to the House, in justice to the committee, that the amendment which they here recommend is an amendment that was suggested to them emanating from another body.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Well, then, I think we had better vote it down.

Mr. BEE. I wanted to ask the gentleman from Illinois this question: If the debate shows that this specific language has been stricken out, would it not be a direction to the actuaries not to consider the public interest?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Without that language in the bill, it seems to me while they might exercise the authority, they at least would not be required to exercise the authority to recommend changes in the law or the system which would protect the public interest, regardless of whether it was for the purpose of maintaining a sound financial basis.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. Has it not been urged upon the House that the whole bill has been proposed in order to protect the public interest and to increase the efficiency of the departments? And if that idea be carried through then these words should still be carried in the bill, to protect the public interest, should they not?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I think so.

Mr. Chairman, I think this bill is about to pass this House. I have been a Member of the House for several years and was at one time on the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service. I have never been enthusiastic about the contributory plan for retirement. I have long believed in retirement. I think the contributory plan, while it is covered in this bill in the main, will be more expensive than it will be economical. I can remember, not so very long ago, when I think there were not 10 Members of this House who were in favor in any way whatever of a retirement plan, when very few of the corporate institutions or private concerns of the country had inaugurated a retirement system for their own employees. Now gentlemen call this paternalistic. In a sense it is, but after all it is a part and parcel of the subject of the wage you pay.

Not very long ago I read the autobiography of one of the admirals or generals, a man very eminent, whom I knew well and know well, a man of very high standing, who said that some time after he entered the service he thought seriously of resigning, but finally remained in the service of the Government because he could be assured that if he lived to be retired he would have sufficient compensation from the Government to care for him in his old age and that that was the deciding factor which persuaded him to remain in the service. I have no doubt that the passage of a bill for the retirement of Government employees will cause many of the most efficient people to remain in the service of the Government, because they will feel that when they reach old age they at least will not have lost all that they have tried to save. There will be some saving coming from the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WALSH. I ask that the gentleman have five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentlemtn from Illinois be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman think that the argument which he is making has been borne out by experience in the Military or Naval Establishments, that the fact that they are permitted to have retirement pay after service for a certain number of years is keeping a lot of these men in the service?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I have not the slightest doubt that it is keeping a very large share of them in the service. And, by the way, in connection with that, I have heard a good many times about how many men in the Army and Navy were leaving the Government service—resigning because the compensation was not sufficient. Personally, I have had more applications from temporary officers in the Army and Navy—especially in the Army—who hope, desire, and ask that they may be retained as permanent officers under the reorganized-Army bill, regardless of any increase in pay, than I have had from men who propose to resign because the pay was not sufficient. [Applause.] Those men who are not in the service permanently want to get in; and it is human nature that when a man gets into an employment he wants to have his compensation increased. I have no quarrel with anybody who wants that. It is our duty, however, to protect the public.

I believe this retirement bill will keep some of the most efficient employees in the service. Everywhere many of them to-day are leaving the Government service. The opportunities outside for increased pay—temporarily, at least—offer quite an inducement, and the majority of mankind do not think in years ahead. They think for to-day or to-morrow. I hope that some of these efficient men will be persuaded to remain in the service, upon the theory that when they reach the age of retirement they will know that neither fire nor robbery nor disaster will have taken away from them all chance for some support in their old age.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. I should be interested to know, if the gentleman cares to give his opinion, whether he thinks the passage of this bill will not probably result in making the $20 a month bonus, or additional compensation, which is now given to Government employees a permanent thing?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I can not say; I do not know. No one knows. One thing is very certain: If the cost of articles which are consumed and produced keeps moving upward, the whole standard of wages and salaries throughout the United States and the world will have to be readjusted to the new conditions. While the Government is very slow about changing salaries—either increasing them or decreasing them—it is inevitable that if the cost of living continues as it is—and much more inevitable if it increases—that the pay of all Government employees will be increased. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words, merely pro forma to get the floor. Mr. Chairman, I have tried to be consistent in my votes and my actions ever since I have been in Congress. Consistency now makes me favor this committee amendment. I think it is very apropos indeed for the distinguished chairman of this committee to move to strike out these particular words from this bill at this time. What is the committee amendment? It proposes to strike from this bill the words "to protect the public interest."

I want to go with him and help him strike them out, because nowhere in this bill has there been any attempt, legislative or otherwise, to protect the public interest. The time has come in this House under the present régime when the interest of the public has long since been forgotten. There is hardly a bill we have under consideration now where it would not be best, for consistency at least, to strike out all reference to the public interest. We talk about the $25,000,000,000 of the debts we must pay. We talk about the $3,300,000,000 more deficit that we face and have to make up. This is a debt-paying Government. It pays its debts. It does not let the interest accumulate. When the interest on Liberty bonds or other obligations becomes due, you take the coupons, go to the bank and collect them in cash, and the cash comes out of the pockets of the tax-burdened people. And yet, facing a $25,000,000,000 indebtedness, and facing a $3,300,000,000 more deficit, we day after day on the floor of this House urgently pass bills of this kind with the public interest stricken out. You ought to adopt this amendment. The public has long since begun to expect this interest for the public to be left out of every bill.

I was amused yesterday afternoon when an attempt was made to introduce on the floor by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations the great sundry civil bill, carrying millions of dollars. The distinguished majority leader had already given out his statement that he expected to make in a speech on the introduction of the bill. The evening papers yesterday afternoon stated that Mr. MONDELL made the following speech in connection with the introduction of the sundry civil bill. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] threw a monkey wrench into the proposition last night, and the gentleman from Wyoming did not get a chance to make his speech.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. I did not see any newspaper print that statement as a speech. I frequently have made statements to the newspapers without making them on the floor.

Mr. BLANTON. They may have said "statement"; but I saw the gentleman from Wyoming come in with the gentleman from Iowa, who had the bill under his arm, and the gentleman from Wyoming had a twinkle in his left eye, and I knew that he was expecting to make a speech. [Laughter.]

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, in view of the support of the gentleman from Texas, I trust that the amendment will be defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the committee amendment was rejected.

The Clerk completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MCARTHUR, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (S. 1699) for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

There was no demand for a separate vote.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I have a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. I am.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BLANTON moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service with instructions to report the same back to the House forthwith with the following amendment, to wit: "Page 3, line 9, after the figures '1919,' strike out the period, insert a colon, and add the following proviso: 'Provided, That none of the provisions of this act shall apply to and none of its benefits shall be received or enjoyed by any person who is a member of any association, society, organization, or union of Government employees which is affiliated with, subject to, or a member or component part of, or acknowledges the authority of, any higher or superior body or institution of organized labor; and, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, the Commissioner of Pensions shall make and enforce rules for the enforcement of this section and governing the method and character of proof required in order that employees may receive the benefits of this act.'"

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order against the motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. LEHLBACH. That the motion to recommit is not germane. This bill provides that Government employees who reach a certain age and who have been in the Government service for a certain length of years shall come under the provisions of the retirement provided in the bill, if they fall within certain classes, and those classes in every instance are confined to the character of employment. The motion to recommit seeks to exclude from the provisions of the bill a class not based on the character of employment, but on some membership by the individual in some outside association or in some activity that is dissociated from the employment. If this were to include another class or to exclude another class, based on the character of employment, it would be germane, that being the only character or class considered in the bill. The provisions include those in the classified service and also those in the service of the Panama Canal, in the Botanic Gardens, and so forth, in every instance based on the character of service. This introduces a different classification and therefore is not germane.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that this same point of order was raised when this was offered as an amendment in Committee of the Whole, and that the point of order was overruled. The Chair, of course, is always disposed, if possible, to have the ruling in the House the same as in Committee of the Whole. It seems to the Chair in the present instance that this motion is in substance the same as if to say that the provisions of the act shall extend to all persons who were in the service of the Government, except certain persons. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 4, noes 157.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and seventy-five Members present, not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 7, nays 318, answered "present" 2, not voting 99, as follows:

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent that the Members have three legislative days in which to extend their remarks on the retirement bill. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman if that was for everybody to print?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I object.

WATER-POWER LEGISLATION—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. ESCH, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, presented a conference report on the bill (H. R. 3184) to create a Federal power commission and to define its powers and duties, to provide for the improvement of navigation, for the development of water power, for the use of lands of the United States in relation thereto, to repeal section 18 of "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, approved August 8, 1917, and for other purposes," and for other purposes, for printing in the RECORD under the rule.

Following are the conference report and statement:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3184) to create a Federal power commission and to define its powers and duties, to provide for the improvement of navigation, for the development of water power, for the use of lands of the United States in relation thereto, to repeal section 18 of "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, approved August 8, 1917, and for other purposes," and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 17, 22, 28, 29, 31, 44, 46, 59.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 9, 10, 12, 13, 14, 16, 18, 19, 20, 23, 24, 25, 30, 32, 33, 34, 35, 37, 39, 40, 41, 42, 47, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"That the commission shall appoint an executive secretary, who shall receive a salary of $5,000 a year, and prescribe his duties, and the commission may request the President of the United States to detail an officer from the United States Engineer Corps to serve the commission as engineer officer, his duties to be prescribed by the commission."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 8: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"'Navigable waters' means those parts of streams or other bodies of water over which Congress has jurisdiction under its authority to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States, and which either in their natural or improved condition, notwithstanding interruptions between the navigable parts of such streams or waters by falls, shallows, or rapids compelling land carriage, are used or suitable for use for the transportation of persons or property in interstate or foreign commerce, including therein all such interrupting falls, shallows, or rapids; together with such other parts of streams as shall have been authorized by Congress for improvement by the United States or shall have been recommended to Congress for such improvement after investigation under its authority."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 11: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: ", and said classification of investment of the Interstate Commerce Commission shall in so far as applicable be published and promulgated as a part of the rules and regulations of the commission"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 15: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"In order to aid the commission in determining the net investment of a licensee in any project, the licensee shall, upon oath, within a reasonable period of time, to be fixed by the commission, after the construction of the original project or any addition thereto or betterment thereof, file with the commission, in such detail as the commission may require, a statement in duplicate showing the actual legitimate cost of construction of such project, addition, or betterment, and the price paid for water rights, rights of way, lands, or interest in lands. The commission shall deposit one of said statements with the Secretary of the Treasury. The licensee shall grant to the commission or to its duly authorized agent or agents, at all reasonable times, free access to such project, addition, or betterment, and to all maps, profiles, contracts, reports of engineers, accounts, books, records, and all other papers and documents relating thereto."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 21: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: "or by its executive secretary"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 26: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 26, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: "if it be satisfied as to the ability of the applicant to carry out such plans"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 27: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 27, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"The commission is hereby authorized and directed to investigate and, on or before the 1st day of January, 1921, report to Congress the cost and, in detail, the economic value of the power plant outlined in project No. 3, House Document No. 1400, Sixty-second Congress, third session, in view of existing conditions, utilizing such study as may heretofore have been made by any department of the Government; also in connection with such project to submit plans and estimates of cost necessary to secure an increased and adequate water supply for the District of Columbia. For this purpose the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 36: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 36, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"That the licensee shall pay to the United States reasonable annual charges in an amount to be fixed by the commission for the purpose of reimbursing the United States for the costs of the administration of this act; for recompensing it for the use, occupancy, and enjoyment of its lands or other property; and for the expropriation to the Government of excessive profits until the respective States shall make provision for preventing excessive profits or for the expropriation thereof to themselves, or until the period of amortization as herein provided is reached, and in fixing such charges the commission shall seek to avoid increasing the price to the consumers of power by such charges, and charges for the expropriation of excessive profits may be adjusted from time to time by the commission as conditions may require: Provided, That when licenses are issued involving the use of Government dams or other structures owned by the United States or tribal lands embraced within Indian reservations the commission shall fix a reasonable annual charge for the use thereof, and such charges may be readjusted at the end of 20 years after the beginning of operations and at periods of not less than 10 years thereafter in a manner to be described in each license."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 38: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 38, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: "one hundred"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 43: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 43, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"(i) In issuing licenses for a minor part only of a complete project, or for a complete project of not more than 100 horsepower capacity, the commission may in its discretion waive such conditions, provisions, and requirements of this act, except the license period of 50 years, as it may deem to be to the public interest to waive under the circumstances: Provided, That the provisions hereof shall not apply to lands within Indian reservations."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 48: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 48, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: "Provided, That in the event the United States does not exercise the right to take over or does not issue a license to a new licensee or issue a new license to the original licensee upon reasonable terms"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 49: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 49, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"That all proceeds from any Indian reservation shall be placed to the credit of the Indians of such reservation. All other charges arising from licenses hereunder shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States, subject to the following distribution: Twelve and one-half per cent thereof is hereby appropriated to be paid into the Treasury of the United States and credited to 'Miscellaneous receipts'; 50 per cent of the charges arising from licenses hereunder for the occupancy and use of public lands, national monuments, national forests, and national parks shall be paid into, reserved, and appropriated as a part of the reclamation fund created by the act of Congress known as the reclamation act, approved June 17, 1902; and 37½ per cent of the charges arising from licenses hereunder for the occupancy and use of national forests, national parks, public lands, and national monuments, from development within the boundaries of any State shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury to such State; and 50 per cent of the charges arising from all other licenses hereunder is hereby reserved and appropriated as a special fund in the Treasury to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War in the maintenance and operation of dams and other navigation structures owned by the United States or in the construction, maintenance, or operation of headwater or other improvements of navigable waters of the United States."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 57: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 57, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: "Provided, That when application is made for a license under this section for a project or projects already constructed, the fair value of said project or projects, determined as provided in this section, shall for the purposes of this act and of said license be deemed to be the amount to be allowed as the net investment of the applicant in such project or projects as of the date of such license, or as of the date of such determination, if license has not been issued. Such fair value may, in the discretion of the commission, be determined by mutual agreement between the commission and the applicant or, in case they can not agree, jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the district court of the United States in the district within which such project or projects may be located, upon the application of either party, to hear and determine the amount of such fair value"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 58: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 58, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"That any person, association, corporation, State, or municipality intending to construct a dam or other project works across, along, over, or in any stream or part thereof, other than those defined herein as navigable waters, and over which Congress has jurisdiction under its authority to regulate commerce between foreign nations and among the several States, may in their discretion file declaration of such intention with the commission, whereupon the commission shall cause immediate investigation of such proposed construction to be made, and if upon investigation it shall find that the interests of interstate or foreign commerce would be affected by such proposed construction, such person, association, corporation, State, or municipality shall not proceed with such construction until it shall have applied for and shall have received a license under the provisions of this act. If the commission shall not so find, and if no public lands or reservations are affected, permission is hereby granted to construct such dam or other project works in such stream upon compliance with State laws."

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3184) to create a Federal power commission and to define its powers and duties, to provide for the improvement of navigation, for the development of water power, for the use of lands of the United States in relation thereto, to repeal section 18 of "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, approved August 8, 1917, and for other purposes," and for other purposes, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the committee of conference submitted in the accompanying conference report as to each of the said amendments, namely:

On amendment No. 1: In lieu of the provision in the House bill that the commission shall appoint an executive secretary, the Senate provided that the commission shall request the President of the United States to detail an officer from the United States Engineer Corps to serve the commission as executive secretary and engineer officer, his duties to be prescribed by the commission. The conferees restored the House provision requiring the commission to appoint an executive secretary and adopted the Senate provision as to detailing an officer from the United States Engineer Corps to serve as engineer officer, the request for such detail being permissive instead of mandatory, as in the Senate provision. The Senate provision that the officer should also serve as executive secretary was stricken out.

On amendments Nos. 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6: These amendments are verbal changes perfecting the text.

On amendment No. 7: This amendment recasts the House definition of "reservations."

On amendment No. 8: This amendment recasts the House definition as to the term "navigable waters," the House agreeing to the Senate definition with an amendment, inserting after the word "interruptions" the words "between the navigable parts of such streams or waters," thus making it clear that although the navigable parts of such streams may be interrupted by falls, shallows, or rapids, the portions occupied by falls, shallows, or rapids are within the jurisdiction of Congress, and that no dams can be constructed at, upon, or across such falls, shallows, or rapids without securing a license as provided in the bill. Under the House definition of "navigable waters" it might be possible to construct dams at the very point where dams would have to be located without securing such license. The Senate definition, moreover, limits the application of the act to those cases where interstate or foreign commerce will be directly affected.

On amendment No. 9: Strikes out certain words not necessary to the definition of "Government dam."

On amendment No. 10: This amendment perfects the text with reference to the definition of "net investment."

On amendment No. 11: This amendment requires as to net investment that the classification of investment of the Interstate Commerce Commission shall, in so far as applicable, be published and promulgated as a part of the rules and regulations of the commission. This is for the purpose of publicity.

On amendments Nos. 12, 13, and 14: These amendments are verbal, perfecting the text.

On amendment No. 15: Amendment No. 15, with the amendment agreed to in conference, is merely an elaboration of the provision already contained in lines 1 to 15, inclusive, on page 12, relating to the examination of books and accounts of licensees, the submission of statements and reports, including full information as to assets and liabilities, capitalization, net investment, etc. The amendment as modified requires the licensee to file with the commission "a statement in duplicate showing the actual legitimate cost of construction of such project, addition, or betterment, and the price paid for water rights, rights of way, lands, or interest in lands."

On amendment No. 16: This is merely a verbal amendment, perfecting the text.

On amendment No. 17: This amendment prohibited the issuance of any licenses affecting tribal lands embraced within Indian reservations which were ceded to the Indians by the United States by treaty, except by and with the consent of the council of the tribe. The Senate conferees receded from this amendment. The conferees saw no reason why water-power use should be singled out from all other uses of Indian reservation land for special action of the council of the tribe.

On amendment No. 18: This amendment is verbal, perfecting the text.

On amendment No. 19: Amendment No. 19 provides that upon the filing of any application for a license which has not been preceded by a preliminary permit under subsection (e) of section 4, notice shall be given and published as required by the proviso of said subsection.

On amendments Nos. 20 and 21: These amendments are verbal, perfecting the text.

On amendment No. 22: Amendment No. 22 giving authority to the commission to investigate as to the utility of tunnels and to make rules and regulations for their use has been eliminated from the bill, the Senate conferees having receded. No sufficient reason was presented why the authority to investigate should be limited to one particular type of water conduit rather than to all the major structures of a power project.

On amendments Nos. 23, 24, 25, and 26: These amendments are verbal changes and were considered desirable as they clarify the text.

On amendment No. 27: This amendment relates to the construction on the Potomac River of a power plant outlined in project No. 3, House Document No. 1400, Sixty-second Congress, third session, generally known as the Great Falls project. The amendment authorized the commission to construct said project under its direct supervision or to enter into contracts for materials and labor for the construction of the same or any part of the same as in its judgment may be the most practical and economical, not exceeding a limitation of cost of $25,000,000. In lieu of the amendment the conferees recommended a substitute authorizing and directing the commission to investigate and, on or before the 1st day of January, 1921, report to Congress the cost and, in detail, the economic value of the power plant outlined in project No. 3, House Document No. 1400, Sixty-second Congress, third session, in view of existing conditions, utilizing such study as may heretofore have been made by any department of the Government; also in connection with such project to submit plans and estimates of cost necessary to secure an increased and adequate water supply for the District of Columbia. For this purpose the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated.

On amendments Nos. 28, 29, 30, and 31: These amendments of section 8 relating to the involuntary transfer of licenses were not, with the exception of amendment No. 30, relating to judicial sales, adopted by the conferees, the Senate having receded from its amendments.

On amendments Nos. 32, 33, 34, and 35: These amendments are verbal, perfecting the text.

On amendment No. 36: This amendment relates to the charge imposed upon the licensee for water power developed. The House bill in paragraph (e) of section 10 provided "that the licensee shall pay to the United States reasonable annual charges in an amount to be fixed by the commission." The Senate bill provided that "the licensee shall pay for the license herein granted such reasonable annual charges as may be fixed by the commission for the purpose of reimbursing the United States for the cost of administration of the act in relation to water powers developed under its jurisdiction." The licensee was also to pay for the use and occupation of any public lands and lands in reservations, except tribal lands embraced within Indian reservations, necessary for the development of the project covered by the license such reasonable annual charges based upon the actual value of the Government lands used as might be fixed by the commission; but in no event should the annual charge for the foregoing exceed 25 cents per developed horsepower. In lieu of both Senate and House provisions as to charges the conferees recommend the following:

"That the licensee shall pay to the United States reasonable annual charges in an amount to be fixed by the commission for the purpose of reimbursing the United States for the costs of the administration of this act; for recompensing it for the use, occupancy, and enjoyment of its lands or other property; and for the expropriation to the Government of excessive profits until the respective States shall make provision for preventing excessive profits or for the expropriation thereof to themselves, or until the period of amortization as herein provided is reached, and in fixing such charges the commission shall seek to avoid increasing the price to the consumers of power by such charges, and charges for the expropriation of excessive profits may be adjusted from time to time by the commission as conditions may require."

On amendment No. 37: This amendment directs that licenses when issued for the development, transmission, or distribution of power by States or municipalities shall be issued and enjoyed without charge when "sold to the public without profit."

On amendment No. 38: This amendment permits the issuance of licenses without charge in projects of not more than 100-horsepower capacity when such power is used for the development, transmission, or distribution of power for domestic, mining, or other beneficial use. The House bill fixed this limit at 50 and the Senate bill at 200 horsepower.

On amendment 39: This amendment removes the exemption from charge where the power is developed upon tribal lands within Indian reservations.

On amendment No. 40: This amendment is verbal and perfects the text.

On amendment No. 41: This amendment makes it mandatory upon the licensee to reimburse the owner of a reservoir or other improvement for such part of the annual charges for interest, maintenance, and depreciation thereon as the commission may deem equitable.

On amendments Nos. 42 and 43: These amendments strike from the House bill the provision authorizing the commission in its discretion to waive certain conditions, provisions, and requirements of the act in issuing licenses for a part only of a complete project, where the land of the United States required is to be used only for transmission lines, water conduits, or for storage reservoirs, or for a complete project of not more than 50-horsepower capacity. In lieu of the House provision the Senate excepted from such waiver the license period of 50 years and increased the horsepower capacity to 200 horsepower. The House conferees agreed to the Senate substitute with an amendment reducing the horsepower capacity to 100. Under the House provision the commission could allow perpetual grants without conditions for transmission lines, water conduits, and storage reservoirs if the remainder of the project was on private land.

On amendment No. 44: This amendment provides that the licensee shall not directly or indirectly discriminate or permit discrimination in the apportionment, allotment, transmission, distribution, sale, or lease of power or electrical energy or current in favor of any municipality as against any other or others in respect of service, rates, or the quantity of power or electrical energy or current transmitted or supplied to it or them. The Senate receded from this amendment. Under this Senate amendment, had it been retained, the licensee serving two adjacent cities, if he could not develop a new source of supply, might cancel a part of his contracts in one city and transfer the power to another city. Under such conditions no user of power in either city could get a binding contract, and no one would purchase of the licensee if any other source of supply was available. Such a provision would lead to the raiding of one municipality by another, would keep business enterprises away, and would make power development under the act hazardous.

On amendment No. 45: Amendment No. 45, in section 12, as agreed to by the conferees is a substitute for both Senate and House provisions relating to applications for projects involving the construction of a lock or locks or other navigation structures. The House provision was "the commission may before taking action upon such application cause a report," etc., to be made to Congress. The Senate provision was that the commission "shall take no action," but cause a report, etc. The substitute, as recommended by the conferees, provides that the commission "may grant the application, with the provision to be expressed in the license, that the licensee will install the necessary navigation structures if the Government fails to make provision therefor within a time to be fixed in the license and" cause a report to be made to Congress.

On amendment No. 46: This amendment relates to severance damages and provides that such damages "shall not exceed the aggregate actual expenses or loss for maintenance, depreciation and interest upon such part of the property not taken as is made temporarily idle by the severance therefrom of the property taken; such aggregate expenses to be computed for a period reasonably necessary for providing a substitute source of power and in no case to exceed the value of the works taken." This amendment is a partial statement of the principle adopted by the California Railroad Commission for fixing severance damages in the case of the valuation for purposes of purchase by the city of Los Angeles of certain properties of the Southern California Edison Co. While the rule was an equitable one under the circumstances of that particular case, where the company was left in possession of its main transmission system and its largest generating plants, it might be inequitable in cases where, for example, the generating plants were all taken and the transmission and distributing systems left. The Senate receded from the amendment and it has been eliminated, the conferees believing that the existing provisions of section 14 were sufficient to take care of the matter of severance damages.

On amendment No. 47: This amendment is merely verbal.

On amendment No. 48: This amendment relates to the terms of the license. The House bill provided "that in the event the United States does not exercise the right to take over and does not issue a new license to the original or a new licensee, then the commission shall issue from year to year an annual license to the then licensee under the terms and conditions of the original license until the property is taken over or a new license is issued as aforesaid." The Senate bill provided "that in the event the United States does not exercise the right to take over or does not issue a license to a new licensee or tender a new license to the original licensee, upon the terms and conditions aforesaid which is accepted" then the commission, etc. The conferees agreed to the Senate amendment amending it, however, so as to read as follows: "Provided, That in the event the United States does not exercise the right to take over or does not issue a license to a new licensee, or issue a new license to the original licensee upon reasonable terms" then the commission, etc. The House conferees contended that the retention of the words "which is accepted" in the Senate amendment would practically result in a perpetual franchise. These words were eliminated and the Senate amendment, modified as above set forth, was agreed to.

On amendment No. 49: This amendment relates to the disposition of charges arising from licenses. The House bill provided that such charges should be paid into the Treasury of the United States; then 50 per cent of the charges arising from licenses for the occupancy and use of national forest was reserved and appropriated as a special fund in the Treasury for the survey, construction, and maintenance of roads and trails within the national forests. Fifty per cent of the charges arising from licenses for the occupancy and use of national parks was to be reserved and appropriated as a special fund in the Treasury, to be expended in the improvement and development of such parks. Fifty per cent of the charges arising from licenses for the occupancy and use of public lands, and of national monuments, and power-site or other reserves outside of national forests was to be paid into the reclamation fund. All proceeds from any Indian reservation were to be placed to the credit of the Indians of such reservation. Fifty per cent of the charges arising from all other licenses were to be placed in a special fund, to be expended in the maintenance and operation of dams and other navigation structures owned by the United States or in the construction, maintenance, or operation of headwater or other improvements of navigable waters of the United States. The Senate bill provided that all charges arising from licenses were to be paid into the Treasury of the United States and to be reserved as a special fund therein. Such part of said fund as Congress might from time to time direct was to be appropriated toward paying the costs of administration of the act and of conducting the investigations authorized thereunder. The remainder, if any, in so far as the same might be derived from dams in navigable streams was to be expended in the maintenance and operation of dams or other navigation structures owned by the United States or in the construction, maintenance, and operation of headwater or other improvements of streams. In so far as such funds were derived from licenses to occupy portions of the public lands, one half thereof was to be paid into the reclamation fund and the other half was to be paid to the States in which the lands occupied were located, in the proportion to each that the amount derived from the lands within its bounds bore to the whole amount derived from the occupancy of all such lands. The proceeds from licenses authorizing the occupancy of any part of any Indian reservation were to be placed to the credit of the Indians of such reservations.

In lieu of both Senate and House provisions as to the disposition of funds derived from charges the conferees agreed to the following substitute:

"That all proceeds from any Indian reservation shall be placed to the credit of the Indians of such reservation. All other charges arising from licenses hereunder shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States, subject to the following distribution: Twelve and one-half per centum thereof is hereby appropriated to be paid into the Treasury of the United States and credited to 'Miscellaneous receipts'; 50 per centum of the charges arising from licenses hereunder for the occupancy and use of public lands, national monuments, national forests, and national parks shall be paid into, reserved, and appropriated as a part of the reclamation fund created by the act of Congress known as the reclamation act, approved June 17, 1902; and 37½ per centum of the charges arising from licenses hereunder for the occupancy and use of national forests, national parks, public lands, and national monuments, from development within the boundaries of any State shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury to such State; and 50 per centum of the charges arising from all other licenses hereunder is hereby reserved and appropriated as a special fund in the Treasury to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War in the maintenance and operation of dams and other navigation structures owned by the United States or in the construction, maintenance, or operation of headwater or other improvements of navigable waters of the United States.

The plan of distributing these funds as contained in the above substitute follows with some change in the percentages the plan of distribution adopted in the oil-leasing act recently passed.

On amendment No. 50: This amendment relates to the regulation of the issuance of securities and provides that securities issued by the licensee shall be subject to such regulations as prescribed by the commission, but they shall be allowed only for the "bona fide purpose of financing and conducting the business of such license."

On amendment No. 51: This amendment is a verbal change.

On amendments Nos. 52, 53, and 54: These amendments in section 21 relate to the acquisition by any licensee of dam sites through the exercise of the right of eminent domain. Amendment No. 54 states the conditions under which the right may be exercised.

On amendments Nos. 55 and 56: These amendments are verbal changes.

On amendment No. 57: This amendment provides for the determination of the valuation of projects already constructed when application is made for a licensee to come under the provisions of the act. Without such a provision there would be no means of determining valuation. One of the fundamental elements of the act is the current determination of the "net investment." No project should be brought under license until steps have been taken to determine the property value which is to be recognized throughout the entire duration of the license. The amendment provides that "fair value" is the most satisfactory basis of determination at the date of the issuance of the license. The House conferees objected to the proviso at the end of amendment No. 57 to the effect—

"That no contract which shall have been lawfully made prior to the passage of this act, not extending beyond the term of the license, for power, light, heat, or water, or for the service or delivery of the same to be furnished from any project works, and to which such project works, or the person, company, or corporation constructing, owning, or operating the same shall be subject, shall be affected by any license under this act, and no such person, association, or corporation shall be released from any lawful obligation by reason of this act or of any license granted thereunder."

The House conferees believed that the only purpose of this proviso was to prevent review in rate-making proceedings of any contract for power entered into prior to the passage of the act. Presumably this part of the amendment has particular reference to contracts at Niagara Falls. Public utility commissions in general have the right to review, and to require the alteration of, contracts which are not in the public interest. If contracts are in the public interest, it is not to be presumed that the power granted under the act will be employed to annul or alter them, and hence no amendment would be needed in such circumstances. If they are not in the public interest, the latter half of the amendment would prevent their annulment or alteration, at least by any of the agencies provided in the act. This part of the amendment is, therefore, not proposed in the public interest, but for the purpose of protecting contracts which can not otherwise be defended before public rate-making bodies. The Senate conferees receded from this proviso in amendment No. 57 and it was eliminated from the bill.

On amendment No. 58: This amendment seeks to prescribe how a stream of doubtful navigability may be determined as within the provisions of the law, and in substance it provides that the commission shall ascertain whether the interests of commerce are affected; if not, then permission is granted to construct in accordance with the State laws.

On amendment No. 59: This amendment is a revision of section 18 of the rivers and harbors act approved August 8, 1917, creating a Waterways Commission. While in general the provisions of the amendment are identical with the original act, it changes the personnel of the commission and omits paragraphs 3 and 4 of the original act. The first of these paragraphs granted authority to employ expert assistance and made an appropriation of $100,000 for the expenses of the commission. The second paragraph authorized the employment of clerical and other help in the District of Columbia. In view of the fact that many of the duties imposed upon this Waterways Commission will be assigned to the water power commission under the pending bill and other duties have already been assigned to other governmental agencies under the transportation act of 1920, the House conferees opposed this amendment. The Senate conferees receded and the amendment has been eliminated.

RELIEF OF CERTAIN ARMY OFFICERS.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 2448 and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 2448) for the relief of certain officers of the United States Army, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, what is this bill?

Mr. KAHN. It is for the relief of certain officers of the United States Army, a bill which passed the House about a week or 10 days ago. It is a Senate bill.

Mr. WALSH. I know; but what relief does it provide for?

Mr. KAHN. There are probably 10 or 12 officers. It is a relief in regard to certain moneys, and so forth.

Mr. WALSH. I remember now.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The SPEAKER announced the following conferees: Mr. CRAGO, Mr. SANFORD, and Mr. WISE.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. PARRISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks that I made on this bill this afternoon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

By unanimous consent, Mr. MACCRATE, Mr. MASON, Mr. SABATH, Mr. JUUL, Mr. EAGAN, and Mr. KELLER were granted leave to extend their remarks on the bill S. 1699.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on rural-credit legislation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the rural-credit legislation. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on this bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. KEARNS. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] a question. Why is it that he objects to certain Members who have not taken up the time of the House in discussing this bill extending their remarks on the bill and permits it to all these others who have taken up the time of the House and wearied the country on this bill, and who will waste a lot of paper in printing?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I will tell you. The Printing Office have run so short of print paper that they can not print the speeches that are actually made. I made one here a few days ago, I think last week, and never changed 10 words in it, and immediately gave an order for quite a large number of them, because I wanted to educate the country [laughter], and they have not got them out yet because they have not got the paper.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Is it not a fact that there is some doubt as to whether they can continue to publish the RECORD because of the shortage of print paper?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes. That is the reason why I object. If a man makes a speech here on the floor of the House—if he actually makes it—he has some sort of a right to revise his speech, and generally the more he revises it the better he is off.

Mr. KEARNS. I do not object.

Mr. MONDELL rose.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present, unless the gentleman from Wyoming has something special which he wishes to submit.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman withhold a moment?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; I withhold it, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION] to extend his remarks in the RECORD?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW—11 O'CLOCK A. M.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the majority and minority members of the Committee on Appropriations, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-night it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-night it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee as indicated below:

S. 3218. An act for the relief of Martina Sena, Luis E. Armijo, and Maria Baca de Romero; to the Committee on Public Lands.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 47 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned, pursuant to the order, until to-morrow, Saturday, May 1, 1920, at 11 o'clock a. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting supplemental estimate of appropriation required by the Treasury Department for the expense of freight, telegrams, etc., current fiscal year (H. Doc. No. 744); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting supplemental estimate of appropriation required by the Bureau of the Mint for additional expenses in operating the mint at Philadelphia during the remainder of the fiscal year 1920 (H. Doc. No. 745); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting supplemental estimate of appropriation required by the Railroad Labor Board for the fiscal years 1920 and 1921 (H. Doc. No. 746); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

4. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Navy, transmitting statement in connection with H. R. 13803, providing for a bureau of the air; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. GOOD, from the Committee on Appropriations, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 13870) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 905), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. RAYBURN, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 13724) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Sabine River at or near Orange, Tex., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 906), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. ESCH, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 3270) authorizing the Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, subject to the approval of the Secretary of Commerce, to consider, ascertain, adjust, and determine claims for damages occasioned by acts for which said survey is responsible in certain cases, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 907), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 1) authorizing the cutting of timber by corporations organized in one State and conducting operations in another, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 908), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 3406) for the purchase of buildings and grounds for the embassy of the United States at Brussels, Belgium, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 909), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Invalid Pensions was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6210) granting an increase of pension to George Poff, and the same was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

3342. Also, petition of One hundred and seventh Infantry Post, American Legion, New York City, favoring the more efficient care of disabled officers and enlisted men; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

3343. Also, petition of American Federation of Labor, favoring Sterling-Lehlbach civil-service retirement bill; to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

3344. By Mr. DALLINGER: Petition of Roger Casement Branch, Friends of Irish Freedom, urging favorable consideration of the Mason bill; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

3345. By Mr. DYER: Petition of Frank Lee, of St. Louis, Mo., asking the inclusion of the Regular Army men in the soldier-bonus legislation; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

3346. Also, petition of Merchants' Exchange, of St. Louis, Mo., favoring increase of appropriation in the transportation act to $600,000,000; to the Committee on Appropriations.

3347. Also, petition of O. J. Moore Grocer Co. and the Charles R. Jong, Jr., Co., favoring the passage of House bill 263, the anticommercial-bribery bill; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

3348. By Mr. FULLER of Illinois: Petition of the Italian Chamber of Commerce, of Chicago, Ill., concerning immigration bills; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

3349. Also, petition of Augustus P. Gardner Post, No. 18, American Legion, of the District of Columbia, opposing soldier-bonus legislation; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

3350. By Mr. GALLIVAN: Petition of citizens of Boston in favor of passage of Mason bill and, further, in favor of abrogation of all treaties with England; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

3351. By Mr. O'CONNELL: Petition of National Shoe Retailers' Association of the United States of America, protesting against the McNary bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

3352. Also, petition of Ideal Cocoa & Chocolate Co., of New York, urging reform in tax system; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

3353. Also, petition of Augustus P. Gardner Post, No. 18, District of Columbia, opposing bonus legislation; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

3354. Also, petition of Listerated Gum Corporation, of New York, favoring reform in tax system; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

3355. By Mr. RAKER: Three petitions of numerous citizens of the United States favoring passage of House bill 1112; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

3356. By Mr. TEMPLE: Resolutions adopted at mass meeting at New Castle, Pa., April 11, 1920, protesting against the passage of Senate bill 3718; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

3357. Also, petitions favoring the passage of the Capper-Hersman bill, as follows: Ginger Hill Grange, No. 1549, Monongahela; Brighton Grange, No. 1392, Beaver; and Big Beaver Grange, No. 1578, New Galilee, all in the State of Pennsylvania; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, May 1, 1920.

(Legislative day of Friday, April 30, 1920.)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock noon, on the expiration of the recess.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1699) for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House insists upon its amendments to the bill (S. 2448) for the relief of certain officers of the United States Army, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the Senate, agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CRAGO, Mr. SANFORD, and Mr. WISE managers at the conference on the part of the House.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented a petition of the Friends of Irish Freedom, of Detroit, Mich., praying for the recognition of the Republic of Ireland, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of Nicholas Tasson Post, No. 157, Michigan Branch, American Legion, of Diorite, Mich., praying for increased compensation for ex-service men, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of the Michigan State Dental Society, remonstrating against any change being made in the present status of the Army Dental Corps, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of the Holland American Aid Society, of Kalamazoo, Mich., praying for an increase in the salaries of postal employees, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of St. Clair, Port Huron, and Norway, all in the State of Michigan, praying for the parole of Federal prisoners, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of St. Clair County, Mich., praying for the protection of maternity and infancy, which was referred to the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine.

He also presented a memorial of the Michigan State Dental Society, remonstrating against the imposition of excise tax upon any material employed in the correction of any physical defects, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. KNOX presented a memorial of the Board of Trade of Philadelphia, Pa., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation authorizing an issuance of bonds in exchange for bonds of the first, second, third, and fourth Liberty loan issues, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of the Board of Trade of Philadelphia, Pa., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation providing a further exemption from taxation of the interest from Liberty bonds, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of the Board of Trade of Philadelphia, Pa., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to limit the charges of nonmember banks as to the collection and payment of checks upon them, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also presented a memorial of the Board of Trade of Philadelphia, Pa., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation providing that the representatives of American industries shall in any way obligate the Government of the United States to guarantee the payment of debts of other nations, carry mercantile accounts or finance mercantile credits for foreign governments, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also presented a memorial of the Board of Trade of Philadelphia, Pa., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to prohibit the destruction of gold and subsidiary silver coins, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also presented a memorial of the Board of Trade of Philadelphia, Pa., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation providing for the protection of the monetary gold reserve, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of the Board of Trade of Philadelphia, Pa., praying for the adoption of compulsory universal military training, which was ordered to lie on the table.

ADJUSTMENT OF POSTAL SALARIES.

Mr. LENROOT. I present a petition signed by several thousand residents of the city of Milwaukee, Wis., praying for immediate action relative to the adjustment of salaries of post-office employees. I ask to have the heading printed in the RECORD, and that the petition be referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. MOSES. Will the Senator from Wisconsin have the heading of the petition read, so that we may understand its purport?

Mr. LENROOT. I shall be glad to read it. It is as follows:

A petition and a demand for better mail service and justice for the postal employees.

We are all aware that the present poor mail service is due to the fact that the country is willfully neglecting the postal employees, causing them to resign in large numbers. The present salary scale in the post office is both inadequate and insecure. The resignations will not stop until a new and just scale is adopted, and all bonuses discontinued. Congress promised over a year ago to take such a step and has dodged the issue ever since. The Postal Service can not last much longer at the present gait; a complete smash up is in sight.

How can anybody imagine that such a situation is real economy?

If you will agree to the above sentiments, sign this petition. I will see to it that it is forwarded to Congress.

CHAS. J. CUMMING,
Real Estate and Insurance, 120 Wisconsin Street.

The petition proper is headed as follows:

We, the undersigned, respectfully petition and insist upon immediate action on your part, and upon the part of Congress in general, to provide for an adequate and just reclassification of salaries in the Postal Service. We are absolutely convinced that this is the only way in which efficiency can ultimately be restored in our mail service.

I will say, Mr. President, that this is not a petition from postal employees. It is from business men of Milwaukee, patrons of the post office at that city. They ask that the petition be referred to the Postal Classification Commission, but I understand that that commission will shortly make a report. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] is a member of that commission, and I should like to inquire of him as to the status of this matter.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, the postal commission has been engaged in taking testimony in all parts of the country to develop the actual conditions in the Postal Service. That work has been completed. The commission has also finished the work of taking the testimony of the administrative heads of the Post Office Department, and it is expected that the commission will be able to proceed within a few days to the drafting of a report. The character of that report, naturally, I can not undertake to forecast, but I am of the opinion, Mr. President—and I hope that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] will convey this opinion to his constituents—that the report of the commission, if adopted by Congress, will afford adequate relief for some of the conditions which to-day exist in the Postal Service.

I take this occasion, however, Mr. President, to express my further opinion that the conditions in the Postal Service are due to many elements, among which low salaries constitute but one. There are other elements entering into the Postal Service more fundamental, more far-reaching, and infinitely more detrimental to the morale of the service than the income which the postal employees receive. It is my opinion that the entire policy of the administration of the Postal Service at the minute is of a nature tending to destroy the morale of the service, even, indeed, as if that were its purpose; and I think that no complete remedy for these conditions can be had from any report which the commission may make or from the adoption of the recommendations of the commission; I think that the remedy lies much deeper than that; but, so far as the commission is able to govern the conditions of the Postal Service, through its recommendations, I think I may safely assure the Senator from Wisconsin that the commission's report will be adequate.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I am very glad to have the statement from the Senator from New Hampshire; but, however great the responsibility elsewhere may be for the administration of the postal laws, Congress itself is responsible for the inadequate salaries that are now being paid the postal employees and should, so far as it has power, relieve the present situation as soon as possible. I am glad to know that the prospects are that the report of the commission will be submitted in a few days, and I sincerely hope that it will be acted upon by Congress and the salaries of postal employees adjusted before this session shall adjourn.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

TERMINATION OF WAR LEGISLATION.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia introduced a bill (S. 4315) providing for the termination of certain war legislation, which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any provision contained in any law enacted by Congress rendering the operation or effectiveness of such law, or any part thereof, contingent upon the termination of the present war or the present or existing emergency, in whatever words expressed, shall be construed and interpreted to refer to and indicate, in lieu of the date of the termination of the present war or the present or existing emergency, the date of the enactment of this act, irrespective of any provision to the contrary contained in any such law. The termination of any such law, or of any part thereof, shall not be construed or interpreted, however, so as to prejudice, terminate, or affect any rights, privileges, or remedies, or any duties, obligations, liabilities, or penalties arising or accruing, or acquired or incurred, thereunder prior to such termination.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. OWEN (by request):

A bill (S. 4316) to amend act of Congress approved June 30, 1913; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. TOWNSEND:

A bill (S. 4317) granting an increase of pension to Ralph S. Jordan (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CUMMINS:

A bill (S. 4318) to extend the period for construction of Eagle Rock Reservoir under the act of March 3, 1891; to the Committee on Public Lands.

A bill (S. 4319) to further amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

A bill (S. 4320) for the relief of Joseph D. McGarraugh (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

RETIREMENT OF CIVIL-SERVICE EMPLOYEES.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1699) for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes.

Mr. STERLING. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House, request a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. STERLING, Mr. CUMMINS, and Mr. MCKELLAR conferees on the part of the Senate.

A PROPOSED PLATFORM OF NATIONAL ECONOMY FOR ALL PARTIES.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, at this time when the people are being assured of effective programs of economy in legislation it is most discouraging to be informed by the Post that the total new burden to be borne by the public, inclusive of the proposed bonus, is $5,000,000,000 a year, or ten times the cost of the Panama Canal. I refer to an article from the pen of George Rothwell Brown appearing in this morning's paper emphasizing the demand of the transportation companies for higher freights, also of the coal operators for more expensive coal, together with the soldiers' bonus and the proposed increase of wages to the railroad brotherhoods.

I shall not attempt to read into the RECORD this long but very important article. I merely wish to emphasize the fact that whatever legislation against the profiteer may be enacted or enforced, however rigidly he may be punished, the almost certain addition of $5,000,000,000 to the burdens of the people must result in a continued rise in prices, a continued demand for higher wages and salaries, and a continuance of the spiral up to a point where industrial collapse is as certain as the tides.

Mr. President, face to face with these conditions, it has occurred to me that a suggestion of a political platform would not be inappropriate, to consist of 14 points, that being the popular number of propositions for peace, for sermons, for reforms of all kinds, and therefore appropriate for a political platform in 1920. I venture to submit one, not intended for any particular party but which incorporates some trite but valuable principles. Whether they emanate from the committee of 107, which has long been incubating platform propositions for the Republican Party, or whether they come from the committee on resolutions of the Democratic Party, of which Mr. Bryan may or may not be the chairman, or from the committee of 48, which I understand has been selected or self-appointed to consider platform propositions for the new party—and a modern campaign without a new party would be Hamlet with the principal character omitted—I indulge the hope that it will receive the anxious consideration of the taxpayers of the country.

I suggest, therefore, Mr. President, the following:

1. Enforcement of law, without fear, favor, or relaxation.

2. Maintenance of order at all times.

3. Protection of every citizen in the exercise of his constitutional rights.

4. Holding every citizen, individual and corporate, to the recognition and performance of every civic duty and responsibility.

5. Encouragement of production, with campaigns against waste and extravagance.

6. Promotion of thrift everywhere, the Government setting an example by the practice of rigid economy in every department of public administration that may consist with public security, safety, and efficiency.

7. Discouragement of all further legislation transferring the duties, prerogatives, and powers of the States to the domain of Federal jurisdiction.

8. American rights and interests the first duty of the individual and the Government.

9. America first. In our foreign relations the maintenance of friendship, amity, mutual understanding, and every assistance to other powers in their task of rehabilitation compatible with our interest and our constitutional authority.

10. Revision and decrease of national taxation to the lowest possible rate compatible with the actual needs of an economic national administration.

11. Pensions for dependents of soldiers killed in battle or dying in the service, for retirements, and for service men wholly or partially disabled by wounds or by disease incurred in the service.

12. All appropriations to be wholly confined to public objects and purposes.

13. The consumer is the ultimate taxpayer. Though unorganized he is entitled to our first consideration, whatever his political affiliations or lack of political influence.

14. Pointing with pride and viewing with alarm will catch no votes in 1920.

NATIONAL BUDGET SYSTEM.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9783) to provide a national budget system and an independent audit of Government accounts, and for other purposes.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] has suggested a number of interesting matters for the consideration of the Senate and Congress. Upon many occasions he has discussed in a fearless manner important questions which demand attention at the hands of the American people. It would be for the welfare of the country if the sound advice often given by him were followed in governmental affairs as well as by the citizens of our country. However, I did not rise for the purpose of adverting to the various points referred to by the Senator.

We have before us what is known as the budget bill, and there is a desire that it be speedily passed this morning. I had intended to present in a brief way a history of budgetary reforms and operations of the budget system in other countries as well as in some of the States of the Union, the inherent difficulties to be encountered in the establishment of a budget system in a Federal Government such as ours as well as the advantages and benefits which a proper budget system will bring to the administration of the affairs of our Government. It has developed, however, that there is no opposition to the pending measure, and I shall therefore pretermit a discussion of the subjects referred to and content myself with a few general observations and a reference to the substitute bill which I shall offer pro forma for the measure which is now before us.

In common with other Senators, I have felt for some time that the method employed by the United States in dealing with its financial affairs was loose and inefficient. I have felt that the estimates furnished by the various agencies of the Government were wholly unreliable, and if accepted by Congress would result in still greater inefficiency, waste, and extravagance and lead to serious financial embarrassment. No one who is familiar with the method of preparing estimates and making appropriations to meet the expenses of the Government can speak approvingly of the same. Students of governmental problems and of fiscal administrative reforms have with substantial unanimity condemned our limping, imperfect, inefficient, and chaotic system. Executive officials, unfortunately, have failed to appreciate the responsibility resting upon them or the solemn duty which they owed to their Government and to the country. Bureau chiefs and subordinate officials have prepared estimates and figures for submission to Congress which call for appropriations of such magnitude as to shock all who are interested in economy, efficiency, and good government. There seems to have been a wild scramble upon the part of the executive departments and agencies to get the largest possible sums out of the Treasury of the United States. There has been the appearance of an indefensible rivalry as to which bureau or executive agency could secure the largest appropriation. Officials have projected their own ambitious schemes for extension of their functions and powers and authority into submitted estimates for appropriations. Unimportant divisions and bureaus headed or controlled by theorists, doctrinaires, or those who have no conception of the limitations upon the Federal Government and its Treasury have under the present system of appropriations been magnified and developed until they have assumed enormous proportions and extracted from the Treasury of the United States from year to year stupendous sums.

Executive officials in their desire to extend the operations of the branches of the public service with which they were connected have encroached upon other bureaus, divisions, or fields of activity under the control of the Federal Government, and have thus produced duplication which has resulted in expenditures of millions annually which brought no adequate results to the Government or the people and, indeed, with propriety could be entered in a column entitled "Waste and extravagance."

The evils of which I am speaking are not recent in their origin. They have existed for many years and have manifested themselves regardless of the party in power. The machinery of the Government is not new. It has developed slowly, but the passage of time has only increased the mechanical devices, but unfortunately the augmentation of the machinery has brought neither efficiency nor reform.

I think it may truthfully be said that with the increase in divisions, bureaus, and governmental agencies there has been less efficiency and less of a spirit of service and devotion to the public weal. It has often been charged by political economists and historians that republics are proverbially extravagant and inefficient. Without expressing any opinion in regard to this view, I do not hesitate to state that in the administration of the affairs of this Republic there has been great waste and extravagance, and there has developed a cumbersome, lumbering organism which has suffered many breakdowns and brought chagrin and humiliation to all who were interested in efficiency and economy in the public service and the application of the highest principles of political and administrative morality to the governmental affairs of the Republic.

The pending measure has many admirable features and I believe is a step in the right direction. It will work some needed reforms; but I am afraid it will prove disappointing to many students of our Government and its administrative functions, who have felt that a well-balanced scientific budget system would accomplish radical and important reforms. No budget system, no system of estimates or accounting, will effectuate the reforms desired or eradicate all of the evils attending Federal administration. As a matter of fact, few genuine reforms result from legislation; wise legislation is the result of manifestations of the spirit of justice and progress. There is a mental and moral attitude which is a most potential factor in advancing the cause of justice and righteousness in the private lives and relations of individuals, as well as in their relations to the Government and in the affairs of the Government itself. So long as the people believe that the Government may be exploited for their advantage or may be plundered for the advancement of interests not purely governmental there will be inefficiency and prodigality in governmental administration. So long as public officials and employees of the Government feel an impersonal relation to the Government and are not filled with a passion and patriotic desire for its welfare and the welfare of all the people, we may expect maladministration, inefficiency, extravagance, bureaucratic tyranny, and executive incapacity.

Loyalty to the Government by its employees is indispensable to efficient administration. Employers, whether corporations or individuals, who have the loyal and enthusiastic and moral support of all who are in their service achieve the highest and most satisfactory results.

There must be developed a higher standard of morality with respect to governmental affairs. Individuals of high integrity and probity do not always appreciate the wrong involved in evading customs laws and regulations. Persons who in their relations with their fellows follow the highest standards of truth and rectitude feel, in dealing with the Government or when in the Government service, that a different rule of conduct or standard of duty applies. When all who are in the service of the Government, or are directly or remotely connected with its administration, feel that the Government is a part of themselves and that when they injure it they are striking themselves and at the most important and sacred things in life, there will be administrative reforms and the affairs of the Government will be conducted upon a different level. There will be efficiency and loyalty and genuine progress. When we carry into the service of our country and into our daily relations and dealings with it that spirit of sacrifice and loyalty, that patriotic fervor which manifested itself in the recent war as a powerful spiritual force, many of the evils and imperfections and wrongs now existing in the Government and in administrative action will disappear.

There must be developed a feeling that the Government is a repository of the liberties and happiness of the people, and that whatever weakens or injures or debases it reacts immediately upon each individual and will impair, if not destroy, the liberty and peace and happiness of the people individually and collectively. Many persons visualize truth and justice and religion and moral forces as divine and sacred beings; the forces and influences manifesting themselves therein are not cold and lifeless and abstract, but are animate and vital. So also our Government should be regarded not as a mental abstraction nor as a pallid and inanimate projection of the finite mind. The most perfect expedients to secure wise and just administration in the affairs of government will fail of their object unless among the people and in the hearts of those clothed with government privilege there is a profound respect and reverence for law and justice as well as a spirit of love for and devotion to country. In an autocratic government reforms have been wrought by those invested with power. In the earlier years of Napoleon's power he accomplished important administrative reforms. He gave a code of laws to his country which has survived to this day. He introduced administrative reforms particularly in the fiscal and accounting branches of the Government that have excited the admiration of students of political science. The people of France were not sufficiently loyal to the great reforms which he inaugurated to fully preserve them after Napoleon's power was gone.

The American people have not yet learned the lesson of thrift and economy. The inexhaustible resources of the new world have made this the richest and most powerful Government the world has ever seen. We have believed that our resources were limitless and that no improvidence or extravagance could jeopardize or endanger our future. We have regarded our country as vast in area and unrestricted in power. We have examined everything with the telescope; seldom have we employed the microscope. We have insisted upon doing big things in a big way. We have opposed conservation and economy and thrift and a jealous regard for the small things whether they were material or abstract. This characteristic is preeminently American and has found expression in our private lives, in our business affairs, and in our administration of our municipal, State, and National Governments. This view, which has become a national trait, has developed a spirit of prodigality and extravagance. We have not worked intensively nor applied ourselves with the scientific and investigating spirit to the details of life. There must be a radical change among the people. The economic and industrial condition of our country and of the world calls for a reexamination of our policies and our attitude toward those questions which affect our lives individually and nationally. We should be admonished that our resources are limited and that some have reached the point of exhaustion. The cry should go forth from every section of our land for conservation and economy and providence. The curriculum of our schools should be so modified as to impress upon the coming generation the imperative necessity of thrift and the dignity and glory and sacredness of labor.

Mr. President, the success of the pending measure will depend largely upon the attitude of the Chief Executive of our Nation as well as upon the courage and ability and patriotism of the chief officials provided for in the bill. There will be the same demands, unreasonable and unjust, made by bureaus and executive departments for appropriations. There will be the same ambition for the aggrandizement of the executive departments, bureaus, agencies, and instrumentalities. There will be the same insistent demands for Federal aid in matters that are purely local in character. Indeed, unless there is a change in public sentiment, the demands for Federal aid and interposition by the States and local governments will increase and result in illegal and illegitimate and unconstitutional appropriations from the Federal Treasury. It also must be remembered that the attitude of the legislative branch of the Government toward the question of appropriations will largely determine the success of the budget system. If the accounting officers of the Government and if those who have to do with the operation of the budget as provided in the pending bill faithfully discharge their duties, they will point the way to economy and efficiency and reform. If Congress fail to support them and listen to local and individual demands for appropriations and refuse to follow the path of safety and of constitutional sanction, inefficiency and waste will continue, and the evils of maladministration will be increased. This bill, in my opinion, will provide checks and restraints that will be of great benefit to our country. That something should be done to check the growing expenditures of our Government all must admit. The people everywhere seem to be obsessed with the thought that there is no limit to the funds of the Federal Government, and that there should be no restriction upon the appropriations which it makes.

If we do not curtail expenses national bankruptcy is inevitable. As I have stated, conscientious and patriotic officials carrying out the letter and spirit of this bill can challenge attention to the dangers before the country and point to the disasters which will follow the heedless, headlong, frenzied expenditures which we are making and are called upon to make. This Congress has appropriated entirely too much. Efforts to check appropriations prove futile. Many who cry the loudest for appropriations bestow but little thought upon the question of producing the necessary revenue to meet the appropriations.

There are many organizations clamoring for appropriations; the forces and influences exerted in and out of Congress to secure appropriations are numerous and powerful. The voices raised against these demanded appropriations are few and the impediments in the way of the flood from the Federal Treasury offer but slight resistance.

The administration of the Government must be conducted along scientific lines. The successful business man is the one who avails himself of the most improved and scientific methods in every department of his enterprise. He is constantly looking for reforms and economies. Efficiency experts command high salaries and the money invested for their services is like bread cast upon the waters, and it returns a hundredfold. One marvels that our Government has not provided a proper system for estimates and accounts and that we have followed archaic and obsolete methods in the administration of the departments of Government. There has been no coordination of the executive branches of the Government. Let me say, in passing, that legislation is imperatively needed for the purpose of rearranging, consolidating, coordinating, and integrating the executive departments and bureaus and agencies of the Government. There is much confusion in the present arrangement of departments and executive agencies. Many bureaus should be transferred; some should be abolished. A scientific and rational plan should be promptly provided under which there will be a complete reorganization of the departments of the Government.

Mr. President, the bill reported by the Special Budget Committee is not perfect. Many of its provisions are not satisfactory to me. However, it has so many meritorious features that I think it should receive the support of both sides of the Chamber. The committee in the consideration of the question were actuated by a desire to work out the very best plan that the situation permitted. There was not the slightest partisanship manifested. The distinguished chairman of the committee, the Senator from Illinois, is entitled to the thanks of the Senate and the Congress for his unselfish and faithful efforts. It was my good fortune to be a member of the committee and to participate in the discussions and work, the result of which is the bill now before us.

On the 5th of January, 1920, I introduced a bill which reorganized the Bureau of Efficiency and increased its powers. It also provided that the chief of the bureau should be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives. The object of the bill was to secure efficiency in the administration of the departments of the Government. The bill before us, as amended, provides that the Bureau of Efficiency shall be transferred to the jurisdiction of Congress, and it is empowered to investigate matters relating to the methods of business and organization of the executive branches of the Government. It will be the duty of the bureau to aid Congress in investigating the various departments of the Government with a view to determining whether there is inefficiency and for the purpose of aiding Congress in judging as to the necessity in meeting the appropriations suggested by the executive branches of the Government.

On the 3d day of March of this year I introduced a bill to extend the powers of the Comptroller of the Treasury and to create an office of accounts in the Department of the Treasury and to provide for an annual budget of estimates and report the fiscal operations of the Treasury. Some of its provisions are incorporated in the pending measure. I have prepared a substitute for the present bill. It does not differ materially, except in one or two particulars.

The terminology of the pending measure in a number of instances might in my opinion be improved. I shall ask for a vote upon the substitute. However, it is not my purpose to analyze its provisions or demand its adoption. Having given my support to the committee bill, I do not feel at liberty to argue against its provisions nor to impede its passage. The parliamentary situation is such as to call for the prompt passage of the bill and the Senate should act to-day, and at an early hour to-day, upon the matter. Therefore, as stated, I have no intention of confusing the situation nor obstructing the speedy passage of the committee bill, although I believe the substitute which I shall offer, and which is upon the desks of the Senators, contains some improvements over the pending bill. If the substitute should not be accepted, I shall ask the conferees upon the part of the Senate to consider carefully the provisions of the substitute bill, and when the subject is in conference to write into the bill as it shall be agreed upon the amendments which are embodied in the substitute bill. Briefly, let me say that in my opinion the title of the committee bill is not quite appropriate. It should be "An act to create a bureau of estimates and a general accounting office in the Department of the Treasury, to provide for an annual budget, and for other purposes." Technically speaking, the committee bill does not create a budget system, but it does create a bureau of estimates.

Permit me, first, to call attention to section 3 of the committee bill, which provides that "there is hereby created in the Treasury Department a budget bureau." My substitute would change this expression so that it would read, "there is hereby created in the Treasury Department a bureau of estimates." The duty of this bureau is to prepare estimates, and in my opinion it is more accurate to denominate the bureau which is created "a bureau of estimates" than "the budget bureau." The committee bill provides that the head of the bureau shall be named "commissioner," and that two assistants shall be provided. The substitute changes the name of the head of the bureau to "examiner" and his assistants to "assistant examiners." The word "commissioner" is too general and rather meaningless. There are so many officials under that title that it ceases to convey any meaning as to the nature and duties of the office. The word "examiner" has a more precise and distinctive meaning. Section 21 of the committee bill states "that there is created an establishment to be known as the general accounting office, which shall be independent of the several executive departments and under the control and direction of the comptroller general of the United States." The substitute which I shall offer provides "that there is created in the Department of the Treasury the general accounting office, which shall be under the control and direction of the comptroller of accounts." It will be observed that the substitute changes the name of the chief officer of accounts from "comptroller general of the United States" to "comptroller of accounts." It seems to me that the title "comptroller general of the United States" is rather too big and overwhelming.

The office created deals with the accounts, and the chief official in this organization is the comptroller of accounts. It seems to me that the term is misleading if he is named the comptroller general of the United States. I sincerely hope the conference committee will consider this provision.

I also believe better results will be secured and it is certainly more logical to create in the Department of the Treasury a general accounting office than to—create an establishment * * * which shall be independent of the general executive departments.

I believe that there will be better coordination and more satisfactory results if the amendments which I have suggested prevail. The budget bureau or bureau of estimates is created in the Treasury Department, as the Treasury Department is the fiscal department of the Government. There should be one department in which are merged and consolidated all the agencies of the Government which have to do with the revenues and disbursements. The Treasury Department records the income received by the Government. There should be found within the Treasury Department full and complete information regarding the expenditures of the Government. I believe that the placing of these organizations provided by the pending bill in the one department will make for greater efficiency and facility of administration.

Mr. President, without taking further time to explain the differences between the substitute bill and the committee bill, I move that the substitute bill which I send to the desk be adopted in lieu of the committee bill.

Mr. KING's amendment is to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

That this act may be cited as the "estimates and accounts act."

SEC. 2. That when used in this act—

The term "department" means any executive department.

The term "establishment" means any independent commission, board, bureau, office, agency, or other establishment of the Government, including the municipal government of the District of Columbia, but shall not include the legislative branch of the Government.

The term "estimates" means all estimates for appropriations made or requested by any department or establishment.

SEC. 3. That there is hereby created in the Department of the Treasury the bureau of estimates. The President shall nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint an examiner and two assistant examiners of the bureau of estimates. The examiner first appointed shall continue in office for a term of two years, and the assistant examiners four and six years, respectively, from the date when this act shall take effect, the term of each assistant examiner to be designated by the President, but the successors of the examiner and of the two assistant examiners shall be appointed for terms of six years, except that any person chosen to fill a vacancy shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of the official whom he shall succeed. The examiner shall receive an annual salary of $8,000 and the assistant examiners shall each receive an annual salary of $6,000. The assistant examiners shall perform such duties as the examiners may designate, and in the absence or incapacity of the examiner or during a vacancy in the office of examiner the Secretary of the Treasury shall designate one of the assistant examiners to act as examiner.

SEC. 4. That the examiner of estimates shall employ and fix the compensation of such attorneys, accountants, examiners, experts, clerks, and other employees, and make such expenditures for rent, printing, books, periodicals, office equipment, and supplies as he may find necessary to carry out the provisions of this act: Provided, That not more than $200,000 per annum shall be expended under the provisions of this section and not more than four persons shall be employed by the examiner at a salary of $5,000 per annum, and no person shall be employed by him at a salary in excess of that sum. All employees of the bureau, except the examiner and the two assistant examiners, shall be appointed in accordance with the civil-service law and regulations.

SEC. 5. That the head of each department and establishment shall designate one of the chief officers of the department or establishment to have direct supervision of the business operations of the department, such as the offices of chief clerk, appointment clerk, disbursing officer, division of accounts, division of mails and files, division of supplies, superintendent of buildings, etc., and, under the direction of the head of the department, to perform the duties of a general business manager of the department. The officer so designated shall supervise the classification and compilation of the estimates, including supplemental and deficiency estimates, for such departments, and perform such other duties as the head of the department or establishment may prescribe.

SEC. 6. That the head of each department and establishment shall examine, analyze, and revise the estimates of his department or establishment, and shall submit to the examiner of estimates on or before the 1st day of October in each year his final revised estimates for the ensuing fiscal year, and shall attach thereto specifications of the personnel and employees arranged by classes with the number in each class, of the work and functions to be performed and of the amount and description of materials and supplies required, which specifications shall comprehend the personnel, work, functions, and materials covered by the estimates, together with a comparative statement of the personnel, work, functions, and materials used and performed in the preceding fiscal year. In case of the failure of the head of any department or establishment to furnish such estimates as herein required, the examiner of estimates shall cause to be prepared estimates for such appropriations as in his judgment shall be requisite for such department or establishment.

SEC. 7. That after the head of a department or establishment has submitted to the examiner of estimates the regular estimates of such department or establishment for the ensuing fiscal year, he shall not submit for such year any special, supplementary, or additional estimates or other request for appropriations except to carry out laws subsequently enacted, or to meet unforeseen emergencies. Such special, supplementary, or additional estimates shall be supported by a full statement of their necessity and the cause for their omission from the regular estimates.

SEC. 8. That the head of each department or establishment in transmitting the estimates to the examiner of estimates shall refer to the law or treaty by which the proposed expenditures are authorized, specifying the date of each and the volume and page of the Statutes at Large or of the Revised Statutes, as the case may be, and the section of the act in which the authority is to be found.

SEC. 9. That in all cases where the head of a department or establishment includes in his estimates an item that is in excess of the amount previously provided for the same purpose, or an item for which no appropriation previously has been made, he shall set forth in detail the reason why he has made such increased or additional estimates.

SEC. 10. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe a uniform system of preparing and submitting estimates.

SEC. 11. That the examiner of estimates shall have the powers and perform the duties now held and performed by the Division of Bookkeeping and Warrants of the Office of the Secretary of the Treasury, in so far as they relate to the compilation of the estimates.

SEC. 12. That it shall be the duty of the examiner of estimates in the period prior to and after submission to him of the estimates to inspect and examine the organization, activities, and methods of business of the several administrative departments of the Government to determine the changes which, in his opinion, should be made in the existing organization, functions, and methods of business of such departments or in the appropriation of moneys for the maintenance of the same, or in the assignment of particular duties to particular personnel, or in the grouping of services, in order to secure greater effectiveness and economy in the conduct of the public business. The estimates for the ensuing fiscal year, together with the recommendations of the examiner of estimates, shall be submitted to the Secretary of the Treasury on or before November 1 of each year.

SEC. 13. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall revise, arrange, consolidate, coordinate, reduce, or otherwise alter any item or items of the estimates, including any special, deficiency, or supplemental estimates, in such manner as he may deem necessary to effect economies and to prevent waste, extravagance, or duplication.

SEC. 14. That every department and establishment shall furnish to the Secretary of the Treasury and to the examiner of estimates such information regarding its powers, duties, functions, organizations, finances, and methods of business as they or either of them may from time to time require, and the examiner of estimates, or any of his assistants or employees, when duly authorized by him, shall, for the purpose of securing such information, have access to, and have the right to examine, any books, documents, papers, or records of any such department or establishment.

SEC. 15. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall, on or before the 20th day of November in each year, prepare and submit to the President for his consideration the budget, which shall contain a statement in summary and in detail of the estimates for the ensuing fiscal year as revised under the provisions of section 13 hereof.

The budget shall further contain:

(a) Statements setting forth the expenditures of the Government during the last completed fiscal year classified by organization units, compared with the estimated expenditures of the same organization units for the fiscal year in progress, and with the estimates of expenditures to be authorized for the fiscal year next ensuing.

(b) Statements setting forth the expenditures of the Government during the last completed fiscal year classified by functions, compared with the estimated expenditures for the same functions for the fiscal year in progress, and with the estimates of expenditures to be authorized for the fiscal year next ensuing.

(c) Statements setting forth in detail the revenues of the Government actually paid into the Treasury during the last completed fiscal year, compared with the estimated revenues to be paid into the Treasury during the fiscal year in progress, and with the estimates of revenues to be paid into the Treasury during the fiscal year next ensuing under the provisions of existing law.

(d) Balanced statements of Treasury resources and obligations setting forth in detail the condition of the Treasury at the end of the last completed fiscal year, the estimated condition of the Treasury at the end of the fiscal year in progress, and the estimated condition of the Treasury at the end of the next ensuing fiscal year on the basis of existing revenue laws and of the estimates of expenditures for the fiscal year next ensuing.

(e) Statements setting forth in detail all essential facts regarding the bonded and other indebtedness of the Government.

(f) Statements setting forth in detail amounts of appropriations, whether annual, permanent, or otherwise, including balances of appropriations for prior fiscal years available for expenditure during the year in progress.

(g) If the estimated revenues for the ensuing fiscal year, according to the existing law, are less than the estimated expenditures which in his opinion should be authorized for that year, the Secretary of the Treasury shall recommend to the President new taxes, loans, or other appropriate means to meet the deficiency; or if such estimated revenues are greater than the estimated expenditures for the ensuing fiscal year, he shall make recommendations for the application of such surplus or for a reduction in taxation.

The foregoing provisions regarding the contents of the budget are directory only, and may be altered in form or detail as conditions may render necessary or desirable, provided that the substantial purposes of such statements are adhered to.

The Secretary of the Treasury shall from time to time submit in like manner to the President such supplemental, deficiency, or other estimates as may be submitted to him by the Examiner of Estimates, as provided in this act.

SEC. 16. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall not transmit to the President estimates for the District of Columbia greater than twice the estimated revenues of the District, including charges under all appropriation bills.

SEC. 17. That the President shall have authority to revise the budget submitted to him by the Secretary of the Treasury, by the increase, reduction, or elimination or alteration of any item therein contained, by the addition of new items which, in his opinion, are needed for the conduct of the Government, by the consolidation, rearrangement, or regrouping of items, or by making any reassignment of specific duties, the regrouping of functions, the consolidation or elimination of field stations or other units of organization, or in any other arrangement of the organization and operations of the public business, which, in his opinion, will lead to increased economy and effectiveness.

SEC. 18. That the President shall, on or before the 10th day of December of each year, submit to Congress the budget, as revised and approved by him, including a statement of what, in his opinion, are the revenue requirements of the Government and how the same should be met. The President shall also from time to time submit to Congress such supplementary, deficiency, or other estimates as shall be approved by him, and no estimate or request for any increase in any item of the budget as submitted by the President shall be submitted to Congress or to any Member or committee thereof by any officer of, or person employed in, any department or establishment except as provided for by this act, unless at the request of either House of Congress or a committee thereof having jurisdiction over appropriations or revenues.

SEC. 19. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall, at the request of any committee of either House of Congress, direct appropriate officials from the bureau of estimates to furnish such committee such aid and information, in person or otherwise, as the committee may request.

SEC. 20. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause to be prepared a codification of all the laws now in force relating to the expenditures of the Government, and shall, on or before January 1, 1921, transmit the same to the President with a statement showing which of such laws in his judgment should be revised, or repealed in whole or in part, and what new provisions, if any, should be added. The President is hereby requested to transmit to Congress such codification and accompanying statements, together with his recommendations.

SEC. 21. That there is created in the Department of the Treasury the general accounting office, which shall be under the control and direction of the comptroller of accounts. The offices of Comptroller of the Treasury and Assistant Comptroller of the Treasury are abolished, to take effect July 1, 1920. All other officers and employees of the office of the Comptroller of the Treasury shall become officers and employees in the general accounting office at their grades and salaries on July 1, 1920, and all books, records, documents, papers, furniture, office equipment, and other property of the office of the Comptroller of the Treasury shall become the property of the general accounting office.

There shall be in the general accounting office a comptroller of accounts and three assistant comptrollers, who shall be nominated and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate appointed by the President. The comptroller of accounts shall receive a salary of $8,000 a year; the first and second assistant comptrollers shall receive salaries of $6,000 a year; the third assistant comptroller shall receive a salary of $5,000 a year. During the absence or incapacity of the comptroller of accounts, or during a vacancy in that office, the first assistant comptroller shall act as comptroller of accounts. The comptroller of accounts and the assistant comptrollers shall hold office for a term of five years, and shall be removable only for cause: Provided, That in the first instance the comptroller of accounts shall be appointed for a term of one year, the first assistant comptroller for a term of two years, the second assistant comptroller for a term of three years, and the third assistant comptroller for a term of four years, respectively, from the date when this act shall take effect: Provided further, That any person chosen to fill a vacancy shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of the official whom he shall succeed.

SEC. 22. That the comptroller of accounts shall perform the same duties and have the same powers and responsibilities as those now performed by, or appertaining to the Comptroller of the Treasury, the six auditors of the Treasury Department, and the Division of Bookkeeping and Warrants of the Office of the Secretary of the Treasury, except as provided in section 11 hereof. Subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, the comptroller of accounts shall prescribe the procedure for the issue of warrants for the receipt or payment of public moneys at the Treasury, including the postal revenues and expenditures therefrom. He shall perform the duties now appertaining to the Division of Public Moneys of the Office of the Secretary of the Treasury so far as they relate to the covering of revenues and repayments into the Treasury, the issue of duplicate checks and warrants, and the certification of outstanding liabilities for payment. He shall prescribe the forms, systems, and procedures for administrative appropriation and fund accounting in the several departments and establishments, and for the departmental or administrative examination of fiscal officers' accounts and claims against the United States. He shall submit periodically to Congress reports upon the adequacy and effectiveness of the administrative examination of accounts and claims in the respective departments and establishments, and upon the adequacy and effectiveness of the departmental inspection of the offices and accounts of fiscal officers, together with recommendations for such legislation as may improve and facilitate the settlement of accounts and as may correct wasteful practices and prevent the creation of deficiencies in excess of expenditures authorized by Congress. The comptroller of accounts, for this purpose, shall have the right to examine any books, documents, papers, records, or operations of any department, bureau, board, commission, office, or agency of the executive departments.

SEC. 23. That the assistant comptrollers shall perform the following duties:

(a) The first assistant comptroller shall perform the same duties as those now performed by, or appertaining to, the six auditors of the Treasury Department, except as otherwise expressly provided herein, and such other duties as may from time to time be assigned to him by the comptroller of accounts. He shall receive, audit, and settle all accounts of fiscal officers and claims against the United States, and certify his findings thereon to the third assistant comptroller. The findings of the first assistant comptroller upon the settlement of public accounts shall be final and conclusive upon the executive branches of the Government, except that any person whose account has been settled, or the head of the department or establishment to which any account pertains may, within a year, obtain a revision of the account by the board of appeals created by section 24 hereof.

(b) The second assistant comptroller shall prescribe the forms of keeping and rendering all accounts of appropriations and funds, revenues and expenditures, and accounts of fiscal officers. He shall determine the accounting procedure to be followed in the payment of settled liabilities of the Government, in advancing funds to disbursing officers, and in covering public moneys into the Treasury, and the procedure to be followed in accounting for appropriations made or special funds established or authorized by Congress. He shall conduct a continuous inspection of the methods and procedure followed in the administrative examination of fiscal officers' accounts and claims, and he shall report periodically to heads of departments and establishments, and to the comptroller of accounts, as to the adequacy and effectiveness of such examination. He shall periodically inspect the places of business of accountable officers, examine the books and papers evidencing their respective transactions, and count their cash, stamps, and acountable paper; he shall report periodically to heads of departments and establishments, and to the comptroller of accounts, as to the adequacy of the inspection of accountable officers conducted by the respective departments and establishments with which they are connected; and he shall perform such other duties as may from time to time be assigned to him by the comptroller of accounts.

(c) The third assistant comptroller shall keep all general accounts of receipts and expenditures of public money, including the postal revenues and expenditures therefrom; of appropriations, special funds, and trust funds, and of the public debt; and he shall perform generally the duties now appertaining to the Division of Bookkeeping and Warrants of the Office of the Secretary of the Treasury, except as expressly provided herein; he shall perform the duties and exercise the functions now appertaining to the Division of Public Moneys of the Office of the Secretary of the Treasury so far as they relate to the covering of revenues and repayments into the Treasury, the certification of outstanding liabilities for payment, and the authorization of the issue of duplicate checks and warrants. He shall perform such other duties as may from time to time be assigned to him by the comptroller of accounts.

All acts performed by the assistant comptrollers under this section shall be subject to the direction and approval of the comptroller of accounts.

SEC. 24. That there shall be attached to the general accounting office a board of appeals, to consist of three members, including the second assistant comptroller and the third assistant comptroller. The third member, who shall be chairman of the board, shall be nominated, and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appointed by the President, and shall receive compensation at the rate of $6,000 a year. He shall be known as the solicitor of the general accounting office and shall hold office for a term of five years. He shall have administrative charge of the boards' activities and shall supervise such subordinate personnel as may be attached to it.

The board of appeals shall perform its duties under such rules of procedure as may be prescribed by the comptroller of accounts. It shall review all decisions of the first assistant comptroller involving an original construction of a statute or a modification of an existing construction, and items in any account affected by such decision shall be suspended and settlement thereof withheld until the board of appeals shall approve, disapprove, or modify such decision and certify its findings to the first assistant comptroller. Upon application by any disbursing officer or head of a department or establishment the board of appeals shall render its decision upon any question involving a payment to be made by such disbursing officer or under the jurisdiction of such head of department or establishment, which decision when so rendered and confirmed by the comptroller of accounts shall govern the first assistant comptroller in settling the account containing such payment. Any disbursing officer or head of department or establishment, or any other person aggrieved by the action or by any decision of the first assistant comptroller in the settlement of an account or claim may, within one year from the date of such settlement, present an appeal to the board of appeals and obtain a revision of the account or claim thereby, and the decision of the board of appeals upon such revision shall be final and conclusive upon the executive branches of the Government after confirmation by the comptroller of accounts. Authority to suspend payment and direct the reexamination of any account settled by the first assistant comptroller shall be exclusively vested in the comptroller of accounts, who shall have authority to reopen any account so settled and direct its revision by the board of appeals.

SEC. 25. That the offices of the six auditors of the Treasury Department and the Division of Bookkeeping and Warrants of the Office of the Secretary of the Treasury shall be abolished, but the six auditors of the Treasury Department shall be transferred at their present salaries to become officers of the general accounting office, and all other officers and employees of these offices and of the Division of Bookkeeping and Warrants shall become officers and employees in the general accounting office at their grades and salaries on July 1, 1920. All books, records, documents, papers, furniture, office equipment, and other property of these offices and of the Division of Bookkeeping and Warrants shall become the property of the general accounting office. The general accounting office shall occupy the space now occupied by the Office of the Comptroller of the Treasury, the six auditors of the Treasury Department, and the Division of Bookkeeping and Warrants until otherwise provided.

SEC. 26. That the comptroller of accounts shall appoint, remove, and fix the compensation of such officers and employees in the general accounting office as may from time to time be provided for by Congress, and perform all other duties of the head of an independent Government establishment. All such appointments shall be made in accordance with the civil-service laws and regulations. Not more than three persons shall be employed by the comptroller of accounts at a salary of $5,000 a year, and no person shall be employed by him at a salary in excess of that sum. Until March 5, 1921, no person who at the time of the passage of this act holds office as one of the six auditors referred to in section 25, and who in pursuance of said section is transferred to the general accounting office, shall be removed from office or have his compensation reduced, except for cause. All officers and employees of the general accounting office, whether transferred thereto in pursuance of sections 21 and 25 or appointed by the comptroller of accounts, shall perform such duties as may be assigned to them by the comptroller of accounts. The comptroller of accounts shall make such rules and regulations as may be necessary for carrying on the work of the general accounting office.

SEC. 27. That the comptroller of accounts shall investigate, at the seat of government or elsewhere, all matters relating to the receipt and disbursement of public funds, and shall make to the President on or before October 15 of each year, and to Congress at the beginning of each regular session, a report in writing of the work of the general accounting office, containing recommendations concerning the legislation he may deem necessary to facilitate the prompt and accurate rendition and settlement of accounts and concerning such other matters relating to the receipt and disbursement of public funds as he may think advisable. In such regular report, or in special reports at any time when Congress is in session, he shall make recommendations looking to greater economy or efficiency in the public expenditures. He shall make such investigations and reports as shall be ordered by either House of Congress or by any committee of either House having jurisdiction over revenues, appropriations, or expenditures. The comptroller of accounts shall also, at the request of any such committee, direct assistants from his office to furnish the committee such aid and information as the committee may request. The comptroller of accounts shall specially report to Congress every expenditure or contract made by any disbursing officer in any department or establishment in any year in excess of the appropriation to such department or establishment and in violation of law.

All departments or establishments, except the Supreme Court, shall furnish to the comptroller of accounts such information regarding the powers, duties, activities, organization, financial transactions, and methods of business of their respective offices as he may from time to time require of them; and the comptroller of accounts, or any of his assistants or employees, when duly authorized by him, shall, for the purpose of securing such information, have access to and the right to examine any books, documents, papers, or records of any such department or establishment. The authority contained in this paragraph shall not be applicable to expenditures made under the provisions of section 291 of the Revised Statutes of the Unitetd States.

SEC. 28. That the Civil Service Commission shall establish an eligible register for accountants for the general accounting office, and the examination of applicants for entrance upon such register shall be based upon specifications approved by the comptroller of accounts.

SEC. 29. That for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, the sum of $225,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of defraying the expenses of the establishment and maintenance of the bureau of estimates, and the sum of $150,000 for the establishment and maintenance of the general accounting office, including the payment of salaries herein authorized.

SEC. 30. The Bureau of Efficiency, together with its books, papers, and records, furniture, equipment, and supplies, is hereby transferred to the jurisdiction of Congress; and its officers and employees are transferred in their present status without reappointment. The Chief of the Bureau of Efficiency shall hereafter be appointed jointly by the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives and may be removed from office by concurrent resolution for inefficiency, neglect of duty, or malfeasance in office. All other employees of the bureau, including a disbursing officer for the payment of the salaries and expenses of the bureau, shall be appointed in accordance with the civil-service laws and regulations. The Bureau of Efficiency is authorized to investigate any matters relating to the organization, activities, or methods of business of the several administrative services of the Government and shall from time to time submit to Congress reports of its investigations with recommendations looking to greater efficiency and economy in the conduct of the public business. It shall make such special investigations and reports as may be required by either House of Congress or by any committee of either House having jurisdiction over revenues, appropriations, or expenditures. Officers and employees of the executive departments and other establishments shall furnish authorized representatives of the Bureau of Efficiency with all information that the bureau may require for the performance of its duties, and shall give such representatives access to all records and papers that may be needed for that purpose.

SEC. 31. That this act shall take effect on July 1, 1920.

Amend the title so as to read: "An act to create the bureau of estimates and the general accounting office in the Department of the Treasury, to provide for an annual budget, and for other purposes."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have for a number of years recognized the necessity of some agency in the Government to pass upon estimates for appropriations which are needed for the maintenance and operation of our Government. The present plan is so unsatisfactory, so unbusinesslike, that I doubt whether it can find a single defender. It has resulted in estimates being made not by the heads of departments, but in nearly all cases the estimates are made by the chief clerks of the various bureaus and divisions of the departments of the Government. Under the system now prevailing every bureau and every division of the departments of the Government has vied with every other to see that its growth is not exceeded by that of any other bureau or division. It is a physical impossibility for Members of Congress to make a personal examination into every estimate submitted. The only investigations which are made are when the increases asked for are beyond all reason and the committee wants some explanation in regard to them.

I recognize that the pending measure is far from perfect, but I know that it is a step in the right direction, and I have every confidence that it will result in a more systematic plan of estimates for appropriations which are necessary for the maintenance of the Government than has been apparent in the past.

Again, Mr. President, there is a provision in the bill under which hereafter there can be a systematic checking up of the estimates when they are submitted to Congress. To-day estimates are sent by the Secretary of the Treasury to the Appropriations Committee of the House or of the Senate, through the Speaker of the House or the President of the Senate, and if there is an investigation made of any particular estimate, it is defended in every case by the very persons who originated it, and that at a time when the appropriation bill containing the item is before the House or Senate. Appropriation bills must be passed; they have the right of way in both Houses; and it is impossible for members of committees of the House and of the Senate to go into a detailed investigation of all the estimates which are submitted to them requiring appropriations.

I have no doubt the pending bill will be amended very shortly after it shall have become a law and put in operation, but the plan outlined in the bill, I think, will result in an immediate improvement. I think it will be easier for every Senator and every Representative, if he has any interest whatever in the amount of money which is appropriated by Congress in order to maintain the Government, to learn hereafter for what the money is to be expended and how it is to be expended than under the present system.

Mr. President, in the budget systems of some of the leading countries of the world there is provision made preventing the legislatures of such countries from increasing an appropriation which has been estimated for in budget form.

Mr. McCORMICK. That is true only as to the British Commonwealth.

Mr. SMOOT. No; there is one other country which has such a provision.

I have had enough experience in the Senate to know that such a provision would be rather too drastic. We all know that, even after appropriation bills have passed the other House, have come to the Senate, and have been reported to the Senate by the Committee on Appropriations, it has been found scores of times that it was absolutely necessary that there be an appropriation made for some particular purpose which had theretofore not been estimated for or reported from the committee; and with such a drastic provision in the law as that to which I have referred it would be hard to meet such a situation. But, Mr. President, I think that the rules of the Senate could be amended and strengthened so that no items could be put upon an appropriation bill increasing the budget estimate unless by unanimous consent.

I recognize the force of what the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] stated yesterday, that unanimous consent generally is very easily obtained in the Senate; but I think if the proposed system were put in operation and should develop, as I hope it will develop, it will create a greater interest amongst Senators as to the expenditure of the public funds. In that event, whenever an increased appropriation would be asked for there would have to be an absolute reason and justification for it beyond a question of doubt before unanimous consent could be secured. That is one of the questions that will have to be considered later in connection with this proposed legislation; and I hope that within the next few years the legislation will be so perfected that it will work to the end all of us profess we want to reach. Yet how often do we see appropriations increased without a word of opposition being heard.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator has referred to the amendment of the rules of the Senate as a possible measure of relief from the evil to which his remarks have been directed. I concede that such a rule, although subject to suspension by a two-thirds vote or by unanimous consent, would go a long way toward preventing the incorporation into appropriation bills of additional appropriations through amendments offered on the floor; but does the Senator believe it is possible to secure such an amendment?

Mr. SMOOT. I think, Mr. President, that it will be possible; and not only that, but I wish to say to the Senator that, so far as I am personally concerned, I should like to see the rule made absolute that an amendment providing an increased appropriation or an additional item of appropriation could only be added by unanimous consent of the Senate.

Mr. THOMAS. I should also like to see that done, and I wish I could share the Senator's confidence; but, in view of the futility of the efforts which have been made for over a period of many years to amend the rules of the Senate, I am unable even to hope that such a remedy is within the limits of senatorial possibility.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, perhaps it would be well enough for me to state why I have hope and confidence that such action will be taken. There is no question in my mind that the appropriations which Congress will be called upon to make will be so large, the amounts will be so staggering to the American people, that the pressure brought to bear upon Congress for the reduction of the appropriations, even those which must be made, will be so great that Senators will want just such kind of a rule to protect themselves.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah, as well as myself and some other Members of the Senate, during the last seven or eight years have warned this body that the indignant wrath of an outraged people would manifest itself in no uncertain terms against these appropriations. I fail to see any material evidence of any collective movement or expression of that sort, and I am beginning to doubt whether it will materialize.

Shortly after I came here, when I objected to one of these appropriations, I was informed by an old and experienced Senator that I was wasting my breath in a useless effort, for the very good reason that the people wanted these moneys expended and became indignant when any attempt was made to impose limitations upon our practice.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, conditions to-day are quite different from the conditions before the year 1916 as to the indebtedness of our Government.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator just for a suggestion?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. EDGE. Referring to the interesting experience of the Senator from Colorado, was it not quite true that in those days we did not have income taxes and excess-profits taxes and many other types of taxation which I think have served more or less to awaken the public?

Mr. THOMAS. No, Mr. President; we did not have them at that time, but I do not yet perceive any signs of awakening, although the tax rates have been doubled and quadrupled and quintupled. Possibly we may get under the skin after a while; I hope so; but so far we hear nothing—at least I have heard nothing—except individual protests and screams of pain. There has been no organized effort, no mutual protest, no general form of denunciation or demand for relief. I hope it will come, though. I hope the Senator is right.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not want to be an alarmist, but I say now that there will have to be a change not only in the expenditures of money on the part of the Government but in the mode of living of the people in this country, or trouble is bound to come. I see the storms arising; and when we stop to think that the world is not producing what the world requires, only one result can come from it, and that is disaster. The peoples of the world will have to produce more, and unless they do, I care not how much taxes may be reduced or how large the appropriations, it will not remedy the situation.

It is all very well for us to issue paper money by the billions; it is all very well for the countries of the world to put their printing presses in operation and issue untold billions of uncovered paper money; but the greater the quantity of it that is issued the greater the cost of producing goods in the world and the cost of living to the people. The only thing that can bring about normal times in this country and in all the world is to produce more and at least to produce as much as is consumed by the people of the world.

Mr. President, that is far afield from this bill. I want to express my approval of this legislation. I have assisted the chairman of this committee to prepare it with the best ability that I have; and while it does not represent the exact views of any member of the committee, I do believe that it represents the consensus of opinion of all of the members of the committee. There is not a member of the committee but who recognizes that when the bill is in operation weaknesses will be developed here and there, and when that time comes I have not any doubt but that Congress will be glad to make the necessary amendments to rectify the shortcomings of the bill.

I believe that the bill ought to pass the Senate of the United States with a unanimous vote. I did intend to analyze the House bill and to show the difference between the House bill and the bill of the Senate; but I think it is hardly necessary, and I will content myself by saying this: There is no question in my mind but that the Senate bill is an immensely better piece of legislation than that of the House. In fact, I believe that if the House bill passed the Senate and became a law it would fail to accomplish what we hope for. Of course, it will go into conference and be thrashed out there. I hope the conferees will have little trouble in agreeing upon the bill.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, I believe there are no more amendments to be offered to the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

JOINT COMMITTEE ON RECLASSIFICATION OF SALARIES.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I desire to call up for consideration Senate joint resolution 160, Order of Business 419, authorizing the Civil Service Commission to take over the records of the Joint Reclassification Commission and have their custody and keep them up to date until the report of that commission can be acted on.

I have been receiving a good many inquiries regarding this joint resolution. On yesterday I inserted in the RECORD a letter from the Civil Service Reform League stating that that league had given careful consideration to the report of the commission and indorsed the work which had been done. Of course, the league suggested one or two amendments, and no contention is made by anybody on the commission that amendments may not be necessary. In fact, we know of some which we shall be glad to suggest ourselves.

This morning I am in receipt of a letter from the president of the Federal Employees' Union in the city of Washington. It embodies a copy of a resolution, which I will read:

Whereas on February 24, 1920, the chairman of the Commission on Reclassification of Salaries introduced in the Senate joint resolution 160 to provide for the preservation and maintenance of the records of that commission by authorizing and directing the United States Civil Service Commission to assume custody of the records and keep them current pending consideration by Congress of the final report and recommendations of the joint commission, which resolution was referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment, and was reported back favorably to the Senate; and

Whereas on March 10, 1920, the chairman of the Committee on Reclassification of Salaries moved that the Senate consider that resolution, but instead, after a suggestion of no quorum by Senator SMOOT, the Senate proceeded to consideration of the peace treaty, and so far as can be ascertained, no further effort has been made to get action on the resolution, notwithstanding that its passage would be the first step in the progress of the service to the standardization which is essential to any betterment of it, and no good reason is apparent why that progress should be delayed; and

Whereas the civilian employees of the Government in the District of Columbia had every reason to believe that the investigation of working conditions by the Joint Commission on Reclassification of Salaries was made with an honest purpose of benefiting the service, by adjusting inequalities of compensation and correcting wrong conditions of employment, but the seemingly needless delay in action on the joint resolution 160 gives rise to a feeling of doubt in the minds of the civilian employees that there is any real interest at all in the matter on the part of Congress; and

Whereas administrative officers were advised when they were preparing their estimates for the coming fiscal year not to include any recommendations for increases in compensation of civilian employees for the reason that the Reclassification Commission was considering the matter of salaries, thus giving rise to the reasonable belief that Congress intended to adjust salaries in accordance with the recommendations of the commission or in accordance with some other plan, and as a result of this there are many deserving employees who will suffer a hardship; and

Whereas inaction or silence on the part of the civilian employees of the Government in the District of Columbia must appear to indicate that they are satisfied with the existing condition, although as a matter of fact they are entirely dissatisfied with that condition: Now therefore be it

Resolved by Federal Employees' Union, No. 2, in quarterly meeting assembled, That the members of this union record their dissatisfaction with the present bonus condition which represents an unscientific, inadequate, and unfair method of attempting to meet the greatly increased cost of living, and perpetuates existing irregularities of salaries which reclassification was intended to correct; and be it further

Resolved, That it is the sense of this union that dilatory or obstructive methods on the part of any member of either House of Congress in dealing with Senate joint resolution 160 or the report of the Reclassification Commission, can not help but lessen the confidence of the civilian employees of the Government in the sincerity of avowals of purpose by Members of Congress to standardize and readjust salaries in the civil service, notwithstanding the fact that such standardization is the most vital need of the civil service; and be it further

Resolved, That it is the sense of this union that the Civil Service Commission has not evinced the active interest in this reclassification that the employees had a right to expect, and that its passive attitude toward Senate joint resolution 160 is calculated to lead, and in many instances has led, to a lack of confidence on the part of civil service employees in the ability or the desire of the individual members of the commission to take over the work of reclassification and administer it with the vigor that would be the first essential of the success of the undertaking; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be furnished to the chairman of the Reclassification Commission, the chairmen of such committees of Congress as the president of this union may deem desirable, and to the president of the Civil Service Commission.

That resolution came to me unexpectedly; I knew nothing about any such action being contemplated; and I present it now, not for the purpose of contending that the attitude of the employees themselves should have any definite bearing upon this subject, but to indicate to the Senate the necessity that something shall be done.

The Reclassification Commission submitted its report on March 12. It is necessary that the statistics which the commission accumulated while it was active should be kept up to date. We have managed to do that thus far by getting some detailed employees in the District to keep those records. But it is done in a manner which it seems to me may possibly be termed irregular, and inasmuch as the commission is supposed to have completed its labors in fact, if not technically, the commission feels that it should be relieved of further responsibility in the matter.

I desire to call special attention to the letter which was inserted in the RECORD yesterday, which came from the National Civil Service Reform League. I believe I will read a portion of it. It certainly comes from a body whose judgment is worthy of very serious consideration, because that organization has been giving careful thought and study to these matters for many years. The letter is addressed to me, and in part is as follows:

The National Civil Service Reform League, through its committee on legislation, urges your favorable consideration of the recommendations in the report of the Joint Committee on Reclassification of Salaries. The league's committee has given careful consideration to the report and believes that it points the way to a distinct step in advance in the Government service.

The civil service is in serious need of attention on all of the points enumerated in the commission's report. At present many of the best employees are resigning from the service, and it is evident that something must be done to retain the more efficient of those who have not resigned.

Particular attention is called to the recommendation in paragraph 4 of the summary of recommendations "that the Congress directs an existing agency, logically and preferably the Civil Service Commission, to make a final allocation of individual positions to the classes set forth in the recommended plan of classification," and also that in paragraph 6 of the same summary of recommendations "that the permanent administration of the classification and schedules of compensation be delegated by law to an existing independent agency of the Government, logically and preferably the Civil Service Commission."

We are of the opinion that the Civil Service Commission is the only agency which by its character and position in the scheme of Government organization is at all fitted to perform these functions. A comprehensive and uniform employment policy for the Government can hardly be brought about unless the work outlined in the above-quoted recommendations is included within the scope of the commission's activities. The Civil Service Commission, by the nature of its present duties, is the only Government department that deals directly with every other department. It is in a position, if it is given authority to do so, to secure with the least possible friction the necessary information to enable it to specify standard rates of compensation and to develop a classification of the service which will be common to all departments.

Mr. President, I read that letter because it bears directly upon this joint resolution. I will state, however, that it is not the purpose of the joint resolution to forestall subsequent and different action by the Senate, or recommendations which may be made by the Committee on Appropriations, to which the report of the Reclassification Commission has been referred.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an inquiry?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I gladly yield.

Mr. KING. It seems to me that the Senator, if I understand his position, is asking for some step to be taken which commits Congress to the acceptation and the passage of the reclassification bill tendered by the commission.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The Senator is not correct in that surmise. The purpose of this joint resolution is simply to transfer to the Civil Service Commission the records of the Reclassification Commission, and keep the information which those records contain up to date, pending the action by the Senate, or the Committee on Appropriations, to which the report has been referred.

Mr. KING. What information is it which the Senator desires shall be kept up to date, to use his expression?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. For instance, there are changes in the personnel of the employees in the District from day to day, and in considerable numbers. The purpose is to keep together information as to who those employees are, what they are doing, what other employees have taken their places, if any, or any new employees who have been brought into the service of the Government; to keep not only their names but a list of the jobs which they are filling, and those jobs are preliminarily put into the classifications which have been stated by the commission.

Mr. KING. The information may be very important; I express no opinion in regard to the matter; but if it is necessary to be preserved does not each bureau possess that information, and can it not be obtained at a moment's notice from the various bureaus and executive agencies and instrumentalities of the Government?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. By no means. I will state to the Senator that that was one of the first important services which the commission performed. There is no agency of the Government at the present time which keeps a record of all its employees and the jobs which they are filling. For the first time, this commission undertook to collect that information.

Mr. KING. Let me state to the Senator that upon a number of occasions I have asked for information as to the number of employees and the salaries being paid, and the information has been furnished me very promptly by various departments and bureaus of the Government.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The Senator can get that from each individual bureau, but there is no agency of the Government at the present time which keeps a total list of all employees, nor can the Senator get from any bureau on any short notice any information as to the jobs which the employees of that bureau are filling.

Mr. KING. I appreciate the fact that there ought to be somewhere a record of the employees of the Government and the work which they are performing, and if the heads of the various bureaus do not have that information, it seems to me they have been very derelict. I can not conceive of the head of a bureau performing his duties, or being able to understand really the work which is being done by his bureau, unless he knows the employees and the work which is committed to their care.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The difficulty is that at the present time there is no classification of the jobs which the Government employees are filling. They have titles. A given bureau can give to the Senator the number of employees under a given title, but those titles mean absolutely nothing, and there is no uniformity as between the different bureaus and the different departments as to those titles.

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON] day before yesterday made a very explicit and, I think, a very attractive and splendid discussion of this matter. Of course, we understand that Senators can not read all of the speeches which are made here, and the report of the Reclassification Commission is somewhat voluminous; but if Senators could possibly find time to go into this matter, I feel convinced that there would be no serious opposition, not only to this joint resolution, which is merely a temporary and a comparatively unimportant measure, but to taking up the substance of the report itself and putting it into law. We quite agree that a good deal of it was compiled under pressure; many of the decisions were reached in a hurried way; but you will find in the report the substance and the foundation for one of the most valuable things which has ever been suggested for the business administration of the affairs of the Government.

Mr. KING. Has the Senator estimated the cost which will be entailed upon the Government to keep up this information? It seems to me that it could be very readily maintained or obtained, and that the cost would not be very great.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The joint resolution was amended by the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment in the Senate by adding this proviso:

Provided, That the heads of the various governmental services and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized, as provided in the original act, to detail officers and employees, not exceeding 20, and without additional expense for clerical services, to carry out the purposes of this resolution.

That is the manner in which this work is expected to be performed, and I think that it is the only proper manner in which it can be performed, for the reason that the report has been made up, in large measure, by the detailed services of present employees. They are familiar with those records and can do the work better than could possibly be expected from any new people.

Mr. KING. Of course, I am not very familiar with the activities of the Classification Commission. While I have given some attention to the report and to the speech delivered by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON], I do not appreciate the exact work which the Senator now seeks to devolve upon the Civil Service Commission, but, as I understand it, it seems that the work is not very onerous, and I can not conceive of the necessity of 20 employees for the purpose of keeping up that information.

Every firm in the United States knows the number of its employees. Some plants have perhaps 15,000 or 20,000 employees and the heads of the various departments know the employees, the wages which are being paid, and the changes which are made. Every night, if some employee leaves the service, his card is passed in and the bookkeeper makes the proper notation; indeed, they keep their books up to date so well—at least in many of the companies—that a man may be paid at the end of the day if he desires to sever his connection with the company.

I understand that there are over 100,000 names upon this classification report. It seems to me that it is not a very difficult task to note the necessary changes in the personnel of the Government employees in the District. I can not see why there should be a great number of employees detailed for the service. I do not see why each bureau should not make a record of the changes each day that are made in the personnel of that bureau. It would seem to me that the result could be accomplished by having the heads of the bureaus or the chief clerks of the various executive agencies, who have to do with the personnel, make a report every week or every month to such person or bureau or agency as may be designated of the changes in the personnel within those bureaus.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The Senator is quite right about that, I think. I am sure what he said would impress anyone as being the practical side of it. But there is a point which the Senator overlooks, and that is that under this reclassification system the list of the employees in the Federal service contains more information than the mere names and the official titles which they are given. Their cards, showing their duties, the jobs which they are performing, are put together under the reclassification system which the commission has reported, and no bureau can possibly perform that function. It must be done by a centralized agency, by an agency which understands the classifications, the various definitions of positions, and which understands the standardization which the commission has established and does keep up, for the use of the Committee on Appropriations, a complete list, so that that committee can get complete information as to the probable cost of any increase in salaries, as to the number of employees to be dealt with in any given class of positions. No bureau can possibly perform that function, because it has not the classifications. It is the centralized system of records which we have now that will be of value to the Committee on Appropriations when it comes to consider this work.

At any rate, it does seem to me that there can be no question that this report, on which there has been so much time and effort expended, as well as the money expense to the Government in its preparation, should be preserved and turned over in such form as that it shall be of positive use to the Committee on Appropriations when that committee undertakes to consider the general subject. It is the purpose in preserving and keeping it up to date to give definite and current information to the Committee on Appropriations when it undertakes the consideration and final determination of the report itself.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator permit one other question?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I am very glad to yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. Does the classification which the commission has made in any way depend upon the number of employees of the Government?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. It does not.

Mr. KING. Then, just for illustration, if the services of 20,000 or 30,000 employees in the District were dispensed with and they were dismissed from the public service, the classification would stand just the same?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I will say to the Senator that the classification as it now stands is a description of the different governmental jobs in the District of Columbia, regardless of the number of people filling those jobs. Of course, the jobs themselves may lapse, other jobs may be created, and changes in the classification must necessarily be made from time to time; but at present that classification consists merely in defining the classes of work which are actually being carried on in the District of Columbia now.

Mr. President, I move that the Senate take up for consideration the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 160) to provide for the preservation and maintenance of the records of the Joint Commission on Reclassification of Salaries.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Mexico, which is not debatable.

Mr. WATSON. I had no desire to debate it, but is not a motion in order to substitute another measure?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; the pending motion must be voted up or down.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I should merely like to say that——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has announced that the motion to take up the joint resolution is not debatable. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Mexico.

The motion was rejected.

THE DYE INDUSTRY.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8078) to regulate the importation of coal-tar products, to promote the establishment of the manufacture thereof in the United States, and, as incident thereto, to amend the act of September 8, 1916, entitled "An act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes."

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Gerry	McCumber	Smith, Ga.
Brandegee	Gronna	McLean	Smith, Md.
Capper	Hale	McNary	Smith, S. C.
Chamberlain	Harris	Moses	Smoot
Colt	Harrison	New	Sterling
Comer	Henderson	Nugent	Sutherland
Culberson	Jones, N. Mex.	Overman	Swanson
Cummins	Jones, Wash.	Page	Townsend
Curtis	Kellogg	Phipps	Trammell
Dial	Kendrick	Pittman	Underwood
Dillingham	Keyes	Pomerene	Walsh, Mass.
Edge	King	Ransdell	Warren
Elkins	Knox	Sheppard	Watson
Frelinghuysen	Lenroot	Simmons
Gay	Lodge	Smith, Ariz.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-eight Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 8078.

Mr. KING. I ask for a division.

On a division the motion was agreed to, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8078) to regulate the importation of coal-tar products, to promote the establishment of the manufacture thereof in the United States, and, as incident thereto, to amend the act of September 8, 1916, entitled "An act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes."

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, the bill now under consideration, known as the dyestuffs bill, is designed to regulate the importation of coal-tar products, and, I think, is one of the most important bills which Congress has been called upon to consider since the declaration of war with Germany. We have recently passed an Army reorganization bill providing for the future preparedness of this country—a national defense act, so to speak. We have also passed a naval appropriation bill providing appropriations for the maintenance of a strong naval force as an additional means of national defense. I consider the pending bill third in importance to those two important measures which the Senate has lately passed.

While I might be accused of having to some extent a local interest in this bill, inasmuch as in my State during the war there were erected from 25 to 30 factories for the manufacture of dyes from coal-tar products, as similar factories were erected in other States, yet I am not approaching the subject from the commercial standpoint or from the standpoint of its material importance, but I am approaching it from the standpoint of our duty as the representatives of the people to prepare this country by protecting and sustaining the dyestuff industry which was created during the war and which prior to the war was practically a negligible quantity, so far as manufacturing the necessities of war was concerned. During the great struggle we were forced, owing to our unpreparedness, to create this new industry in our country. Our lack of vision placed us in a very critical and dangerous position at the beginning of the war.

Public expression has been repeatedly given to the duty that Congress owes to the Nation in regard to this subject. Many public men have expressed the opinion that what expediency has taught us to create during the war should be capitalized and retained and that Germany's industrial hold here should be loosened. Great industries which prior to the war Germany controlled in the United States are now in the hands of American owners, or are supposed to be.

Before the war German interests, through partial or complete control of raw and semimanufactured material, largely controlled the production of textiles, medical supplies, including asperin and salvarsan and many other drugs in everyday use, electrical and automotive equipment, candy, chemicals, raw materials, and last, but not least, coal-tar dyes, the key to the whole organic chemical industry.

These industries and many others which I can not at the present moment recall have passed into American hands. German patents filed in the United States are now controlled for America's needs and uses and secrets heretofore protected by laws against American competition are revealed to American manufacturers for the public benefit and profit.

It is safe, therefore, to assume that with the passage of this bill the industrial influence which before the war Germany exercised in this country can never be restored.

Let us see what the publicly declared policy of the United States has been since we faced this dangerous condition.

The President has twice recommended to Congress a policy to be pursued in regard to dyes and coal-tar products. The last occasion of such a recommendation was in his message on May 20, 1919.

This message was sent to Congress at a time when the great problems of reconstruction were to be considered by Congress, and probably after the President had been advised by those who had been obliged to meet the problem of procuring munitions and producing chemical gases and the other necessary materials in the war that it was absolutely necessary, if in the future we were to be prepared, that some measure of protection should be thrown around this great industry. So the President said in his message:

> There is, fortunately, no occasion for undertaking in the immediate future any general revision of our system of import duties. No serious danger of foreign competition now threatens American industries. Our country has emerged from the war less disturbed and less weakened than any of the European countries which are our competitors in manufacture. Their industrial establishments have been subjected to greater strain than ours, their labor force to a more serious disorganization, and this is clearly not the time to seek an organized advantage. The work of mere construction will, I am afraid, tax the capacity and the resources of their people for years to come. So far from there being any danger or need of accentuated foreign competition, it is likely that the conditions of the next few years will greatly facilitate the marketing of American manufactures abroad. Least of all should we depart from the policy adopted in the tariff act of 1913, of permitting the free entry into the United States of the raw materials needed to supplement and enrich our own abundant supplies.
> Nevertheless, there are parts of our tariff system which need prompt attention. The experience of the war has made it plain that in some cases too great reliance on foreign supply is dangerous, and that in determining certain parts of our tariff policy domestic considerations must be borne in mind which are political as well as economic. Among the industries to which special consideration should be given is that of the manufacture of dyestuffs. Our complete dependence upon German supplies before the war made the interruption of trade a cause of exceptional economic disturbance. The close relation between the manufacturer of dyestuffs, on the one hand, and of explosives and poisonous gases, on the other, moreover, has given the industry an exceptional significance and value. Although the United States will gladly and unhesitatingly join in the program of international disarmament, it will nevertheless be a policy of obvious prudence to make certain of the successful maintenance of many strong and well-equipped chemical plants. The German chemical industry, with which we will be brought into competition, was and may well be again a thoroughly knit monopoly capable of exercising a competition of a peculiarly insidious and dangerous kind.

Mr. President, if Germany's industrial mailed fist extended across the seas and crushed this industry before the war and was prevented during the war, Germany's mailed fist is again appearing in opposition to this bill at the present time. I am told that agents in this country representing the German cartel, the powerful corporation that practically prevented the American industry from prospering before the war, are already conspiring and conniving, and already have their lobby here in Washington to prevent the passage of this bill. The President was right when he pointed out in his message that undoubtedly those influences will be exerted again to crush this industry which has been built up during the war.

The President went on in his message:

> The United States should, moreover, have the means of properly protecting itself whenever our trade is discriminated against by foreign nations, in order that we may be assured of that equality of treatment which we hope to accord and to promote the world over. Our tariff laws as they now stand provide no weapon of retaliation in case other governments should enact legislation unequal in its bearing on our products as compared with the products of other countries. Though we are as far as possible from desiring to enter upon any course of retaliation we must frankly face the fact that hostile legislation by other nations is not beyond the range of possibility and that it may have to be met by counter legislation. This subject has, fortunately, been exhaustively investigated by the United States Tariff Commission. A recent report of that commission has shown very clearly that we lack and that we ought to have the instruments necessary for the assurance of equal and equitable treatment. The attention of the Congress has been called to this matter on past occasions, and the past measures which are now recommended by the Tariff Commission are substantially the same that have been suggested by previous administrations. I recommend that this phase of the tariff question receive the early attention of the Congress.

Again, even as late as Monday, February 23, 1920, Attorney General Palmer, in a speech in Topeka, Kans., said:

> May last the President urged upon the Congress the necessity for legislation which would support the great chemical industry which was built up in the United States during the war, at a time when German dyestuffs were not imported. At last accounts that recommendation had not been complied with in letter or in spirit.

In our effort to meet this situation this bill is before the Senate; and let me quote from the testimony of Dr. Matthews in the hearings before the House committee, in which I think he puts his finger on the great principle involved in this bill:

There is one thing which the people of the United States must remember, and that is that all the most important explosives of the present day are either coal-tar products or the result of chemical processes requiring the use of coal tar, and in all dyestuff factories there is unavoidable production of large quantities of substances which are directly available for conversion into explosives, so that it is important that the Government aid the industry in every way possible.

When the importation of dyes from Germany was cut off by the war it was encouraging to the people of this country to see the large number of people who went into the industry to serve the country. There were large establishments and small ones, every one doing its full part. They commenced with the dyes which were the easiest to produce and gradually expanded the production until to-day they are producing about 90 per cent of the dyes needed in this country.

In that connection, Mr. President, to show you the patriotism of one of our great inventors and manufacturers in New Jersey, I want to read a letter from Thomas A. Edison, dated Orange, N. J., December 16, 1919:

FROM THE LABORATORY OF THOMAS A. EDISON,
Orange, N. J., December 16, 1919.

CHARLES L. PARSONS, Esq.,
1709 G Street, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. PARSONS: Your letter of December 13 has been received. During the early part of the war I erected the first plants for producing benzol and toluol. The latter was used for making T. N. T. The benzol was used in my plant where I produced the first synthetic carbolic acid for our Government, from which they made picric-acid explosives at Picatinny, N. J., and Indianhead, near Washington.

In addition, I was the first to produce aniline oil in quantity for the textile mills, at their request, to prevent them from shutting down.

I want to bear on that "to prevent the mills in this country from shutting down." I mention it to point out the selfishness of those textile industries in this country that are now opposing this measure. They have forgotten the great service rendered to them during the war when the supply of dyes and other products was cut off by reason of the war. They have forgotten that; and now, when they can get some of these raw materials and these dyes cheaper, they are indifferent to the interests of this great industry which was created during the war, and are opposing this legislation intended to protect and to retain that industry for America.

I was also the first to produce in this country paraphenylenediamine, which saved the fur dyers from closing their doors. Other very necessary chemicals were also produced in these early plants. Altogether, I put up five chemical works and four subsidiary plants, all of which were erected within 65 days from the time of starting. I continued to operate these various plants until other manufacturers could supply the market, when I retired and sold the apparatus to various chemical works. These facts are mentioned to show that I am familiar with chemical manufacture, but I no longer have any interest in this kind of production.

I have been reading about the various schemes put forward for protecting our factories against German low cost until they get a little more experience. It is my opinion that our factories should be protected, not by tariff, which would be no protection at all, but by a licensing system, good for, say, four years, at the end of which Congress, if necessary, could make longer extension. I believe that ultimately the Americans will beat the Germans at their own game.

Yours, very truly,

THOS. A. EDISON.

Carbon copies to Hon. JOSEPH S. FRELINGHUYSEN and Hon. WALTER E. EDGE.

Here was a great manufacturer in my State who came to the rescue of the manufacturing interests of this country.

Senators, shall these immense factories now be dismantled? Shall their machinery become idle? Shall their laboratories for research, so valuable to all industries and trades, be abandoned? Shall the scientists, chemists, and great army of artisans who have been trained and become experienced at such cost be dismissed and the value of their achievements be lost sight of?

The defeat of this bill would mean this.

The story of the dye industry is one that shows the pitiful plight of a great country whose statesmen have lacked the vision to see that encouragement of industrial progress through the development of science was essential to the safety of the country and its people, who had placed their destiny in their hands. What an indictment this is of the lethargy and indifference of Presidents, Senators, and Congressmen during the last 40 years in failing to recognize the very essentials of preparedness in advancing the science of dye and coal-tar manufacturing industries. That a country in which had been born men of inventive genius, who had bridled steam in the locomotive and steamboat and produced the telephone, telegraph, airplane, automobile, cotton gin, and thousands of other inventions which show the masterly genius of America, should find itself helpless and impotent in the final analysis when a great war threatens is indeed a pity.

Notable advances have also been made in the manufacture of synthetic medicinals in the United States. A small number of these were made here in 1914, but German dye manufacturers, especially the house of Bayer, dominated the world's markets. A large proportion of America's prewar production was carried on in the factories owned and controlled by the German manufacturers—the Bayer Co. and the Heyden Chemical Works, which are now in American hands.

Two drugs widely used in the treatment of influenza are acetylsalicylic acid and salol. The output of both these drugs in 1918 showed a large increase over 1917. There can be little question that if the manufacture of these drugs in the United States had not been well established the mortality during the recent epidemic would have been much larger than it was.

Of special interest is the case of arsphenamine, a specific remedy for syphilis, and commonly ranked by the medical profession as among the most important half dozen drugs.

This drug was controlled by German patents and trade-marks under the name "salvarsan," and therefore could not be made in the United States until the passage of the trading-with-the-enemy act. This act gave power to the Federal Trade Commission to issue licenses under patents owned by citizens of enemy countries. The first licenses issued under the law were for this drug. Later these patents were seized and sold by the Alien Property Custodian to the Chemical Foundation. The licenses contain provisions requiring the licensees to use the name of arsphenamine and provide for a large reduction of price for the drug to the public.

Prior to the war Germany controlled the dye industry of the world, amounting to $68,300,000 in value of artificial dyes. In 1914 only seven establishments in the United States were engaged in the industry, with $3,000,000 capital invested, employing only 500 people, and producing only $3,596,795 worth of goods, the salaries and wages amounting to only $500,000 per annum. But what a change in 1918.

At the beginning of the war America was therefore helpless as far as the dye industry was concerned, but not for long. American ingenuity, genius, and enterprise soon produced a marvelous change. The war had created an embargo. No fear then of German competition. No fear then of the power of German science and research. Necessity knew no law, and America was equal to the emergency. The war caused men to engage in the enterprise for patriotic purposes. Old factories were enlarged, new companies organized, and factories built. German patents filed in America were seized and utilized. Manufacturing establishments in the United States had used about $25,000,000 worth of German dyes per annum. Dyes used in industrial manufacture, with an output of $3,000,000,000 worth of goods annually, all had been dependent on Germany for their colors. If Germany had at any time prior to the war shut off her supplies, these enterprises could not have produced the goods to meet the fashions and styles of the period. Many and varied were the industries affected—leather, paint, textile, silk, cotton, woolen, hosiery, carpet, automobile trades, and numerous others.

We all know the terrible plight of our manufacturers shortly after the war broke out—the money loss and embarrassment to trade and commerce. Read the papers of that period. Shortly after the war broke out and before the United States entered it, Secretary Bryan arranged with Germany for exchange of wool and cotton for the dyes so sorely needed in this country. What a humiliating confession of industrial weakness was this! Who does not recall the sensation made by the sudden appearance of the giant submarine Deutschland in Baltimore or has forgotten the wild scramble by the manufacturers to secure the cargo of dyes with which she was loaded? This was repeated when she returned to America the second time, at New London.

I dare say we have not forgotten the expedients we used in our efforts to produce picric acid, T. N. T., ammonium nitrate, tetryl, and the chemical gases, acetate cellulose, the "dope" for our airplanes, and the chemicals for photography, and many other valuable essentials which we so much needed when we finally entered the conflict.

Let us reflect on this lesson—the tremendous cost due to our indifference to national preparedness. If we had had the foresight to have considered in advance the signs so clearly outlined, how many lives would have been spared, how much treasure would have been saved, how much more speedily the war would have been ended! Now what a change has come over the spirit of our dreams—or nightmare would be a better term!

I read from the report of the Senate Committee on Finance:

The Tariff Commission submitted a table of production of dyes in this country in 1918, and the amount produced by the 77 companies making finished dyes was 58,464,866 pounds, of the value of $62,026,390. This was a clear gain over the production of 1917, which amounted to 45,977,246 pounds, valued at $57,796,288, and when it is remembered that there was imported into this country in 1914 over 45,000,000 pounds, the change is wonderful, and it is the best evidence of what can be done in this country.

It is true that at this time there are many important dyes which are not produced in this country, but the men who have become interested in this industry believe that in time, and with proper protection and regulation, they will be able to supply the demand. More than 300 different dyes were made in the United States in 1918, and many dyes which were not produced in 1917 were on the list of American products in the year 1918. One of the large producers informed the committee that he was now producing several vat dyes, but he was not ready to put them on the market and did not intend to offer them to the public until he was satisfied that they were equal to the foreign product.

Sixteen States are now represented by plants manufacturing chemicals and dyestuffs alone.

I have a list taken from the House hearings naming the States, as well as the names of the establishments which are now operating in those States. This is a report filed by the American Dye Institute and includes those manufacturing concerns which are making dyes, not coal-tar products. There are 16 different States in which these plants are located—Pennsylvania, New York, Ohio, Massachusetts, Michigan, Delaware, New Jersey, Illinois, Wisconsin, Missouri, Connecticut, California, West Virginia, Florida, Rhode Island, and Tennessee. I ask that this list be inserted in the RECORD in connection with my remarks.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Althouse Chemical Co., Reading, Pa.; American Aniline & Products Co., New York City; Atlas Color Works, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Atlantic Dyestuff Co., Boston, Mass.; Ault & Wiborg Co., Cincinnati, Ohio; Beacon Color & Chemical Co., Boston, Mass.; Butterworth-Judson Corporation, New York City; Certified Chemical Corporation, New York City; Chemical Co. of America, New York City; Commonwealth Chemical Corporation, New York City; Dicks, David Co. (Inc.), New York City; Dow Chemical Co., Midland, Mich.; E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., Wilmington, Del.; Dye Products & Chemical Co., New York City; Essex Aniline Works (Inc.), Boston, Mass.; Grasselli Chemical Co., Cleveland, Ohio; Heller & Merz Co., Newark, N. J.; Frank Hemingway (Inc.), New York City; Holland Aniline Co., Holland, Mich.; Holliday-Kemp Co., New York City; Hydrocarbon Chemical Products Co., Cardington, Pa.; H. Kohnstamm & Co., New York City; Calco Chemical Co., Bound Brook, N. J.; Marden, Orth & Hastings Corporation, New York City; John Campbell & Co., New York; Consolidated Color & Chemical Co., Newark, N. J.; Newport Chemical Co., Milwaukee, Wis.; Gaskill Chemical Co., Brooklyn, N. Y.; Merrimac Chemical Co., Boston, Mass.; Barrett Manufacturing Co., New York; Metals Disintegrating Co., New York City; Monroe Color & Chemical Works, St. Louis, Mo.; Monsanto Chemical Works, St. Louis, Mo.; Geo. H. Morrill Co., Norwood, Mass.; National Aniline & Chemical Co. (Inc.), New York City; Naugatuck Chemical Co., Naugatuck, Conn.; Organic Salt & Acid Co., Long Island City, N. Y.; Sherwin-Williams Co., Cleveland, Ohio; Transatlantic Chemical Corporation, New York City; United States Color & Chemical Co., Boston, Mass.; Zobel Color Works (Inc.), New York City; Central Dyestuff & Chemical Co., Newark, N. J.; Peerless Color Co., Bound Brook, N. J.; Rector Chemical Co., New York City; Newport Chemical Works, Passaic, N. J.; The Barrett Co., New York, N. Y.

In its geographical distribution the dyestuff industry is represented by plants in 16 different States, as follows:

Pennsylvania, New York, Ohio, Massachusetts, Michigan, Delaware, New Jersey, Illinois, Wisconsin, Missouri, Connecticut, California, West Virginia, Florida, Rhode Island, Tennessee.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STERLING in the chair). Does the Senator yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I yield.

Mr. DIAL. Can the Senator tell us whether or not these plants have been successful financially?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I am glad the Senator has asked that question. I intend later to place in the RECORD a statement from one or two of these plants, showing that no profit has been made out of the dye industry; in other words, that they have practically put back in reconstruction and purchase of new machinery almost all the earnings. If the Senator is anxious regarding the excessive profits accruing to those concerns, I will say that most of the profits have been returned to the plants in construction and purchase of machinery; that the industry is largely in the experimental stage; and they must continue their experiments, which is very costly. I do not think that in any instance any great profits have been made, and I will show later in my speech a comparison between the estimate of the profits made in America and the profits made in Germany by German plants during the war.

In this connection possibly the Senator will be interested in the information given in a letter from John J. White, a man interested in the dye industry in my State. He wrote me as early as October 9 last asking that something be done to protect these war plants against German competition. I informed him as to what Congress was doing, and he wrote me on April 22 this letter. It illustrates, I will say to the Senator from South Carolina, the situation which is confronting a number of plants in my State, thirteen or twenty, I believe. He says:

As you can well realize, it is very upsetting to me not to know what shape this legislation is finally going to take. It is becoming more and more the opinion of people in the chemical business that they are going to get no help whatever from Washington. I am glad to note that you are positive that the bill will pass.

I wish that there were some way that we could get immediate action on this. Concerns like ours can wait until something is done, but on behalf of the small chemical manufacturers, with only $100,000 to $150,000 invested, I can say that their entire assets are in jeopardy, due to the delay on this situation. For example, I know of one small manufacturer who makes a product in competition with one of ours, who has had to close his plant, because foreign goods were coming in here at better prices than he could manufacture at, on account of the rates of exchange. As far as we are concerned, on this particular product we have had the portion of our plant which manufactures it shut down for four months, on account of the same condition, and have now turned to importing merchandise as a measure of self-defense.

Mr. DIAL. I thank the Senator. I was just asking for information. I have heard different reports about the profits they are making.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from New Jersey if his correspondent informs him from what country these imports are being received?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. That information is not contained in the letter. I was a little curious regarding that myself.

I have been very much interested in reading a book written by Edwin E. Slosson, literary editor of the Independent and associate in the Columbia School of Journalism, entitled "Creative Chemistry." The book is a compilation of articles prepared for the Independent in 1917 and 1918. It tells the story of the wonderful advancement made through modern chemistry in medicine and commercial materials produced from coal-tar derivatives. I wish that every Member of the Senate could read the book.

In chapter 4, referring to coal-tar colors, we find the following description of the utilization that is made of the tar derivatives of coal:

If you put a bit of soft coal into a test tube (or, if you haven't a test tube, into a clay tobacco pipe, and lute it over with clay) and heat it, you will find a gas coming out of the end of the tube that will burn with a yellow, smoky flame. After all the gas comes off, you will find in the bottom of the test tube a chunk of dry, porous coke. These, then, are the two main products of the destructive distillation of coal. But if you are an unusually observant person—that is, if you are a born chemist with an eye to by-products—you will notice along in the middle of the tube, where it is neither too hot nor too cold, some dirty drops of water and some black, sticky stuff. If you are just an ordinary person, you won't pay any attention to this, because there is only a little of it and because what you are after is the coke and gas. You regard the nasty, dirty, smelly stuff that comes in between as merely a nuisance, because it clogs up and spoils your nice, clean tube.

Now, that is the way the gas makers and coke makers, being for the most part ordinary persons and not born chemists, used to regard the water and tar that got into their pipes. They washed it out so as to have the gas clean and then ran it into the creek. But the neighbors, especially those who fished in the stream below the gas works, made a fuss about spoiling the water, so the gas men gave away the tar to the boys for use in celebrating the Fourth of July and election night or sold it for roofing.

But this same tar, which for a hundred years was thrown away and nearly half of which is thrown away yet in the United States, turns out to be one of the most useful things in the world. It is one of the strategic points in war and commerce. It wounds and heals. It supplies munitions and medicines. It is like the magic purse of Fortunatus, from which anything wished for could be drawn. The chemist puts his hand into the black mass and draws out all the colors of the rainbow. This evil-smelling substance beats the rose in production of perfume and surpasses the honeycomb in sweetness.

Mr. President, for many years we have been allowing this valuable product in this country to go to waste because we have neglected the dye and coal-tar industry. I have here an estimate made by Mr. Henry D. Rust, president of the Coppers Co., of Pittsburgh. These figures were presented to the Senate by the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] in the very able speech made in support of the bill when it was first reported. The table is to be found on page 139 of the dyestuffs hearings before the Committee on Finance of the Senate, and shows that the annual wastage of the by-product of coal amounts to $930,000,000. It is compiled by States. The State of Pennsylvania is the highest, with $309,000,000 a year wasted; the State of West Virginia, $159,000,000; the State of Illinois, $149,000,000; and the State of Alabama, $32,000,000.

The tar obtained from the gas plant or the coke plant has now to be redistilled, giving off the 10 "crudes" already mentioned and leaving in the still 65 per cent of pitch, which may be used for roofing, paving, and the like. The 10 primary products or crudes are then converted into secondary products, or "intermediates," by processes like that for the conversion of benzene into aniline. There are some three hundred of these intermediates, and from them are built up more than three times as many dyes. The year before the war the American customhouse listed 5,674 different brands of synthetic dyes imported, chiefly from Germany, but some of these were trade names for the same product made by different firms or represented by different degrees of purity or form of preparation. Although the number of possible products is unlimited and over 5,000 dyes are known, only about 900 are in use. We summarize the situation so: Coal tar—10 crudes, 300 intermediates, 900 dyes, 5,000 brands.

Indigo is one of the oldest and fastest of the dyestuffs. To see that it is both ancient and lasting look at the unfaded blue cloths that enwrap an Egyptian mummy. When Cæsar conquered the British he found them tatooed with woad, the native indigo. But the chief source of indigo was, as its name implies, India. In 1897 nearly a million acres in India were growing the indigo plant, and the annual value of the crop was $20,000,000. Then the fall began, and by 1914 India was producing only $300,000 worth. What had happened to destroy this wonderful industry? Simply that the Badische Anilin und Soda Fabrik, of Germany, had worked out a practical process for making artificial indigo.

That indigo on breaking up gave off aniline was discovered as early as 1840. But how to reverse the process and get indigo from aniline puzzled chemists for more than 40 years, until finally it was solved by Adolf von Baeyor, of Munich. He worked on the problem of the constitution of indigo for 15 years, and discovered several ways of making it. It is possible to start from benzene, toluene, or naphthalene. The first process was the easiest, but if you will refer to the products of the distillation of tar you will find that the amount of toluene produced is less than the naphthalene, which is hard to dispose of. That is, if a dye factory had worked out a process for making indigo from toluene it would not be practicable, because there was not enough toluene produced to supply the demand for indigo. So the more complicated naphthalene process was chosen in preference to the others in order to utilize this by-product.

The Badische Anilin und Soda Fabrik spent $5,000,000 and 17 years in chemical research before they could make indigo, but they gained a monopoly—or, to be exact, 96 per cent—of the world's production. A hundred years ago indigo cost as much as $4 a pound. In 1914 we were paying 15 cents a pound for it. Even the pauper labor of India could not compete with the German chemists at this price. At the beginning of the present century Germany was paying more than $3,000,000 a year for indigo. Fourteen years later German was selling indigo to the amount of $12,600,000. Besides its cheapness, artificial indigo is preferable because it is of uniform quality and greater purity. Vegetable indigo contains from 40 to 80 per cent of impurities, among them various other tinctorial substances. Artificial indigo is made pure and of any desired strength, so that dyers can depend on it.

Our independent ancestors got along so far as possible with what grew in the neighborhood. Sweetapple bark gave a fine saffron yellow. Ribbons were given the hue of the rose by pokeberry juice. The Confederates in their butternut-colored uniforms were almost as invisible as if in khaki or feldgrau. Madder was cultivated in the kitchen garden. Only logwood from Jamaica and indigo from India had to be imported.

That we are not so independent to-day is our own fault, for we waste enough coal tar to supply ourselves and other countries with all the new dyes needed. It is essentially a question of economy and organization. We have forgotten how to economize, but we have learned how to organize.

Before the war six English factories producing dyestuffs employed only 36 chemists altogether, while one German color works, the Hochster Farbwerke, employed 307 expert chemists and 74 technologists. This firm, united with the six other leading dye companies of Germany on January 1, 1916, to form a trust to last for 50 years. During this time they will maintain uniform prices and uniform wage scales and hours of labor, and exchange patents and secrets. They will divide the foreign business pro rata and share the profits. The German chemical works made big profits during the war, mostly from munitions and medicines, and will be, through this new combination, in a stronger position than ever before to push the export trade.

The United States, like England, had become dependent upon Germany for its dyestuffs. We imported nine-tenths of what we used, and most of those that were produced were made from imported intermediates. When the war broke out there were only seven firms and 528 persons employed in the manufacture of dyes in the United States. One of these, the Schoelkopf Aniline & Chemical Works, of Buffalo, deserves mention, for it had stuck it out ever since 1879, and in 1914 was making 106 dyes. In June, 1917, this firm, with the encouragement of the Government Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, joined with some of the other American producers to form a trade combination, the National Aniline & Chemical Co. The Du Pont Co. also entered the field on an extensive scale and soon there were 118 concerns engaged in it with great profit. During the war $200,000,000 was invested in the domestic dyestuff industry. To protect this industry Congress put on a specific duty of 5 cents a pound and an ad valorem duty of 30 per cent on imported dyestuffs; but if, after five years, American manufacturers are not producing 60 per cent in value of the domestic consumption, the protection is to be removed. For some reason not clearly understood and therefore hotly discussed, Congress at the last moment struck off the specific duty from two of the most important of the dyestuffs, indigo and alizarin, as well as from all medicinals and flavors.

The manufacture of dyes is not a big business, but it is a strategic business. Helgoland is not a big island, but England would have been glad to buy it back during the war at a high price per square yard.

We have been importing more than $12,000,000 worth of coal-tar products a year, but the cottonseed oil we exported in 1912 would alone suffice to pay that bill twice over. But, although the manufacture of dyes can not be called a big business, in comparison with some others, it is a paying business when well managed. We have the coal tar and we have the chemists, so there seems no good reason why we should not make our own dyes, at least enough of them so we will not be caught napping as we were in 1914. It was decidedly humiliating for our Government to have to beg Germany to sell us enough colors to print our stamps and greenbacks and then to beg Great Britain for permission to bring them over by Dutch ships.

The raw materials for the production of coal-tar products we have in abundance if we will only take the trouble to save it. In 1914 the crude light oil collected from the coke ovens would have produced only about 4,500,000 gallons of benzole and 1,500,000 gallons of toluol, but in 1917 this output was raised to 40,200,000 gallons of benzole and 10,200,000 gallons of toluol. The toluol was used mostly in the manufacture of trinitrotoluol for use in Europe. When the war broke out in 1914 it shut off our supply of phenol—carbolic acid—for which we were dependent upon foreign sources. This threatened not only to afflict us with headaches by depriving us of aspirin, but also to remove the consolation of music, for phenol is used in making phonograph records. Mr. Edison, with his accustomed energy, put up a factory within a few weeks for the manufacture of synthetic phenol. When we entered the war the need for phenol became yet more imperative, for it was needed to make picric acid for filling bombs. This demand was met, and in 1917 there were 15 new plants turning out 64,146,499 pounds of phenol, valued at $23,719,805.

In this book is a chapter on "Nitrogen, preserver and destroyer of life."

One of the high explosives used in the war was known as T. N. T., which uses as its base toluol. It is one of the coal-tar products, an inflammable liquid, resembling benzine. When treated with nitric acid in the usual way it takes up like the other three nitro groups and so becomes tri-nitro-toluol. T. N. T. is the latest of high explosives and in some ways the best of them.

Picric acid has the bad habit of attacking the metals with which it rests in contact forming sensitive picrates that are easily set off, but T. N. T. is inert toward metals and keeps well. T. N. T. melts far below the boiling point of water, so can readily be liquified and poured into shells. It is insensitive to ordinary shocks. A rifle bullet can be fired through a case of it without setting it off, and if lighted with a match it burns quietly. The amazing thing about these modern explosives, the organic nitrates, is the way they will stand banging about and burning, yet the terrific violence with which they blow up when shaken by an explosive wave of a particular velocity, like that of a fulminating cap.

It is these high explosives that have revolutionized warfare. As soon as the first German shell packed with these nitrates burst inside the Gruson cupola at Liege and tore out its steel and concrete by the roots the world knew that the day of the fixed fortress was gone. The armies deserted their expensively prepared fortifications and took to the trenches. The British troops in France found their weapons futile and sent across the channel the cry of "Send us high explosives or we perish!" The home Government was slow to heed the appeal, but no progress was made against the Germans until the Allies had the means to blast them out of their entrenchments by shells loaded with 500 pounds of T. N. T.

I might go on and read the history of the wonderful advance in high explosives and chemistry. I want to read an extract from the introduction of this wonderful book written by Julius Stieglitz, professor of chemistry in the University of Chicago:

The recent war, as never before in the history of the world, brought to the nations of the earth a realization of the vital place which the science of chemistry holds in the development of the resources of a nation. Some of the most picturesque features of this awakening reached the great public through the press. Thus the adventurous trips of the Deutschland with its cargoes of concentrated aniline dyes, valued at millions of dollars, emphasized as no other incident our former dependence upon Germany for these products of her chemical industries.

The public read, too, that her chemists saved Germany from an early disastrous defat, both in the field of military operations and in the matter of economic supplies; unquestionably without the tremendous expansion of her plants for the production of nitrates and ammonia from the air by the processes of Haber, Ostwald, and others of her great chemists the war would have ended in 1915, or early in 1916, from exhaustion of Germany's supplies of nitrate explosives, if not indeed from exhaustion of her food supply as a consequence of the lack of nitrate and ammonia fertilizer for her fields. Inventions of substitutes for cotton, copper, rubber, wool, and many other basic needs have been reported.

These feats of chemistry, performed under the stress of dire necessity, have, no doubt, excited the wonder and interest of our public. It is far more important at this time, however, when both for war and for peace needs the resources of the country are strained to the utmost, that the public should awaken to a clear realization of what this science of chemistry really means for mankind, to the realization that its wizardry permeates the whole life of the Nation as a vitalizing, protective, and constructive agency very much in the same way as our blood, coursing through our veins and arteries, carries the constructive, defensive, and life-bringing materials to every organ in the body.

The whole Nation's welfare demands, indeed, that our public should be enlightened in the matter of the relation of chemistry to our national life. Thus, if our commerce and our industries are to survive the terrific competition that must follow during this reestablishment of peace, our public must insist that its representatives in Congress preserve that independence in chemical manufacturing which the war has forced upon us in the matter of dyes, of numberless invaluable remedies to cure and relieve suffiering; in the matter, too, of hundreds of chemicals which our industries need for their successful existence.

Unless we are independent in these fields, how easily might an unscrupulous competing nation do us untold harm by the mere device, for instance, of delaying supplies, or by sending inferior materials to this country, or by underselling our chemical manufacturers and, after the destruction of our chemical independence, handicapping our industries, as they were in the first year or two of the war. This is not a mere possibility created by the imagination, for our economic history contains instance after instance of the purposeful undermining and destruction of our industries in finer chemicals, dyes, and drugs by foreign interests bent on preserving their monopoly. If one recalls that through control, for instance, of dyes by a competing nation, control is in fact also established over products valued in the hundreds of millions of dollars, in which dyes enter as an essential factor, one may realize, indeed, the tremendous industrial and commercial power which is controlled by the single lever—chemical dyes. Of even more vital moment is chemistry in the domain of health; the pitiful calls of our hospitals for local anesthetics to alleviate suffering on the operating table, the frantic appeals for the hypnotic that soothes the epileptic and staves off his seizure, the almost furious demand for the remedies that came in the early years of the war are still wringing the hearts of many of us. No wonder that our small army of chemists is grimly determined not to give up the independence in chemistry which the war has achieved for us. Only a widely enlightened people, however, can insure the permanence of what farseeing men have started to accomplish in developing the power of chemistry through research in every domain which chemistry touches.

The general public should realize that in the support of great chemical-research laboratories of universities and technical schools it will be sustaining important centers from which the science which improves products, abolishes waste, establishes new industries, and preserves life may reach out helpfully into all the activities of our great Nation that are dependent on the transformation of matter.

For the story of scientific achievements is the greatest epic the world has even known, and, like the great national epics of bygone ages, should quicken the life of the Nation by a realization of its powers and a picture of its possibilities.

Germany's great success in her manufacturing enterprises was due, to a large extent, to her scientific research, and especially was this so in the organic chemical industry. There are many instances on record of her scientific discoveries reflecting directly industrial advancement and achievement. I will mention but one. Through her research, I am told, synthetic artificial rubber was discovered, the fact that aniline oil had a remarkable effect in reducing the time of vulcanizing from 4 to 8 hours down to 30 minutes, with the result that 4 to 8 hours were saved in time and wear and tear on the vulcanizing machinery.

Aniline oil is used by the large rubber-tire manufacturers. Tires are costly enough, but had it not been for this discovery, the price would be almost prohibitive.

Does any student of economics suppose that Germany will not now sacrifice millions in the endeavor to break down any tariff wall we may erect and, by underselling, seek to wipe out our competition? Should she succeed in destroying the American dye industry, then she will make up her losses by exacting enormous prices from those of our manufacturers—representing three and one-half billions of products—that rely solely on dye and coal-tar products for the continuance of their industries?

The dye manufacturers of the country on whom rests the responsibility of completing the full line of dyes which America needs must devote their whole thought and available resources to developing these new lines without having to stand the open competition, which it is admitted, will come from Germany if the products which they have already learned to manufacture must be subjected to such competition.

The purpose of the dye clauses in the peace treaty is not to provide the allied and associated powers with adequate dye supplies, but is to prevent reprisals on the part of Germany against those countries which are trying to develop a self-sustaining dye industry, in case Germany should attempt to withhold from those countries certain needed dyestuffs not yet manufactured in the new plants.

As evidence of Germany's ability and determination to get back the markets of the world it is a well-known fact that within two months she has succeeded in landing in one day in Brazil approximately seven months' supplies of dyestuffs for that country.

The Brazilian agent of one of the largest members of the German cartel recently stated that at the termination of the war he got in touch with the German company to know whether he could continue his old agency and what prices of dyes would be, and requested shipments of certain colors. The company in question replied that they were sending what they figured would be a suitable supply for Brazil; that they knew nothing about the prices; that he was free to sell them at such figures as was necessary to obtain and to deduct 20 per cent for commission for himself and deposit the balance to their credit in a named bank.

Germany needs the markets of the United States and will stop at nothing to regain them.

Further evidence of the need of this legislation immediately lies in the fact that those who represent in this country to-day the German monopoly of dyestuffs are intensively and openly active in their efforts to defeat this legislation and thus regain their markets before the American industry can be rounded out.

The delay in this legislation is injurious to all dye manufacturers in America, but those manufacturers with the largest resources can best stand the losses due to this delay. It is the small manufacturer with limited resources who is already being severely strained by delay. The question of his continued operations is largely involved in the matter of prompt and definite assurance from the Congress that the American industry is to be thoroughly safeguarded. Perhaps the best answer to the fear of monopoly through this legislation, expressed by some of the Senators, is to be found in the fact that a bill along this line has been advocated by 40 of the manufacturers of dyes and intermediates making over 95 per cent of the total produced in this country.

Most of the companies have invested every dollar of profit in plant and apparatus, which will be practically valueless if proper legislation be not enacted to support this industry for a sufficient time to enable it to efficiently compete with Germany.

This is an industry where the plant cost is much higher than most other industries, and, as a matter of fact, the value of the annual production is less than the investment. For example, the total amount already invested in this country is approximately $100,000,000; value of the total production of these plants in 1918 is given in the United States Tariff Commission Bulletin No. 11, 1918, $62,026,390. Some of these plants had not then, and as a matter of fact have not yet, reached a stage of development where they show a profit. The total profits of all plants, 1918, amounted to a fraction less than 10 per cent on the entire investment. As against this, the dividends of the three largest German manufacturers for the 25 years preceding 1914 averaged 28 per cent.

Attention is called to page 80 of the dyestuffs hearings before the Senate Committee on Finance. I quote:

> The American dyestuff industry has grown from nothing to a large industry in less than four years and has shown itself worthy of every aid and encouragement. Though hampered by lack of many supplies and the diversion of its personnel and facilities to war activities, the industry produced 45,977,246 pounds of dyes alone in 1917 and 56,464,446 pounds in 1918. The average selling price per pound for the production in 1917 was $1.26 and for 1918, $1.07. (See Tariff Commission Report, 1918, Dyestuffs and related coal-tar chemicals.) It is doubtful if any other industry can show a decrease in selling price during this period of ever-increasing cost of raw materials and labor, and it may be stated with certainty that this reduction was accomplished through chemical efficiencies and healthy domestic competition. Figures are not yet available for 1919, but there is every indication of still further progress in this respect.

Since this testimony was offered it has been ascertained that the average price of all American dyestuffs over the year 1919 was approximately 84 cents per pound. It is noteworthy that these successive reductions in price were made during a period when this new industry enjoyed what was in effect complete protection from foreign competition and at a time when practically without exception every manufacturing enterprise in the United States showed higher raw-material and labor costs.

The question was asked in previous debate how after-the-war prices had compared with war prices. The following statement, taken from Dr. Matthew's report in the House hearings, is informative:

Substantial progress has been made in reducing costs in many intermediates, for example, beta naphthol, an important intermediate.

	Prices.
July to December, 1915, about	$2.00
January to June, 1916, about	1.50
July to December, 1916, about	1.01
January to June, 1917, about	.751
July to December, 1917, about	.612
January to June, 1918, about	.624
July to December, 1918, about	.634
January to April, 1919, about	.514

The present price is about 40 cents per pound, which is equivalent to 27 cents per pound if based on the prewar price of raw materials, and on this product also yields are being continuously improved.

When we entered the war and the German dye patents became available to American manufacturers many people presumed that now the production of dyes was going to be an easy thing; we had the patents, and all we had to do was just go ahead and follow the recipe given. Nothing is more erroneous than this impression. The Chemical Foundation in acquiring these patents for American industries—the acquisition of the patents on these products—merely gave the right to make them; the ability to make them has to be developed by long research and investigation. Remember this was an entirely new enterprise to our chemists and our manufacturers; they were not as yet skilled in the art. Trying to make a dyestuff by following the instructions of a German patent would be very much the same as if one of you gentlemen was asked to make biscuits to-morrow morning and you got a cookbook and followed the required recipe.

You could follow that recipe word for word in everything it tells you, and you would make the biscuits; but unless you were an experienced cook and had made biscuits often before in order to become skilled in the art, I doubt if even your wife would be willing to eat the biscuits; yet biscuits have been made for centuries. Nor can you say that this is the fault of the American chemist—the German chemist had to learn how to do these things—it took him 40 or 50 years to learn how. Take the example of indigo; the German chemists—and the most brilliant ones they had—spent years in learning how to make this dye. After 17 years of laboratory work they spent 40 years in experimenting on a small-plant scale, and they scrapped one plant after another as they learned how to do it. One company alone spent several millions of dollars in this preliminary development work on indigo before they had this dye on the market for use. Mr. Dow, the chemical manufacturer of Midland, Mich., made up his mind that he wished to make indigo. When he started he knew nothing of dyestuffs, but in less than two years he had indigo on the market and for the past two years he has been turning out this dye, equal to anything the Germans produced, but not yet made nearly so cheaply.

The United States Census of Manufactures, 1914, shows industries directly and indirectly dependent on dyestuffs, showing a total of 67,585 establishments, 2,143,642 persons employed, $4,366,213,000 capital invested, and $5,700,636,000 value of products.

In the table embodying the digest of the dyestuff census Dr. Matthews showed a growth between 1917 and 1918.

In 1917 there were 190 firms reporting the manufacture of coal-tar chemicals, and in 1918, 215; in 1917 there 1,733 chemically trained men employed; in 1918, 2,233.

The amount spent on research work in 1917 was $2,500,000, and in 1918 $4,500,000.

The very remarkable growth in the development of intermediates and of dyes as well as certain specific colors and chemical products are set forth in the table.

The increase in the number of the intermediates was from 103 in 1917 to 175 in 1918, and in the number of dyes manufactured 178 in 1917 and 313 in 1918.

The junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] touched upon the subject of a monopoly. In answer to his query, I call attention to the report of the United States Tariff Commission on dyes and related coal-tar chemical, 1918, at page 21.

Mr. President, I ask permission to insert as a part of my remarks the report of the United States Tariff Commission on dyes and related coal-tar chemicals, relating to the German Cartel, the corporation which has controlled the German dye industry. It is very short.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Washington in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The report is as follows:

REPORT OF THE UNITED STATES TARIFF COMMISSION ON DYES AND RELATED COAL-TAR CHEMICALS, 1918.

When the American industry is viewed as a whole, its organization is seen to lack an important element of strength that adds greatly to the competitive power of foreign producers. We refer to the concentration of capital and centralization of control which is a marked feature of the industry abroad. Even before the war there were in Germany only six prominent and seven minor companies manufacturing dyes. At present all of these are consolidated into a single "cartel" for the avowed purpose of making a unified effort to regain the lost foreign market. In Switzerland the three leading firms have been united and are said to control one of the smaller concerns in England. Almost the entire English industry also has been brought together in a single powerful company. The American situation stands out in strong contrast. In 1918 there were in this country 127 companies making intermediates and 77 making finished dyes.

The advantages and the dangers of industrial combination have so long been a matter of public discussion that it seems hardly necessary to enumerate them here. It should be pointed out, however, that some such organization seems more requisite to success in the coal-tar chemical industry than in others, and that it has been effected abroad not only with the consent but under the direction of the Government. It is essential that there should be in each plant the perfect integration that is possible only in large-scale operations; an unusual amount of research and experimental work is imperative but it is singularly costly, and therefore duplication is peculiarly undesirable. The industry is unique in the degree to which it depends on men of scientific attainments so high as always to be relatively scarce, so that it is desirable that the scope of their activities should be extended as widely as possible; improvements and inventions have come and will continue to come in such quick succession that the industry as a whole should benefit by having them immediately available for all engaged in it, and that every plant should have the financial strength which will enable it to put in the new and scrap the old equipment and processes.

The Tariff Commission wishes to argue neither for nor against industrial combination, but it feels bound to point out that the numerous and mutually unrelated companies now producing coal tar chemicals in the United States are less prepared for international competition than the highly centralized organizations that have been formed in Europe.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Suggestion has been made that Germany is so crippled from lack of raw materials and labor conditions, deprived by a reparation commission of 50 per cent of her output—which I shall refer to later—that we need have no fear of German competition in the immediate future.

I am not convinced of the soundness of the argument of the statesmen who preach Germany's impotence and weakness at the present time; I am not convinced of Germany's inability to "come back." England, France, and the United States underestimated Germany's strength and her recuperative powers before the war, and as a result of this stupidity, neglect, and indifference there are 10,000,000 men in their graves and 20,000,000 wounded and crippled hobbling through the world.

I am suspicious of Germany yet, and whether I am right or wrong in that conclusion I believe it is a crime for us to take chances whether we have evidence or not of Germany's present ability for industrial recuperation.

What is Germany's policy and what is her present position? I present the meager evidence at hand.

The following report, dated November 5, 1918, has been received by the naval intelligence office from a reliable source in Denmark and is interesting in shedding some light on the present condition of the dyestuff industry in Germany:

During the war competing firms have arisen everywhere in the neutral and enemy countries. We shall meet competition which, with Government subsidy and protection, will endeavor to dispute the leadership in the world's markets which we have obtained after years of labor and efforts. We must be armed for this fight, and it seems to me that there is no better way of doing this than by an amalgamation of our home industry along the broadest lines.

In order to protect the improvements obtained through science and practice in chemicals, and above all in colors, one well-informed expert suggests that foreign countries should not be given the newest colors for their own use for a long time, but that the German dye manufacturers should work hand in hand with the German textile industry and produce finished colored products, the imitation of which, at least for a certain period, would be impossible abroad.

I also wish to read from a letter of one of my constituents, Mr. F. Herbert Chamberlain, now president of the Heydon Chemical Co., of Garfield, N. J., a former German concern, now Americanized, and Mr. Chamberlain having become president. He wrote me on September 20, 1919, following his return from a visit to Germany. I read this to counteract the impression that is being given out that Germany is not industrially prepared to compete with the United States and to show that she is prepared; that she has large stocks of dyes which will be released, large stocks even beyond those that will be turned over to the reparations commission. Mr. Chamberlain said:

During my vacation I availed myself of the privilege of visiting the chemical plants of the Farbenfabriken vorm. Frederick Bayer at Leverkusen, and Badische Anilin und Soda Fabrik at Ludwigshafen, and beg to assure you that I was astounded at the magnitude of the plants in question. One had heard so much in regard to the unsatisfactory labor conditions in Germany since the revolution; that damage had been done to these plants by the allied armies; and that these plants were under the control of the interallied council, that these three plants were carefully observed during my visit.

In regard to the Bayer plant, which covers between 600 and 650 acres, the management stated that they had 8,000 employees, 300 chemists, and a clerical force of 2,500 men. It seems to be quite evident that this statement was fictitious, especially after our talk with the officials representing the British Government. The indications are that they are employing double this number—approximately the same number of men as the Badische Anilin plant referred to below.

The Badische Anilin und Soda Fabrik plant covers 750 to 800 acres. The management stated that they were employing 16,000 workmen, 250 chemists, and a clerical force of between 1,800 and 2,000 men. The prewar hourly rate for operative labor was M. O. 50, equivalent at a prewar rate to approximately 12 cents per hour, and the factory operated on 12-hour shifts. To-day the hourly rate is M. 2.50, which is equivalent at the present rate of exchange to approximately 9 cents per hour, and their hours have been reduced from 12 to 8 hour shifts.

In walking through the various sections of the two companies one is impressed with the apparent satisfaction of the workmen, their industrious intent, and one can not see any outside indications of dissatisfied conditions, and from what I saw the companies are manufacturing dyes and intermediates on three 8-hour shifts per day. Their stores are heavily loaded, and the only inference is that as England has barred the receipt of any of these dyes and intermediates for the next 10 years, the Germans are looking forward to dumping their products in this country. Outside of the fact that the British Army have one man stationed at the Bayer plant, whose main function is to supply data to the interallied council, there is no apparent control of what this company is manufacturing, with the result that the plant is working at full force and there is no sign of any destruction caused by the war.

At the Badische plant my observation extended over a longer period of time and their dye and intermediate sections are working at full force, and I understand from the French officials in charge that their warehouses are full of dyes, intermediates, and pharmaceuticals. At this plant I also noticed that they were putting up new buildings.

In talking with the business men of the occupied area—bankers, merchants, and laborers—I was greatly impressed with the general tone of satisfaction. The shops were well filled with goods, the people in fine physical condition, with the exception that in the poorer quarters the children looked somewhat anemic, and I came back fully convinced that unless our Government not only gives the chemical industry a proper tariff protection, but in addition some licensing method that will prevent the Germans from dumping their commodities in this country, that it will be death to the industry and mean that the last four years' effort, not only in time but investment, made by the chemical manufacturers and scientists of our country will have been of no avail.

We do not seem to realize that the chemical industry has to compete with the low rate of approximately 9 cents per hour per day as compared with our 40 cent to 50 cent rate, which you will appreciate is an enormous difference to overcome, and as near as I can ascertain from the French and British officials the feeling is most prevalent that the German chemical manufacturers themselves started this revolution with the main idea that while it would mean a small increase in wages which they would be compelled to give their laborers, this would be a mere bagatelle compared with what they hoped to gain by such a method, and that they could use these artificial disturbances in wrenching concessions from the council of five in Paris.

In June there occurred a meeting between the management of an important chemical manufacturing concern near Dusseldorf and a delegation of their laborers. The delegates asked for an increase of 50 pfenigs over the 2 marks which they are actually being paid. These figures were equivalent to 12½ cents at the rate of exchange prevailing at that time. It was interesting to note the attitude of those men, who were as deferential as they behaved before the war. They stated the reasons for their request, giving the price of food, and altogether made a very good case for themselves. Their management conceded half of what they asked for, whereupon the delegates expressed their profound gratitude to the management for having yielded to them and promised to increase their efforts so that the company would not be the losers but the gainers by their concession.

Wherever I had opportunities of interviewing either employers or employees I found a similar situation. The men are willing to work at any wage which provides them with the bare necessities of life, and I was greatly impressed with the energetic manner in which they were working throughout the various plants I visited. You will realize that the rate asked for by these men was only 12½ cents per hour, at the rate of exchange at the time. At to-day's rate of exchange the rate asked for would be equivalent to the rate of 8 cents per hour, and this is the situation the industry in this country has to face to-day.

Reviewing the situation, we find that England is prepared to manufacture not only practically all of the intermediates but also the bulk of the finished dyes and pharmaceuticals to cover both her industrial and surgical requirements, and, as you are aware, has put into practice legislation that will prevent the dumping of dyes, intermediates, and pharmaceuticals in the British domain. This protection is vested in a licensing committee, which has full power to grant or refuse licensing and fix charges on such licensing.

There are large stocks of dyes and pharmaceuticals ready to be shipped out of the country, with the United States as their destination, as appeared from a statement made by the United States consul general in Zurich, who pointed out the large number of agents making all necessary negotiations with the object of shipping to America such goods as soon as the requirements of the certificate of origin were removed, and that the consulate was flooded with applications for the proper certificates to cover such shipments. This situation, I assume, he has already reported to our Government.

Mr. President, at this point I ask leave to insert a petition signed by over 4,500 workmen of the Du Pont factory in Salem County, N. J., urging that legislation be enacted in order that the industry may be continued.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, permission is granted.

The petition referred to is as follows:

Resolution adopted by the works conference at the dye works November 28, 1919.

Whereas the 4,500 employees of E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., at its dye works in Salem County, N. J., have organized an employees' conference plan, which, briefly, is as follows: The employees of each department of said works elect representatives who meet with other representatives named by the management in a general works conference to discuss and promote matters of mutual interest and benefit to employee and employer; and

Whereas at a meeting of said works conference, held on November 19, 1919, an elected representative from the power department brought to the attention of the conference House bill No. 8078, now pending in the Senate of the United States, and being designed to protect and make possible the continued development of the dye industry in America; and

Whereas after a thorough investigation the members of such works conference are convinced that the passage of said bill is of the utmost importance to the American dye industry and of vital consequence to the welfare and livelihood of the employees of the aforesaid dye works; and

Whereas recent experience has emphasized the national importance in times of stress of the existence of such basic industries as the dye industry is destined to become under adequate protection:

Now, therefore, upon motion made, duly seconded and unanimously adopted, it was Resolved by the works conference of the E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., at the dye works, Salem County, N. J., That this body, on behalf of the employees it represents, call to the attention of the New Jersey Representatives in Congress the vast importance of said House bill 8078 to the country and to the more than 4,000 dye workers in Salem County and their families, and to this end the secretary be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to communicate with Senators EDGE and FRELINGHUYSEN, of New Jersey, urging that these Senators vote for this bill, and that they furthermore use their efforts and influence toward its enactment, and to forward copies of this resolution to each of the Members of the House of Representatives from New Jersey for their information.

E. A. TRACY,
Secretary of the Works Conference.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I also ask to have inserted a copy of a resolution adopted by the United States Chamber of Commerce urging Congress to enact legislation to protect the pivotal industries created during the recent war.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is so ordered, without objection.

The resolution referred to is as follows:

(Copy of declaration as prepared and recommended by the resolutions committee at the eighth annual convention of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States of America, April 29, 1920, and adopted by unanimous vote of all the delegates in attendance. The following was meant to apply to the industries which developed as the result of the war and without mentioning any particular division of manufacture, though the phraseology led as closely as possible to the chemical industry and its branches, more particularly organic chemistry.)

Resolution 10.

PIVOTAL INDUSTRIES.

Conditions brought upon us by the European war and our national necessities after we entered the war made it of the highest public importance that certain industries should at once be developed in the United States. Large investments of capital and skill have been placed in such industries. Some of them are of vital necessity to the national defense and the national welfare, and at the same time are capable of adding to our national resources. Such industries should be sustained. Since the armistice there has now been opportunity to survey industries developed during the war and to ascertain those which confer the national benefits mentioned. Congress is asked to proceed with legislation which will assure the continuance of these American industries.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I believe it is the manifest duty of Congress to establish at once a national policy to protect the dye and coal-tar products industry in the United States and to enable the manufacturers of this country to make their arrangements to procure and invest the necessary capital for experimentation and to retain the expert chemists and artisans necessary for continuing their war-time activities for America's markets.

The question is asked, "Why the need of an embargo, why this blockade of our ports against Germany and this industry?" Embargoes, I admit, are generally distasteful to those who believe in fair competition and impartial rivalry. Yet in no other line of business do the same conditions exist that prevail in this industry. The dye and coal-tar industry is one to which our manufacturers had not given their devoted attention prior to the war, while Germany, with 40 years of preparation, of research and scientific experimentation, had been in supreme control, and the remainder of the world had been absolutely subservient and submissive to that control. We are now fighting 40 years of German preparedness.

While we have, it is true, during the war, due to the temporary embargo, won a preliminary skirmish, our industrial troops are untrained, and we must entrench for an extended period if we are to go forth eventually and meet in open competition the industrial veterans of Germany. Time is the essential factor. Forty years of research and experimentation by German scientists and artisans can not be met in a few short months of preparation.

Capital has not a reputation for timidity in this country. American enterprise is courageous and is willing to take a chance, providing that chance is an even one; but it is not fair for us in this Congress to expect the American manufacturer to hazard millions of his capital and also expect him to fight in the dark without giving him the opportunity to make the necessary research, so that American chemists and scientists may study and experiment, in order to meet the competition growing out of Germany's 40 years of previous experience.

That is the reason industrial captains are anxious to have time to develop fully this industry in the United States, with a view to the Nation's protection and her prosperity as well. They do not ask 40 years' congressional support and protection. They did ask 15. We have given 3 in this bill. In my opinion, 3 years is too short. These manufacturers, these chemists, and these artisans should have at least 5 years in which to perfect their program for meeting and defeating the chemists and artisans of Germany who have been trained for nearly half a century. I shall offer an amendment extending the time to 5 years. After that period shall have elapsed these manufacturers can develop the American industry and increase American prosperity, and then will be willing, I am sure, to have the embargo lifted and the tariff abolished, facing Germany in open competition, confident that the result will be the "survival of the fittest," and the fittest will be the American industry.

If we believe in legislating to retain our commercial independence, if we believe that it is wise for Congress to pass measures for national defense, then the enactment of this law becomes a matter of patriotic duty.

My interest in this bill is, first, that the United States shall sustain and safeguard the industries that are essential to our industrial supremacy and necessary for the national defense, the safety of the country, and the prosperity of all of her citizens.

We would be derelict in our duty as Senators were we to allow a peace to be consummated and Germany permitted to regain on this continent the control and monopoly of dyes and coal-tar products which she formerly enjoyed, thus placing ourselves once more in her power and subservient to her will.

Some have hinted that we will create a monopoly and unfairly protect certain corporations in this country. This bill does not create a monopoly. But it does safeguard and preserve the knowledge and science, the genius and achievement, the energy and experience, gained during the war.

Have we forgotten the lessons of the war? Have we forgotten the sacrifice made by reason of our lack of preparedness? Have we forgotten the helpless condition with which we would have been confronted had not England and France held Germany back long enough to allow us to make the explosives and materials which she had formerly controlled and monopolized? Is the memory of this episode fading from view?

My secondary interest in this bill is due to the fact that in my State there are industries which manufactured large quantities of the dyes and coal-tar products consumed in this country during the war. Those industries mobilized for war, and now desire to mobilize for peace, and will be ever ready, should the peace and safety of the United States and civilization of the world again be menaced, to mobilize, and mobilize quickly, to assist in safeguarding the Nation and the world.

I am an insurance man, and am applying the knowledge of 30 years of experience. Thinking, perhaps, that I might qualify as an expert, I testify that this bill is an insurance for peace.

My added interest in this bill is to give the workingmen of my State and other States where this industry is harbored continued employment, so that their toil may contribute to the prosperity not only of my State but of the country at large.

I think that my first duty is to my country, and it is my duty as a Senator in this body to legislate for those who must follow, to safeguard their interests and protect their future by learning and profiting by the lessons given through the horrible experience of the war.

I scout the sentiment expressed on this floor that this bill will establish a monopoly in America. I challenge anyone to show that any combination exists to control the American market at the expense of the consumer through the enactment of this bill.

Keen rivalry and business competition will exist here in America for the trade of the American consumer, but if even remotely such a monopolistic evil should creep in, we have ample laws on the statute books to protect the public against such abuses.

Again, my interest in this bill is because of the belief that it will retain an industry in this country that we have legitimately captured, not by force of arms but by our energy, our genius, and our ingenuity, and that it will foster, encourage, and promote such industry. I believe that the policy reflected in this legislation will inure to the benefit of all American citizens. I know it will not be for the benefit of citizens of Germany.

Let us not get confused, Senators, between the two schools of thought in this Chamber. This bill does not involve the question of free trade or protection; it does not involve the question of Democratic or Republican policies; it involves the great policy and issue of America first.

I am not afraid to proclaim from the housetops that I want the American manufacturer and business man to prosper and make reasonable profits. I do have such a desire, and I do not apologize for it. I am not suspicious of the American business man or the American manufacturer or of his honesty or integrity of purpose any more than I am suspicious of the cotton farmer of the South, the wheat farmer of the West, the miner of the Northwest, or the workingman of all sections of America. Let them all prosper and succeed.

But I am still suspicious of the resourcefulness, the selfishness, the cupidity, and intrigue of the scientist and manufacturer of Germany. I do not want to return to that humiliating period which existed before the war, when the color of the dresses of the women of America, the shades of their stockings, the color scheme of their shirt waists, when the leather in our chairs, the stripes in our clothing, the rubber in our automobile tires, the tint of the curtains at our windows, the paint on our houses, the color of our carpets, yes, even the red and blue in our Star-Spangled Banner, bore everlasting evidence that their ingredients were made in Germany.

Rely on Germany for all these articles? Never in my life, while I have the breath to vote against it! Some may wish this. Not I. Nor am I going to keep a pile of bricks under my desk to throw at the business men of this country.

This policy has been followed too long. It has destroyed our railroad system, driven our merchant marine from the seas, impaired our finances, slackened our spirit, limited our power, and dimmed our industrial prestige.

It is easy to be a demagogue, but it is hard to stand against public opinion when it is misguided and in error. While the voice of the demagogue has been heard in the land, we have been neglecting the interests of America. But England has been frowning on radicalism, frowning on distrust and suspicion of her business and manufacturing industries, working zealously to restore and rebuild her power in commerce and industry by leaps and bounds, and is capturing trade in every mart of the world—trade that is ours by all economic laws—while we have been sleeping at the helm.

Let us forget any sectional interests. I am for America's progress and her upbuilding in every corner of this broad land, in every one of her 48 States. I am for the supporting of our industries and our own resources, untinged by sectional selfishness or partisanship. There is time enough to talk politics on the stump, in the open where the air can cool our fevered brows and temper our fervid speech. Let us get down to business here in Congress and do business as Americans, loving one great country.

"No special privilege to Germany; equal rights to America" is my motto.

In concluding my remarks I wish to say that it is my sincere belief that the enactment of this bill will firmly establish the dye and coal-tar products industry in the land, and that we will go forward untrammeled in peace-time pursuits as we did in war time. Its result will be American products produced by American workmen in American factories, sold to American consumers, and then supplied to the other markets of the world unhampered by unfair legislative restriction.

Theodore Roosevelt once said:

> There is no limit to the greatness of the future before America, before our beloved land. But we can realize it only if we are Americans, if we are nationalists, with all the fervor of our hearts and all the wisdom of our brains. We can serve the world at all only if we serve America first and best.
>
> We must work along our own national lines in every field of achievement. We must feel in the very marrow of our being that our loyalty is due only to America, and that it is not diluted by loyalty for any other nation or all other nations on the face of the earth.
>
> Only thus shall we fit ourselves really to serve other nations, to refuse ourselves to wrong them, and to refuse to let them do wrong or suffer wrong.
>
> To thine own land be true, and it must follow as the night the day, thou canst not then be false to any land.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NEW in the chair). The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fall	Lodge	Smith, Ariz.
Ball	Fernald	McNary	Smith, Md.
Brandegee	Frelinghuysen	Moses	Smoot
Capper	Gerry	Nelson	Sterling
Chamberlain	Gronna	New	Sutherland
Curtis	Harris	Page	Thomas
Dial	Harrison	Phipps	Trammell
Dillingham	Jones, Wash.	Pomerene	Underwood
Edge	Kendrick	Ransdell	Watson
Elkins	King	Sheppard

Mr. DIAL. My colleague [Mr. SMITH of South Carolina] is detained on official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Thirty-nine Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, it is very evident that a quorum can not readily be obtained this afternoon; I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, May 3, 1920, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, May 1, 1920.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, humbly and reverently we bow in Thy holy presence and would drink deeply from the fountain of life, be refreshed, purified, strengthened for the duties of the new month which dawns upon us; that we may think deeply, act wisely, patriotically; that good government may have its sway and stand the test of all opposition, to the glory and honor of Thy holy name. In the spirit of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill, H. R. 13807; and pending that I ask unanimous consent that the time for general debate be equally divided between the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] and myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the time for general debate be equally divided, half to be controlled by himself and half by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS]. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object, has any time for general debate been fixed?

Mr. GOOD. There has been so much demand for general debate that in conversation with the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] it appeared to be the best plan to let the general debate run to-day without limit, and then, when we go into Committee of the Whole on Monday or Tuesday, or whenever we next take up the bill, debate can be limited.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13807) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes, with Mr. ANDERSON in the chair.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ELLIOTT]. [Applause.]

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Chairman, for some time past there has been a pernicious effort on the part of some publicity source to make the people of this country believe that the Congress has not been doing its full duty to the disabled discharged soldiers of the late war by way of furnishing them adequate hospital facilities necessary to restore them to health and to care for those who are destined at an early date to make the supreme sacrifice for their country. One article circulated by a news agency was to the effect that 72,000 soldiers who had become insane during their service in the late war had been neglected by Congress, and that none of these insane men had been provided with hospital treatment.

I do not know the name of the pernicious liar who started this report, but I do know that the report is not true. [Applause.] It is unfortunately true, however, that there are, according to the report of the Public Health Service made to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds February 7, 1920, 10,162 of what are termed neuro-psychiatric patients who will need hospital attention under the supervision of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance during the next two years. These men are suffering from various kinds of mental troubles, from mild derangements to violent insanity, and, to use a term invented by the soldiers during the war, from "shell shock." Although many of these patients had little or no experience at the front, and may have been suffering from slight mental or nervous disorders at the time they enlisted, their troubles have been aggravated by exposure and by disease contracted while in the Army. Had they never been in the service they would have been classed as insane.

The Public Health Service further reports that it will need for tubercular patients within the next two years 12,183 beds, and for general and surgical cases 4,538 beds, making the total number of beds needed during that period 26,883, which number will be further reduced by 1,835 beds which are provided for in public act 326, making a total number of beds needed in public hospitals by the Public Health Service 25,048. (See hearing No. 19, Public Buildings and Grounds Committee, Feb. 7, 1920, p. 28.)

The discharged disabled soldiers of the late war who are entitled to hospital treatment are under the supervision of the Director of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, who, under the law, can send such patients to the Public Health Service hospitals, to the National Soldiers' Homes, or to private hospitals for treatment, at his option.

The War Department has at its command more beds than it needs for the use of the Army at this time, but after a soldier is discharged he is no longer entitled, under the law, to be sent to an Army hospital. The Secretary of War, however, has turned over to the Public Health Service 21 hospitals which the Public Health Service is now using. These hospitals have space for 16,690 patients. (See hearing No. 21, Public Buildings and Grounds Committee. Evidence of the Hon. N. D. Baker, Secretary of War.) The Secretary of War further testified that he had no other hospitals which he could turn over to the Public Health Service, but on cross-examination he admitted that Fort Meade, in South Dakota, and Fort McKenzie, in Wyoming, two substantial Army posts, had been vacated for some years with the exception of having a very few soldiers stationed in them to act as caretakers.

The Secretary of War also said that owing to the fact that under the Army reorganization bill the Army might be increased there was a possibility the War Department would need these two posts, but that he was ready to give a revocable permit for their use to the Public Health Service for the care of neuropsychiatric cases. These posts could be arranged for approximately 2,000 patients and save the taxpayers many millions of dollars.

There are now 10 National Soldiers' Homes in this country, which were built to provide for the disabled and homeless veterans of our wars. These homes are in convenient and ideal locations throughout the country and they have a capacity for approximately 21,000 beds. They have at this time 10,000 vacant beds, which are available for the use of the soldiers and sailors of the late war. I am informed by Gen. George H. Wood, president of the board of governors for these homes, that the veterans of the Civil War who are now being cared for in these homes are quite old and many of them are very feeble and that 10 per cent of them died during the last fiscal year. He also said that the number of vacant beds in these homes was steadily increasing. He said that they have in all of these homes adequate and competent medical and surgical staffs and that the veterans have been cared for in a most satisfactory manner for over 50 years. Gen. Wood said that four of these National Soldiers' Homes are now used for the care of tubercular patients. He said that the locations of these institutions are ideal for the treatment of tuberculosis. Gen. Wood also said that each of these homes is provided with adequate heating, lighting, power, and water supply plants, so that additional buildings can be constructed, if necessary, and added to any one of the institutions, at a minimum cost per bed, for hospital purposes.

The Director of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance has examined some of the National Soldiers' Homes and has said that it would be a shame to not use them to their fullest capacity for the care of patients who could be satisfactorily treated in them.

It has been estimated by the Public Health Service that it will cost $3,250 per bed to provide hospitals such as it desires to build. The 10,000 vacant beds in our National Soldiers' Homes should be used at once, for this would save the country more than $30,000,000; and by providing additional buildings at these homes, where we have the land and the equipment, we would save many more millions of dollars in the construction of hospitals.

One of the grievous faults of the United States Government has been the duplication of services in the various departments. For instance, the Government has at this time ample hospital facilities to provide for all the cases which the Government is under obligation to care for if we could bring the control of all these institutions under one governing head. But, in the meantime, while awaiting the millenium in governmental affairs it is our duty to proceed to take care of the boys who gave up so much for their country in the late war, and we are going to do it. As I said before, the Director of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance is charged by law with the care of discharged disabled soldiers and sailors of the late war. He can utilize the National Soldiers' Homes; the Public Health Service hospitals and private hospitals for their treatment. Under the provisions of the sundry civil bill now under consideration the director has placed at his disposal the sum of $46,000,000 with authority to use the same for enlarging National Soldiers' Homes and providing them with additional equipment; he has authority to build additional hospitals for the Public Health Service and to lease private hospitals. So by utilizing this appropriation and the 10,000 vacant beds now available and by taking over Fort Meade and Fort McKenzie he will be adequately prepared to discharge our obligations to these worthy men.

As soon as it can be done it is highly desirable that the various institutions of our Government be reorganized in such a manner that we can avoid duplication of service and division of authority, especially in the most important matter of discharging our obligations to our soldiers and sailors.

Mr. LAZARO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELLIOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. LAZARO. I quite agree with the gentleman that everything is being done that could possibly be done to relieve these men, those who are mentally deranged and those who have acquired disease; but does not the gentleman think that it is the duty of the Government to use every available bed, so that these men who are sick, whether mentally deranged or whether they have acquired disease, can be given treatment in the very beginning? A good many of these cases, if they are treated in the beginning, have a chance to get well, whereas if the treatment is delayed the trouble is likely to become permanent.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. ELLIOTT. I ask unanimous consent that my time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ELLIOTT. In answer to the gentleman from Louisiana, I desire to say that I think it is the duty of the various departments of the Government charged with the care of these men to utilize every available resource that we have for their care, and where we lack any hospital or other facility to take care of these men Congress should, and I think will, readily provide it as fast as it is needed. I think that in addition to some of the hospitals that we now have we need some for tubercular patients, because they have to be segregated, to keep the infection away from patients of other classes. As nearly as I can find out, we need in this country another hospital for the insane, to take care of the violent insane from this war.

Mr. LAZARO. The gentleman realizes, too, that these cases must be treated in the very beginning—that is, the mentally deranged and the tubercular patients, in order to have a chance to get well.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Yes; and it is not going to be to their interest to wait two years to build fireproof hospitals before we begin their treatment. We ought to utilize at once everything that we now have. [Applause.]

Mr. GOOD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS].

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Chairman, the condition of my throat this morning will not permit me to elaborate on the proposition I have in mind, but a matter has been called to my attention that I thought should be called to the attention of the House. I think we are all in sympathy with the propaganda of the administration looking to economy on the part of the individual, to the utilization of those things that we have on hand, so far as possible, rather than the purchase of new material; the wearing of our old clothes, to contribute in some measure to the catching up with the great shortage in clothing that now exists, and other economies of similar nature. I had hoped, Mr. Chairman, that the administration in its conduct of the public business would harmonize its conduct with its propaganda.

On page 8133, serial 6, part 1, of the testimony taken in that subdivision of the investigation of the expenditures in the War Department that has within its jurisdiction ordnance supplies, the testimony of one Mr. Worley, whose testimony, I understand, is not disputed in the record, shows the purchase of 2,551,087 sets of harness.

The total purchases of horses and mules during the progress of the war was 395,000. These animals were purchased at different seasons, to repair the wastage and the losses by death and sickness, so that the estimate is made that there were never more than 300,000 horses and mules in the service at any one time. For these we purchased two and one-half million sets of harness. When the war was over Col. Goetz, who had charge of these purchases, testified, on page 1410 of serial 8, part 2, that in addition to these sets of harness we had on hand 1,800,000 pounds of black harness leather that had not yet been made up into harness, which was worth from 90 cents to $1 a pound.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the distinguished gentleman yield there?

Mr. REAVIS. With pleasure.

Mr. BLANTON. Can the gentleman tell us in that connection about how many horses and mules our War Department owns at this time?

Mr. REAVIS. They never owned more than 395,000. Those were the total purchases, but they never owned at any one time, according to the best estimates, more than 300,000 horses and mules.

Mr. BLANTON. The papers in my State and district are heralding the fact now that the Government horse buyers are going from county to county to-day buying horses for the War Department, urgently pressing the people to bring their horses in to them in order that they may buy them.

May I ask the distinguished gentleman who is a part of the majority of this Congress which controls legislation and controls the purse strings of the Treasury, why it is necessary in peace time when we now have so many horses and mules as we do for Government agents to go through the country and buy additional horses and mules?

Mr. REAVIS. I would be delighted to answer the gentleman if I knew, but may I refer him to the Secretary of War, who has this matter in charge?

Mr. BLANTON. We furnish the money and they must get the money from Congress, and the gentleman's party holds the purse strings.

Mr. REAVIS. I will say that if I were in control of the Committee on Military Affairs of this House I would not only refuse to make the appropriation for such purchase, but I would incorporate in the bill a mandatory provision compelling them to sell the surplus harness, saddles, and leather they now have on hand.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REAVIS. Yes.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The reason they give for buying horses and mules at this time is that last fall they considered it better policy to sell off all the horses they could possibly spare; that it would be cheaper than to keep them through the winter. Then they propose to buy new horses in the spring. I am telling you what they say about it. We have provided for an increase in the Army and they have to have the horses for the increased Army.

Mr. BLANTON. That does not appeal to the very enlightened and well-informed gentleman from Iowa, I take it.

Mr. REAVIS. My idea was that they were purchasing extra horses so as to have sufficient horses for the harness they have on hand. [Laughter.] Mr. Chairman, on page 1406, series 6, part 2, the testimony of Col. Goetz is that for 106,000 Cavalry horses they purchased 945,000 saddles, a little over 7 saddles for every riding horse we had in the Army.

The warehouses of this country are filled with harness and saddles and harness leather for which the farmers of this country are compelled to pay exorbitant prices because of the great shortage, and now the War Department has out a proposal that I hold in my hand for the purchase of more harness and more saddles.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REAVIS. Yes.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. My recollection is that in the military appropriation bill we appropriated recently a million and a half dollars for the purchase of horses. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] took the floor and opposed that appropriation. Why was the additional appropriation made?

Mr. REAVIS. I was very much in accord with the position of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES]. I can not answer the gentleman. I have my ideas about it, and the more I get into it the more firmly I become grounded in these ideas. Let me call your attention to the character of the saddle and harness for which the War Department is now seeking bids.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. REAVIS. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. These advertisements for bids are to be paid for out of the appropriation for the next fiscal year. What attracts the attention of every Member of the House and the gentleman from Nebraska is that Congress, both Republicans and Democrats, but at least in control of the Republicans, have appropriated a million and a half dollars for additional horses, and I do not know how much in addition to that for other things, and if it was not for those appropriations these advertisements would not be in the paper.

Mr. REAVIS. I want to say that this came before the passage of the military appropriation bill. It is dated March 29, 1920, and has just been called to my attention, and that is the reason I call it to the attention of the House. The purchase is to be made on or before the 5th day of April. It is a past transaction that I am calling attention to.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield for one further question?

Mr. REAVIS. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. In reply to what the distinguished gentleman said a moment ago regarding the situation, I want to say that I have seen a Government agent pay $150 for a plug of a horse that could have been bought by an agent for $65 lots of times. I have no doubt the gentleman from Nebraska has seen like cases.

Mr. REAVIS. Let me call attention to the character of the equipment they are seeking to purchase. In this proposal I am reading the description of the saddle, notwithstanding they have 945,000 on hand:

Saddles, 4-inch coupe, 1¾-inch solid nickel English wire terret pedestal hook, with 1¼-inch running bearer; ¾-inch single-strap billets, patent leather skirts, and jockey enamel leather bottom, patent leather facing, full pad, hand lace saddle, jockey blocked up—

Now, that sounds like some saddle, and I have no doubt that these saddles are being purchased for the use of officers in the Army. I can picture in my mind a spirited and proud-stepping steed with one of these patent leather, jockey enamel leather saddles strapped upon him, that saddle occupied by the robust form of some Army officer, cantering along the shady lanes of the bridle paths in the parks of Washington, and it will be a delectable sight for the poor devil sitting on the bench wearing his old clothes for economy. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARNER. He ought to have the gentleman from California and a few gentlemen from the Military Affairs Committee to see the sight.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. GOOD. I yield the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Chairman, I am calling the attention of the House to this not from any spirit of criticism, but I do not believe there is a man on either side of the aisle that approves of this reckless and criminal waste of the funds of this country, and it ought not to be permitted longer.

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REAVIS. Yes.

Mr. KING. I understood the gentleman to say that the warehouses of the country were filled with supplies of leather.

Mr. REAVIS. They are.

Mr. KING. Has it occurred to the gentleman that the Federal banks are financing the gentlemen who are holding this leather? That they are putting up their notes and bills of exchange and having money issued against them, and that is the leather money that we are receiving in the country to-day?

Mr. REAVIS. Well, I did not know that, Mr. Chairman, but I have gotten to the point where I am a little like a dope fiend, and it takes a larger dose each time to get any reaction on my part. What I do want to say is, I am sincerely hopeful that some committee of this House having jurisdiction of this matter will not only refuse further appropriations to this department to be wasted in this way, but that it will return mandatory legislation to this body compelling this department to sell this surplus material and recover that money into the Treasury. The time has gone by when Congress can look with indifference upon a proposition of this kind.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. REAVIS. May I have one more minute?

Mr. GOOD. I yield the gentleman an additional minute.

Mr. GARNER. May I make a suggestion in the form of a question?

Mr. REAVIS. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. There is just one remedy I see for this situation here—I agree with the gentleman that every Member of the House will criticize and condemn it—and that is to get a committee of this House that will see that you do not make appropriations for it. And whenever you concentrate all the committees into one committee of this House the War Department will not have the influence it has now.

Mr. REAVIS. There is not any doubt about that, Mr. Chairman, but it is a very deplorable condition that one great department of this Government should have a system of that character and should keep on wasting the funds of this Government the way it has been doing the past year and a half. None of us are entirely absolved from the evil of it, and so far as I am concerned I am willing to support any legislation that will not only prevent additional waste of this kind but compel the Secretary of War to dispose of the surplus that is rotting and deteriorating in the warehouses of this country at this time.

Mr. Chairman, because of the condition of my throat and because I do not want to take the time to read this proposal, I ask unanimous consent that I may incorporate as a part of my remarks this proposal of the War Department seeking to purchase additional saddles and harness parts.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to incorporate in his remarks the matter indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. REAVIS. I will.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. I call the attention of the gentleman to page 32 of H. R. 13587 as passed by the House, and under the title "Horses for Cavalry, Artillery, Engineers," and so forth, which provides for an appropriation of $1,500,000 for that purpose.

Mr. REAVIS. Now, let me ask the gentleman a question. He is seeking to show a partisan responsibility, and I have no desire on my part to make partisan capital of this at all. There is nobody preventing these people from selling these horses. If the War Department went out, as stated by the gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from Iowa, and sold the horses they had on hand, as a matter of course a new appropriation would have to be made; but the condition was made necessary by the conduct of the War Department in selling those animals.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. I am not indicating any partisan purpose whatever, but simply going to the bottom of these facts as outlined by the gentleman. I am in entire sympathy with his proposition. As a matter of fact, the evidence did not develop in the hearings upon the military appropriation bill that all horses had been sold, and the fact was disclosed they had a supply on hand, and serious objection was made that $1,500,000 was not necessary for the purchase of additional horses.

Mr. REAVIS. Does the gentleman believe that legislation, if not demanded, is at least advisable to tell the War Department to dispose of its surplus material?

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. That cry and demand has been made——

Mr. REAVIS. But does not the gentleman approve of that contention?

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. I have not approved of the disposition of horses by sale and then a repurchase of horses, nor do I approve of the appropriation of $1,500,000 for the purpose of purchase; and if you give no appropriation for that purpose the expenditure can not be made.

Mr. REAVIS. Let me ask the gentleman this question: Whether, if we have hundreds and thousands of sets of harness, saddles, and different equipment of that kind that has been declared surplus, would not the gentleman approve of legislation that would require the War Department to dispose of it?

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. Absolutely; if it is wise under the facts as they really exist.

Mr. REAVIS. What does the gentleman think of a department that requires legislation to compel them to perform a manifest duty?

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. I would enact legislation if I were in a responsible majority to prevent it and refuse to pass appropriations all of which would prevent it.

Mr. REAVIS. I am with the gentleman on that, on both propositions.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will allow me, why did not you enact it 15 months ago?

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. Why, during the conduct of the war, if I may answer——

Mr. REAVIS. I have not yielded, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. EVANS of Nevada. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REAVIS. I do.

Mr. EVANS of Nevada. What is the number of these saddles which the gentleman stated; I did not hear it.

Mr. REAVIS. The total number they authorized and contracted for, according to the testimony of Col. Goetz, who is in charge of the purchase, was 945,000.

Mr. EVANS of Nevada. They propose to buy how many more?

Mr. REAVIS. This proposal only contains a proposal for 200 more, but they have hundreds of thousands of them in the warehouses now, so what is the use of buying any more?

Mr. EVANS of Nevada. I fully agree with the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 13555) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof and for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1699) for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service and for other purposes, had asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. STERLING, Mr. CUMMINS, and Mr. MCKELLAR as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks leave to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the Chairman call my attention to the fact when I have used 10 minutes? Mr. Chairman, we met this morning to take up the great sundry civil appropriation bill, and by actual count there were on the floor only three of my Republican colleagues. Those three Republicans, headed by the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], ought to be congratulated and ought to have their pictures framed for being loyal and being here to take up this bill.

Mr. REAVIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. REAVIS. The gentleman realizes, of course, the hour at which we met this morning is an unusual hour?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; but that hour was agreed upon unanimously yesterday evening, and the notice of it was in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and it was in the printed calendar that was placed on our desks this morning at 7 o'clock in every office in the House Office Building. I know, because I was there when it came in the early morning mail.

Mr. Chairman, a most serious crisis has been reached in the affairs of our Nation. Anarchy is in our midst. Congress has been temporizing with it. It is even fostered and protected by a Cabinet officer. There are 25 anarchist publications in New York alone, constantly seeking to disrupt and overthrow our Government by force and violence. Nearly two score more of such anarchistic publications thrive in our country from New York to Seattle. The Department of Justice has ascertained that there are 60,000 anarchists now in the little State of Washington.

What is the subtle power and influence, Mr. Chairman, that prevents this Congress from doing its duty and taking the steps necessary to free our beloved land of this monster? What is the particular thing that stands in the way of this Congress cooperating with our Department of Justice and granting what it says it must have to wipe this dangerous menace from our midst? What is it that stops us when our conscience prompts us to act? What is it that deters us? What is it that has us bound hand and foot so that we can not function? What is it that even makes us whisper, when we would discuss this evil?

There is but one answer: Mr. Samuel Gompers and the American Federation of Labor. Card indexing, threats of political defeat, love of office, unwillingness to make sacrifice and take our chances on losing position has made us pause, and rather that our whole Nation bear the ills it has than that we personally fly to others that we do know of, through personal and public communication from Mr. Gompers. Thus, not conscience, but fear of Gompers makes cowards of us all.

Let me quote from yesterday's Washington Star the headlines:

CLASHES BETWEEN DEPARTMENTS OF LABOR AND JUSTICE ARE DISCLOSED.

Attempts to break up completely the most damnable conspiracy against the Government in the Nation's history was frustrated by disagreements between the Department of Labor and the Department of Justice, Chairman JOHNSON, of the House Immigration Committee, testified to-day at the renewal of the investigation by the Rules Committee into the handling of deportation warrants by Louis F. Post, Assistant Secretary of Labor.

Arrests of 5,000 communists was followed by an "awful mix-up between the two departments," resulting in the release of the big majority of those held, JOHNSON said. The Department of Justice did its part, he added, but one obstacle appeared in Assistant Secretary Post.

Mr. JOHNSON told the committee that George Audreytchine, described as "A prince of the I. W. W.," was released by the Department of Labor after letters had been exchanged by radical leaders, saying "that if we can keep Secretary Wilson out making speeches Post will release Audreytchine."

The Immigration Committee, Representative JOHNSON said, had evidence that Emma Goldman, the radical leader, had sent a plea by telegram to Assistant Secretary Post in behalf of one arrested communist.

Mr. Post, Mr. JOHNSON declared, referred the plea to the office of the Secretary of Labor with the notation that "Miss Goldman's representations of fact be given full credence."

SECRETARY ALREADY IMPEACHED.

Representative JOHNSON told the committee he did not introduce a resolution looking to the impeachment of Mr. Post, because "the Secretary already has been impeached by nine-tenths of the people of the United States."

Jackson H. Ralston, attorney for Secretary Post, replying to Representative JOHNSON, declared that from beginning to end "the Department of Justice has attempted to inject itself in deportation proceedings without legal right."

Now, Mr. Chairman, let me quote the following from this morning's Washington Post:

ASSERTS THAT POST IS SHIELDING "REDS"—REPRESENTATIVE ALBERT JOHNSON, ARGUING FOR IMPEACHMENT, FILES NEW CHARGES—CITES EMMA GOLDMAN NOTE—HOUSE INVESTIGATORS CHALLENGE STATEMENTS OF UNITED STATES OFFICIAL'S ATTORNEY.

Assistant Secretary of Labor Post has succeeded in eliminating the Department of Justice from deportation proceedings, with the result that all the work of the Attorney General in rounding up radicals throughout the country has been brought to naught, Representative ALBERT JOHNSON, of Washington, charged before the House Rules Committee yesterday during hearings on the resolution providing for impeachment proceedings against the Labor Department official.

"The Department of Justice during the first week of this year rounded up nearly 5,000 communists and Russian workers," said Mr. JOHNSON. "It broke up a damnable conspiracy against the United States Government. Yet since then Mr. Post, with exclusive power over deportation, has sent out of the country only 22. It is time that Congress investigate such a situation.

"Everybody knows that Mr. Post sympathizes with many of these radicals. In 1916 he made a speech defamatory of the United States Army, and his writings show the type of man he is."

Mr. JOHNSON presented to the committee a telegram from Emma Goldman to Mr. Post in which she urged the release of an alien, George Audreytchine, claiming that if he were sent back to Macedonia he would be placed in the army or killed. Across the telegram Mr. Post wrote:

"Referred to the Acting Secretary with the suggestion that Miss Goldman's recommendations of fact be given full credence."

Mr. JOHNSON cited the Audreytchine case as one in which Mr. Post had violated the law.

CHALLENGE LAWYER'S STATEMENT.

Jackson H. Ralston, Mr. Post's attorney, made his defense in the form of an attack on the Department of Justice and Attorney General Palmer. He made several charges against the department that were promptly challenged by both Republicans and Democrats.

One of Mr. Ralston's charges was that the Department of Justice is "organizing and creating branches of the communist party," presumably in order to have somebody to arrest. Most of the committeemen laughed at the charge. Another was that Attorney General Palmer sought to have many suspected radical aliens deported without a hearing. Representative POU, of North Carolina, demanded that Mr. Ralston prove this statement. Mr. Ralston then said that all he could do was to produce two or three witnesses who would say the same thing.

The third assertion was that "the administration of justice in this country has sunk to a lower level than in Russia during the régime of the Czar."

"I can not let that statement pass unchallenged," Chairman CAMPBELL of Kansas said. "Everybody knows it is ridiculous to make such a charge."

Is it so very strange that we find Assistant Secretary of Labor Louis F. Post the dependable friend of anarchists and the confidential correspondent of Emma Goldman, whose deportation was finally forced by the Department of Justice and public sentiment? Is it so very strange that anarchists should find protection in the Department of Labor? Is it so very strange that Louis F. Post should now be defended by Jackson H. Ralston, the renowned attorney for anarchists in the United States, and who has before appeared before the Rules Committee in this Congress to stop the passage of laws that would hamper anarchists in their hellish practices? Why, less than a year ago our Secretary of Labor, William B. Wilson, in the annual convention of the American Federation of Labor, sat on the platform with Samuel Gompers and Mrs. Rene Mooney, the then indicted wife of the convicted bomb-throwing anarchist, Thomas Mooney, and asserted that his Department of Labor was still at work in its efforts to free this anarchist, and then refused to answer the resolution passed by the House of Representatives and tell it exactly what his department had done and was doing, and how much money it had spent in behalf of such anarchist, and the House has never yet forced him to answer. Do not the records on file in this House show that Secretary of Labor Wilson sent John B. Densmore, with a bunch of thugs, to San Francisco in behalf of Mooney, where they committed burglary and other felonies by installing a dictograph in the office of the district attorney, for the purpose not of enforcing laws but to thwart laws, in an attempt to free this anarchist, Mooney? Did not Samuel Gompers, whom Jackson H. Ralston also represents, collect a tremendous slush fund and go to every extreme imaginable to free the McNamaras, anarchists, and also to free the anarchist, Mooney? Did not Samuel Gompers, knowing William Z. Foster to be an anarchist, place him in charge of the great steel strike not long ago?

But, Mr. Chairman, let me quote again from yesterday evening's Washington Star:

PRECAUTION TAKEN AGAINST "REDS" IN MAY DAY THREAT—DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE WARNS MEN LISTED AS PROBABLE VICTIMS OF ATTACK.

Every precaution was taken to-day by the Department of Justice to protect the lives and property of a score or more high State and Federal officials who, according to Attorney General Palmer, are marked for assassination to-morrow in a nation-wide "May Day celebration" of the "reds."

Mr. Palmer gave an official public warning of the alleged plot last night. All persons listed as probable victims of the radicals were to-day given warning by the Department of Justice.

POSTMASTER WARNED.

City Postmaster Chance to-day instructed Clarence Schooley, superintendent of mails, and other officials of the office, to be on the watch for suspicious-looking parcels coming into the Washington city post office by parcel post.

And, Mr. Chairman, the following excerpts are from this morning's Washington Post:

WATCH KEPT ON REDS—MAY DAY VIOLENCE THWARTED, FEDERAL OFFICIALS INSIST—SPORADIC STRIKES FORESEEN—MEN MARKED FOR DEATH AMPLY PROTECTED, GARVAN SAYS—DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE WILL ALLOW RADICALS TO HOLD MEETINGS TO-DAY AND PERMIT THEM "TO TALK THEMSELVES BLUE," BUT AGENTS WILL SEE THAT THEY KEEP WITHIN BOUNDS—PROPAGANDA TERMED "AMAZING."

EXPECT SPORADIC VIOLENCE.

Assistant Attorney General Garvan, who directed raids on Communist and Communist Labor Party organizations in January, declared, as he went home for the night, that late reports indicated that whatever violence might occur would be sporadic.

It was disclosed by Mr. Garvan that several Members of Congress, three Federal judges, and an attorney recently active in investigating radical disturbances had been marked for assassination. With the early discovery of the plots, however, Mr. Garvan believed the officials, against whose lives the plots were directed, now are amply protected.

Mr. Garvan called attention to the apparent unlimited amount of money employed by the Communist Labor Party in fomenting disorders, declaring that at no time in history had a radical movement been so plentifully financed. He traced the source of these funds to Amsterdam and thence to Russia.

PROPAGANDA IS "AMAZING."

The amount of radical literature circulated within the last week was described by Mr. Garvan as "amazing" as he pointed to scores of different periodicals, pamphlets, and circulars, together with special editions of radical newspapers piled in his office, all appealing for a "May day show of power." Exponents of direct action, he contended, were taking advantage of a psychological opportunity while the Nation awaited developments "to lay their incendiarism on the people's doorsteps."

Mr. Garvan declared that Tom Miliouska, arrested on a deportation warrant, which was later canceled by Assistant Secretary of Labor Post, had been found in Chicago distributing the May day proclamation of the Communist Party. Miliouska, Mr. Garvan said, was freed by Mr. Post because he said he did not know the nature of the communist creed.

Right here I want to commend this Committee on Immigration, and especially this able, fearless, painstaking, patriotic chairman, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON], for the efficient work done and the courage exhibited in the attempt made to clean up this Department of Labor. This distinguished chairman has personally experienced what anarchy means to his State of Washington and realizes full well what a menace it is to the Government of the United States. He is going to make some disclosures within a short time that will astonish even the Members of Congress. It will simply astound the people of this Nation.

Ask our distinguished colleague from New York [Mr. SIEGEL] and my able and efficient colleague from Texas [Mr. BOX] what they have learned through this Immigration Committee investigation with regard to Assistant Secretary Louis F. Post being the willing tool of anarchists, dependable to do their will. Ask whether they have found anything "rotten in Denmark." Read the statements of these gentlemen before the Rules Committee. You will then learn how this Assistant Secretary of Labor, Louis F. Post, has been harboring dangerous anarchists in our midst and has been turning them loose by the thousands. Read the 158 pages of hearings had April 21 to 24, 1920, before Chairman JOHNSON, which has just been printed, and remember the fact that for three years communists have been pouring into the United States by the thousands and have been obtaining thousands of new recruits here in the United States, and not until January 24, 1920, did Secretary Wilson hold that communists were deportable, and then he did it under the whip and spur of public criticisms made by the Department of Justice, myself, and others who were not afraid to speak. No distinction whatever can be made between an anarchist and a communist, in that each wants government destroyed by force and violence. Yet the Secretary of Labor is now trying to draw a distinction so as to save members of the Communist Labor Party, an anarchist organization.

And while he hesitates, this morning's Washington Post heralds the news that the Department of Justice has evidence of plots by members of this very organization to assassinate on this May day several Members of Congress, three Federal judges, and a Government attorney. Must the officers of this Government continue to live in fear of assassination by cowardly thugs? Mr. Chairman, there is no fear of death that can keep me from raising my voice in behalf of the Government of the United States and the principles for which that flag stands.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In just a moment. Please do not consider me discourteous, but I have some matters that I desire to lay before this Congress. How long are we going to let this last? It is just a simple question.

Mr. LAYTON. And that is what I want to ask.

Mr. BLANTON. It is just the simple question, Do you love your office more than you do your Government? Mr. Gompers has sent you word that if you do not do as he wants you to do he has you card indexed and that he is going to put you out of office when the time comes. He keeps his representative in this gallery to watch you, and let me show you how far it goes.

Yesterday we had before us the bill to pension all of the civilian employees of this Government. These Government employees in 168 different union locals are affiliated with the American Federation of Labor. These Government employees are also card-indexing us, watching our actions, official and private, and have threatened to act in concert with the American Federation of Labor in defeating us, if we do not do their bidding. Let me read you an excerpt from a communication signed by the Chief of the United States Bureau of Efficiency placed in the RECORD by me on April 10, 1920:

UNITED STATES BUREAU OF EFFICIENCY,
Washington, D. C., March 3, 1920.

Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. BLANTON: I have just received your letter of March 2, in which you make certain inquiries concerning personnel conditions in the executive departments in Washington. I will quote your questions and undertake to answer them in the order in which they appear in your letter:

"(2) May we expect efficient service generally from our employees as long as they are affiliated with the American Federation of Labor?"

I believe that the affiliation of Government employees with labor organizations must, of necessity, result in a reduction of efficiency in the departments. I am of the opinion that such affiliation has an unfortunate effect on the morale of the service. The employee comes to feel that his success depends not so much on his individual effort as on the political strength of the organization to which he belongs.

"(3) Is there not fully as much reason for separating our Government employees from strike organizations as there was for separating the police and firemen from such organizations?"

Yes; quite as much reason, and even more. In the event of police strikes or strikes involving a fire department it will always be possible, because of the relatively small number of people involved, for residents of the community to assume the burdens laid down by the striking policemen or firemen, and while it is true that inexperienced persons would not be able to safeguard the public interests to the same extent as could regular policemen or firemen, yet the danger to the community could be kept within reasonable bounds and situations of this sort could be taken care of with a relatively small loss to the public. In the case of a strike of Government workers, which might involve not merely a few employees, but practically the entire force in the Government service, the damage to the public interest would be far greater. Such a strike would practically result in the suspension of all the functions of the Federal Government. It would affect not merely a few people, or a few thousand people, but, practically speaking, the entire population of the country.

"(4) I call your attention to the attack made upon you in the Federal Employee, the official magazine of the National Federation of Federal Employees, for February 28, 1920, page 3 thereof, suggesting your demise, by reason of your late activities for efficiency. Is this veiled threat of the official organ of Government employees going to stop your activities and cause you to 'lay down'?"

My answer to this inquiry is, "No." I shall continue to work for economy and efficiency in the Government service without regard to threats that may be made by any person or organization.

Very sincerely, yours,

HERBERT D. BROWN,
Chief Bureau of Efficiency.

Now, Mr. Chairman, note that this chief of our United States Bureau of Efficiency states emphatically that we shall not have efficiency from our Government employees as long as we permit them to affiliate with the American Federation of Labor, and that such affiliation destroys the morale and causes Government employees to depend not upon their effort, but upon the strength of the American Federation of Labor. And note that he asserts that there is much more reason for requiring our Government employees to separate from the American Federation of Labor than there was for so causing the policemen and firemen of the District of Columbia.

After the fearful police strike in Boston, where in one night over $300,000 worth of property was destroyed, and women were attacked, and thugs reigned supreme, this Congress finally awoke to its duty and gathered courage enough to pass laws compelling the police and firemen here to separate from the American Federation of Labor and all other strike organizations. And remember, Mr. Samuel Gompers defended the Boston police strike and criticized us for passing such laws over his command.

So, following the judgment and suggestion of Herbert D. Brown, Chief of the United States Bureau of Efficiency, I made a motion yesterday to require our Government employees to separate from the American Federation of Labor, and I forced a roll call vote on it, and only six Members would stand hitched. Let me quote the RECORD:

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I have a motion to recommit.
The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?
Mr. BLANTON. I am.
The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.
The Clerk read as follows:
"Mr. BLANTON moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service with instructions to report the same back to the House forthwith with the following amendment, to wit: 'Page 3, line 9, after the figures "1919," strike out the period, insert a colon, and add the following proviso: "Provided, That none of the provisions of this act shall apply to and none of its benefits shall be received or enjoyed by any person who is a member of any association, society, organization, or union of Government employees which is affiliated with, subject to, or a member or component part of, or acknowledges the authority of, any higher or superior body or institution of organized labor; and, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, the Commissioner of Pensions shall make and enforce rules for the enforcement of this section and governing the method and character of proof required in order that employees may receive the benefits of this act."' "

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order against the motion to recommit.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his point of order.
Mr. LEHLBACH. That the motion to recommit is not germane. This bill provides that Government employees who reach a certain age and who have been in the Government service for a certain length of years shall come under the provisions of the retirement provided in the bill, if they fall within certain classes, and those classes in every instance are confined to the character of employment. The motion to recommit seeks to exclude from the provisions of the bill a class not based on the character of employment, but on some membership by the individual in some outside association or in some activity that is dissociated from the employment. If this were to include another class or to exclude another class, based on the character of employment, it would be germane, that being the only character or class considered in the bill. The provisions include those in the classified service and also those in the service of the Panama Canal, in the Botanic Gardens, and so forth, in every instance based on the character of service. This introduces a different classification and therefore is not germane.
The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that this same point of order was raised when this was offered as an amendment in Committee of the Whole, and that the point of order was overruled. The Chair, of course, is always disposed, if possible, to have the ruling in the House the same as in Committee of the Whole. It seems to the Chair in the present instance that this motion is in substance the same as if to say that the provisions of the act shall extend to all persons who were in the service of the Government, except certain persons. The Chair overrules the point of order.
The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.
The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 4, noes 157.
Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.
The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and seventy-five Members present, not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. The question is on the motion to recommit.
The question was taken; and there were—yeas 6, nays 318, answered "present" 2, not voting 100, as follows:

Blanton, French, Garner, Garrett, Mansfield, Rayburn—yeas 6.

Mr. Chairman, I will not give the negative vote, because I do not want to embarrass my colleagues. I deeply sympathize with them on these votes. Some of them are in close districts. The union vote is absolutely decisive. They know that if they vote against improper union demands, or for proper restrictions of unions, they will be defeated, as the unorganized vote never goes to any trouble to reelect, while the offended union vote spends time and money to defeat any Congressman who displeases them. Thus, such a motion requiring separation of Government employees from the American Federation of Labor could get only six votes in the House. It got only three votes in the Senate, so our brothers over there are feeling the effect of card indexing too. But what are you going to do when the people wake up and begin card indexing their Congressmen? I must, however, get back to my subject and anarchy and Louis F. Post.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. BLANTON. Oh, I can not refuse to yield.
Mr. LAYTON. I simply wanted to ask the gentleman this question: Instead of berating Congress for the sins of commission or omission of the Assistant Secretary of Labor, Mr. Post, does the gentleman not think that the blame should rest primarily upon the administration for not discharging him?
Mr. BLANTON. Oh, it rests upon this Congress. We could put him out of there in 40 minutes if your majority on this side who control legislation, who have it in the hollow of their hands, wanted to do it. You have been putting this truckling off on the Democratic Party long enough. You are in power now, and the people of the United States, when there is truckling going on, are going to hold you Republicans responsible for it.
Mr. LAYTON. Who put Mr. Post in?
Mr. BLANTON. Oh, I do not care who put him in—we are the ones who ought to put him out, and you know it as well as I do. What I have been preaching to you for a year and a half is true, and that is that this whole Department of Labor down there is full of it. Do you think that Secretary Post could be turning anarchists loose every day; that he could carry on private correspondence by telegram with such anarchists as Emma Goldman, and place such correspondence on the Secretary's desk, without the Secretary of Labor knowing about it and approving it? Did not the Secretary of Labor in the last convention of the American Federation of Labor at Atlantic City sit on the same platform with an anarchist—with Mrs. Rene Mooney, then indicted for anarchy, the wife of a convicted bomb thrower; and did he not tell you at that time he was doing everything that the Department of Labor could do to free Mooney?
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the gentleman from Texas has consumed 15 minutes.
Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, here is a great report that I want to commend the Immigration Committee for making. It took some courage to bring that out. Are we going to let it drop? Are we going to do nothing?
When the Attorney General asked us for a law last November, and had a bill prepared by him introduced here by the Representative from Ohio [Mr. DAVEY], your great Committee on the Judiciary approved it, and with some alterations introduced it, but when it went before your Committee on Rules the newspapers reported that Samuel Gompers would stop it. When Samuel Gompers and his attorney, this same Mr. Jackson Ralston, of Washington, who is known as the anarchist attorney throughout this land, appeared before your Rules Committee they killed the sedition bill as dead as Hector, and we have never been able to get it up again. And Jackson Ralston is now representing Louis F. Post before that committee, and he is going to kill this proposal to clean up the Department of Labor as dead as Hector. Or are we to wake up and begin to function?
Mr. CARSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. BLANTON. Just a moment; I want to show you what I have to contend with, because I am making this fight. No wonder Louis F. Post has his private secretary, Hugh Reid, drawing $2,340 from this Government, now engaged editing his Knot Hole against me. One of my colleagues from the Republican side yesterday told me that an employee of this Government told him night before last that they were going to put me out of this Congress if they had to spend a million dollars. One of my Republican colleagues told me that. Of course, such an assertion is ridiculous. But you will find many who have asserted here that I am to be defeated, regardless of cost, even to expending $100,000 by the unions. Here is a letter that I received in the mail this morning from a banker in my district, and I want you to listen to it:

THE GUARANTY STATE BANK OF EASTLAND, TEX.,
Eastland, Tex., April 27, 1920.

Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR:-Don H. Biggers, of Eastland, Tex., has this day deposited with me in trust the sum of $250, to be paid to you upon the following conditions:
That you shall, on or before the 15th day of June, 1920, present to me, by mail, in person, or through any authentic source, the following affidavit, subscribed and sworn to by not less than 44 Members of Congress, or by Hon. CHAMP CLARK, Hon. CLAUDE KITCHIN, Hon. CHARLES R. CRISP, Hon. WARREN GARD, Hon. HENRY D. FLOOD, Hon. JAMES W. GOOD, Hon. JOSEPH WALSH, Hon. JOHN TILSON, Hon. JOSEPH G. CANNON:
"Affidavit: We, the undersigned Members of Congress, knowing and having been associated with THOMAS L. BLANTON, Congressman from the seventeenth congressional district of Texas, take pleasure in making affidavit to the fact that we regard said THOMAS L. BLANTON as a truthful, honorable gentleman; a man absolutely honest and fair in his parliamentary tactics; and that he has been a valuable and efficient Member of Congress; and that his work has been valuable to the country."

The conditions governing the trust herein created are more fully set forth in copy of letter from Don. H. Biggers to myself, herewith inclosed.

I have no interest or concern whatever in this matter, except that of following instructions this day given to me by Don. H. Biggers.

Very respectfully,

P. S. WOLFE, Cashier.

I have the respect, confidence, and friendship of every Member of this House whose respect, confidence, and friendship I deem worth while. I have made some hard, determined fights in this House and have made a few enemies, because I have fought against some of their plans and purposes. The nine Congressmen mentioned in this letter are nine of the ablest, most honorable, dependable Members of this House. I have such high respect for them and such confidence in them that I am going to propose to Mr. Samuel Gompers and his little tool the only chance they have to beat me and get me out of Congress is, if they can get these nine Congressmen named in this letter to make affidavit expressing negation to the statements required in said letter I will agree to resign my position. And each of these nine Congressmen have been faithful friends of organized labor and have voted for every reasonable and just demand male by organized labor; yet I am not afraid of their adverse report.

Go to all of the numerous employees of this House, to the clerical help, the reading clerks, the talley clerks, the Sergeant at Arms' department, the doorkeepers, the police, the pages, and messengers in and around this Capitol, and they are all my personal friends. Go to all of the employees in the House Office Building, and they are my personal friends. I believe that I have the respect, confidence, and friendship of every reporter on this floor who takes down our debates. But do you know why Don H. Biggers—and his silent partners—offer me $250 to get affidavits from Congressmen? Do you know the reason they send me that letter?

Mr. CARSS. Have you received any affidavits yet?

Mr. BLANTON. I would not expect one from the gentleman from Minnesota, although I have been fighting not him, but I have been fighting his radical leaders, like Mr. Gompers, who puts in charge of the steel strike an anarchist, a man whom he knew to be an anarchist, like William Z. Foster. I am not fighting the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER]. God bless him! He is an honorable man, a high-principled, moral man, one of the best in this country. I am not fighting him. I am fighting anarchistic leaders. When they send me a letter like this, they know, in the first place, that I would not embarrass a Member of Congress by asking him to make any kind of an affidavit.

In the second place, they know that if a colleague of mine would sign a statement like that, Samuel Gompers and his bunch of radical leaders would turn loose upon them and do everything in their power to defeat them in their districts. This fellow Don H. Biggers edits a little newspaper called the Olden Advance, and reproduces in it attacks made here against me in Secretary Post's private secretary's Knot Hole, and he also uses several whole columns each week in vilifying me. And he puts this $250 in the bank, sends me this letter, and then will go over the country and say, "BLANTON can not furnish a statement of good standing in the House of Representatives." This fellow Biggers is a splendid writer and a competent newspaper man, but has never used his talents for any good cause. I have nothing but compassion for him, however, as his boys are splendid, loyal, patriotic young men, who during the war served their country well and deserve every praise and commendation for it.

Mr. SABATH. Is this from a labor organization?

Mr. BLANTON. It is from a fellow by the name of Biggers. There are Members here who served in the Texas Legislature with him, and if they were put on the witness stand they would have to admit that Biggers "boozed" most of his time away and did nothing worthy of note, and finally resigned. He may, however, have stopped drinking now and may accomplish something in the next legislature.

That is not all I have to stand. I wish you could see some of the packages I have gotten through the mail lately, some of the 5-pound boxes of "candy" that have come from New York and other large cities addressed, "For the Blanton children, care of Congressman BLANTON, Washington, D. C."

A MEMBER. What kind?

Mr. BLANTON. Five-pound boxes of candy, but my children did not eat it. I have here a late package received through the mail. I will show you. This is such a novelty, an innovation, it really makes a fellow feel good to get a package like this [indicating]. I had an inspector at the post office to open it for me. [Laughter.] I want to show it to you. When it was first opened the inspector and I thought it was dynamite. I did not blame him, as it looked like it by the way it was wrapped with the brown edges showing. What you see there is a brown-looking thing. It was all tied with strings, and from the way it looked the supposition was, when you opened one of those strings, it touched off a cap. Fortunately, he discovered it was harmless. Let me show you what it is. [Exhibiting a very large horseshoe.] It makes a fellow feel goood when you get a horseshoe like that, and where on a nice card it is written in green ink, "The luck of the Irish to Congressman BLANTON." I do not mind getting anything of that kind.

Mr. SABATH. You do not get many of them, do you?

Mr. BLANTON. I do not get many of them from those men who are trying to repeal the Volstead Prohibition Act. [Applause.] I get commendation from the stalwart citizens of this country, those who have the interest of the young manhood at heart and who have placed upon our fundamental law a provision that whisky shall never be sold or manufactured in this country any more.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. May I have five minutes more?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. Does anybody else want to ask a question?

Mr. SABATH. May I inquire again from whom this letter the gentleman read was received? Is he a labor man or associated with any labor organization?

Mr. BLANTON. He may belong to a typographical union, though I do not know that. He has been spending, I imagine, some of Mr. Gompers's slush fund, that he says he is going to defeat me with in my district. I imagine that. Because, otherwise, I do not see how he could afford to devote from a third to a half of his paper each week to such vicious attacks against me. Getting back to the question, what are you Congressmen going to do on this issue of anarchy? The country looks to you. It is depending on you Republicans now for action, because you are in power. Are you going to lie down? Do you think more of your office than you do of the people and that flag? Are you not going to make this country a safe place for people to live in?

Let me read to you again what the morning paper says:

It is disclosed by Mr. Garvan that several Members of Congress, three Federal judges, and an attorney recently active in investigating radical disturbances have been marked for assassination to-day.

Is the Congress of the United States going to be so weak-kneed that it is going to let this condition of fear on the part of public officials exist in this Nation? It is up to you. You can stop it inside of this week if you want to do so.

You can bring in a law here that will transfer the Immigration Bureau to the Secretary of State's Department and stop this monkey business, this anarchy, this "boring from within," this disruption of the Government of the United States, which ought to withstand this kind of anarchy. It is up to you. Are you going to let this matter die in the Committee on Rules, as the sedition bill died? Are you going to let Jackson H. Ralston, this anarchist attorney, stop it?

There is just one thing, let me repeat—there is just one thing that stands in our way and obstructs our passing a proper law and getting rid of this anarchy once for all; that is the American Federation of Labor. That is the only thing that makes us weak-kneed. It is the fear of the primary and the general elections and the loss of our position that makes us sit back and cringe, shall I say, like cowards? Oh, no!

Now, gentlemen, take it from me, the people of this country are not going to continue to charge it to the Democratic Party alone; they are going to charge both of us with it. They are going to charge Republicans and Democrats alike with it. They are going to hold us individually responsible in our districts. If we let this condition prevail long, some of these days you are going to hear from them. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I beg the indulgence of the House for two minutes in order to call the attention of the Members to a bill to codify and consolidate the laws of the United States that has been laid before you this morning; and I hope that Members will keep it, although it is asking a good deal, perhaps. But one-third of the laws of the United States are in that book, and two-thirds of them are to follow. We shall hope to have the approval of the House for it in December. There are lawyers who would be glad to pay $5 for this calendar print, and I hope you will preserve it and make up your minds as to its correctness.

Mr. MADDEN. Where is it?

Mr. LITTLE. On your desks right now. The purpose now is to give it to you months in advance, so you can study it and find out if it is right or not; so that you can find out if it is the law reproduced as it was before in 1874. I would like to have you ascertain for yourselves. Each section shows the origin, in footnotes, and you can ascertain if it is the law.

I call your attention to this now so that you may not throw the document into the wastebasket, as I do with respect to most of the stray printed stuff that comes to me. [Laughter.]

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

Mr. McKEOWN. Is this a codification or attempt to set out any repeal, or simply an attempt to give the law as it is now, and where the laws conflict to make them conform?

Mr. LITTLE. That is it exactly.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I happen to be a member of the gentleman's committee, and I am glad to serve under such an able and energetic chairman. For the information of the House I suggest that the gentleman state what proportion of the laws we have already codified.

Mr. LITTLE. Yes; about one-third.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. One-third?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes; fully.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. And there is every prospect that in a few months we shall have thrown all the statute law into a single volume?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes. I hope by that time it will be done. I hope by that time our committee will have it ready for the House.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. And that volume will be accessible at a very low price to the entire public?

Mr. LITTLE. I should think from what the printer tells me that we could sell it for $5, all the laws.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. And at the present time, as I understand, you can not buy a compilation of that sort for less than $10, and the price ranges from that up to $100?

Mr. LITTLE. That is what I understand.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. LITTLE. I ask unanimous consent for one minute more.

Mr. GOOD. I yield one minute more to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for one minute more.

Mr. LITTLE. I just want to add this: The gentleman from Virginia suggests that it costs from $10 to $100 for a similar work, but you can not get this work. The private works of which the gentleman speaks are not equal to the official publications. They can not be introduced in evidence. The gentleman himself understands that, but I thought I would say a word in order that others might not be misled. There is no other book that can be introduced in evidence. If this book is issued it will be the law and can be used in evidence. At present you would have to introduce 36 volumes to prove all the law. The private publications are excellent and admirable, but they are not quite sufficient.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. You take one section and you show the origin of that section, and if any part of it is repealed you indicate where it is repealed, and any addition that may have been made, and then the section as presented shows the law as it is to-day?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes, exactly; and such commentary as is made goes right to the foot of it, the history of the section, in fact.

Mr. RAKER. That is very desirable, and the gentleman and his committee ought to be complimented on that work.

Mr. LITTLE. I thank the gentleman.

A SAVING OF APPROXIMATELY $600,000,000 IN THIS BILL.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, the sundry civil appropriation bill is the last of the great supply bills to engage the attention of the House.

This bill, like all appropriation bills, is constructed on the estimates submitted by the various executive departments, as provided by law. The estimates for this bill represent approximately one-fifth of the entire appropriations which the administration has requested for 1921. The total estimates for every branch of the Government service, including indefinite and permanent annual appropriations and other recognized charges not formally submitted, are roughly estimated at $5,350,000,000.

The total of the estimates for the sundry civil bill is $1,036,486,130.60.

The bill carries appropriations aggregating $428,216,944.92. It carries $608,269,185.68 less than the amount estimated by the executive departments. It carries $320,462,436.43 less than the amount appropriated for the current year for the services or purposes usually appropriated for in the sundry civil act.

The savings effected by this bill alone amount to the grand total of $608,269,185.68. Had this Congress adopted the course suggested by the administration's estimates on this bill, it would then be necessary for the Government to raise by taxation or otherwise approximately $600,000,000 which the House has eliminated from these estimates.

The sundry civil bill, as its name implies, touches all of the civil branches of the Government service. The services that are provided with funds through this bill are so numerous and are subdivided into so many different activities that it will be impossible to give more than a general idea with regard to them in this discussion. When the bill is read for amendment each item will then be open for general discussion and debate. In that manner alone will the House be able to understand clearly and fully the extent to which this bill makes provision for governmental activities.

In the preparation of this bill the committee has been guided by certain fundamental principles. It recognizes that a reduction in taxation must precede a reduction in the high cost of living. To bring about normal living costs, therefore, it is necessary to commence with a reduction in national expenditures. Or, stated conversely, there can be no substantial reduction in the high living costs without a reduction in taxation, and there can be no substantial reduction in taxation without a substantial reduction in expenditures. Actuated only by a desire to bring about a more healthy condition in living costs and to meet a demand that is nation wide, the committee has examined the estimates with great care and has reduced them wherever a reduction could be made without injury to the service.

I have prepared a statement showing (a) the total estimates required for each of the 13 supply bills, (b) the amount originally estimated, (c) the supplemental estimates, (d) the total estimates for each bill, and (e) the amount carried in each bill as it passed the House.

I have assumed that the amount the sundry civil bill carries as reported to the House will be substantially the final judgment of the House. Doubtless there will be minor changes. But I hope that as the result of the deliberations of the House the amount carried in the bill will not be materially increased.

A SAVING OF APPROXIMATELY $1,500,000,000 ON THE SUPPLY BILLS.

This statement does not, of course, deal at all with the permanent and indefinite appropriations, including the large expenditures of more than a billion of dollars in interest charges alone. It includes only those services estimated for in the annual supply bills. The total amount estimated for these 13 supply bills is $3,591,292,027.17. The aggregate amount carried in these same bills as they passed the House is $2,110,953,058. In other words, the House by its action on the 13 supply bills, assuming that the sundry civil bill will not be increased, has effected a saving over the estimates made by the executive departments of $1,480,338,434.59.

It would be difficult to conjecture what would follow the acceptance of the estimates made by the executive departments of the Government and the appropriation of all the money that was asked for. Had this Congress adopted such a course it would then be confronted with the task of raising through taxation or otherwise an additional sum of approximately $1,500,000,000.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Has the gentleman stated the total estimates as the total carried in the bill?

Mr. GOOD. Yes. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to print the table I have referred to in full.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOOD. The total estimates, exclusive of the permanent and indefinite appropriations, which include the interest on the Government debt, which is considerable more than a billion dollars, were $3,591,292,027.17. The total carried in the 13 supply bills as they passed the House, assuming that this bill passes in practically the amount that it carries, would be $2,110,953,592.58, a reduction in the estimates of $1,480,338,434.49.

The statement is as follows:

THE THIRTEEN REGULAR ANNUAL APPROPRIATION BILLS FOR 1921.

[2] Estimate did not include provision for continuing temporary increases in compensation of postal employees provided in last annual appropriation bill and H. J. Res. 151, which have been continued for next year and for which the bill as reported carried $75,783,900. Had these temporary increases been included in the estimates the bill as reported would have shown a decrease under the estimates of $5,969,205.
[3] Excludes $100,000, which has been handled as a deficiency item.
[4] Bill as reported to the House.
[5] This sum includes only the estimates for 1921 for the thirteen annual supply bills and is exclusive of estimates for permanent appropriations ($1,425,407,752.23) and miscellaneous items carried in special acts, and also exclusive of deficiency estimates for the fiscal year 1920.

Mr. GOOD. These savings are, indeed, large. The reductions have been sweeping, but they have all been necessary to bring our expenditures within the anticipated revenue. In making these reductions the several appropriation committees of Congress have not been unmindful of the needs of the various branches of the Government service. The reductions will not prevent the healthful and vigorous functioning of every needed governmental activity.

The savings, however, will involve retrenchment. It will necessarily mean the halting to some extent of a building program. It will mean the cutting out of certain war activities that ought to have been eliminated long ago. It may mean, too—at least the committee reporting the bill hope it may mean—the elimination of duplications and of overlapping in governmental activities. And, finally, the result will be greater economy and efficiency in every branch of the Government service.

THE NEED FOR BUDGETARY CONTROL OVER REVENUE AND EXPENDITURES.

The examination of the estimates submitted for the sundry civil expenses of the Government has furnished additional proof of the necessity for a budget system. It is, indeed, to be deplored that the greatest business enterprise in all the world, the Government of the United States, is conducted without a business or fiscal program and without due recognition of the simple business principles which men of affairs everywhere find necessary in the successful conduct of their business.

The House more than six months ago passed a bill providing for a budget system. At the time of the reporting of this bill no action had been taken by the Senate other than to hold hearings and report out a bill. In order to assure budgetry legislation at this session of Congress it was the judgment of the committee that the budget bill passed by the House should be carried as a provision in the pending measure. That provision has been made.

COMPARISON OF SUNDRY CIVIL BILLS, 1921 AND 1916.

I have prepared a further statement comparing this bill with the sundry civil act for the fiscal year 1916. That analysis shows the increases and decreases in the various items carried in this bill as compared with like items carried in the bill for 1916.

In this connection I feel that intelligent analysis of appropriations for 1921 for the several civil activities of the Federal Government should start with the prewar or 1916 expenditures. New elements of cost have intruded, of course. But prewar conditions—rather than the postwar conditions of 1918, 1919, or 1920—furnish the objective of our efforts to retrench and put the Government again on an economical and normal peace basis.

The comparison of the fiscal years 1916 and 1921 is as follows:

Grand total	126,922,750.79	428,216,944.92	+301,294,194.13

It will be observed that while this bill carries $428,216,944.92 the sundry civil act for 1916 carried $126,922,750.79. It must be borne in mind, however, that this bill carries very large items for which it was unnecessary to appropriate money in 1916. For example, it carries $125,000,000 as compensation to the soldiers of the late war, it carries $46,000,000 for hospital treatment of such soldiers, it carries $90,000,000 for vocational education for the soldiers of that war, and it also carries $21,500,000 for bringing back the bodies of our deceased soldiers who are buried on the other side. These four items aggregate $282,500,000. They are chargeable entirely to the war.

EXCLUSIVE OF PROVISION FOR SOLDIERS AND SAILORS, INCREASE OVER 1916 IS BUT $18,000,000.

The appropriations carried by this bill aggregate $145,667,944.92 after the foregoing appropriation items growing out of the war have been eliminated from consideration. This is more by eighteen millions than the amount carried in the appropriation bill in 1916. Every dollar herein appropriated, however, goes to pay for a necessary service or to purchase of essential materials and supplies. Then, too, service and material will be purchased at existing market prices, which are much higher than the market prices of labor and materials in 1916. Consequently it was necessary to appropriate more money to secure them. Furthermore, a moderate increase over 1916 has been found necessary to provide for a normal increase in the demands upon the public service since 1916.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. Is the amount appropriated for the return of the bodies of dead soldiers from France thought to be a sufficient amount for that purpose?

Mr. GOOD. It is thought by the committee that the War Department will not be able to expend anything like the amount carried in this bill during the next year. My opinion is that we could have cut that item by five or six million dollars and not have delayed for a single day the bringing back of a single body from France.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. And would have brought all of them back that the parents and wives desire brought back?

Mr. GOOD. No. I do not believe that the work can all be done during the next year. It is proposed to bring back 50,000 bodies and to prepare for reburial in the cemeteries of France, as I recall, about 25,000 additional bodies. That work can not all be done during the next year. If England and the other countries should also require that the bodies of their soldiers be taken from France, you can see the congestion that would result, and you might bring on epidemic in that portion of France if attempt should be made to do this work all at once.

The work must be carried on with some degree of common sense and good judgment, but it was the opinion of the committee that inasmuch as Congress had already taken action in the matter, and inasmuch as France had now given consent to the return of the bodies of our dead, we should grant the appropriation asked. There has been a disposition on the part of some people in the Government service to pass the buck that the committee felt that inasmuch as it would require $21,500,000 to bring back the bodies of our dead soldiers that it would be best to grant the appropriation at this time, even to the cent that was asked for by the department, so that the bereaved mothers and fathers and families of boys who lost their lives on the other side could not under any circumstances receive word from the War Department that the bodies of their dear ones were not returned because Congress had refused to grant the appropriation, and that is likely what would have happened if we had reduced the appropriation.

UNEXPENDED APPROPRIATIONS WHICH WERE MADE AVAILABLE TO REDUCE THE HIGH COST OF LIVING.

Complaint has been made of the failure of Congress to make appropriations to reduce the high cost of living. Executive officials have openly charged that the failure of the administration to bring down the cost of living was due solely to the refusal of Congress to make appropriation therefor. Appropriations have, however, been made by this Congress to reduce the high cost of living. In some instances, notably the appropriation to the Federal Trade Commission of $150,000, remains unexpended. That commission recognized the fact that to have expended the money appropriated to reduce the high cost of living, although asked for by the Executive, would have been a flash in the pan, a total waste of the people's money. Therefore it refused to expend the appropriation. Other appropriations made to bring about a reduction in the cost of living have resulted in no appreciable decrease in price. But during the time this money was being expended the price of many of the necessaries of life has materially advanced, sugar having advanced to double the price at which it was selling when the appropriations to reduce the high cost of living were granted.

No doubt it will again be charged that we have reduced some of the estimates where it was intended by the executive departments to spend the money to reduce the high cost of living. We have made some reductions where funds might be expended along that line. I submit that the action of the committee is entirely justifiable, when we remember that out of all the appropriations made for this purpose no substantial benefit in the way of reduction in the cost of living has come as the result of any investigation made by the Government into living costs. I am not surprised at the results, for when the appropriations were granted for this purpose it was recognized that the investigations proposed could have but little beneficial effect; but the failure to produce results certainly justifies the committee in refusing to waste additional funds in this way.

While it is impossible to discuss in general debate the two thousand or more items carried in this bill, there are a few items to which I feel the attention of the committee should be called before the bill is read for amendment that will explain the theory upon which the bill was drawn. First and foremost are the provisions carried for the care and treatment of the sick and disabled soldiers in the World War.

Under the existing laws such soldiers are the beneficiaries of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance. Persons entitled to hospital treatment under the provisions of that act are placed by the director either in charge of the Public Health Service, in State institutions, or in privately owned hospitals. On February 6 there were 3,805 nervous and mental patients in hospitals, mostly in State institutions. At the end of the month of February there were 10,960 additional war-risk patients being treated by the Public Health Service either in the United States marine hospitals, the United States Public Health Service hospitals, original stations, or in private or State hospitals under contract with the Public Health Service. Of said 10,960 war-risk insurance cases, 903 were being treated in marine hospitals, 4,578 in the United States Public Health Service hospitals, 363 in the 118 original stations, and 5,260 were being treated in other hospitals under contract with the Public Health Service.

At the close of the Civil War the Government entered upon a policy of providing homes wherein treatment could be given the disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines of that war, and at the close of the Spanish-American War these homes were thrown open to the sick and disabled soldiers of that war. There are 10 branches of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers. The following table will give the location of these branches; the bed capacity, both for barracks and hospitals; the present membership; the vacant space on March 31, 1920; the gain and the loss in membership; and the vacant space therein on April 26, 1920:

[1] Approximate, no post return being received since Mar. 31, 1920, but accurate enough for practical purposes.

These homes are operated in connection with the farms upon which the buildings are located. In practically every one of the homes there is maintained a dairy herd, large enough to supply fresh and wholesome milk for all the members. The farming operations, as a general rule, are sufficient in extent to provide fresh vegetables and supplies. This arrangement has been found not only economical but very satisfactory in furnishing the membership of the homes with wholesome food and attractive surroundings, and attractive employment for those members who are able and desire to work.

It is the unanimous opinion of the committee, which went very thoroughly into the question of the management of these homes, that the Government is to be congratulated upon the economical and businesslike management of this institution. No agency in the Government is more efficiently operated or more economically conducted than the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.

This table shows that on April 26, 1920, there were 9,093 vacant beds in these homes. In building these institutions it was recognized that a person who needs hospital treatment ought not to be turned out of the institution as soon as an operation has been performed, or as soon as he is able to leave the hospital where he has been treated for some disease. It has been found necessary, therefore, to provide the homes with both hospitals and barracks, so a member can be cared for in the barracks after intense treatment in the hospital. It may be necessary to provide additional hospital facilities in some of the barracks, and this can be done at a minimum of expense, out of the funds appropriated.

The Public Health Service has submitted an estimate for building new hospitals to provide hospitalization for the soldiers of the late war amounting to $84,000,000. It has been pointed out by this service that their hospital facilities are inadequate. It is the judgment of the committee that the 9,093 beds in our soldiers' homes should be made available for the soldiers of the late war, and to bring this about it has been necessary to remove certain obstacles that now prevent a more generous use of these homes by these soldiers.

The law provides that certain soldiers are entitled to be admitted to the homes "who are disabled by disease, wounds, or otherwise, and have no adequate means of support." The pending bill makes certain that the homes shall be opened to the soldiers of this war, and eliminates the objectionable feature now on the statute books, which makes it necessary that a person be indigent before he can be admitted to one of the homes.

The evidence before the committee was to the effect that the cost for this year for hospital treatment for the soldiers of the late war was on the basis of $28,000,000, not including the amount expended by the Director of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance for the care and treatment of the nervous and mental patients in State and other institutions. It was estimated that the amount necessary to care for the mental cases would aggregate something like $10,000,000 for the next year, although the amount actually expended for this year is much less than that sum.

The actual cost for care, provisions, clothing, and treatment for all members in the soldiers' homes during the past year was 97 cents per man per day. The actual cost for such treatment, not including clothing, for the persons under the care of the Public Health Service, was roughly estimated at something over $4 per day. Under the law, the Director of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance has the power to place its patients in the institutions he may designate. The committee felt, therefore, that the appropriation for the care of these patients should also be made to the Director of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, with power of allotment to the institution to which he might assign such patient, whether it be the Public Health Service or the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, State hospitals, or private institutions.

By utilizing the soldiers' homes to their full capacity, unquestionably the situation will be relieved in a threefold aspect. First and foremost, the ex-service men who are in need of treatment and entitled to it under the law can be given the treatment immediately, and will not be compelled to wait until hospitals are built. Second. It will mean a large saving by the utilization of buildings already constructed, to take care of the soldiers of former wars, for the treatment of the disabled soldiers of this war. Third. The proposed utilization of these homes which have been so successfully conducted will result in a saving of at least $10,000,000 annually.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. At these homes the Government owns the land?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. They have farms, and they could double or treble their capacity in buildings if necessary?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. I do not believe it will be necessary to any very great extent. They have central heating plants and laundry plants and all that kind of thing, so that if additional accommodations have to be provided to care for the soldiers of this war, instead of requiring $3,000 a bed, to acquire land and build the hospitals from the ground up, it could be done for a much less amount, as I have indicated, at these homes, where the Government has not only room and farms and heating plants and all that kind of thing, but it could be done with much better administration, with the organization that the soldiers homes have, than we could hope for during the lifetime perhaps of almost any existing Member of Congress.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] is entirely correct. All of these homes are surrounded by fine farms. These farms are run by the board of managers. At the Los Angeles Home last year they put up 57,000 quarts of preserves, and what they did not use there was sent to the other homes. The homes are run in a businesslike way. This year in the month of February you had about 10,000 soldiers in the care of the Public Health Service, and by this legislation and this appropriation we make available practically immediately a bed capacity almost equal to that which is now used by the Public Health Service for the care of the soldiers of this war.

An examination of the bill will disclose that it is practically a maintenance bill, so far as it relates to construction. Reductions in estimates for building construction and development work are large. In the more important items we have made the reductions as follows:

Public buildings	$11,010,525
Armories and arsenals	6,353,559
Military barracks, Hawaii	2,968,000
Military barracks, Panama	11,242,125
Buildings and grounds, Washington, D. C	596,000
Reclamation Service	12,695,000
National parks	1,452,007
Howard University	$1,543,937
Lighthouses, beacons, etc	6,759,900
Panama Canal	8,963,540
A total reduction of	63,584,593

Other reductions in minor items for building and construction were made on the same theory. Obviously such construction ought not to be carried on at a time when prices are so abnormally high. It is apparent that there is a shortage of material as well as labor. With this condition confronting us the Government ought not to enter into competition in the matter of buildings and improvements, and thereby complicate the situation. It would in the first place make living costs higher to those who are compelled to build homes and make improvements. In the second place, the Government would make abnormal expenditures owing to the prevailing conditions. It was the opinion of the committee that this building program could wait without injury to the Government service. All told, the building program which has been eliminated is approximately $70,000,000. When this building program can be taken up and completed will depend altogether upon conditions. Certainly that program ought not to be carried on at a time when the work would necessitate the levying of new taxes and when it would retard private enterprise and development. The committee realizes that when these conditions improve it will be necessary to build additional facilities for the Lighthouse Service, to build additional public buildings for Government activities, to improve the highways in the national parks, and to make other needed construction outlays.

THE RECLAMATION SERVICE.

The reduction of over $12,000,000 in the estimates for the Reclamation Service was made, however, for quite a different reason. The necessity of bringing additional lands under production as soon as possible was obvious, and the bill carries appropriations aggregating $7,909,000 for that purpose. That sum will exhaust all of the funds in the Treasury available for reclamation service. The Director of the Reclamation Service believes that additional funds arising out of the operation of the oil-leasing act would be available during the year. The committee found, however, that all of the money derived through the operation of that act has been paid under protest. The extent to which such funds may be available for reclamation service is necessarily problematical. The committee therefore decided it would be unwise financing to count upon any portion of those payments for reclamation projects for the next fiscal year, and for that reason it eliminated estimates aggregating $12,695,000.

WAR-RISK INSURANCE.

In the judgment of the committee the amount estimated for the payment of military and naval compensation was in excess of the anticipated requirements. During the present fiscal year there has been expended up to March 31, in the payment of such compensation, $83,000,000. The present monthly rate of expenditure for such purposes is approximately $7,400,000. Assuming that this rate of expenditure will increase somewhat for the months of April, May, and June, the total amount paid out for military and naval compensation will aggregate approximately $113,000,000. There was available for this purpose for the present fiscal year $135,000,000.

Unquestionably the rate of expenditure for the next fiscal year will exceed that of the present fiscal year. The appropriation, however, makes allowance for this. If the rate of expenditure reached the sum of $12,000,000 per month, as against an average of about $7,400,000 per month for the present fiscal year, the bill would make ample provision. It carries a total of $147,000,000, as follows:

An unexpended balance of this appropriation at the end of this fiscal year, approximating $22,000,000, is anticipated. The bill reappropriates the unexpended balance, and also carries an additional appropriation of $125,000,000, thus making available for the next fiscal year the sum of $147,000,000 for the payment of military and naval compensation to the soldiers of the late war.

THE SHIPPING BOARD.

By far the largest reduction was made in the estimate for the emergency shipping fund. The Shipping Board requested an appropriation of $446,270,652. No direct appropriation is carried in the bill for the completion of the ship-construction program or for the payment of claims on canceled contracts.

It developed in the hearings that the Shipping Board would have on hand on July 1 approximately $60,000,000. There is due the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation from the Army on account of transportation approximately $130,000,000, and the board believes that it will receive from that source approximately $70,000,000. The board also estimates that it will receive on account of ships sold prior to the taking effect of this act $15,000,000; that it will receive during the next fiscal year approximately $25,000,000 from the sale of surplus materials and plants. It also estimates that it will receive approximately $30,000,000 on account of ships that will be sold during the next fiscal year. The income from the operation of the ships is problematical.

Mr. Gillen, special assistant to the chairman of the Shipping Board, made the following statement before the committee:

This being a liquidating job, we should be told that there were not any appropriations for us, and that we should see to it that out of our own liquidations we get sufficient funds to take care of our needs.

The board estimated that its requirements will be as follows:

Contract claims	$125,000,000
Repairs to ex-German ships	44,000,000
Completion of contracts	84,000,000
Administration	24,000,000
Capital fund for operation	29,000,000
Total	306,000,000

Unquestionably some of these estimates are excessive, and the total estimate can be very materially reduced. Assuming that the estimates of its available resources are correct, and that there will be on hand $60,000,000 of cash on July 1, that it will receive $70,000,000 from the Army, and that it will receive $15,000,000 from the sale of ships heretofore made, $25,000,000 from the sale of surplus materials, and $30,000,000 from the sale of cargo ships which are to be sold, the Shipping Board would have $200,000,000 to carry on its work for the fiscal year 1921, especially if the estimated requirements for the reconditioning of the German ships were eliminated. The bill therefore carries no direct appropriation for the emergency shipping fund but makes available all unexpended balances on hand July 1 next, as well as funds that may be received because of operations and in addition thereto $70,000,000 from the sale of ships and surplus materials. It is believed that these funds will prove ample.

The committee are not a unit with regard to this item. The bill does not carry any appropriation at all, but simply makes available these funds, which, with the operating income, whatever that may be, will be enough to do the work that the Emergency Fleet Corporation ought to do. Now it is proposed to spend $44,000,000 to recondition 22 ex-German ships. You will recall having read in the newspapers with regard to the injunction issued to restrain the sale of those ships.

We took over during the war 95 German ships, and we have sold quite a number of them. It was proposed by the Shipping Board to sell these 22 passenger ships, and I think a great deal of misapprehension prevails throughout the country, and even in Congress, with regard to those ships. Inasmuch as the committee have not allowed the $44,000,000 estimated to recondition these ships, I think that the House at this time should understand just what is involved.

When we took over these ships it was after an attempt had been made by the Germans to destroy them. The delicate machinery was injured to such an extent that it was necessary to make extensive repairs, but the repairs were hurriedly made. The ships were then practically dismantled. The expensive interiors were removed. The wiring was taken out. Practically nothing was left of the ships except the hulls. Some improvements were made to make transports out of them, and they were put into the transport service, and they are in that condition now.

Now, these ships must be practically rebuilt if they are to become passenger ships and serve the purpose for which they were constructed. At least all the interior must be replaced if they are to be put in the passenger service. Those ships are 16 years old, on the average. That is, on an average they have been in the water 16 years. The average life of a ship of this character, so the committee were advised, is around 22 years. Certainly the Shipping Board proceeded in a businesslike way in making the investigation looking to a sale of the ships. They employed a firm of expert appraisers, and this firm appraised every one of these ships, and then the board offered them for sale. I have seen the appraisement. It was not thought best to put the appraisements in the RECORD, but one ship on the list which, I remember, for example, was appraised at $800,000, and the bid received was, as I recall, about $1,200,000, or about $400,000 more than the appraisement. Now, this House has passed a bill, almost unanimously, directing the sale of the ships we have acquired. It is proposed here by this estimate to place more than $2,000,000, on an average, on each one of these old hulls to recondition them and then offer them for sale.

Suppose we do that, and you are a buyer? You go before the Shipping Board and you say, "Admiral Benson, what is the price of this ship?" Let us suppose that he will say, "$3,500,000." You would say, "Oh, that is too much." Admiral Benson would reply, "We have just spent $2,000,000 in reconditioning that ship." You answer, "Yes; you wasted $2,000,000 on that ship. I would not have reconditioned that ship in that way. You have spent money uselessly and needlessly."

The committee felt that if these ships are to be sold they ought to be sold now, and that the taxpayers should not be required to dig down into their pockets and raise $44,000,000 to recondition these ships that will be reconditioned for somebody else, but rather that the shipping interests that buy them should recondition them themselves. [Applause.]

That may be a mistaken policy. We shall never get back to normal conditions if we keep on taking this war activity and that war activity and carrying it on and on to the extent of improving all the property that came to us through the war. Our part ought to be to sell the property as soon as we can get a fair value for it and let the man who buys it improve it as he would have it.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. GOOD. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. As I understand from the gentleman's statement, as soon as the bill to which he refers becomes a law it will be possible for the Shipping Board to effect the sale of these vessels?

Mr. GOOD. Yes. I think there is a contention on the part of the Shipping Board that they now have the right, but that has been disputed in the courts.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. That contention is in issue?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. And, as I understand, the policy that was pursued by Judge Payne, the head of the Shipping Board, was in line with this legislation which we are seeking to enact.

Mr. GOOD. I think so.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Judge Payne said before our committee that he had consulted good lawyers who thought there was no authority under existing law. I forget whether he was of the opinion that he did have the authority or not; but, at any rate, there were lawyers who said he had not, and he thought it was his duty, in that doubtful situation, to ask Congress for direct and specific authority.

And therefore he did through our committee generally ask for that authority, and we undertook in the presentation of the bill to give him that authority. While I am on my feet I wish to say that the whole matter out of which that injunction grew was presented by Judge Payne before our committee, and we found, I think I may say for both the Members on the Republican and Democratic sides of that committee, that he was apparently doing everything he could to realize a fair price for the Government in case there should be any sale, and, furthermore, that in offering those vessels for sale he expressly reserved the right to reject any and all bids; and he gave one or two instances, such as the gentleman has mentioned, where he thought the price offered might be more than the Government would ultimately realize should it first improve or refit these ships, and it is, as the gentleman says, a great problem whether it is wiser for the Government to refit these ships now or to sell them now, because, as the gentleman has well said, after we have expended our money and refitted them we may not be able to get back the amount we have expended.

Mr. GOOD. Now, it has been stated that Congress ought to avoid that issue, that the Shipping Board is passing the buck to Congress, and that by refusing to grant the $44,000,000 asked for we then accept the problem that has been passed, whereas we ought to pay no attention to it, except make the appropriation asked for. It seems to me that we are just in the position where we can not escape our duty. If, on the other hand, we appropriate the money we will have accepted the buck and will have indorsed a program contrary to the action of the House heretofore taken, contrary to, I believe, the sentiment of 90 per cent of the people of America; that is, of improving all of these things that have come to us as a result of the war and which we expect to sell.

Mr. OLIVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I do.

Mr. OLIVER. To what extent did the resolution passed by the Senate interfere with the immediate sale of these ships?

Mr. GOOD. I do not know as to that; I was not aware that the resolution had actually passed. I knew it had been introduced.

Mr. OLIVER. My understanding is that the resolution has passed the Senate, and that it was not a joint resolution. May I ask if the inquiry by the committee developed the expense incident to the retention of these ships by the Shipping Board in their present condition?

Mr. GOOD. I do not know that I catch the gentleman's thought.

Mr. OLIVER. I remember noticing that it was claimed by the Shipping Board that a very large expense was incidental to the further retention of those ships, and I was anxious to know whether the inquiry of the gentleman's committee disclosed what that expense was to the Government?

Mr. GOOD. The investigation that the committee made of the matter did not extend to the question of the actual maintenance and upkeep outside the reconditioning of the ships. The committee felt that inasmuch as this matter was in Congress and would be disposed of by this Congress in some way, authority given one way or the other, that this nominal charge for maintenance would be paid. Some of those ships have not yet been returned to the Shipping Board from the War Department, unless returned recently. The Shipping Board has in mind the leasing of these ships if they are not sold or reconditioned, and if they do the maintenance will be taken care of by the lessee.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Will the gentleman permit me to answer there? The Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries did have considerable hearings involving evidence from the chairman of the Shipping Board, showing what the cost to the Government of the upkeep and maintenance of those ships in their present condition was at this time, so that perhaps the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDMONDS], who is a great rememberer of details, might give at this point some very definite recollection of that.

Mr. EDMONDS. If the gentleman will permit, I would like to say I do not remember exactly. Of course, a great many of these German ships are in operation, and have been in operation. Some have been tied up, and of course when tied up it is going to cost considerable money for wharfage, watchmen, and men necessarily on board. I do not remember the exact sum, but on some ships it will be considerable.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I was simply stating I thought it was a considerable sum and I thought that my colleague from Pennsylvania might perhaps remember.

Mr. EDMONDS. It is a considerable sum.

Mr. GOOD. Of course, it is not comparable to what is being asked to recondition them?

Mr. EDMONDS. Not at all.

Mr. GOOD. A very small item.

Mr. EDMONDS. If the gentleman will yield, the disclosures in the committee showed the depreciation of these ships is about 3 per cent on their age, and it shows that Government reconditioning, at the price the Shipping Board says it would cost, would involve a loss of over $6,000,000, taking into consideration the price in the bids the last time bids were opened for those particular ships. And I would like to say, further, I fully agree with the suggestion of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations in regard to these ships. They ought to be sold before, not after, being repaired and reconditioned.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I will.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. The bill that we were preparing and did prepare left the discretion in the head of the department to sell or not to sell. It simply left it with him as a proposition to be acted upon in his best judgment, which I think is the best course to take.

Mr. GOOD. It seems to me that that is practically all that can be done. It is an administrative function pure and simple, one that Congress can not deal with except to grant the power.

The committee have been impressed with the fact that the Shipping Board has been miserably and poorly managed. It has had at the head of it some very eminent men, and in making the statement that it has been poorly managed I do not wish to reflect upon the business judgment or executive ability of any of the very able gentlemen who at different times were placed at the head of the Shipping Board. I am led to make that observation because of a policy that ought not to have been followed at all; a policy that has resulted in confusion and extravagance. In the first place, Gen. Goethals and Mr. Denman were placed there. Why Gen. Goethals was tied up with a man who did not want to go no one even knew. Following them was Mr. Hurley, and then came Judge Payne, and then Admiral Benson. This enterprise, involving a property valued at more than $3,000,000,000, ought to have had at its head one of these men from the beginning to the end, so that there might have been a national policy, a continuous policy, and a program of economy all the way through. One man simply got his chair warmed when he went out, and another came in, and so on, and as a result to-day the Emergency Fleet Corporation do not know where they stand financially; they do not know how much money they have; how much they owe; and do not seem to have a decent set of books. It is a national disgrace.

It is deplorable that an arm of the Government handling so much of the people's money and producing so much in the way of ships has not been conducted in a businesslike way from the start to the finish, and the difficulty is not with the ability of the men at the head, but with the unbusinesslike policy of changing them with almost every change of the moon.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. When this Shipping Board was first created, Mr. Denman, of California, was placed in charge of it, and there grew up such a controversy between him and Gen. Goethals that both Gen. Goethals and Mr. Denman resigned. After that Mr. Hurley was placed in charge, but it was in the hurly-burly of war, and what the gentleman says by way of criticism during his administration was largely and unavoidably correct. But as soon as Mr. Payne took charge of the administration, I want to say that, having made some investigation, he exercised most remarkable capacity in bringing order out of chaos.

Mr. GOOD. I agree with the gentleman entirely. He ought to have been left there. He ought to have been kept there. That is what I am complaining about. It is this thing of moving men from one place to another, that is so prevalent in many of the departments to-day, that is a crime and a waste of public money. They can not do good work in that way.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Just one suggestion in connection with that. I think the gentleman is probably right—that we have never had any better administrator than Mr. Payne. He brought about a systematic organization of bureaus, an organization of the different departments, and so when he retired he transmitted to Admiral Benson a very perfect system.

Mr. GOOD. I have but the kindest words for each of these men. I would not lay anything at their doors. Each one was able to do the work and do it well, but about the time he was able to do his best work he was ousted; some one else came in and had to learn the business.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. One thing further. Admiral Benson had been connected with the shipping interests considerably, and my recollection is that Mr. Payne stayed for quite a while in the office in order to induct Admiral Benson into all the knowledge he had of the matter.

Mr. GOOD. Of course Admiral Benson has a great knowledge of shipping. He is a man of great executive ability, but who knows when he will be out and some new man put on the job? No matter how efficient the man you can not get the best out of him until he learns his job, and when he learns it he should be retained; drafted, if need be.

SUPERPOWER PROJECT.

The superpower item of this bill is unique, perhaps. It is, I believe, a vitally important one.

Government can not stand still. It must advance. It must provide for a healthy growth of every useful governmental activity. Throughout the bill will be found numerous items making adequate provision for a normal and healthy growth. This policy can be best illustrated by the provision found in the bill providing for a survey of power production and development in the United States. The bill carries $125,000 for that purpose.

The Director of the Geological Survey and the Director of the Bureau of Mines called attention to an alarming condition with regard to the supply of fuel oil in the United States. The Director of the Geological Survey estimated that the present rate of consumption would exhaust the total supply of fuel oil in the United States within 20 years. The Director of the Bureau of Mines estimated that the supply, based on present consumption, would be exhausted within 10 years.

This statement in itself was sufficient. The committee investigated the subject thoroughly for the purpose of ascertaining whether some substitute for fuel oil could not be found. The bill provides for a Government survey of the entire power situation covering the territory stretching between Boston and Washington. This survey will be made by scientific experts employed by the Government to ascertain the feasibility of utilizing coal at the mouth of the mine and at tidewater and the surplus of power made by large manufacturing and power plants within the territory.

The survey is a practical undertaking. Its results can be seen and roughly appraised in advance. The survey, moreover, is not new. A few years ago the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Co. made a survey touching the matter of power used on its lines. The result was the electrification of their entire system. Prior to that time when the system was electrified, 8 pounds of coal produced 1 horsepower. After electrification it required but 4 pounds of coal to produce 1 horsepower.

The saving to be effected by manufacturing in the utility plants in the small territory where it is proposed to make the survey will exceed, according to reliable estimates, $30,000,000 per year.

The survey provided by this bill is essential. Without it, it would be difficult, if not impossible, to interest the capital necessary to develop the superpower project.

The survey represents Government initiative and cooperation, which will result in savings to the country of hundreds of millions of dollars annually. It will result in a great saving in the direct cost of fuel. It will furnish a reserve source of power for transportation and utility companies, which will be of large value in times of labor disputes and other emergencies. The principle can be applied broadly. Its benefits will accrue to towns and villages and to the farms of the country.

Mr. Chairman, I want at this time to express my very hearty appreciation of the splendid service and cooperation of every member of the Committee on Appropriations.

The work of that committee has been unusual. During the war we made appropriations often without question. The mere suggestion that money was necessary to carry on the war and a request for it brought forth the appropriation. Now, however, that the war is over, and with these heavy overhanging war expenditures, with the expenditures running along with, if not exceeding, the revenues, it becomes more and more necessary for the committee to examine the estimates in detail, to study them carefully, and to arrive at sound conclusions in regard to the appropriations. In this great task the Committee on Appropriations has done what I believe to be real teamwork. I am very happy to say that, so far as members of the subcommittees that prepared this bill are concerned, for more than two months they have given unsparingly of their time and strength to the preparation of this measure. Their work was without bias or partisan tinge of any kind.

I can not too strongly express my very high appreciation of such splendid service. With no motive actuating them except to perform a real Government service, these associates in a very large measure are entitled to the credit for the reductions made in the estimates and for the policy adopted by the committee. [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, before I proceed to discuss one or two provisions in the pending bill I desire to refer very briefly to a statement that was issued by the majority leader, the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], on Thursday in anticipation of the introduction of this bill and to which my attention has been called.

The statement issued by the gentleman was to the effect that this was the last of the great supply bills to be reported to the House for the next fiscal year, and that the reduction in the estimates for all of the various appropriations required for the fiscal year amounted to $1,500,000,000 in round numbers. He referred to that as a saving which had been made by this Congress to the Treasury of the United States.

I have heard some gentlemen on the majority side of this House refer to some of these reductions as a saving, in the course of political speeches made on the floor, but I confess

I was very much surprised when the gentleman from Wyoming, who has had such a long and splendid career in this House, broadly claimed a reduction of estimates submitted by the departments to be a saving on the part of Congress or a positive proof of its economy. I was equally surprised when the gentleman from Iowa, the distinguished chairman of the committee [Mr. GOOD], in the course of his remarks this morning referred to the various reductions made in the estimates on appropriation bills as a saving to the Treasury.

In the sense that Congress fails to appropriate the amount of money estimated for, it is a saving, provided we are willing to assume that the administrative departments would wrongfully expend all the money that was appropriated for their benefit, even though it might not be needed during the next fiscal year for the ordinary and necessary activities of the Government. But if, on the other hand, it be intended to have the inference drawn that this Congress by reducing the estimates in the amount named has acted differently from preceding Congresses, then I take issue, because there is no well-informed man who does not know that it has been the uniform custom of all Congresses, whether Democratic or Republican, to largely reduce the estimates which come to Congress from the various departments.

As the gentleman from Iowa stated, the estimates have been reduced for the next fiscal year by about one billion and a half dollars. If that is to be called a saving to the Treasury then I want to call your attention to the fact that for the fiscal year 1918, when both branches were Democratic, the estimates were reduced in the sum of $5,554,161,598.31. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

If you measure the reduction during 1918 by the same yardstick with which the gentleman from Wyoming and the gentleman from Iowa seek to measure the reduction of the estimates for the next fiscal year, I submit the record for saving made by a Democratic Congress for 1918.

I took pains, gentlemen, to examine the records of a number of preceding Congresses to see just what the action of those Congresses were on the estimates submitted by the departments. I find that in the past 12 years, with only three exceptions, every Congress, whether Republican or Democratic, has largely reduced the estimates submitted by the departments. One of those exceptions occurred in 1917, when both branches of Congress were Democratic, and there was an excess of appropriations of something like $79,000,000 over and above the estimates. You gentlemen who were in Congress at that time will recollect that that was due to the fact that after the estimates had been submitted by the Navy Department Congress decided to adopt a preparedness program—a new shipbuilding program for the Navy. On that account a greater sum was appropriated than was originally estimated for, but the estimates for all other purposes were largely reduced.

The other two exceptions were for the fiscal years 1911 and 1912, when there was an increase over the estimates submitted by the departments. That was the Sixty-first Congress, and at that time it had a Republican majority in both branches. With those three exceptions, I repeat, there has not been, within the last 12 years, a session of Congress which has not largely reduced the expenditures below the estimates submitted by the departments, and I dare say if you go back further you will find the same to be true.

Let me call attention to some of the reductions that were made for the year 1916 and prior years when the majority in Congress was Democratic, and when appropriations were being made for normal activities of the Government in something less than a billion dollars to carry on the expenses of the Government. Congress reduced the estimates more than $20,000,000 in 1916. For the fiscal year 1915 the estimates were reduced more than $30,000,000. For the fiscal year 1914 they were reduced more than $38,000,000. For the fiscal year 1913 they were reduced more than $10,000,000.

I have already referred to the fiscal years 1911 and 1912. For the fiscal year 1910 they were reduced more than $38,000,000, and more than $49,000,000 for the fiscal year 1909.

I cite these figures simply to show the absurdity of the claim put forth that merely because this Congress has reduced the estimates submitted by the departments six or eight months ago it has made a saving to the Treasury, and that the mere fact of reduction shows economy on the part of Congress. The only way you can learn whether Congress has been economical is to compare the appropriations for the next fiscal year, two years after the war has come to a close, with appropriations made for similar activities for the prewar period. I lay it down as a fact that can not be disputed, that all supply bills for the next fiscal year, carrying appropriations for the same activities that were provided for before the war, will show a greater sum for those particular activities than was appropriated by a Democratic Congress before the war began.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I will ask the gentleman if that is not the fact even with respect to activities that do not pretend in any manner to relate to the Army or naval activities?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman is entirely correct. It was stated by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] that for the fiscal year 1916 the sundry civil appropriation bill carried $125,000,000, while this bill carries $428,000,000; but, as the gentleman from Iowa clearly said, there should be deducted from the $428,000,000 something like $282,000,000 for activities growing out of the war. However, when the appropriations for those particular activities are deducted, it will be seen that the pending sundry civil appropriation bill carries something like $145,000,000, as compared with $125,000,000 for the fiscal year 1916. It may be said, as the gentleman from Iowa has well said, that that is merely a normal increase, and I am not disposed to quarrel with him upon that proposition. Perhaps it is, but I wish to repeat that if you will compare the bills for the next fiscal year with the appropriation bills which were passed before the war, you will find that there has been no reduction and in many cases there has been a substantial increase over the amount appropriated before the war started.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I was interested in the figures the gentleman cited to the effect that all Congresses make smaller amounts of appropriations in the aggregate than the estimates sent by the departments. I notice that the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] gives out weekly and semiweekly statements to the press respecting the economies effected in this Congress. The question I desire to ask is whether, according to the standard of economy on which he bases these figures and claims a saving of a billion and a half dollars, by the same standard previous Democratic Congresses under this administration have not saved from five to six billion dollars?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman is entirely correct.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. But the whole thing is really a piece of sophistry which can only fool the people.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. But it does not deceive anyone in Congress, nor do I think it will deceive any well-informed man in the country. I may say, as further showing the absurdity to which my colleague from Tennessee has called attention, in respect to these statements of the gentleman from Wyoming, that I had occasion to run back over the appropriations recommended by the Committee on Appropriations for the past eight years and during Democratic control of Congress. I excluded the appropriations made during the last session of the Sixty-fifth Congress, which was Democratic, because, as you know, most of the appropriation bills failed on account of a Republican filibuster in the Senate. During the eight years that the Democrats were in the majority on the Committee on Appropriations, in the supply bills over which that committee has jurisdiction, consisting of the sundry civil, the fortifications, the legislative, the District of Columbia, the pensions, and the deficiency appropriation bill, there was an actual reduction of estimates made by that committee in its recommendations to Congress during those years of $9,275,684,891.55. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I insist that if the gentleman from Wyoming, who, as my colleague states, issues weekly and semiweekly statements to the press and has them scattered throughout the country, takes the position that merely because this Congress has reduced the estimates for the next fiscal year one billion and a half it has established a record for economy, he should be fair enough to give previous Democratic Congresses and Democratic committees credit for these sums, amounting to more than five billion and a half for one fiscal year alone. But, as I have stated, everyone knows, or should know, that the mere fact that reductions are made in the estimates submitted by some department head or perhaps some bureau chief is no evidence that Congress has practiced economy in making appropriations. That is clearly a false basis of computation and comparison, for real legislative economy or retrenchment consists in cutting down the amount of fixed or normal expenditures as made during previous years. If you apply this standard, the present Congress has made no decrease in appropriations. On the contrary, it has made an actual increase.

The uniform reduction of estimates by Congress emphasizes the very great importance, particularly at this time, of the passage of some sort of budget legislation. Estimates are submitted without the semblance of businesslike procedure. Before the war, when our expenses were small compared to what they are to-day, there was not such great demand for budget legislation, because it was a comparatively easy thing to raise the amount of revenue necessary to meet the expenses of the Government; but now that our expenses have mounted, until they are four and five times greater than they were before the war, there is all the more reason why we should have some sort of budget legislation.

Since the war came to a close the President of the United States has urged Congress to adopt budget legislation. The last session of the Sixty-fifth Congress placed in the deficiency appropriation bill a provision which would have brought about the appointment of a committee to prepare and present to Congress budget legislation, but that bill failed in the Senate on account of the filibuster to which I have referred. This House last October passed a budget bill, but it has been in the Senate since that time, and only yesterday was taken up for consideration. Even if the Senate acts promptly upon the bill it will be impossible to afford any real or effective relief for the next fiscal year. We have lost a year, so to speak, by the dilatory action of the body at the other end of the Capitol in disposing of the budget bill, which passed the House six or eight months ago. The reason for that is that under the law estimates must be prepared by October 15 and they are sent to Congress upon the first Monday in December. Hence I repeat that if that bill were to become a law within the next few days there would not be sufficient time to establish the machinery and to effect the organization provided for in the bill, so that it could get to work in the departments and render any real and effective service in so far as the next estimates are concerned.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I am happy to inform the gentleman from Tennessee that the Senate has just passed the budget bill.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I am delighted to hear it, but I repeat that it is very unfortunate that it took the Senate something like six or seven months to act on that bill, which was promptly passed by this House at the last session of Congress. It has yet to go through conference, and there is no guaranty that it will become a law at this session of Congress. I have said that the very fact that these estimates are always submitted in large amounts and always greatly reduced by Congress is an evidence of the necessity for budget legislation. It is not strange to one who thinks about it that these estimates are always submitted in amounts much larger than Congress feels should be provided for the actual expenses of the Government.

There is no one vested with authority or the necessary machinery and facilities for the purpose of revising and reducing these estimates before they are transmitted to Congress. They are forwarded, it is true, through the Secretary of the Treasury, but they come from the Secretary of the Treasury just as they leave the various departments of the Government, and the department heads are in the habit of accepting them just as they come from the various bureau chiefs. It is perfectly natural that a bureau chief or even a department head, being required under the law to prepare these estimates in October before they are to go into effect the following July, should be careful that he does not make a mistake in not asking for enough, feeling that when Congress takes them up during the months of January, February, March, and April, within three months of the ensuing fiscal year, their necessity will be fully investigated in the light of the conditions and exigencies existing at such time. Hence it is that under present methods of procedure the estimates are always submitted in amounts greater than it is expected will be allowed. This is a practice which should be corrected, and Congress will prove derelict in its duty if it does not speedily pass a budget bill.

Reverting to the statement of the gentleman from Wyoming, it should be said that it is not altogether fair to the departments to say that their estimates have been pared to the extent of a billion and a half. Take the pending sundry civil bill. The estimates amounted to more than a billion dollars. If you will read the hearings, you will find that the voluntary withdrawals upon the part of many who were asking for appropriations in this bill will amount to more than $225,000,000, thus reducing the estimates by that amount, but for which the gentleman from Wyoming gives no credit. The Navy Department, after sending its estimates to the Committee on Naval Affairs, voluntarily withdrew from those estimates $85,000,000. The War Department voluntarily withdrew $51,000,000 from its estimates for fortifications, and I have no doubt but what in the case of the Committee on Military Affairs and other committees of this House there have been like voluntary reductions.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DOUGHTON. If such large savings have been brought about in the appropriations by a Republican Congress, why have they not been accompanied by some reduction in taxes?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I can not tell the gentleman, for that would necessarily follow if their claim was true. On the contrary, I suspect if these appropriations continue to mount up, that rather than decreasing taxes it will be necessary to increase them hereafter.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. On this question of what constitutes legislative economy in making appropriations, the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] in his weekly and semiweekly statements, which some of the newspapers always carry and publish in full, fixes the standard of legislative economy as the difference between the appropriations made by the Congress and the estimates sent over by the departments. Now, I have the impression that legislative economy means the reduction of fixed current expenditures, not merely the wiping out of even a temporary war bureau or division that has been manifestly created for temporary purposes, but a reduction in what is at least apparently a fixed current expenditure of the Government. Now, if that is not the purpose of real legislative economy, I do not see, to say the least of it, any force in the other theory.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I agree entirely with the gentleman. As I stated a few moments ago, the only way we can determine as to whether this Congress has proved more economical than preceding Congresses is to take the bills which were passed by those Congresses for particular activities of the Government and compare them with the appropriations made for the next fiscal year for similar activities. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I wish to repeat the statement I then made, that if you will make a close analysis of the supply bills for the next fiscal year you will find, just as in the case of this pending sundry civil bill, that in every particular the appropriations made for the same activities which were carried on before the war have been increased by this Congress for the next fiscal year in varying amounts.

Now, Mr. Chairman, just a few words in regard to the pending bill. This bill makes considerable reductions in the estimates, and I want to concur in what the gentleman from Iowa has said that there has been no partisan spirit shown in the consideration and preparation of this bill. The committee has sat daily since February 3 in conducting hearings, which amount to nearly 3,000 pages, upon the various items contained in this bill.

Every member of the committee, regardless of party affiliations, has been influenced by only one desire, and that is to eliminate as far as possible all needless and unnecessary expenses, and in that spirit the Democratic minority, I am sure the gentleman from Iowa will agree, has cooperated fully and freely with the Republican majority. I want to here say that in anything I may have said I have not intended to reflect upon any Member of the House, and particularly not upon the gentleman from Iowa, who is chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. I wish to say that he is a real economist. The gentleman has far vision, he has the courage to act upon these matters as they come before him, and he has been actuated in the preparation of this bill, and in all bills coming before that committee, with the sincerest motives of economy. This bill makes reductions in some particulars which if I had my way I might possibly not have made, because I believe in some particular cases, which it is unnecessary to enumerate, it invites deficiencies during the next session of Congress, which never promotes either economy or efficiency. But that will be after the election, and that may have afforded very good reason to our friends upon the other side for reducing some of these estimates. But in the end it means the reverse of real actual economy.

This bill carries some considerable appropriations, on the other hand, which I would not have been willing to recommend if I had had my way; but, taking it all in all, with the exception of one or two provisions, I give my hearty assent to this bill, and if in some particulars too little has been appropriated, they can be taken care of in deficiency bills later on. But there are two provisions in this bill to which I can not give my assent. One is the item relating to the Shipping Board, the other to the Department of Justice. The Shipping Board, when they submitted their estimates last fall, asked for over $446,000,000 for the next fiscal year. When they came before the committee they stated that if the committee would appropriate their unexpended balance—that is, the balance which would be unexpended on July 1—they would be able to get along with $251,000,000, or, in other words, they withdrew practically $195,000,000 of their original estimate.

It was stated that upon July 1 they would have a balance of something over $61,000,000. They had a building program requiring $225,000,000 to complete at the time these hearings were held, and it was stated that by July 1 they would have expended on that building program $127,453,500, leaving a balance of $97,546,500 to be provided for in this bill. They have now about 400 ships on the ways nearing completion, and it is expected to have very nearly all of those ships completed during the month of October. It was stated that one or two of them might not be completed until next June, but all of them will be completed during the next fiscal year. Therefore it is important, of course, that the Shipping Board should be provided with all the money necessary to complete the building program now under way. In addition to that, it was stated that in the operations of ships they needed $29,000,000 or $30,000,000 by way of a fund to be used as working capital in such operations.

They say they can not operate the ships unless they have some such capital fund upon which to draw. In addition to this, there have been claims filed against the Shipping Board. The unsettled claims at the time of the hearings amounted to $125,000,000. Those claims grew out of cancellations of contracts existing at the time of the signing of the armistice. Those claims were being settled at the rate of about $4,000,000 a month. Certainly if those claims are to be taken up and disposed of, as they should be, they will need from $50,000,000 to $60,000,000 during the next fiscal year for their settlement. As a matter of fact, we may assume that those claims will be adjudicated, as they ought to be, much more quickly during the next fiscal year than heretofore.

Then they need $24,000,000, so they say, for administration. The cost of administration at the present time is at the rate of $28,000,000 to $30,000,000. I am frank to say to you that I think that is a very large sum for administration purposes. So far as I am concerned, I would be entirely willing to give them $15,000,000 or $16,000,000 for administrative purposes, and see how they get along with it.

In addition to that, they need, if they are to recondition the German ships, $44,000,000 after July 1. Now, as the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] has stated, it is estimated it will take $50,000,000 to recondition those German ships, amounting to about 22 or 23 in number. They figure they will have expended by July 1 for that particular purpose $6,000,000 out of funds now on hand, making it necessary to have $44,000,000 to recondition those ships during the next fiscal year.

The gentleman from Iowa says he is opposed to reconditioning those ships, and he practically tells you that if this bill passes as it has been reported to the House there will be no money for that purpose. Now, I do not say, gentlemen, that those ships ought to be reconditioned, but I say that I am not in a position, with the information I have, nor do I believe this House is in a position, with the information it has at this time, to say here and now that we will not recondition any of the German ships. With my necessarily limited knowledge of the matter, I am not willing to assume any such responsibility. I am in favor of leaving that responsibility to the Shipping Board, which has all the facts before it, and permit them, if they see fit and think it is to the best interests of this Government, to recondition them and give them the money necessary for that purpose. If they do not think it is necessary to recondition them, if they do not think it is good business to recondition them, then they do not have to spend the money. It will lie in the Treasury. This bill does not impose any obligation on them to spend the money merely because it has been appropriated.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WALSH. How much longer should we wait for the Shipping Board to change its attitude upon that question? Every time there is a change of personnel there is a change of policy.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not think the Shipping Board has changed its attitude, although I do not speak for the Shipping Board. I am under the impression that some of the present Shipping Board do not believe they ought to be reconditioned. But if Congress is to act upon the proposition, I feel that action ought to be taken after the proper legislative committees of this House and of the Senate have thoroughly investigated the matter and reported a bill on the subject, and that we ought not upon an appropriation bill to undertake indirectly, by denying an appropriation, to legislate upon whether or not the Shipping Board shall pursue the policy of reconditioning the ships.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. BRITTEN. Does the gentleman really feel that these great ships should be left idle pending action by the House as to whether or not they should be reconditioned?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not. I do not think they should be kept idle any longer than is absolutely necessary, of course.

Mr. BRITTEN. That is what would occur, however, if the gentleman's idea should prevail.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. But there is no reason, if this Congress wants to take action, why the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries in this House should not proceed to have its hearings and report legislation very promptly to the House upon the subject.

Mr. BRITTEN. The gentleman, I believe, will agree with me that something ought to be done with those ships. We either ought to recondition them or we ought to sell them.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I agree with the gentleman thoroughly on that. So far as I am personally concerned, I want to see the United States Government sell all these ships as soon as it possibly can, but I do not want to see those ships sold at a sacrifice, nor do I want to see them sold on such terms that foreign Governments and rival commercial nations will be flying their flags over those ships. These ships have been built at great expense to the people as an incident to the war, and I want to see them maintained as a great American merchant marine, flying the American flag, and carrying our produce and manufactured products to every port and every market of the world.

Mr. BRITTEN. The gentleman understands that any sale that was made by the Shipping Board will not carry with it a change of the flag. The sale will be made conditioned upon the registry of the ship under the American flag at all times.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I understand that to be the policy of the board, and I hope it will continue to be.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. In that connection I wish to call attention to the fact that the Shipping Board has been enjoined by Judge Bailey, of the Supreme Court here in the District, from selling those German ships. That case was appealed, it is true, to the Supreme Court, and pending a decision the Shipping Board can not sell them. And, of course, it can not go ahead and recondition them without an appropriation. Consequently, in the absence of a final decision and in the absence of authoritative legislation on the part of Congress, the Shipping Board is necessarily at a standstill on that proposition.

Mr. BRITTEN. I thank you for that information, but is that quite correct, I will ask the gentleman? My impression is, if the Shipping Board has a large amount of money on hand it can rehabilitate these ships right now if it wants to do so. I do not think it is necessary for the Shipping Board to come to Congress for an appropriation.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I think it is, because they have not the funds on hand with which to recondition them. There is no legal reason why the Shipping Board may not recondition the ships, provided they have the money with which to do it.

Mr. GOOD. I will state to the gentleman that the Shipping Board is now spending about $2,000,000 in reconditioning those ships and expects to spend that amount within the next few weeks.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. My recollection of their statement is that they expect to spend as much as $6,000,000 by July 1.

Mr. GOOD. That is what they wanted to do, but I think they have modified their plans.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Well, I think if this bill goes through the House they will not expend any, because they realize that they will not have the money available for the work of reconditioning these ships.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. The fact which I wanted to call attention to was this, that the Shipping Board had under consideration what action should be taken in regard to these German ships, and there was a considerable difference of opinion on the board itself as to whether the ships should be sold or reconditioned. The Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries called before them and heard Judge Payne, who represented one view, and Mr. Scott, another member of the board, who represented an opposite view, and it was during the time that they were discussing the policy and during the time in which they had called for bids to see what could be done that they were enjoined, as I before stated.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Enjoined from making a sale of these ships.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I understand the injunction went to the sale.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. EDMONDS. It is possible that the Shipping Board are not doing anything with these ships that were enjoined in that suit, but they are reconditioning some ships. I could give the names of them if I had a letter here which I have mislaid somewhere.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes. I think the gentleman is correct that they are spending some money in reconditioning ships.

Mr. EDMONDS. It was Mr. Stevens who spoke of that.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes. In that connection Mr. Stevens and Judge Payne both said they had reconditioned one of these ships.

Mr. EDMONDS. That was one. The rest of them had not been reconditioned, and the other German ships were not included in the bidding.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes. I understand the determination of the general policy of the board was brought to an abrupt conclusion by that litigation and by the proceedings and inquiries in the Senate as to what should be done.

Mr. EDMONDS. I think, so far as the German ships are concerned, that is so; but I do not think there is anything in the injunction to prevent their reconditioning the ships. I think they could go ahead and do it if they thought best.

Mr. BRIGGS. Is it not true that the Shipping Board has only been waiting until the policy of Congress could be determined, and has not the Senate been holding hearings with respect to this very policy, so that the Shipping Board later could determine what action should be taken with respect to the German ships?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I think that is true since the injunction suit was brought; but it is also true, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDMONDS] has said, that the Shipping Board was proceeding on a policy of reconditioning some of these ships, and last fall requested that a sufficient amount be appropriated for reconditioning all of these ships.

Now, I want to say this, gentlemen, because I do not want to be misunderstood as to my position in this matter: I do not say that these ships should be reconditioned, nor do I think that Congress ought to take that position on an appropriation bill. I do not think Congress should settle a grave, serious question of that sort until after the proper legislative committees of this House and the Senate have given it thorough consideration and determined upon what they think to be the best policy, and then come before the House and the Senate and ask for action upon the policy recommended by them. But here we had a hearing primarily on the question as to what amount should be allowed to the Shipping Board, and, incidentally, of course, when it appeared that they wanted $44,000,000 to recondition those ships, the question came up as to why they should be reconditioned, and all the various questions connected with it. But the primary purpose of this hearing was to determine what money they should have.

I believe that the thing we should do is to appropriate the money and say to the Shipping Board: "There is the money. We have made it possible for you to recondition those ships if it is your best judgment that it should be done; but if you fail to do so and you are hereafter subjected to just criticism on account of such failure, we are not going to permit you to avoid your solemn responsibility by saying that Congress did not give you the money. We are going to give you the money and let you act on your own responsibility as to whether or not the ships should be reconditioned, unless in the meantime Congress, through its legislative committees, shall by legislation prevent your action in the matter."

That is the reason why I think we ought to have carried $44,000,000 for the next fiscal year in this bill.

Mr. EDMONDS. There is nothing in this bill that allows or prevents the Shipping Board from using the money to recondition the ships. The bill allows them to use the money as they please, does it not?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] stated—and I do not think it can be questioned—that if this bill goes through the House as it is presented there will not be any money with which to recondition the ships.

Mr. EDMONDS. Could not the operation of the Shipping Board become so very profitable that they could find lots of money for that purpose?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes; but I do not think the hearings show any possibility of such highly profitable operations during the next fiscal year.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Does the gentleman mean to indicate that the ships will become a liability instead of an asset?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No; I do not mean to indicate that, but I will tell the gentleman what the hearings disclose on that subject. During the months of January, February, and March the Shipping Board received the net sum of $8,000,000 on account of operations. I am using round figures now. Mr. Gillen, who spoke for the board, said that the major portion of that $8,000,000 was received in the month of January, and that there had been a considerable falling off in February and in March. I asked Mr. Gillen the question whether or not the fact that $8,000,000 was made in the first three months of this year might be taken as a fair gauge as to what would be made during the next fiscal year by reason of the operation of the ships, and he said no; that in his opinion there would be a falling off in rates. He did not say it would be a losing proposition, nor did he say that we would not make money at the rate of $8,000,000 in three months; but I submit that it is not reasonable to expect that they will make so much out of operations next year that they will be able to spend the amount required to recondition the ships.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. If that be true, the gentleman still thinks it would be wise, before proper legislative investigation has been made, to appropriate this money, and then, if it ought not to be spent, to let Congress intervene subsequently and interfere with its expenditure?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Of course, this particular appropriation does not apply to the ships that are now in operation, the cargo ships. These particular ships are now lying idle in port, and nothing can be done with them, and they will necessarily remain idle until they are sold or somebody puts them in proper condition to be utilized either for cargo or for passenger purposes.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. I understand that up to date the Shipping Board have not been unanimous by any means on the question of the wisdom of reconditioning these ships.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I think that is true.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. And without our having thus studied it, the gentleman still thinks that we ought to hold the Shipping Board responsible for what its ultimate decision may be, and make all the funds available that they ask for, to the end that the ships may be reconditioned?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I think so, until after the matter has been given a full and thorough consideration by the proper committee of this House and of the Senate having jurisdiction of the matter. In other words, I do not think we ought in an indirect way on an appropriation bill to legislate so as to prevent these ships being reconditioned and take away from the Shipping Board that responsibility of decision which is theirs at the present time and permit them, so to speak, to pass the buck to Congress. Now, if Congress desires to take action, then Congress should do so; but, in my judgment, this should not be done until after the proper legislative committees having jurisdiction of the subject have given it thorough consideration and reported to this House.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Just one more question.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Would it not be possible to make the appropriation bills coincident with the final legislative report, which would indicate that they ought or ought not to be reconditioned, so that Congress would not necessarily be to blame if after having made an investigation and determined that they should be reconditioned it should then appropriate the money to that end? As I understand it now, even the gentleman himself is not convinced that it ought to be done. The board are divided, and it would perhaps be unwise to make that additional appropriation now.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. This is the bill in which the money will have to be carried for the next fiscal year for the Shipping Board. Now, if Congress should later on decide that the ships should not be reconditioned, or if the Shipping Board should decide that it was poor policy to recondition those ships, the money would not be spent, and the people and the Treasury would lose nothing by the appropriation made in this bill.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Well, of course, we are a little chary in Congress on the question whether money that has been appropriated will be spent or not. I am not so sure but that it would be wiser to keep control of it until Congress had itself determined that the reconditioning should be made, and then let Congress make the proper appropriation.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. If Congress wishes to take some action, it can do so of course; but as was suggested by the gentleman from Illinois a while ago, certainly something should be done to these ships. They should either be sold and the money covered into the Treasury or they should be reconditioned and put into operation, because while they are lying idle in harbor they are costing a great deal of money.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. I understand that, but this investigation to which I refer would, of course, determine that fact. But so long as that fact is not determined, it does look to me as though it is just a little unwise to make these additional appropriations on the faith that the Shipping Board will refrain from using the money.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Here is the situation. There is this difference between the gentleman and myself in the final analysis: The gentleman proposes to take the responsibility here and now of saying that these ships shall not be reconditioned, because his attitude is that the appropriation should not be made. Now, I prefer to take the other horn of the dilemma, to appropriate the money and say to the Shipping Board that "this appropriation does not carry any obligation upon your part to recondition those ships, but here is the money." I propose to say to them: "If the best interests of the United States demand that that money be expended to recondition those ships, then you, under your obligation as shipping commissioners, should spend this money economically and properly; but if the interests of the Government do not demand it, then the money should stay in the Treasury." Now, in the position that the gentleman takes, Congress puts itself in the attitude here and now, without that investigation which I think ought to be first conducted, of saying in so many words to the Shipping Board, "You shall not recondition these ships." In the other case Congress leaves that responsibility to the Shipping Board unless it takes action later on through one of its legislative committees.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CANNON. Congress is not ready now to say that it is going to have these ships reconditioned. How would it do to apply that principle all along the line, and appropriate a lump sum for the general service before we get estimates and recommendations?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Here is the position of the Shipping Board: It has asked for this money to recondition these ships. The Shipping Board has acted upon its responsibility and is before Congress to-day requesting that $44,000,000 be appropriated for that purpose. The estimate for this purpose is now before us and the Shipping Board has not withdrawn it or requested that it be not allowed.

Mr. HICKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HICKS. I was not here when this colloquy began, and my question may have been answered, but I should like to ask the gentleman this question: I assume, of course, that after these repairs have been made to these ships, the selling price of the ships will be considerably in excess of the amount of money to be expended upon them. Has the gentleman any idea what the increase in value would be of these ships over and above the repairs?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I have not; that is one reason I am not in a position on my responsibility as one Member to say that these ships ought or ought not to be reconditioned.

Mr. HICKS. Unless the value is increased by a considerable amount it would not be a wise thing to go ahead and spend the money on making the repairs.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not think, if the gentleman will take the hearings on this part of the bill and study them, the gentleman would be able to satisfy himself on that point. That emphasizes the position I take that we ought not here in this indirect way to direct the Shipping Board or deprive them of the responsibility that is theirs as to the reconditioning of the ships without further investigation, especially when they are before us asking that the funds be granted for that purpose.

Mr. HICKS. One more question: The gentleman's theory, then, is that all the discretionary power as to whether or not the ships should be rehabilitated should be placed in the hands of the Shipping Board?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No; I do not go that far. That is where it is now, but I would not deny to Congress the power to dictate the policy of the Shipping Board, although I do not think Congress is in any position to dictate the policy without investigation by the two legislative committees that have jurisdiction.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. As I understand, the Shipping Board asks for the money to recondition the ships. Is that true?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Will not the fact that we grant this money be prima facie evidence that Congress intends that the ships shall be reconditioned?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. If the Shipping Board thinks it is wise to do so.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Will not the presumption be that Congress is of that opinion?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No; I do not think the Shipping Board would recondition the ships, if in their judgment they ought not to be, merely because they had the money with which to do it.

Mr. EDMONDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. EDMONDS. Where in this appropriation bill are they deprived of the right to recondition the ships if they have the money?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. They are not. There is nothing in this bill to deprive them of the right; but if the gentleman will examine the bill he will find that the total appropriations carried in the bill for expenses of the Emergency Fleet Corporation amount to $131,000,000 plus whatever is made by the operation of the ships.

Mr. EDMONDS. And that would amount to $50,000,000 or $60,000,000.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Not from past experience. Because during the first three months of this year the operating net income was only $8,000,000. Assuming that the operating income will continue during the next fiscal year at that rate, that would only amount to $32,000,000. If you add that to the $131,000,000, you will have for the Emergency Fleet Corporation in this bill $163,000,000. They say that they require $97,000,000 to complete the building program. They also require $30,000,000 as a capital fund to operate the ships, and they require $24,000,000 for administrative purposes. They have claims amounting to $125,000,000, which they are settling at the rate of $4,000,000 a month. So the gentleman can see that the amount carried in the bill is not enough.

Mr. EDMONDS. How about the money that they will collect from the War Department?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. This bill does not permit them to use it. There is $60,000,000 or $70,000,000 which they will probably collect from the War Department, but they can not use it under the terms of this bill, because it limits the fund that can be used to the particular items set forth in the bill, and the sum due from the War Department is not made available.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BRITTEN. I would like to ascertain the gentleman's idea about $44,000,000 expenditure. Is he in favor of appropriating that amount now for the Shipping Board?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. BRITTEN. I take it then that the gentleman intends to offer an amendment at the proper time for that appropriation.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is my purpose.

Mr. BRITTEN. Suppose the amendment should be defeated and Congress not make the appropriation. What disposition is the Shipping Board going to make of these ships? They ought to be put on the high seas, where they are so urgently needed to-day.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not know. If the ruling made by Judge Bailey, of the District Supreme Court, is confirmed by the appellate court, where it is now pending, they will have no authority to sell the ships without action by Congress, and they will have no money to recondition them.

Mr. BRITTEN. They can rent the ships and get them on the high seas; they could do that within a week.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I am glad the gentleman stated that. Admiral Benson stated that he was endeavoring to make some arrangements with the shipping interests whereby they would be willing to recondition the ships at their own expense, and operate them upon proper and satisfactory terms with the Government.

Mr. BRITTEN. These ships should be put on the high seas carrying American products and American people to Europe. The gentleman knows as well as I do that the demand is tremendous for passage to Europe. People will go over in bunkers and sleep in hammocks, not only going over but coming back, and these ships ought to be on the high seas in the interest of the American people.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I agree with the gentleman, that if the Shipping Board can make arrangements so that the ships can be reconditioned by private interests under satisfactory terms to the Government, it ought to be done, rather than have them remain idle. But as the chairman of the Shipping Board stated before the committee, if it can not be done, I think we ought to appropriate the money so that if they are not permitted to sell them they can recondition them.

Mr. BRITTEN. They ought to be on the high seas, and even in their present condition without rehabilitation they would pay a tremendous profit.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Certainly.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Am I correct in understanding that Admiral Benson stated in the hearings before your committee that the Shipping Board has done nothing to ascertain whether the ships can be leased and on what terms they can be leased?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I did not say that he had done nothing. He stated that it was the hope of the board to be able to do something and every effort was being made in that direction.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. It is some two or three months since Judge Payne appeared before the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, and since the agitation in this matter began, when the injunction was issued preventing the sale. Has no progress been made since that time?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not know what progress has been made, but Admiral Benson stated that the Shipping Board was endeavoring to effect such an arrangement. The matter was not gone into fully by the committee along that particular line because we were investigating the estimates submitted for appropriation.

There is another objection that I have to this particular form of appropriation. I have just stated to you that this bill will authorize the use of $163,000,000 for the Emergency Fleet Corporation purposes.

I can realize why the majority of the committee prefer to make those funds available rather than to make a direct appropriation out of the Treasury and have the receipts covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts, because, while the bill will authorize the expenditure of $163,000,000, it does not appear upon the face of the bill, and credit can, therefore, be taken for a reduction of estimates in the sum of $163,000,000 which really should not be taken when you take into consideration that the bill authorizes such expenditure. But I say that it is not good business to permit the Shipping Board to have access to this reservoir with one hand and then with the other hand to another reservoir in order to get money with which to carry on its operations. Here are four or five or six different reservoirs provided in this bill from which the Emergency Fleet Corporation can draw in order to get the amount of money that it is proposed to let it expend.

I say that if we were making this appropriation along business lines and according to proper business policy, we would say to the Emergency Fleet Corporation, you shall have so much money for the next fiscal year, and if it is thought that $163,000,000 is sufficient, then we will make an appropriation of $163,000,000, and carry a provision in the bill covering into the Treasury all of the money they get by way of operations and sales of ships, and surplus and supplies, and collection upon accounts, and so forth. If we were administering our own private funds that is what we would do. Why should it not be done in this case? If we did that, then we would have a clear bookkeeping account with the Shipping Board. Upon one side of the ledger we would have the amount of money that we appropriated, and on the other side of the ledger we would have the amount collected, which has been put into the Treasury.

After all, it comes out of the Treasury of the people, whether we permit them to draw from these various reservoirs and retain this money to themselves or make the direct appropriation out of the Treasury. I shall offer an amendment seeking to make a direct appropriation in behalf of the Shipping Board, and also providing that the money received by them from these various sources shall be covered into the Treasury as part of its miscellaneous receipts.

There is one other provision in this bill to which I make serious objection.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. EDMONDS. Is it the gentleman's intention to have in that lump sum the amount that is to be used for operations?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman means the capital fund?

Mr. EDMONDS. The capital fund, if you want to call it that.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes. They stated that they must have a capital fund of twenty-nine to thirty million dollars, and I think, of course, the Congress should provide that fund.

Mr. EDMONDS. That would be a revolving fund, of course.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. EDMONDS. You would not expect the operating receipts to be turned into the Treasury?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Oh, yes.

Mr. EDMONDS. Only the net receipts.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. If they had $30,000,000 appropriated as a revolving fund, of course the net receipts would be all that would be turned into the Treasury, not the entire gross receipts.

Mr. EDMONDS. I was going to say that if you did that, you would so hamper operations that they would not be able to operate.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Here is the proposition in a nutshell: This bill reappropriates the amount which will be on hand July 1 and it appropriates the amount received during the year 1921 from the operation of ships. I contend that what we ought to do is to require the net income from the operation of ships to be covered into the Treasury. The bill appropriates not to exceed $15,000,000 from deferred payments on ships sold prior to the approval of this act. It seems to me that the proper and businesslike policy to pursue would be to require whatever amount of money they collect from deferred payment on ships to be covered into the Treasury of the United States. The bill appropriates not to exceed $25,000,000 from the sale of plants and surplus materials. That money, I contend, ought to be turned into the Treasury of the United States, as well as the $30,000,000 from ships sold during the fiscal year 1921, which is authorized to be expended. What is the difference in turning that money into the Treasury of the United States and carrying a direct appropriation, appropriating it out of the Treasury? You will thus be able to know definitely just how much money they are expending, and I dare say that if there had not been such a great desire to make a showing in reduction of estimates just that policy would have been pursued.

This was the policy pursued in the case of the fortifications bill passed at the last Congress. We found reservoirs containing hundreds of millions of dollars which came over from the war. That bill carried a provision, to which the gentleman from Iowa gave his assent, for he was a member of the subcommittee, covering into the Treasury upon June 30 of this year every dollar that the Ordnance Department had in those various reservoirs, in order that, beginning with next July 1, direct appropriations should be made for whatever might be needed.

Mr. EDMONDS. The gentleman's idea was contained in the Greene bill, which passed the House here, that all money should be turned into the Treasury and all money spent should be subject to direct appropriation.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Exactly.

Mr. EDMONDS. That is in the Greene bill which passed the House.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I am heartily in favor of that sort of provision. It seems to me to be good common sense and a sound business policy.

Mr. BRIGGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. BRIGGS. What are the estimates of this amount on hand July 1, 1920, and the amount to be received during the fiscal year 1921 from the operation of ships. Is there any reasonable, fair, and accurate estimate of what this amount will be?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The Shipping Board stated they would have on hand July 1 fifty-five millions and five hundred and some thousand dollars; that between now and July 1 they will have expended $6,000,000 toward reconditioning those ships. If they do not spend this sum, they will have over $61,500,000 on July 1. Now, so far as operations is concerned, you can, of course, only determine what the net income from operations next year will be by comparison with what they have been in the past.

It is stated by the Shipping Board that during the first three months of this year the net income was $8,000,000. Now, while Mr. Gillan stated that was not a fair gauge of what might be made during the next fiscal year, because rates are falling, nevertheless if you assume that they will make as much money during the next fiscal year as they made during the first three months of this calendar year their income from operations next year will be $32,000,000.

Now, gentlemen, briefly to another point, because I have taken more time than I intended. There is one other provision in this bill to which I make very serious objection, and that is the appropriation made for the Department of Justice for the detection and the prosecution of crimes. For the current year the Department of Justice has had for this purpose $2,600,000. The estimate submitted last fall was $3,500,000, but the Attorney General stated when he came before the committee that he had always had a record for economy, and he appreciated the importance of the very strictest economy and voluntarily reduced the estimate $1,000,000. He stated that he felt if he was given $2,500,000 for the prosecution of crime that he would be able to get along during the next fiscal year.

Now, the committee has recommended to the House that that estimate be further reduced and only $2,000,000 be appropriated. Now, I think that is a mistake. I believe we should allow the amount of $2,500,000, which, in itself, is a reduction of $1,000,000 from the current year. This money is used by the Attorney General in the prosecution of his campaign against anarchists and the radical agitators over the country. It is also used in the prosecution of profiteers and in the effort to reduce the high cost of living. It is also used for the detection and prosecution of all the other crimes upon the criminal statutes of the United States Government. Now, it seems to me right at this time, when this country is being beset from within by aliens who owe no allegiance to our Government and who are seeking to do all they possibly can to break down and destroy our Government that Congress ought not to adopt a policy which would indicate to them that we propose not to be quite so vigilant or so vigorous during the next fiscal year as we have been during the current year. We can not have domestic peace in this country until our Government has brought about the deportation of these radical agitators and aliens who are now engaged in efforts to break down and destroy our form of government. And so I believe that we ought to appropriate the full amount of $2,500,000 which was asked for by the Attorney General.

We are appropriating for the next fiscal year more than three times as much as we appropriated for the Army in 1916. We are appropriating more than four times as much as we appropriated for the Navy in 1916. We are appropriating something like $450,000,000 for the Navy and over $300,000,000 for the Army, and it is proposed in this bill, in the name of economy, to deny to the Attorney General $500,000, which he proposes to use in his prosecutions against these aliens who have come to this country and who are boldly flying the red flag with the purpose of breaking down and destroying our form of government. When this item is reached in the bill, I propose to offer an amendment restoring the appropriation, not to the amount asked for last fall but to the amount asked for now, which is two and a half millions, and which, as I said, is $100,000 less than was carried for the current year.

Mr. KNUTSON. If I understand the gentleman, he proposes to offer an amendment appropriating two and a half million dollars to deal with the dangerous aliens in this country?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No. The bill carries $2,000,000, and I propose to offer an amendment to increase it to $2,500,000.

Mr. KNUTSON. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that two departments of this Government, having to do with the prosecution and deportation of dangerous aliens, are working at cross purposes, and it is very doubtful, indeed, if this money could be utilized wisely, in view of that fact?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I have noticed what has been said in the newspapers, but I do not know just how far they are acting at cross purposes.

Mr. KNUTSON. If I may say to the gentleman, as a member of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, I have been looking into the matter, and it seems to me that the two branches of the Government should coordinate before we go to work and lavish any more money for this particular purpose.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I want to ask the gentleman from Minnesota, in line of those inquiries, if he does not approve the position taken by the Department of Justice in that controversy?

Mr. KNUTSON. I rather think we all do.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. It is for the Department of Justice that I think this appropriation should be made, so that its activities along that line will not be curtailed. There has been no complaint, as I understand it, upon the part of anybody against the Department of Justice for not being vigorous and active in its efforts to run down the anarchists and the alien agitators. I noticed in the paper this morning a statement made before the Committee on Rules by the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON], in which he took occasion to say, or, at least, he was reported in the paper as having said, that the Department of Justice, in his judgment, had done its full duty.

Now, as to whether or not the other department, or any officer in that department, has failed to do his duty, I do not know, but the Department of Justice is not charged with the responsibility of finally passing upon these cases, but it has the responsibility of ferreting out these particular individuals. When we deny the $500,000, just to that extent we handicap the Attorney General in his efforts to put these agitators up to the Department of Labor, and have the Labor Department pass upon the question as to whether or not they ought to be returned to their own country.

Mr. KNUTSON. Does not the gentleman think that the Department of Justice has probably magnified the danger of the "reds" in this country in order to take the minds of the people off of the high cost of living and the administration's failure to deal with the problem?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not for a moment, and, if the gentleman will pardon me, I do not believe he does.

Mr. KNUTSON. I think they are using it as a red herring to drag over the trail.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I can not believe that the gentleman entertains those views. The gentleman knows that the Department of Justice issued 6,500 warrants for arrests, and 3,500 of those warrants were served. Those men were arrested. More than 500 cases have been passed upon by the Department of Labor, and 249 have actually been deported. The Attorney General deserves the thanks of the country for his able, fearless, and tireless prosecution of these insidious enemies of our country.

Mr. KNUTSON. If the gentleman will permit, my interest in the matter is purely economic and not political.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. And as a result of the work of the Department of Justice, 249 anarchists, including Emma Goldman and Alexander Berkmann, were sent to Russia, and if we had not sent more than those two, I think this Government would have been well warranted in spending the sum of $2,500,000. [Applause.] I hope that this House, when the time comes, will vote to give the Attorney General the full amount which he says is necessary in order to enable him to conduct this campaign.

Mr. KNUTSON. Is there anything in this bill to give the Attorney General money with which to prosecute profiteers in sugar and other necessities of life?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. This fund is available for that as well as for the other purpose.

Mr. KNUTSON. I am very glad to hear the gentleman say that.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I have already consumed far more time than I intended, and I thank you for your very kind and patient attention. [Applause.]

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 45 minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, in the few moments that are allotted to me I propose to discuss the adjusted compensation law for ex-service men and women and the methods of taxation that should be used to raise the necessary funds to carry into effect that statute, if it is enacted. In order to intelligently discuss the question it is necessary to go into some of the history that makes such a law necessary at the present time.

On the 6th of April, 1917, the Members of this House, in response to a request from the President of the United States, cast their vote upon a resolution declaring war against the Imperial German Government, and by an overwhelming vote decided for war. In that resolution was a declaration that "to bring the conflict to a successful termination all of the resources of the country are hereby pledged by the Congress of the United States." So far as I have been able to learn, this is the only time that such a declaration, stating that not only all of the men but all of the money and means of making money were formally pledged to a successful termination of any war, has ever been made. Later on, in May, 1917, after a bitter fight in this House, led on the one side by the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] and on the other side by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], the youth of the country was, in accordance with the declaration of war, conscripted to fight on the field of battle the war into which we had entered.

It is not my purpose to discuss our reasons for entering the war or any feature of it. Consistently upon the floor of this House and every other place I have refused to enter into any discussion of the conflict, leaving that to others more familiar with it, who could discuss it perhaps from a standpoint unbiased by participation in it.

I only discuss it to bring to the attention of the House the fact that every man that did participate in the war came out with certain convictions based upon his experience. They have those convictions, and it is useless to discuss with any man anything upon which he has made up his mind by reason of experience gained in the war. He will not change. The resolution is mentioned only because, from April 6, 1917, the path which we pursued during the war, and must pursue after its conclusion, was laid down so that every man and every corporation had full notice served as to what might be expected from them. Every individual, upon the passage of that resolution, knew that he could be called upon even to his life to fight the battles of the country, and every man and corporation knew that the call might be made for every dollar of his or its property to carry on the struggle. It was assumed that not only physical but monetary sacrifices would eventually be made, and they were made during the war by the great majority of the people of the United States. From the days of Cantigny to the days of the Meuse-Argonne fight men willingly and cheerfully walked through terrific artillery barrages into intensive machine-gun fire; cheerfully braved the dangers of airplane raids and of poison gas, feeling that when they returned to the United States they would find that the spirit of the declaration of war had been carried out, that equal sacrifices would have been made by those who remained at home, and that the soldier would have an equal opportunity with the noncombatant citizens of the country to make a living and receive the benefits, if any, that came from the war. It had been stated by one high in authority that "politics was adjourned," and the average soldier, deprived by rigid censorship from any knowledge of conditions in the United States, assumed that the declaration was made in good faith. On their return to this country, however, it was quickly demonstrated that the financial resources of the country, pledged by the Congress of the United States to a successful termination of the war, had not been given to it, although ample opportunity had been offered to the President, the Cabinet, and the Congress to see that that was done, and as a consequence there has been an unrest among ex-service men that is reflected in the battle in this Congress to try to adjust the profits and compensation of combatants and noncombatants. The issue has been clouded by bitter partisan discussion on the floor of this House by an attempt of leaders of the Republican Party to claim and demonstrate that they are the only friends of the ex-service man, and by the partisan attacks of Democratic leaders to lead the ex-service men to believe that they are the only ones who have stood up for their privileges and emoluments. The discussion has degenerated into such a verbal battle as might be expected between two small children, representatives of each party abusing members of the other party and refusing to enter into a cold-blooded discussion of the facts that should govern our action.

Many Members of this House have participated in the debate, and most of them have made statements which they will later regret. Personally I shall waste little time in the use of personalities upon this floor, because a great issue is involved which I desire to discuss, and the personalities of the men who agree or disagree with me, like all of us, will be soon forgotten. The charge inferentially made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN], that those of us who desire to tax war profits and war incomes are demagogues, should be cast aside as lightly as the inferential charge made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY], that the members of the Republican steering committee represent corporate wealth. Those charges are unworthy of the gentlemen who made them. The facts are that members of my party on this side of the House are extremely anxious to claim for themselves all of the brains, integrity, and virtues that belong to the country as a whole, and members of the Democratic Party on that side of the aisle are anxious to show that they are high-mindedly seeking the good of the American people and are opposed in their endeavors by members of the Republican Party. That attitude assumes a lack of intelligence on the part of the people of the United States and only infantile ability for the men who fought for the Government during the late war and who will be the beneficiaries of this legislation if it is enacted. None of us will for one moment fool or delude the ex-service man and woman of our late war, and however much any of us may talk we will not escape the judgment of those who must pay the taxes which the law will make necessary. From December, 1918, to the present time ex-service men have believed that by reason of legislation they were discriminated against financially as compared with those who remained at home in civil life, and that discrimination to-day must be admitted. At that time and for many years previous the Democratic Party was in power, and if service men and women were discriminated against it was because of legislation for which that party was responsible. They can escape no responsibility until March 4, 1919, when the Republican Party came into power. If the discrimination was permitted to continue, the responsibility is upon the Republican organization, and no words that any of us may use can help us escape that responsibility. Very painfully have many Members of this House who have never fought in any war in which our country was engaged, and men belonging to both political parties, agreed that an adjusted compensation law must be passed, and there will be no party division as to the form of that law. The fight originally in this Congress was to make men see that an adjusted compensation law should be passed and that fight is won. With the exception of a very few courageous men who have strong convictions and are not afraid to state them, the membership of this body, regardless of their political beliefs, are publicly espousing the cause of that kind of a law.

I say courageous advisedly, because some politics must enter into the discussion of any law. I can recall one man—one of the most valuable Members of this House, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD]—who has consistently fought for economy in government, and who has just as consistently led the fight for things that would benefit the service man. He introduced the amendment and fought for the law which increased the compensation of enlisted men from $15 to $30 per month, as shown by page 2390 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for May 16, 1917; he introduced and fought for an amendment which would exempt service men from a portion of their income tax. On the floor of this House and on every occasion, publicly and privately, he has fought for laws that would afford hospital facilities for the sick and wounded and provide for the families and dependents of men who entered the service. There has been no more consistent friend of the service man than that gentleman in any Congress; and, while I disagree with him on the particular statute under consideration, I know that when the rolls are all made up the men who fought will recognize their obligation to him and admire and respect his courage.

The same thing might be said of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], with whom it is well known I have radically disagreed on several occasions. You may be certain that that gentleman will tell you the same thing in his room at the Capitol that he would tell you in a Republican conference or on the floor of the House; and I know the ex-service men, in discussing that gentleman, would say that he has the courage of his convictions. I know that is the record.

Agreeing that the law must be and will be passed, we may therefore ignore temporarily all of the provisions of the statute except that which involves taxation. As was said, the Democratic Party has been in power while the money was raised to conduct the war; the responsibility belongs to that party. If huge fortunes have been piled up—and they have been—that party is responsible. Regardless of what gentlemen on the Democratic side of the House may say, every opportunity has been given by votes on the floor to see that the spirit of the declaration of war, pledging the financial resources of the country to its conduct, should be carried out.

On May 18, 1917, as shown by the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, commencing at line 11, on page 2547, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] offered an amendment to increase the excess-profits tax 30 per cent for the calendar year 1917 and every calendar year thereafter; and I shall insert his amendment and his remarks thereon at that time and the table of net profits of American industrial corporations for the years 1913, 1914, 1915, and 1916, which he had prepared.

Mr. Chairman, as I desire to quote from the RECORD and will not have the time to read all the questions, I ask unanimous consent that I may extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. One would think to read the remarks of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] that he could look into the future and see the problem we were going to be compelled to meet in this Congress. It would be well for the Members of this House to read the things he said on the floor of this House immediately after the declaration of war.

If we had followed his advice we would not have this situation to-day. I will quote from him.

Mr. GOOD said:

Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

"Amendment by Mr. GOOD: At end of line 22, page 8, insert a new section, as follows:

"'SEC. 205. That in addition to the taxes under existing laws and in addition to the taxes imposed by section 200 hereof, there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid a like excess-profits tax of 30 per cent in the calendar year 1917, and every calendar year thereafter, by every corporation, joint-stock company or association, insurance company, and partnership, on that portion of the net profits of any such corporation, joint-stock company or association, insurance company, and partnership in excess of the normal profits of any such corporation, joint-stock company or association, insurance company, and partnership. That in determining the normal profits of any corporation, joint-stock company or association, insurance company, and partnership, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall take the net profits of any corporation, joint-stock company or association, insurance company, and partnership for the years 1912, 1913, and 1914, and the average net profits for said years shall constitute the normal profits of any such corporation, joint-stock company or association, insurance company, and partnership. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall make due allowances for any and all additions to or reductions in the capital invested after January 1, 1915, by any corporation, joint-stock company or association, insurance company, and partnership, on the basis of 8 per cent per annum. In determining the normal profits of any corporation, joint-stock company or association, insurance company and partnership not engaged in business during any or all of the years of 1912, 1913, and 1914, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall in the manner above prescribed ascertain the normal profits of any such corporation, joint-stock company or association, insurance company, and partnership during such time as any such corporation, joint-stock company or association, insurance company, and partnership was engaged in business prior to January 1, 1915; that the normal profits of any corporation, joint-stock company or association, insurance company, and partnership organized subsequent to January 1, 1915, shall be deemed to be 10 per cent on the capital invested: Provided, however, That if the net earnings of any such corporation, joint-stock company or association, insurance company, and partnership shall be less than 10 per cent per annum on the capital invested then, and in that event, an additional tax shall be levied by this section.'"

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, if the amendment I have offered is adopted, quite a number of the oppressive provisions of this bill that impose purely consumption taxes may be eliminated. If adopted, many of the taxes imposed on legitimate industry may be greatly reduced. We are all agreed that we must finance this war, but in financing it we ought to adopt some general comprehensive plan that will reduce the burden on the great mass of our people to the minimum. The plan should be so comprehensive that it would afford a minimum of hardship to legitimate industry. It should at the same time place as much of the burden as possible on those who make abnormal profits out of the war. I believe the English system of taxation for financing the war is conceded by 75 per cent of the membership of this House to be far better than the system here proposed in this bill.

The amendment I have offered will accomplish this and only this: It does not place a penny of additional tax on normal profits. It imposes an additional tax of 30 per cent on war profits. It taxes war profits only. In order to make the amendment harmonize with the text of the existing law and the provisions of this bill, I have designated these profits as excess profits, or profits in excess of normal profits. The amendment can best be understood by applying its provisions to a given case. Take a concern like the Hercules Powder Co., for example. Last year that concern had a net profit of $16,658,873. Under this amendment, if adopted, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue will ascertain what the normal profits of the Hercules Powder Co. were during the three years before the war—that is, for 1912, 1913, and 1914. The normal profits of that concern for those years was, in round numbers, $1,000,000 per year. The amendment does not propose any tax on those normal profits of $1,000,000, but in ascertaining the amount of the tax the Commissioner of Internal Revenue would subtract $1,000,000, the normal profits, from the abnormal profits of $16,658,873, made in 1916. He would find that the Hercules Powder Co. for 1916 had a war profit of $15,658,873. On this he would compute a tax of 30 per cent, and out of these war profits this concern would be compelled to pay to the Government $4,697,661.90. Is there any injustice in such a tax? Would any hardship result from the imposition of such a tax? Would a single man, woman, or child in the United States be compelled to wear poorer clothing or to eat less food because of such a tax? The hardship and suffering through the imposition of such a tax would be reduced to the minimum. No person in this time of stress should be allowed to make and retain a profit like that. My amendment, if adopted, would take 30 per cent of the war profits of every person and every corporation in the United States to support the war. That is what the English system does. Only under the English law to-day they take 80 per cent of the war profits to support the war.

This was in 1917. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] said:

Think of it. This bill imposes only a normal tax on that corporation. It proposes to take no more of the war profits of that corporation than it does of the corporation whose profits have not increased a dollar because of the war. We put a tax on telephone bills, on heat bills, on electric-light bills, water bills—purely consumption taxes—and everyone knows that in these times of stress the bills of the ordinary consumer are more than he can bear. But it is not proposed at all to reach out and make an exception of the class that profits because of the war. These war profits exist all over the country. Men are ambitious to make money, and their avarice too often permits them to raise the prices of the necessaries of life. And if this amendment is adopted it will tend to regulate prices and at the same time it will reach those same large concerns that have been engaged in making a horizontal increase, not only in war supplies but in the necessaries of life, and it will take 30 per cent of their war profits to support and carry on the war.

Then the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] inserted his table of profits, as follows:

Net profits of American industrial corporations.

[Figures shown are the net profits earned for the stockholders after deducting cost of materials, labor, depreciation, overhead, interest, and all other charges. All figures are official, having been taken from the companies' annual reports.]

[1] Deficit. [2] 19 months. [3] 15 months.

The table submitted by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] absolutely checks up with the tables submitted to the Senate on April 24, 1920, by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER], whose remarks are shown on pages 6109 to 6111 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of that date. Both of these gentlemen, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] called attention, three years apart, to the profits of the American Hide & Leather Co., to the profits of the Central Leather Co., to the profits of the Crucible Steel Co., to the profits of the General Chemical Co., and to the profits of the National Enameling Co. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] showed the profits that would be made and desired us to adopt the tax. The gentleman from Kansas called attention to the profits that had been made and desired us to adopt the tax. It ought to be recognized by Members of this House that when we pass legislation in this House it may be defeated in another legislative body, but that it will not be defeated when there is a man like the gentleman from Kansas in another legislative body, in a fight which Members who engaged in the argument with him will never forget.

On April 24, 1920, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] said in the Senate in submitting profit figures:

Profits have been made by Continental Oil, 200 per cent; United Fuel Gas, 200 per cent; Ohio Fuel Supply, 100 per cent; Nonquit Spinning Co., 100 per cent; Amoskeag Cotton Manufacturing Co., 100 per cent; Stutz Motors, 100 per cent; Nashua Manufacturing Co., 100 per cent; American Tobacco Security Co., 75 per cent; Manomet Mills, 55⅝ per cent; Hood Rubber Co., 66⅔ per cent; Crucible Steel, 50 per cent; Cleveland-Akron Bag, 50 per cent; Union Bag & Paper, 50 per cent; Auto-Car Co., 40 per cent; John R. Thompson Co., 33⅓ per cent; St. Maurice Paper Co., 30 per cent; F. W. Woolworth, 30 per cent; Electric Welding of Boston, 25 per cent; Delaware & Cleveland, 25 per cent; Hawaiian Pineapple Co., 25 per cent; Electric Welding Co., 25 per cent; General Chemical Co., 20 per cent; American Multigraph, 20 per cent; Truscan Steel, 20 per cent.

The Standard Oil Co. of Indiana has recently increased its capital from $1,000,000 to $30,000,000, giving its stockholders a stock dividend of 2,900 per cent.

Also, it is instructive to learn that the National Candy Co.'s earnings last year showed an increase of 545 per cent over 1915; that Burns Bros., the largest retail coal dealers in the United States, made a net profit of 40 cents a ton, against 23½ cents in 1916; that the earnings of the United Drug Co., doing a business of $50,000,000 annually, were 242 per cent greater than 1916; that the American Ice Co., which cuts ice by the millions, but not profits, has in the last four years increased its earnings 283 per cent; that the International Cotton Co., doing nearly $8,000,000 worth of business last year, made 39 per cent more money, although it sold 20 per cent fewer goods; that the Pacific Mills' output of cotton and worsted dress goods produced 34 per cent more profit than in the year before the war; and that the excess-profit surplus of United States Steel—the surplus remaining after dividends—has aggregated nearly $500,000,000 in the last five years, although $315,000,000 was spent on improvements.

These patriotic melon raisers, who have made their millions and billions during and since the war, now are urging that the soldiers' bonus be raised by a 1 per cent tax on sales to be paid on every dollar spent by every man, woman, and child in the country, including the ex-service men themselves. Mr. President, I shall favor placing this tax right where it belongs—on war profits—and taking from these huge stock dividends, from excess war profits, and from the profiteers, all that is needful to compensate the men who sacrificed themselves instead of their country, or their countrymen, in time of war.

During the coal strike, while zero cold and privation threatened the people, the price of crude oil shot up nearly 300 per cent, and still is rising. The oil men have the same golden rule as the lumbermen and the sugar barons, namely, their price limit is all they can compel the consumer to pay, and they are scientific compellers. There is none more compelling. They have boosted oil from 40 cents, in 1915, to $3 a barrel and higher, a gain of more than 650 per cent; and while prices are being screwed up a notch or two more "to encourage production" their wives are importing $250,000 works of art from Europe and stopping at no extravagance at home.

The papers told yesterday of a Texas oil company that is expected soon to cut a 400 per cent stock-dividend melon. Each stockholder will be permitted to buy one new share at $100 for every share of old stock he holds. The old shares are now quoted at $850, having risen to that figure from a par value of $100.

It is said the poor man's luxury is tobacco. Its use is so general that it is even considered a necessity by many persons. It is interesting to note in this connection that the contribution to good government of the Tobacco Products Corporation is a dividend balance showing a rise of 1,547 per cent over its 1914 profits, which the smoker had to pay or go without this solace.

Smokers generally will be interested in learning that the General Cigar Co., which in 1906 acquired the property and business of the old United Cigar Co., amassed a net income of nearly 34 cents on each dollar of its sales in 1917, and in 1919 this had grown to almost 38 cents, notwithstanding nearly all 7-cent cigars in the market have recently been advanced to 8 cents retail.

Other upholders of government and befrienders of the poor are the American Hide & Leather Co., whose profits for 1919 were more than three and one-half times larger than those it gained in 1914; the Central Leather Co., whose 1919 profits more than doubled those of the same months in 1918; and the Endicott-Johnson Shoe Manufacturing Corporation, whose profits rose from $2,174,430 in 1915 to $9,791,580 in 1919.

In terms of dividends on its common stock, last year's profits of the American Hide & Leather Co. increased from 44 cents a share in 1915 to $15.52 a share in 1919, or thirty-five times the earnings it distributed in 1915, and they were ample.

During the first nine months of the same year, while the Government was hunting high and low for rampant profiteers, and the price of shoes was steadily going higher and the price of hides was as steadily going lower, the net earnings of the Central Leather Co. increased 55 per cent, or about 103 per cent over the average nine months of 1918. Its accumulated surplus rose from seven and three-fourths millions in 1914 to thirty and one-fourth millions in 1919. Yet despite these swollen profits the public is being warned that shoes are going to cost more instead of less.

Mr. President, for four years wheat farmers, as a whole, have little more than broken even. The size of the American loaf has been reduced for the first time in history, and the price has been nearly doubled. But the net profits of the 15 plants of the Standard Milling Co. have been increased 100 per cent, but not because of increased wages and taxes.

The National Enameling & Stamping Co. makes kitchen ware. Prior to the war it successfully met the severe competition of Germany and earned a fair return on its investment. In three recent years it has run up its net profits 326 per cent, because it could hold up American housewives and there was no one to say it nay. A Wall Street report says this company earned in the month of January alone enough to pay all its fixed charges and preferred dividends for the year. Here is a fine example of unmitigated, overreaching greed.

I have recently received a letter from Lakin C. Taylor, of the Pittsburgh Tin Plate & Steel Corporation. The Pittsburgh Tin Plate & Steel Corporation, with plants or offices in Pittsburgh, New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, Baltimore, Rochester, Cleveland, Buffalo, Cincinnati, Columbus, Albany, Newark, Toledo, and Syracuse, offers to sell me or my friends some of the Pittsburgh company's stock. It writes me under date of March 27 last that additions planned for its mills should increase present earnings over 300 per cent. And, as if this were not sufficiently inviting, points out that "every operating tin-plate and sheet-steel mill has made enormous fortunes for its stockholders, many of their common shares selling at 1,500 per cent premium.

"A similar steel company," so the letter relates, "organized by the head of this corporation earned 77 per cent last year, and the holders of the common stock made a profit of over 1,000 per cent."

Here is one profiteer who cheerfully admits it in writing on his own letterhead sent through the United States mails, which guarantees the facts in that letter are as stated, as the mails of the United States can not be used to defraud. I respectfully refer these facts to the Attorney General.

Profits of the American Sugar Refining Co. were confessedly $15,000,000 for 1919, compared with $12,000,000 for the preceding year, although this corporation's share of the business in the United States has dwindled from 60 per cent in 1900, when it had virtually a monopoly, down to 27 per cent.

During the last few years the sugar companies have declared stock dividends from surplus profits aggregating millions—on which Uncle Sam must now refund income taxes—besides regular and excessive cash dividends. Even the earnings of the American Beet Sugar Co. are expected to show profits of $15 a share for 1919, compared with $6 the preceding year. And sugar is taking another leap skyward, probably to increase the billion of dollars to be exacted in higher profits this year from the American people. Meanwhile sugar imports from Cuba exceed the capacity of the refineries.

Mr. President, the humble banana, controlled by the United Fruit Co., with its fleet of 23 ships, has become a kingly profiteer. Its net earnings for 15 months, ending December last, equal 40 per cent on fifty millions of stock outstanding, rounding up a surplus for the last 51 months equal to nearly 122 per cent. If ten millions set aside as a war-risk reserve fund are added, the total surplus that the United Fruit Co. has piled up within the last four years would amount to 141 per cent. I leave it to you to judge whether it is an unwarranted or a harsh use of words to call this corporation an unmitigated price pirate and profit gouger.

To be complete, a list of examples in profit extortion would include a great many other corporations in the United States. The few that have been cited, and the situation of the people, are sufficient to indicate the magnitude of this menace to our efforts to reach sounder and saner times.

These figures ought to have convinced any man in 1917 or ought to convince any man in 1921 that war profits should and must be taxed.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. KNUTSON. These figures were all on file down at the Revenue Department, were they not, and therefore accessible to this administration, and yet no attempt was made to apprise Congress of the abnormal profits being made out of the war, so that this Congress could tax them?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I think it is but fair to say that they were printed in the RECORD by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] on May 18, 1917, and they have been on file in the Internal Revenue Department all these years, and, of course, the present administration must have been familiar with the facts and should be chargeable with notice in any event.

Mr. KNUTSON. I am speaking of the profits made during the time we were in the war. Of course, we were just entering the war at the time the gentleman from Iowa offered his amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Of course, these figures have been put in whenever an income or excess-profits tax return was filed.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. They have been before the Members on both sides of the aisle all the time?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Yes; I think it is fair to say that they have been before Members on both sides of the aisle all the time, and that the Democratic Party is chargeable with legislation up to the time they went out of power, and that the Republican Party is chargeable from that time on. And at the present time, leaving politics out of discussion, I resent the action of a Member in mixing up a law affecting the ex-service men with a political discussion. I know the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] would not do that any more than would the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON]. [Laughter.]

Now, Members of the Democratic Party, aided by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN], led the fight on the floor for the rejection of the Good amendment, and was surprised and astonished at the desire of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] to tax excess profits and prevent this exorbitant piling up of wealth by individuals and corporations, and he is now surprised that we should attempt to secure any part of it to adjust the compensation of men who fought.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Dakota yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Did I not understand the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] to say the other day that he always voted for the highest rate? Do I understand the gentleman from South Dakota now to say that Mr. GREEN opposed Mr. GOOD's proposition?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I will say to the gentleman that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN], as shown by the RECORD when this Good amendment was up, spoke as follows, saying:

> Mr. Chairman, I am surprised and even astonished at my colleague [Mr. GOOD] in offering this amendment.

Then he gave his reasons for taking that attitude.

Now, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] did not accuse the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] of being a demagogue, as he accuses us now, but by joining with the Democratic majority at that time he defeated the attempt to tax excess profits, as shown by the vote on the Good amendment on page 2552 of the RECORD for May 18, 1917, when it was defeated by a vote of 42 ayes to 103 nays.

Now, it does not come with good grace for members of the Democratic Party at this time to contend that they and they alone wished to tax exorbitant profits, when on the 18th day of May, 1917, when they absolutely controlled this House, they joined with a few Republicans and defeated an amendment which would have taken the profits at the time they were made, have avoided this discussion at the present time, and prevented the piling up of exorbitant fortunes and much of the Great War debt which we have. Different newspaper writers have referred to the fight which we are making against the sales tax and for a war-profits tax as an "insurgent movement." The RECORD does not bear out that statement. At the time this matter was being discussed, as shown on page 2550 of the RECORD for May 18, 1917, the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], now the majority leader of this House, was strenuously in favor of taxing war profits, and as the majority leader to-day he is still in favor of that method of taxation and not a sales or consumption tax, unless he has completely reversed his position. At that time Mr. MONDELL said, on page 2548 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

I should like to have five minutes on the other side—

Referring to the viewpoint I take to-day.

On page 2549 he said:

I am not against the amendment, but I desire to have five minutes.

On page 2550 he said:

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN], a member of the committee, attempts to answer the argument in behalf of the amendment offered by his colleague [Mr. GOOD] by saying that the English system is complex and that he had difficulty in applying it to our situation.

Now, his colleague has shown the House how easy it is for a Yankee to take the basic principle of the English law and write his provisions in a brief paragraph not complicated and easy of execution. The fact is the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] should take the place of the present excess-profits law and the excess-profits tax in this bill, because while our present law is rather illogical and not entirely equitable, the proposition of the gentleman from Iowa is logical and equitable. There should be no war tax on normal profits. We reach normal profits through the income tax, and the only war tax that should be placed on profits is a war tax on abnormal, unusual, excessive profits, and that is what this amendment proposes to do. It would lay no tax at all on a profit that was entirely normal and usual—usual to the business. It would lay no tax on any profit less than 10 per cent, but above the normal, and above 10 per cent it would do what the English law does—lay a heavy tax for the purpose of reaching those who are making abnormal profits out of the war.

There are various sorts of corporations making unusual and abnormal profits out of the war situation. Whether they are doing so under conditions in restraint of trade I do not know. Evidently the Attorney General does not know. He has not been able to find out. No one has been punished for that sort of thing. But we all know that the prices of the necessities of life have advanced steadily day by day, and some people are making enormous and abnormal profits out of those rises in price.

Those are the classes of profits that ought to be reached, and they are not the classes of profits that are reached by any of the provisions of this bill. The excess-profits tax, so called, in this bill is not an excess-profits tax at all. It is simply a plain, ordinary, everyday direct profits tax. A profits tax should be a tax on excess profits, unusual and abnormal profits.

I might say, as a matter of fact, that the Attorney General apparently has never been able to find out that exhorbitant profits were being made, although he had notice served on him on May 18, 1917, that such profits were then being taken. Mr. MONDELL made the statements in 1917 that prove my contention that if he opposes our plan of taxation now he is the one that is insurging, and not myself, because this is his original plan and I simply adopt it. It was the Republican plan in 1917, and I assume that it is to-day. If it is not, it would be a peculiar situation that Republican majority leaders, sound Republicans, would advocate one thing when the Democrats are in power and then advocate something else because they themselves happen to get into power.

The RECORD conclusively shows that the Republicans, when we were out of power, led by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] and the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], were in favor of the system which I advocate now, and I hope it can never be said that the Republican leader of this House is for one thing when the Democrats are in power and another thing when the Republicans happen to control. As a matter of fact I never will believe that the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] is opposed to our plan of taxation and has reversed his position until he takes the floor and states his reasons for the reversal of position. Both he and the members of the steering committee have been accused of fighting an excess-profits and war-income tax, but until I hear a simple, declarative sentence from them I shall refuse to believe the charge.

At the time this so-called Good amendment was before the House it was opposed by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN], who was the recognized Democratic leader of the House at that time and to-day, and a reading of the pages of the RECORD referred to and those immediately following will not show that the voice of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY] or the voice of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] were ever raised in favor of the Good amendment and against the statute which has allowed the creation in this country of 23,000 war millionaires and 69,000 men who have accumulated in profits more than $3,000,000,000. In other words, all this talk that we have had in the last few days with reference to this tax has been political "bunk" by some Republicans who want a political advantage and by Democrats who are seeking the same thing.

I am firmly of the opinion, in fact I know, that a good many Democrats, whose names I shall not mention at this time because I do not believe in personalities unless I am attacked, are doing everything that they can to defeat the adjusted compensation law and would tack any amendment on it that they could which would insure its defeat. I asked the minority leader, Mr. CLARK, the other day if he could assure me that the Democrats would support the tax measure we have been discussing, and I believe he will whip them into line, but a great many of them will be whipped into line because they do not believe we can secure enough votes on the Republican side to write our views into the statute.

As further evidence of the fact that it is not myself and those associated with me who are insurgent, permit me to call attention to the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio, Dr. FESS, as found on page 2552 of the RECORD of May 18, 1917, who stated as follows:

Now, if that result can be reached by refusing to put an excess-profits tax on all the businesses of the country, but rather confine it to a high rate on these businesses making great profits out of the war, as in England, it seems to me it is equitable, it is just, and I do not think that it is an unwise discrimination because of the great emergency. And if the committee is not ready to make some such recommendation in the light of what England has accomplished under the great stress of the World War, to rewrite this particular provision which puts 16 per cent on all businesses, whether augmented profits from war or other reasons, rather than to fix the high per cent on those businesses prospering from the war, then I frankly say I am ready to vote to recommit the bill—send it back to the committee with instructions to bring it in with this war excess-profits provision thoroughly worked out. It is a source of great revenue without great disturbance at a time of great emergency.

This ought to make it apparent to the country and the Members of the House when the matter comes up before the House for discussion that we should have the support of the gentleman from Wyoming and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS], and all of these men who, if they take any other attitude than the one they have advocated, would themselves be the insurgents and we would be the regulars. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEENERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Certainly.

Mr. STEENERSON. The statement has been made that the income-tax returns are accessible to Members of Congress. I think that is a mistake. They are accessible by reason of the fact that the Senate in July, 1918, passed a resolution asking for this information, and it is published in Senate Document 259. I would like to have the gentleman insert the letter of transmittal written by Secretary McAdoo giving the information.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I am glad the gentleman from Minnsota has given that information, and shall be glad to insert it in the RECORD at this point.

The letter is as follows:

Letter of transmittal.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, July 5, 1918.

HON. THOMAS R. MARSHALL,
President of the United States Senate.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I have the honor to refer again to Senate resolution 253, receipt of which was acknowledged by my letter of June 8. The resolution reads as follows:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish the Senate with the following information:

"First. Any and all facts, figures, data, or information now in possession of the Treasury Department relative to profiteering which would in any way enable Congress to deal with the matter either through the present proposed revenue legislation or through enactment of more effective criminal statutes. That such report shall contain a list of all corporations, with the amount of their earnings, which have earned in excess of 15 per cent on their capital stock, as shown by their returns to the Internal Revenue Bureau for the calendar year 1917, accompanied by such statement as will show net earnings of the same corporation for the calendar year 1916.

"Second. The figures showing the amount of money which the Government has raised up to this time since the beginning of the war by taxation and the amount which it has raised by loans."

The information submitted herewith in response to the first paragraph of the resolution was obtained from the income and excess-profits returns of 31,500 of a total of approximately 55,000 corporations in the United States which in the calendar year 1917 earned 15 per cent or more on their capital stock. The corporations included in the list are believed to be representative, as some are included from each of the major groups and most of the minor groups representing the various recognized industries, trades, and occupations comprising the business activities of the country.

The information called for by the second paragraph of the resolution is printed on pages 387–388.

Respectfully, W. G. MCADOO, Secretary.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Those three gentlemen—the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS], and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD]—stated the Republican view, while the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] and those in control of the Democratic Party stated and abided by the Democratic theory.

Cutting out the politics in this discussion we get to this point: It was very apparent that nothing was to be done along the lines of adjusted compensation until approximately six weeks ago, when many Republican House Members joined in a request for a Republican conference with the idea that all of the bills affecting ex-soldiers should be forced to one committee for consideration. Over the Democratic protest, as shown by the RECORD, we sent those bills to the Ways and Means Committee. The Ways and Means Committee, after due consideration, have adopted practically in toto the desires of the American Legion as expressed in a draft of a bill prepared by them. There was little disagreement as to what should be done, except with reference to taxes. Some of the members, both Republican and Democratic, of the Ways and Means Committee determined that the money that was necessary should be raised by a turnover sales tax on each sale from the producer to the consumer. Whatever anyone may say, I know that that was practically agreed upon. That plan of taxation, as so clearly shown by the gentlemn from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR], would have taxed every necessity of life one-half of 1 per cent every time it changed hands from the producer to the retailer.

Mr. KEARNS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I will.

Mr. KEARNS. That is not reported in the bill, and what is the advantage or use in discussing it? It is what is going to be reported or presented to the House.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. It is brought up for this reason: Great objection has been taken by different Members of the House, Republicans and Democrats, because some of us have expressed our own convictions as to the method of taxation. I brought it up to show that if this fight had not been made the agreement for the turnover sales would have been jammed through the House.

Mr. KEARNS. What difference does it make as to the visionary ideas Members of Congress may have had? The only thing we are concerned in is what is going to be presented or what has been presented.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Well, the gentleman has his views and I have mine, and we might disagree as to whether they should go into the RECORD or not. I think when the record is made up it should show the whole transaction and without indulging in personalities, which neither the gentleman from Ohio nor I would do.

It would tax coal one to four turnovers, or a fourfold tax; rubber, three turnovers, or a threefold tax; dairy products, three to four turnovers; sugar, four turnovers; grain, one to six turnovers; steel, four to five turnovers; leather, five turnovers; cotton and wool, five to nine turnovers. Taking, for instance, the tax on shoes, it would mean that the eyelets and hooks would be taxed from two to three times before they ever came to the shoe manufacturer and be taxed from three to four times while they went through the hands of the manufacturers, jobbers, and dealers. Practically every tax on the necessities of life would be from 4 to 8 per cent.

There was a firm determination on the part of some Members of this House, both Republicans and Democrats, to force this consumption tax through, to bring in the bill some time to-day, bring it up under the suspension of the rules Monday, and, with a gag placed in the mouth of every Member of Congress, force him to vote against adjusted compensation for service men or swallow cumulative turnover sales taxes. A great number of Republicans resented and still do resent that action, because no party or party leadership, either Democratic or Republican, can "gag" the membership of this House and remain in power, or has a right to do so. [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The gentleman said there was a determination on the part of both Republicans and Democrats. Will the gentleman name one Democrat who entertained that view?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I will say very frankly to the gentleman—and I know he knows I am telling the truth, while this byplay is going on between us——

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It is no byplay on my part. I want information.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I could name a gentleman on the Democratic side, a Member of the very highest standing, who told me that; but if I should make that statement on the floor of the House it would be conveying information to the House and to the public which was given to me by that gentleman privately——

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. If any gentleman is in favor of that proposition, surely he has no objection to having it stated.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I am not going to attempt for myself to express the opinion of any Democrat, but will let each one of you express your own opinion.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Does the gentleman mean there is only one Democrat who is in favor of it?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I believe there are many more than one.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. What reason has the gentleman for believing it?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. From the statements made to me by that gentleman. And I will say to the gentleman from South Carolina that he may prod me all he desires, but he is not going to get me to divulge on the floor of the House what that gentleman personally said to me.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I was simply asking for information.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. As I said, there was a firm determination to jam this thing through with a gag placed in the mouth of every Member of Congress and force him to vote against adjusted compensation for service men or swallow cumulative turnover sales taxes. A great number of Republicans resent that action, because no party or party leadership, either Democratic or Republican, can gag the membership of this House and remain in power.

We are not responsible to party leaders, either Democrats or Republicans, but only to our own constituents. As soon as it was evident that the American people would back us in a fight against a cumulative sales tax, that feature of the bill was eliminated and another iniquity proposed. In other words, after breaking through the barbed-wire entanglements of the proposed "gag" rule, we ran into another line of defense in the shape of a law which is to raise part of the money through a sales tax and an extremely small part of it through a tax on incomes. The cumulative-turnover feature was dropped and the tax placed on final retail sales. The greatest propaganda that I have seen in the six years that I have been a Member of Congress has been used to force a retail-sales tax down the throats of the American people, not only for the purposes of this bill but with the hope that it will be the fundamental method of raising taxes in the United States for all time to come, so that we may eliminate the income tax. Gentlemen may protest all that they wish that this is not the plan, but they know that this is proposed; that the country is being flooded with propaganda to this effect, and that it is the intention to lower or abolish the income tax. They have even been able to get commercial clubs in my own district and State to indorse the sales-tax theory; and if I did not know that the matter had not been thoroughly discussed by members of these bodies I would assume that they were in favor of a cumulative or turnover sales tax. Now that the light of publicity has been thrown upon this propaganda and the plans of its authors exposed, it is apparent to me that a third line of defense has been prepared, and, in order to escape a clear, clean-cut defeat, the authors of this law are determined that the membership of this body is not going to be given an opportunity to secure a straight-out vote on the sales tax on one side and an excess-profits tax on the other, in conjunction with the adjusted-compensation statute. I expect the move to be made to separate the adjusted-compensation law from any tax feature, so that we can with a whoop and a hurrah pass the compensation law and leave in the nebulous future somewhere the question as to how we shall raise the money to pay the bill. It is a cowardly and ridiculous procedure and a confession of weakness on the part of the men who propose it.

This Congress has had soldier legislation under discussion ever since it met, knowing it would be compelled to raise the money to pay the bill, and if we ever will be prepared to say how it should be done we are ready now.

Anyone who does not know to-day how he thinks it should be done ought to leave this Congress and go into some business that he understands thoroughly and concerning which he can make up his mind.

Since the discussion on the floor of this House the other day, however, when for the first time since I have been in Congress an open agreement was made openly on the floor, some Members have discovered that no "gag" will be allowed to apply, and thereby no sales tax forced upon us, and an attempt will be made to postpone further consideration of the taxing features of the law. That will be done by enemies of the legislation, by those who hope that Congress will pass a law that the President will veto, and while Republicans and Democrats pass the buck back and forth the ex-service man will suffer. We are ready to meet the issue and meet it Monday with a vote. Let the membership of this House decide then whether they want a sales tax or desire to and will tax incomes and war profits. Bills have been introduced and all any Member is asked to do is to vote "yes" or "no," and thereby state his convictions. All we desire is a vote. I can not conceive of any great party or the representative of any great party that is not willing to meet that simple test. The bill which I have introduced, in which I have no personal pride, is not drastic; it is not even retroactive. I would like to make it so, and I think that the replacements that we will secure in some future Congresses will make such a law possible. Personally, I would be willing to accept any amendment which anyone has to offer which would make the law more intelligible or more effective. As yet I have not seen anyone, however, who desires to argue against this law with anything but invective and statements concerning party regularity. The bill which I have introduced, H. R. 13798, simply provides as follows:

For a tax applied to the net income of corporations for the year 1920 to be determined on the following basis:

1. Average the net income of the corporations for the years 1917, 1918, 1919, and 1920.

2. Deduct the average income, war-profits, and excess-profits taxes for the same year.

3. Average the net income of the corporation for the prewar period and deduct that average from No. 2.

4. Deduct or add 10 per cent of the average invested capital for the taxable years 1917, 1918, 1919, and 1920 and the prewar period; take 80 per cent of the remainder. The application of the tax would result as follows: As to the proportion of the invested capital used in 1920, which equals the average amount of invested capital used in the prewar period, the corporation would be permitted to earn exactly the same percentage of return as it earned in the prewar period. As to capital added since the prewar period the corporation would be allowed to earn 10 per cent. Tax applies to the remainder of the net income in 1920 at the rate of 80 per cent, provided that when that rate is applied the actual amount of the tax is not in excess of 80 per cent of the net income earned in 1920.

Now, of course, as has been estimated by the different experts, we will lose 10 per cent of the total amount of tax which we ought to receive by reason of deaths and by reason of the fact that some people have no incomes in 1920; but that is one of the problems and difficulties that we meet with any taxing law. If anyone can object honestly and consistently and sincerely to that kind of a law he has a right to his objection, and he ought to be allowed to make his objection and to vote, and give us the same opportunity.

The corporation tax estimates which show what amount the law will produce are as follows:

Mr. McCoy estimates that the aggregate net income of all corporations for the years 1917, 1918, 1919, and 1920 in excess of four times the average net income for the prewar period, plus the income, excess-profits, and war-profits taxes paid during 1917, 1918, 1919, and 1920, is $3,800,000,000. If you exclude from this computation corporations whose average net income for the years 1917, 1918, 1919, and 1920 do not exceed $100,000, the excess is not more than $2,000,000,000.

He also estimates that the aggregate net income of individuals having an income averaging more than $20,000 for the years 1917, 1918, 1919, and 1920 in excess of the net income of such individuals for 1914, plus income and excess-profits taxes paid by such individuals during the years 1917, 1918, 1919, and 1920, is about $1,318,000,000.

Corporations tax estimates.

	Prewar period.	1917	1918	1919	1920
Number of corporations	180,000	232,000	245,000	260,000	260,000
Net income	$4,123,000,000	$10,730,000,000	$9,600,000,000	$8,900,000,000	$8,500,000,000
Average net income	$23,000	$46,200	$39,200	$34,200	$32,600
Income and profits tax		$2,922,000,000	$3,250,000,000	$1,922,000,000	$1,750,000,000
Estimated net income, less prewar net income, plus 10 per cent of invested capital		$4,722,000,000	$3,550,000,000	$2,822,000,000	$2,550,000,000

Total taxable increase in net income					$3,800,000,000

Individual income-tax estimates.

	1914	1917	1918	1919	1920
Net income over $20,000	$2,000,000,000	$3,883,000,000	$2,560,000,000	$2,563,000,000	$2,550,000,000
Tax paid		565,000,000	1,190,000,000	1,075,000,000	1,000,000,000
Tax paid plus 1914 net income		2,565,000,000	3,190,000,000	3,075,000,000	3,000,000,000
Taxable income		1,318,000,000	−630,000,000	−512,000,000	−450,000,000

These estimates have been carefully prepared. I did not prepare them. We know that practically no Member of this House can prepare estimates of this kind, because some of us are not competent to do it, and none of us has the time to do it, if we take proper care of our other duties. This has been prepared largely by Mr. McCoy, a man who is recognized as the best of the accountants that we have.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MACGREGOR. It was feared that an attempt would be made to hitch onto this proposition the land subsidy scheme which was opposed by most of the Members of this House. What is the view of the gentleman on that proposition?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I desire to be perfectly frank with the gentleman. I have said the same thing privately, and ought to be willing to say publicly what is said privately. If an opportunity were given, I would vote to strike out the reclamation feature of this bill, the so-called Lane-Mondell feature, because I think very little advantage will be taken of it by the service men, and I do not like to see any reclamation legislation or other legislation that can not get through on its own merits be passed through the House by being tied onto soldier legislation.

Mr. BARBOUR. Was not that reclamation feature included in the fourfold plan of the American Legion?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. It was, absolutely; but I take the same attitude that I think every Member of this House takes, that we can not be governed entirely by the view of the American Legion or any organization, however great. I introduced the bill in this House which incorporated the American Legion, but recognize the fact that legislation must be written on the floor of this House and nowhere else. It can not be written anywhere else, and I think any man here ought to have the absolute right to vote his own convictions on any proposition, whether it is indorsed by the Anti-Saloon League, the liquor interests, the American Federation of Labor, the railroad operatives, bankers' associations, boards of trade, the American Legion, or any other organization. We are in a peculiar position on the floor of the House, with some organization continually demanding our votes and saying they are going to get a knife and run it into our backs if we do not do just exactly the way they desire us to do. The life of a Member of Congress is not as easy as some people seem to believe. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, may I have 10 minutes more?

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes more to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. To my mind the questions before us are simple. First, are we willing Monday or very shortly to have a vote on the adjusted compensation law? Second, are we willing to have a vote on the method for raising the money? Those of us who take my view of the matter would say "yes," to both questions and should join with me in forcing this House to adopt a rule indorsing all the provisions of the bonus law as it will be reported, except that feature providing for a sales tax, if such a tax is included. If the sales tax is included with the adjusted compensation law, and no opportunity given to offer a substitute tax law and the gag rule applied, then any Member of this House, however much he might believe in an adjusted compensation law, is, in my opinion, justified in voting against the whole measure, and I shall so vote. [Applause.] If it so comes up and is defeated, it will come up again at once with a rule and a free vote given. If this "gag" rule is adopted, and the bonus law is to be forced down our throats with 20 minutes' debate, without a chance for discussion, under suspension of the rules, I believe the independent Members of this House will vote to not suspend the rules, but that the questions be considered on their merits, considered at once, and settled.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. My time is very short, but I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. KEARNS. The gentleman speaks about a gag rule. I am not in entire sympathy with the bill as it has been presented here, but there can not be such a thing as a gag rule, because that rule can not be adopted unless by a majority of the House.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. If a second is demanded.

Mr. KEARNS. Yes; and if a second is demanded by two-thirds.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. No; if a second is demanded by a majority.

Mr. KEARNS. Then a majority; but how can you call it a gag rule when a majority of this House wants to vote on the bill, if they know what the bill is going to be? That would not be any gag rule if a majority is for it when they know what the bill is.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I can tell the gentleman exactly the situation. The gentleman has asked me frankly and I will answer him frankly. You could put the membership of this body who are in favor of an adjusted compensation law up against the possibility of either voting against the law they desire to see passed or else voting for a sales tax they absolutely disbelieve in.

Mr. KEARNS. But they can vote against the rule, the majority of the House. They can vote again the rule and go into the House with an open field, with amendments.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I am on the Rules Committee, and if they wanted to secure a rule separating this thing, I think I can speak for two members of that committee, and I think the minority leader can speak for some others, and say that you can get a rule that will separate these and have an untrammeled vote.

Mr. KEARNS. But whatever the rule is, we know what it is and what the bill is, and if a majority votes for that rule, knowing what the rule is and what the bill is and that amendments can not be offered, how can you call it a gag rule?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. If it comes in under a rule, it would not be a gag rule, but if it comes in under a suspension of the rules, it would be unfair to the Members of this House.

Mr. KEARNS. But it takes a majority to adopt either of them.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. If you adopt a rule, you have a chance to submit one substitute or one motion to recommit, but if you come in under suspension of the rules, you have the gag applied to you, and either you are recorded against the whole thing or for it, when, as a matter of fact, you will probably at heart be half for it and half against it. [Applause.]

If it does come up under suspension of the rules, and the law is defeated, it will come up with a rule requested by the leader of this House, and come up at once, because no party dares to take the attitude that it will not at least act on this legislation during the present Congress, and no man needs to worry. If the vote is presented, he may demand that he have an opportunity to vote.

I want to say, however, that I think this matter has been to a great extent clarified by the action of the Republicans of the House. The chairman of the great Ways and Means Committee, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY], who has fought for an adjusted compensation law, when many men were opposed to it who now are not opposed to it, has stated publicly that he deemed that the action of the Republican conference last evening eliminated a sales tax from the bill and that other provisions for raising the money would be taken up. I believe that by reason of that fight we have eliminated the sales tax. [Applause.] I want to say that I believe it would have been in the bill if the fight had not been made, and I believe we can trust the gentleman from Michigan. I know that we can trust him to do anything that he says he will do. He says definitely that he is going to bring out an adjusted compensation law, and that he believes the Republicans in the House have spoken, and that there will be no sales tax.

What I have said is Republicanism as I understand it, because I believe that the Republican Party believes in the majorty rule and is always willing to abide by it. The members of the Republican Party are and must be willing that their votes shall be cast on any proposition and must be willing to abide by the results. That is my understanding of Republicanism, and anyone who takes the opposite view is insurging from Republicanism, as I understand it. [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HOWARD].

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, there are few subjects to-day that are disturbing the minds of the citizens of this country more than the extreme high price and unequal distribution of sugar. Sugar is one of the principal commodities and necessities of life. Every family and every person is interested. There is no doubt but that the element of speculation which has entered into the dealing in and the distribution of this commodity has had a very material effect in raising the price of it to the consumer.

For some time the Department of Justice, through the Food Administration and the Attorney General, has been wrestling with this question and making every effort toward a more equitable distribution and the elimination of speculation and the curbing of the profiteer. The price of sugar has very materially increased as a result of resales within the trade. The Department of Justice has been unable to meet this situation because of inadequate legislation, the only means now provided being the licensing system. With the declaration of peace or the repeal of war measures the licensing system will automatically become obsolete and of no value. This would leave the people of this country entirely at the mercy of the sugar speculators. For this reason I have to-day introduced into the Congress a measure seeking to curb this speculation and to remedy the handicap relative to this under which the Department of Justice is to-day laboring.

The measure which I have introduced is largely the result of the special effort that the Department of Justice has been and is making to regulate the distribution and the price of this commodity.

Mr. Chairman, I ask that the bill which I have to-day introduced be read to the House by the Clerk on my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read the bill in the time of the gentleman.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, would it annoy the gentleman to yield for a question?

Mr. HOWARD. No, sir.

Mr. KING. Has the gentleman considered the question involving the speculators in sugar; that is, in reference to the financing of their bills by the Federal reserve bank of the city of New York and the taking of their notes to pay and receiving currency from the Treasury of the United States, and that sugar is the basis of our currency to-day? Has the gentleman considered that feature of it, and had the Attorney General considered that feature of it?

Mr. HOWARD. I can not speak for the Attorney General, but I have given some consideration to it. I think there is too much of it being done.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes, sir.

Mr. COOPER. I received a letter from one of my constituents yesterday complaining of the sugar situation and stating that the sugar in the little town he lived in was now selling for 33 cents a pound. Now, does the gentleman maintain we will have to have legislation passed by the Congress before the Attorney General has any power to act in a case of that kind?

Mr. HOWARD. Sugar is selling in my home town at from 33 to 35 cents at this time, and the investigation made recently discloses the fact that some sugar has changed hands and gone through the hands of speculators from two to seven times, and that from 20 to 70 per cent of the cost of sugar at this time is by reason of this speculation.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill to regulate the dealing in, distributing, importing, or manufacturing of sugar.

Be it enacted, etc., That it is hereby made unlawful for any person handling, dealing in, distributing, importing, or manufacturing sugar willfully to resell sugar to persons in the same trade without reasonable justification. The Attorney General shall by regulation prescribe what shall constitute reasonable justification for such resales.

SEC. 2. Any person violating any of the provisions of this act and the regulations made thereunder, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined not exceeding $10,000 or be imprisoned for not more than two years, or both.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, we who have given this subject study and thought believe this legislation is necessary and remedial, and on behalf of the 110,000,000 consumers of sugar in this country I plead for immediate and favorable consideration by the committee and immediate and favorable action by the Congress on it. [Applause.]

I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. DUNBAR].

Mr. DUNBAR. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, Mr. GOOD, stated that before the high cost of living could be reduced it would be necessary for the expenses of our Government to be reduced. I want to say that one of the principal items entering into the cost of governmental operation is due to the fact of the inflation of the currency, and until our currency is deflated the Government can not expect, in addition to economic operations which are now being used, further to reduce the cost of our governmental expenses.

On March 30 last I presented statistics obtained from the daily financial bulletins issued by the Treasury Department relating to the operation of the Federal reserve banks, showing that for a period of six months, extending from September 1, 1919, to March 1, 1920, we were approaching a paper-circulating medium at the rate of $1,500,000,000 per annum. Since that time the inflation of our currency has not been at the same rate but nearly so, and continues to be a source of anxiety and great concern.

The inflation during March was as follows:

April 1, Federal reserve notes	$3,299,064,875
March 1, Federal reserve notes	3,255,213,250
Increase during month	43,851,625

Our gold coin, including bullion in the Treasury, decreased as follows:

March 1	$2,720,767,606
April 1	2,662,284,553
Decrease	58,483,053

The inflation of currency during April continues as follows:

April 24, Federal reserve notes	$3,335,140,000
April 1, Federal reserve notes	3,299,064,875
Increase	36,075,125

The report of the amount of general stock of gold in the United States is contained in the Treasury reports as of the issue of the 1st of each month. I do not know whether it has declined during this month, but the amount of gold and lawful money held by the Federal reserve agent as security for the Federal reserve bank notes has decreased $36,171,000 from March 31 to April 24.

The amount of Federal reserve notes and the amount of commercial paper, gold, and lawful money held by the Federal reserve agents as security to insure the payment of the Federal reserve notes in existence of even date was as follows:

Apr. 24, Federal reserve notes	$3,335,140,000
Commercial paper	2,815,094,000
Gold and lawful money	1,150,658,000
	3,965,752,000

On June 30, 1919, the Federal reserve notes amounted to $2,694,640,000, an increase of $640,500,000 to date. At the same time the stock of gold in the United States has decreased approximately $400,000,000. The amount of gold and lawful money held as security by the Federal reserve agents amounted June 30, 1919, to $1,113,824,000, as against $1,150,658,000 April 24, 1920.

The percentage of gold to secure circulation June 30, 1919, amounted to 41.3, as compared to 34.8 April 24, 1920.

Unless inflation of our currency is checked, the theory of fiat-money advocates will be vindicated or a panic will occur the severity of which has never been equaled by any in our experience. It was proclaimed in a recent convention of bankers that further inflation of our credit standard must be checked if commodity prices are to decline or even remain stationary. One of the publications of financiers declared that with deflation of currency Congress must reduce its expenditures. Congress has been reducing appropriations, and the expenditures of the Government have steadily been reduced, but coincident with reduced appropriations and reduction in Government expenses the inflation of the currency has continued to increase enormously. I call the attention of the Congress to the fact that the excess of disbursements over receipts, exclusive of principal of the public debt, for the first nine months of the fiscal year amounted to $214,207,713.82.

Deducting from this the amount of $387,720,914 used for the purchase of foreign obligations, which are included under ordinary and special disbursements, we would have had a surplus of receipts over expenditures for nine months amounting to $173,513,200. Under the leadership of Mr. MONDELL, to whose endeavors in relation to economy this House readily responds, I do not understand why it would be necessary to raise additional taxation to pay the proposed bonus to soldiers. The expenditures of our Government, exclusive of the public debt, during the nine months of this fiscal year and for three-month periods amount as follows:

July, August, September	$2,153,856,655.11
October, November, December	1,693,028,454.03
1920.
January, February, March	1,181,291,689.80
	5,028,176,798.94
Revenue for 9 months	4,813,969,085.12
Deficit	214,207,713.82
	5,028,176,798.94

During the first three months of this calendar year the excess of ordinary and special receipts over disbursements, exclusive of transactions affecting the principle of the public debt, amounted to more than $400,000,000. I do not know what items of expense resulting from the war are to be paid by the United States Government, so I am unable to say that receipts will continue to exceed disbursements at a rate as indicated by transactions of the last three months which would amount to more than $1,400,000,000 per year.

I do not understand why the item of $387,720,914 expended for the purchase of foreign obligations and securities should be charged as Government expenditures unless the United States Government never again expects us to realize any money on securities purchased with this money. The Government continues to purchase these securities having so far this month spent nearly $16,000,000 for that purpose as of April 27, 1920.

Covering three-month periods the transactions of the United States Treasury show the following excess of receipts or excess of disbursements for the periods enumerated:

	Excess of disbursements over receipts exclusive of the principal of the public debt.	Excess of receipts over disbursements exclusive of the principal of the public debt.
1919:
July, August, September	$516,010,585.13
October, November, December	100,811,430.09
1920:
January, February, March		$402,614,301.40
Difference, deficit		214,207,713.82
	616,822,015.22	616,822,015.22

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DUNBAR. Can I have five additional minutes?

Mr. GOOD. I will yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. DUNBAR. It is very unfortunate that peace with Germany has not been declared, our troops withdrawn from Europe, accounts balanced, so that we would know our financial liabilities in order that something like an accurate estimate could be made as to how far our expense receipts would exceed our disbursements, except for our floating indebtedness of $3,000,000,000. I believe that if the proposed bonus to be paid soldiers could be extended over a period of several years there would be no necessity to impose an additional tax to be paid for the amount required, and providing that the Federal reserve bank prevent further inflation of the currency. Possibly inflation has gone too far. The business world is full of promoters who should be toilers and producers. Too many left or never had occupation of usefulness and productiveness, having been allured by promotion schemes financed by evidence of indebtedness, converted by the Federal reserve banks into Federal reserve notes, which even the Treasury Department does not designate as lawful money.

Bonds of the United States Government, for which the wealth of the Nation is pledged, are sold below par. Federal reserve notes which have 34 per cent of gold pledged for their payment will continue to decline in value and purchasing power as inflation of our currency proceeds.

We have outstanding about $3,000,000,000 in Treasury certificates. It is unfortunate that these Treasury certificates were not during the war, or shortly after, funded by an issue of bonds so as to have cleaned up our floating obligations. If the Federal reserve banks continue inflation of the currency and a panic ensues, the demand for the payment of these tax certificates, which fall due at intervals, might give embarrassment to our Government and add to the general confusion of the times. Except for this floating indebtedness staring us in the face, I feel sure we could enact new revenue laws reducing the amount of taxation and eliminating some of the objectionable features of the present law. [Applause.]

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I will yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. McARTHUR].

"THE ROCK OF THE MARNE."

Mr. McARTHUR. Mr. Chairman, "Marne" is a name indelibly inscribed on the pages of history. It was at the Marne in September, 1914, that the French under Joffre turned back the German hordes in their mad dash toward Paris; and it was at the Marne in July, 1918, on the selfsame ground that a single regiment of American Infantry, with some aid from the Artillery, once more stemmed the German tide and rolled it back in defeat, earning thereby for itself and its gallant colonel the proud title, "The Rock of the Marne." [Applause.]

World military annals report few feats that equal, and none that surpass, the deeds of the Thirty-eighth Regiment of Infantry under the command of Col. Ulysses Grant McAlexander in the second Battle of the Marne. "On this occasion," says Commander in Chief John J. Pershing in his final report, "a single regiment of the Third Division wrote one of the most brilliant pages in our military annals. It prevented the crossing to certain points on its front, while on either flank the Germans who had gained a footing pressed forward. Our men, firing in three directions, met the German attacks with counterattacks at critical points and succeeded in throwing two German divisions into complete confusion, capturing 600 prisoners."

Glory enough, it would seem, for one regiment of American Infantry to have defeated two entire divisions of Germans—six regiments of infantry plus artillery and auxiliary troops. The significance of the victory comes only when one has a clear understanding of the general military situation in July, 1918, and of the particular importance of the position in the allied line held by the Thirty-eighth Regiment.

In the summer of 1918 the German forces were again in motion toward Paris. Their hopes for success ran high. The Kaiser had set July 17 as the date for his triumphal entry into the French capital. The race was between the Kaiser and the Americans. Barrier after barrier the Germans hurdled or smashed through until they arrived at the Marne.

Between Chateau-Thierry and Dormans—

Wrote Maj. Gen. J. T. Dickman—

the Marne is a navigable stream, which flows in a deep valley. The crest of the banks is about 400 feet above the level of the river. The strategical feature of the stretch of 20 kilometers between Chateau-Thierry and Dormans is the valley of Surmelin Creek. This valley furnished the only good opening toward the south. The railroad and two good wagon roads in this valley running toward Conde en Brie and Montmirail are indispensable for the line of supply of an army crossing the Marne.

The Surmelin Valley was, indeed, the gateway to Paris. The sector along the Marne where it is joined by the Surmelin was held by the Thirty-eighth. On its left lay another American regiment, on its right a French division. The Germans knew the great strategical value of the Surmelin Valley and were prepared to enter it at all costs. On the other hand, Col. McAlexander was aware of the necessity of holding it against the enemy. Defeat or retreat spelled disaster to the Allies. [Applause.]

McAlexander typified the Regular Army at its best. A graduate of West Point, he had served in the Indian wars and had been cited for conspicuous gallantry in Santiago in the Spanish-American War. He had seen service in the Philippines. He was one of the first officers to be sent to Europe and had been afforded ample opportunity of studying the German style of warfare.

But training and experience are not the only requisites of the successful leader. McAlexander was the incarnation of the fighting spirit, and, furthermore, he possessed the ability to communicate this fighting spirit to his men. On one occasion he said:

Do you wish an invincible, unconquerable regiment? Then organize it, administer it, train it, and fight it along invincible and unconquerable lines. Imbue it with a pride that scoffs at danger, inspire it with a soul of intrepidity and honor and make it to know that its defeat is impossible; that it may be killed, but that it can not be conquered.

[Applause.]

The story of the Thirty-eighth at the Marne is that of a regiment of men who might be killed but could not be conquered. They had been trained in the McAlexander school—"along invincible and unconquerable lines"—and they knew that for them defeat was impossible. How fortunate for the allied cause that this was so.

The great outstanding fact in the battle of the Thirty-eighth against the German hosts at the Marne is that of regimental unity. Every unit, from battalion to corporal's squad, acted in complete harmony of command. Had there been one weak link in the regimental chain this tale had been one of military disaster instead of military glory. The men had implicit faith in their officers, and over all was the McAlexander fighting spirit and genius. The colonel was always in the fight. No matter how long the march or how dangerous the battle line, McAlexander was always at the head of his men. [Applause.] Indeed, when the distinguished-service cross was conferred upon him the citation related that he had gone ahead of his men in full view of the enemy, thus leading his men by force of his example to the successful assault of enemy positions. Two wound stripes attest to the risks he ran. One of his captains relates how, in the thick of the Battle of the Marne, he came upon the colonel between him and the enemy. Going to McAlexander he said, "Colonel, don't you know that nothing can live in this place?" To which Col. McAlexander laconically replied, "Well, while we are yet alive let's give 'em hell!" Small wonder the regiment possessed an invincible, unconquerable spirit. [Applause.]

The evening of July 14 found the regiment ready for any emergency. It was arranged on principles of "formation in depth." Near the river and along the Metz-Paris railroad, which paralleled the river, lay the Second Battalion, under Maj. Rowe; back of it was the First Battalion, under Maj. Keeley; and last, the Third Battalion, under Maj. Lough. Col. McAlexander had gone over the ground carefully, and, to the surprise of his officers, had ordered trenches dug on the right flank between himself and the French. He was going to take no chances of an unprotected flank in case the French division on his right retreated. This evidence of military foresight, as was proved later, saved the regiment from annihilation and turned certain defeat into victory.

As midnight of July 14 approached an ominous stillness filled the air. Instinctively the men of the Thirty-eighth felt that something unusual was about to transpire. Their suspense was of short duration. Exactly at 12 o'clock the German artillery opened fire. The sector was swept for hours, until it would seem no living thing could have escaped. But the Americans, huddled in their tiny dugouts or open slit trenches, awaited the attack which was sure to follow. How they longed to come to blows with this deadly thing which threatened to stifle the freedom of the world, to see it face to face, to meet steel with steel!

At about 4 o'clock the bombardment was lifted and a rolling barrage took its place. Back of the barrage came masses of gray-clad Germans, two divisions strong, with a third in support. At the river boats were loaded and pontoon bridges were built. But here again McAlexander's military genius evidenced itself. Instead of withdrawing all his men from the river bank, he left a strong detachment there. I believe it was the French general, Degoutte, who phrased it "McAlexander fought with one foot in the water." It was not exactly orthodox, and to the Germans it was another example of American ignorance of military science, but like many another American innovation in the World War it proved its worth. The American riflemen on the bank of the Marne destroyed boatload after boatload of Germans. It was the proud boast of the Thirty-eighth that no Germans were able to cross the river in the sector held by it. [Applause.]

Farther to the left and right, however, the Germans did effect crossings, and advanced against the Metz-Paris railway line a short distance from the river. Here, too, they met a resistance which they could not overcome. Charge after charge failed to carry them across the railroad track. No German graves are located behind this line, but there are about 600 between it and the river. The Thirty-eighth paid heavily for its resistance, but the line held.

In referring at a later date to this phase of the fight, Col. McAlexander said:

There was only one thing that saved us, and that was the spirit of kill or be killed. And I want to say that I was willing to sacrifice the regiment and myself with them rather than yield 1 foot of ground to those Germans. I gave orders to my men to hold their sector until they had orders to retire, and they were just as anxious to hold their ground as the colonel was to have them hold it. The books say that when your casualties have reached one-third you are out of action. But I want to tell you of one company that, when 70 per cent of its men were casualties, organized the remaining 30 per cent in a countercharge and captured 410 prisoners.

[Applause.]

Need our schoolboys turn to Leonidas at Thermopylae or Miltiades at Marathon for tales of heroism after such a recital as this? Surely the story of McAlexander and the Thirty-eighth at the Marne will find its place in our histories alongside that of Jackson at New Orleans and Thomas, the "Rock of Chickamauga." [Applause.]

On the flanks another chapter was being written. The American regiment on the left had given ground and the Germans were filtering through against the Thirty-eighth. On the right the French division had retired. The Thirty-eighth thus had to defend itself on the front and both flanks. It was here that Col. McAlexander's plan of defense bore fruit. The Germans had begun an encircling pincers movement to cut off the regiment, and but for the precaution that had been taken to protect the right flank in case of retirement of the French they would have been successful.

Messages sent back from the front lines to the commanding officer tell tales of grave danger, but ring with fighting determination to hold at all hazards. For example, in reply to a message of encouragement from Col. McAlexander directing him to hold on, Maj. Rowe wrote:

We have no intention of withdrawing unless we are completely outflanked. At present Boche machine guns are troublesome on right flank. If French counterattack in time, we shall be O. K. We must thicken the lines to-night and have ammunition and food and carrying parties from rear. There are many German rowboats on river which should be destroyed before night. We are weary but proud.

[Applause.]

"Invincible and unconquerable." How Americans must thrill with pride on reading such a message.

For three days the fight on the flanks went on, the Germans striving desperately to open the gateway through the Surmelin. An order came to Col. McAlexander: "Fall back if you think best." "Is it up to my decision?" he asked. "Yes." "Then I hold my lines." [Applause.]

What was there back of this heroic determination to hold the lines at all costs? Aside from the strategic position occupied by the Thirty-eighth, there was the question of morale.

It was our part—

Said Col. McAlexander—

to so impress the Germans with our fighting ability and our wish to fight them that their morale would be destroyed to the extent of seeing great forces brought against us with no prospect of their success.

Did this fight affect the morale of the Germans? Let the Germans themselves answer:

Our retreat across the river (Marne) was awful: those Americans certainly did clean us up * * * they fight like tigers * * *. If those in front of us are fair specimens of the average American troops, and there are as many as they say there are, then goodbye to us.

This from the notebook of a member of the defeated Sixth Grenadier Regiment, a crack fighting unit.

Nor was recognition of the importance of the Thirty-eighth's victory lacking among American and French officers. Maj. Gen. Dickman wrote:

In the fighting on the front and flanks of the Thirty-eighth Infantry, the enemy's losses were so great that his offensive was completely shattered and the attack was not renewed. The regiment was still in good condition and its fighting capacity was unimpaired.

The defeat of the enemy on the Marne July 15, 1918, definitely marked the transition for him from the offensive to the defensive. The heroic stand of the Thirty-eighth Infantry stopped the enemy's advance toward Paris and made possible the counterattack at Soissons three days later.

One of the brightest pages in the history of the American Expeditionary Forces was written on this day by the Thirty-eighth Infantry, and no soldier can have a prouder title than ability to state that he fought with the Thirty-eighth Infantry in the defense of the Marne.

[Applause.]

A French officer who had witnessed the action wrote, in part:

The youthful soldiers of the Thirty-eighth Regiment did their job finely, showing themselves quite equal to our own best troops. Having received orders to hold on at any cost, they got killed only after having accounted for at least three times as many of the enemy and succeeded in maintaining the integrity of their front. * * *

Col. McAlexander, commanding the Thirty-eighth Infantry, showed himself to be a remarkable leader, cool-headed and efficient. He is liked and respected by men of whom he, on his side, has every reason to be proud.

When, at a later date, the award of croix de guerre with palm was made to Col. McAlexander and to the regimental colors of the Thirty-eighth, Gen. Petain, commander in chief, cited the regiment as follows [translation]:

Thirty-eighth Regiment of American Infantry, an elite regiment, which, under the energetic and intelligent command of its chief, Col. McAlexander, gave proof of unshakable tenacity in the course of the German attack of July 15, 1918. Attacked on the front, assailed on the right and left over many kilometers, faithful to its instructions, it remained, despite everything, on the bank of the Marne, hurled back the enemy, superior in numbers, and took over 200 prisoners.

According to French high command, the action was "peculiarly American both in conception and execution."

Yet this was not all. On the night of July 21, when the worn-out heroes were preparing for the first real sleep in a week, orders came to be ready to advance in the morning. The great smash was on. The German offensive had broken at the Marne and the tide had turned, never again to ebb until the Hindenburg line was pierced and the Germans, face to face with the greatest military disaster in history, signed the terms of the armistice.

There was no rest for the Thirty-eighth until the end came. "Let us cherish within our hearts the memory of our fallen comrades. Salute them! Then forward!" These words, worthy of immortal fame, are taken from Col. McAlexander's general order of July 27, 1918, to the officers and men of his regiment.

Honors came—medals for bravery—promotion—in Europe. But at home, how many knew of the deeds of McAlexander and the Thirty-eighth? It is a matter of record, reported by no less an authority than Maj. Gen. David C. Shanks, that when the regiment returned home no welcoming committee was at hand to greet it. Let us not attribute the lack of appreciation to the proverbial ingratitude of republics but rather to ignorance of the facts. The American people simply did not know.

When the real story of the greatest war in all history shall have been written, then will the deeds of McAlexander and the Thirty-eighth Regiment of Infantry shine forth in their true light and a grateful Nation sing the praises of the "Rock of the Marne." [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McARTHUR. I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. RIDDICK].

Mr. RIDDICK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks on the peace treaty.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Montana asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks on the peace treaty. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

HE KEEPS US OUT OF PEACE.

Mr. RIDDICK. Mr. Chairman, House joint resolution 327, passed by the House of Representatives April 8, 1920, was supported with practical unanimity by Republicans and opposed with practical unanimity by Democrats.

This was a resolution "terminating the state of war declared to exist April 6, 1917, between the Imperial German Government and the United States."

The debate on this resolution demonstrated anxiety on the part of the Republican membership of the House to end the war and of administration Democrats in Congress to prevent the official termination of the war and the consequent curtailment of the war powers exercised by the President.

Extracts from the debate in the House make clear the grounds upon which Republican Congressmen pressed the peace resolution.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DONOVAN].

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the automobile situation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the automobile situation. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKINLEY].

Mr. McKINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask to extend my remarks by inserting an article written by Mr. Elisha Hanson on the budget.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by inserting an article on the budget written by Mr. Elisha Hanson. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DICKINSON]. [Applause.]

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, in the beginning of what I wish to say I want to evidence my appreciation of what was done by the Committee on Appropriations in putting in this bill the full amount of the estimate relative to the care and transportation of the remains of soldiers buried in France. With some reluctance and some hesitation I speak at all on this subject particularly, having spoken once at the close of another general debate when there were only a few present, and I know that what I shall say now will be heard by only a limited few, and what shall appear in the RECORD will be read by only a small per cent of the Members, for the RECORD is not extensively read. But I am intensely interested in the subject-matter about which I am permitted to say a few words. I have not been satisfied with the delay that has attended the executive departments and the legislative branch of the Government dealing with the question of the removal and transportation from abroad to this country of the remains of the soldier dead. With great rapidity the troops of this country were carried abroad to meet the emergency of that great situation. Relatives all over the country expected the agreement entered into between France and this country to be carried out at the earliest practicable moment. It was then stated while the soldiers were being returned that the bodies of the dead could not be returned until the soldiers themselves had been brought back, and that was reasonable. It was suggested by those in high authority that they would commence to bring them back in the fall, probably in the early fall, but I read here statements which I saw for the first time to-day in the hearings before the Committee on Appropriations in answer to questions by the chairman of the committee addressed to Maj. H. R. Lemly:

Since you were here the other day, Maj. Lemly, there has been transmitted to Congress a supplemental estimate of $21,549,000 for the disposition of remains of officers, soldiers, and civilian employees. When you were before us the other day you stated that the remains of the soldiers who are buried in France would not be returned.

Maj. Lemly said that that was true at that time.

The CHAIRMAN. I understand there has been some change in the negotiations between France and the United States in this respect?

Maj. LEMLY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the situation at present?

Maj. LEMLY. They are to be brought back; all that the families request for are to be brought back, which makes about two-thirds of those over there.

I call attention to the fact that, without any utterance on the part of Congress whatever, it seems to have been determined in military circles by those in high authority, notwithstanding the agreement entered into between this country and France, under which it was agreed that the remains should be brought back after the termination of the war, that the bodies should be left in France. I have not thought, and I do not now believe, that that was a matter that ought to have been finally settled by any officer in any department of the Government; but if it was to be settled, it ought to have been settled by a positive expression on the part of Congress, representing the expressed wishes of those most interested. A controversy arose by reason of utterances of different persons, some in high authority, and the program and policy were changed. Numerous resolutions were introduced in this House. Hearings were had before the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and I have regretted, with the understanding of what was the general sentiment in this House and a large majority sentiment in the country, that Congress has not declared its wish and the wish of the country relative thereto. [Applause.] This agreement entered into in the summer of 1918 ought not to have been lightly set aside against the desire of the people of this country or the relatives of those who are buried in France, particularly when it was within the province, in my judgment, of the American people to speak through their authorized representatives here.

I have kept up with the entire matter from the first, and I understand that those in high authority yielded their judgment and their views, and that renewed negotiations were entered into by which the agreement heretofore made between this country and France was restored. And I believe it is understood by a large majority of the relatives of those who are buried in France that wherever the nearest relatives have requested the bodies be returned this Government will respond to it. And the solemn promise has been made to these people. That promise I now believe will be kept, and this Government can not afford to break its promise with the relatives of those who lost their lives in foreign countries. [Applause.] I speak to-day because of the fact that I have received hundreds of letters expressing the heart's desire to have the bodies of those dear to them brought back and restored to them, so that they could be buried near their own homes, where they could be looked after by the tender hands of mothers and sisters. I have one letter from a mother who lost her only son in France, and who is buried there, that says she has offered this Government, through Secretary of War Baker, to give back all the war-risk insurance—$10,000—for the return of the body of her son, and to go after her son's remains, and pay all the expenses of bringing back his remains to be buried in this country before she shall die. I insert her letter:

SOUTH PASADENA, CALIF., April 6, 1920.

Hon. C. C. DICKINSON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: My nephew, J. G. Whiteside, secretary to Congressman WINGO, of Arkansas, sent me your speech of January 27 on the subject of bringing home our soldier dead. I read every word of that speech, and let me congratulate you from the depths of my sad heart. My prayers go out to you for success in this great work. May God give you strength to carry this bill through Congress. I am one of the heart-broken mothers who gave her only son in this miserable war. He is Pvt. Jacob Hawthorne Moles, of the Sixty-seventh Company of the Fifth Regiment, United States Marine Corps. He was killed at the Battle of Blanc Mont Ridge on October 4, 1918. My only son, Mr. DICKINSON. This boy, as well as myself, were born in the wonderful State of Missouri at St. Louis. We were compelled to come to California, and he enlisted from Los Angeles. I have written to almost everyone that I thought would help me. I have offered this Government, through Secretary of War Baker, to give back all the insurance—$10,000—my dear child left me if they would only give me back his dear body, so I will know when my last hour comes that we will be united in death. I have never been given one word of encouragement. I have also offered to go after my child's remains, paying all expenses myself, and still they will not give me what is mine. This boy did not wait to be called. He enlisted when he did not need to go. I am asking how much longer I will have to wait. This is my only desire in life, and when it is accomplished I am willing to give up this struggle. Please, Mr. DICKINSON, if possible, help me. I am so sad at heart; the days are so dark without my dear child. I will appreciate anything done for me in this matter. Again let me say that my wishes go out to you for success. I am thankful that one man feels the heartstrings of us suffering relatives. I gave all I had to give. May the blessings of God be with you.

Respectfully a soldier's mother,

Mrs. HENRIETTA MOLES.
1115 Montrose Avenue, South Pasadena, Calif.

That is only one of hundreds that have come to me, and I desire to press this thought upon this House, because in this country it is believed by many that Congress is all powerful. You and I know that Congress does not always have its will and way, but in a matter of this kind I regret that some declaration, embodied in some resolution, has not been adopted, so that France and other countries where these soldiers are buried might know what is the declared wish of this country and put an end to this question, about which there should have been no controversy, in my judgment.

It is settled now, I sincerely hope, that wherever the written request has been made by the nearest relative the faith of the Government is pledged that the body of the soldier will be brought back. But it is a question now of delay.

In his speech of to-day Mr. GOOD of Iowa, the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, in response to a question asked by Mr. BLAND of Missouri, stated to this House as follows:

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. Is the amount appropriated for the return of the bodies of dead soldiers from France thought to be a sufficient amount for that purpose?

Mr. GOOD. It is thought by the committee that the War Department will not be able to expend anything like the amount carried in this bill during the next year. My opinion is that we could have cut that item by five or six million dollars and not have delayed for a single day the bringing back of a single body from France.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. And would have brought all of them back that the parents and wives desire brought back?

Mr. GOOD. No. I do not believe that the work can all be done during the next year. It is proposed to bring back 50,000 bodies and to prepare for reburial in the cemeteries of France, as I recall, about 25,000 additional bodies. That work can not all be done during the next year. If England and the other countries should also require that the bodies of their soldiers be taken from France you can see the congestion that would result, and you might bring on epidemic in that portion of France if attempt should be made to do this work all at once.

The work must be carried on with some degree of common sense and good judgment, but it was the opinion of the committee that inasmuch as Congress had already taken action in the matter, and inasmuch as France had now given consent to the return of the bodies of our dead, we should grant the appropriation asked. There has been a disposition on the part of some people in the Government service to pass the buck that the committee felt that inasmuch as it would require $21,500,000 to bring back the bodies of our dead soldiers that it would be best to grant the appropriation at this time, even to the cent that was asked for by the department, so that the bereaved mothers and fathers and families of boys who lost their lives on the other side could not under any circumstances receive word from the War Department that the bodies of their dear ones were not returned because Congress had refused to grant the appropriation, and that is likely what would have happened if we had reduced the appropriation.

Over there in France lies a nephew of Congressman BLAND of Missouri—a brave and gallant soldier, Maj. Bland, of Kansas City, Mo., who was killed in action at Thiaucourt in the Battle of St. Mihiel, and now lies buried near the town of Thiaucourt for more than a year, and his devoted wife has been over there watching over the grave of the husband who gave his life for his country, and she waits with longing heart the day when she can come back with his body to be buried on American soil.

I have felt that this country, that was willing to spend so much to send them across, would be willing to appropriate an amount ample to meet all the necessities and costs and expenses of bringing them back at a reasonably early date. [Applause.]

It is estimated that between 50,000 and 60,000 will be brought back in response to the written requests of their relatives, at an expense estimated at $500 for each soldier. That would be over $25,000,000. And yet the amount as set out in the report apparently is not sufficient to meet all demands for this purpose. I quote from the report:

Another large increase for 1921 over 1920 is the sum of $13,200,000 for the return to the United States of the remains of American soldiers who died abroad in the recent war and the segregation in permanent American cemeteries in France of the remains not requested to be returned. It is estimated by the War Department that approximately 50,000 bodies will be returned to the United States at an average cost of $500 and that approximately 25,000 bodies will be segregated in permanent American cemeteries in France at an average cost of $200, making a total approximated cost for both purposes of $30,000,000. There has been previously appropriated for this purpose approximately $8,500,000, which is continued available for the next year by this bill, and an additional appropriation of $21,500,000 is recommended, thus placing at the disposal of the War Department the entire estimated cost for this purpose.

Thereby verifying the statement of the chairman of the committee that the amount of appropriation as provided in this bill is not sufficient to meet all the demands, thereby causing a delay, I fear, for another year or until some subsequent additional appropriation is made.

As I said, I appreciate the fact that those in charge of this appropriation appropriated every dollar asked by the War Department. I had been in hopes that the War Department would ask for an appropriation at this time abundantly ample for the return of all, without delaying the bringing of any, where requested. The anxiety in the breast of those who are weary of delay ought not to be increased by any neglect of executive or legislative authority.

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKINSON of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. KING. I am very much in sympathy with the remarks being made by the gentleman here, but can he enlighten us on what influence has been at work against the influence of this Congress and the people of this country to keep those bodies in France?

Mr. DICKINSON of Missouri. Ah, I am reluctant, more reluctant for personal reasons, to mention names or to review the history of the effort made by those more powerful than the humble citizens whose sons are buried there, which has had, I fear, a great influence, in the first place, in reaching the conclusion that they should not be brought back, and, subsequent thereto, in bringing the delay, with more delay now promised, by reason of the facts now within the knowledge of those who have sought information.

Mr. KING. Does the gentleman think that the spirit of profiteering in France and in the city of New York amongst the bankers on foreign exchange and the steamship companies and the automobile companies in France and the hotels in France have had anything to do or any influence in this matter?

Mr. DICKINSON of Missouri. I have no desire to enter that field or to thrust that into what remarks I see fit to make. It would take a long time to say what I might think or what has been uttered in the press and said one way and another. I have no desire to say an unkind or unfriendly word about those who differ with the relatives and with me in their desire to have their own returned to this country. I did regret a recent utterance made in a public speech deploring the fact that there was a desire on the part of relatives to have the bodies of their dead brought back, the speaker not being aware that the arrangements and agreements between this country and France had been completed, by which the matter was settled finally; but I have believed, and still believe, that the failure of Congress to speak and the injudicious speaking of certain men in high places did have much effect on the action of those in authority in France in heretofore failing to give earlier consent to the removal of the soldier dead.

I do not care to question the motives by which men are actuated and charge that there was any selfish reason behind it. I can not believe that any influence of that kind would have any weight with this Government. I hope it would have no weight with Congress. Whether that influence was sought to be brought forward here or abroad, that power, if foreign, would disappear if this Congress had spoken; it would have no influence when those in authority in this Government would demand or request of France that all obstacles to the return of the soldier dead should be removed. I know and you know that no foreign government or country would refuse to permit the return of the soldier dead, particularly from that country where so many lie and where so great a service was done by this country to that country.

Now, the thing that I am interested in and the thing I wanted to call attention to is that it has been a matter of regret, as the chairman seemed compelled to state for the information of the House, that the amount asked was not sufficient to meet all the demands of this service. I hope he is mistaken. I hope the estimate is ample. When the soldiers were returned there were abundant vessels to bring them back. If transportation facilities were not ample, there were transportation facilities in the possession of this Government at one time.

The delay now, I understand, has been due, as they say, in part, to want of coal. I understand that this Government has offered to provide the coal. The latest, as I understand it, is that those within the war zone shall not be returned before the middle of September, thereby making it possible that they may not all be returned within the next fiscal year. I hope all can be returned long before the end of the fiscal year; I had hoped within the calendar year.

Now, I have said more than I intended to say on this subject. I wanted to express a regret that the amount might not be large enough, and also to express regret at the delay. I wanted positive and early action. I want expedition of service. I know the wide difference of opinion on this matter.

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Chairman, will my colleague permit a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield to his colleague?

Mr. DICKINSON of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. RHODES. The gentleman states that he knows there is a wide difference of opinion. I will ask him if it is not a fact that the figures show that at least 75 per cent of the people who have been asked by the War Department whether or not they wish the bodies of their relatives returned have expressed a desire for the return of the bodies?

Mr. DICKINSON of Missouri. Yes; I understand that. But what I mean is there is a wide difference as to the other and smaller percentage who desire the bodies to remain over there; the option was left with them; and the difference is very wide between those who want them back and those who want them to remain buried and cared for in foreign cemeteries. I have feared, however, that they were an influential minority. I have no criticism of those who hold a different view from that of those who want their soldier dead to be returned to this country. I desire no controversy with those of different thought and feeling relative to their own soldier dead.

Mr. PARRISH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKINSON of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. PARRISH. I understand that a man has been sent from the War Department to France to confer with the authorities there with a view to the speedy return of the bodies in the war zone, and I understand also that that representative was expected back here the last of April. I was wondering if the gentleman had any information as to the report that he brought back as to just when the bodies could be removed. I am very much in sympathy with my friend and colleague, and concur in everything he has said with reference to the matter.

Mr. DICKINSON of Missouri. I have no late information as to when Mr. Hays, sent over by the Secretary of War, and also the representative of the Quartermaster's Department will return. This matter is being especially looked after by Col. Pierce, who is at the head of the Graves Registration Service.

Mr. PARRISH. I was anxious to know whether they had brought back any report. The last information I had was from the Secretary of War, and he said he thought they would start to actually remove the bodies by the 1st of September. I was wondering whether there had been any change in that program.

Mr. DICKINSON of Missouri. From what conversations I have had and what information I have received I have a very distinct impression that they will not wait until the 1st of September as far as the bodies that are not in the war zone are concerned.

Mr. PARRISH. They are being removed now.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman 10 minutes more.

Mr. DICKINSON of Missouri. But the delay relates particularly to the bringing back of those who are within the war zone.

Mr. PARRISH. Yes; that was the very point.

Mr. DICKINSON of Missouri. Now, I want to look at it and give absolute and full credit, and I am not here desiring to criticize, except to express regret that they did not make the amount large enough to cover the entire expense.

Mr. PARRISH. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. DICKINSON of Missouri. I had hoped and thought that probably by the middle of September all those not within the war zone would have been brought back. I know it is within the power of this country to bring those back and to expedite the work. It is now a year and a half since the signing of the armistice. The great body of the troops have been brought back, the last of them, I think, in the early fall, and since that time there have been abundant ships to perform this service.

Mr. RHODES. Will the gentleman permit this observation?

Mr. DICKINSON of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. RHODES. I think the War Department claim that the reason they did not ask a larger sum for this purpose was because of industrial conditions and perhaps because of health conditions it was not thought practicable to undertake the more prompt return of the bodies or to enlarge upon the effort that has been made up to this time.

Mr. DICKINSON of Missouri. I understand that has been suggested, but I have talked to parties high in authority, who have informed me that there was no real foundation for that idea. In my judgment, this work ought not to be delayed. I have reached the conclusion that Congress will not express itself at all on this matter, and that it will rest in confidence that the War Department will go ahead and carry out this agreement just as effectively and well as if Congress had spoken. But if Congress had spoken positively months ago, I am sure there would not have been any agreement reached to let them all remain there, and there would not have been any uncertainty in the minds of the authorities in France as to the attitude of this Government, and this delay would not have occurred. There is an unrest in this country because of this uncertainty.

It remains for Congress now to speak by its own prompt action in making the appropriation as asked in the estimate of the War Department.

Mr. MOONEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKINSON of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. MOONEY. The real reason for the delay thus far has been that there has been no agreement reached with France, or had not been until very recently, had there?

Mr. DICKINSON of Missouri. I understand at one time, if Maj. Lemly is right, that there was an agreement that they would none of them be brought back, and the agreement theretofore entered into between this country and France was set aside. Then the Secretary of War opened it up through the Secretary of State and restored that agreement and reached the conclusion that has now been made final, and the transportation has begun.

I desire now to give full credit to every positive act done by any representative of this Government connected with the executive departments. I do not want to be understood as criticizing, but express the hope that there may be no necessity for any action on the part of Congress save to make the appropriation and that the executive department will do all that there is to be done and as speedily as it can be done. [Applause.]

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING].

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman—

Ill fares the land, to hastening ills a prey,
Where wealth accumulates and men decay.

All is not now well with the common people, whose welfare is the concern of all. No greater calamity could befall our country than that the middle classes should be reduced in their modest fortunes or possibly placed upon the road to penury. Yet millions of this class, by reason of their inability to keep pace with the rising prices of necessities of life, are already slowly but surely starting on the downward grade.

How necessary then for the great and powerful to give their earnest and immediate attention to the cries from below, lest the basis of all be crushed, lest the back of the middle class be broken!

HOUSE RESOLUTION NO. 476.

As an aeolian on the window sill tinkles to the first faint breeze of the coming storm, so the delicately adjusted business of the banking house first responds to the slightest indication of approaching disturbances in the financial atmosphere. It is my belief that no honest banker would willingly lend the slightest assistance to any procedure which would tend to debase the people's currency, of which he, by reason of superior knowledge and ability, is naturally the guardian and protector. This belief is strengthened by the remarkable manner in which the bankers of the country, especially in the South, West, and Northwest, have and are supporting the above resolution introduced by me on the 28th day of February and now before the Rules Committee and upon which a hearing will be had on May 4 or 5 next, at which bankers and financial experts from over the country will testify. The hearing, originally set for April 15, was postponed on account of the railroad interruption caused by the strike.

The investigation, if ordered by the House, will be wholly nonpartisan and conducted in the broadest manner. The resolution authorizes a committee of nine Members of the House of Representatives to fully investigate the administration of the Federal reserve act since its passage generally and with regard especially to the alleged enforcement of State banks into the system; competition between reserve banks and member banks; open market transactions; great and unexpected earnings of Federal reserve banks; salaries paid; oppressive policies toward member banks; destruction of the State bank system; intimidation of directors; enforcement of diversified business of the whole country to conform to rigid rules of the Federal Reserve Board; inflation of the currency as affecting the high cost of living; refusal to make loans to member banks secured by Liberty bonds; policy of Federal Reserve System paying for collection of checks rather than permit banks to charge for such service; method of handling clearance deposit accounts and "float"; concentration of power in hands of Federal Reserve Board; and regulation by the board of the conduct of nonmember State banks.

The committee or any subcommittee thereof is given in the resolution the usual powers to subpœna witnesses, compel the production of books, papers, and so forth.

Only one point can be considered here to-day—the administration of the Federal banking act in relation to the debasement of the currency and the high cost of living.

UNREST.

Unrest exists in the Nation.

A thousand reasons, each suitable and sufficient to the individuals who proclaim them, are given for its existence, accordingly as he is disturbed or made uncomfortable, mentally or physically, by his immediate and selfish surroundings.

The ordinary man is more confused than he is restless. For some reason, the exact nature of which he can not divine, he finds himself at a loss to locate the exact cause of his confusion. He looks about him and generally lays the blame upon some condition which is a result of something else and not the real cause of his discomfiture.

Confused and confounded by propaganda of paper organizations for this, that, and the other, by his loss of faith in the press, by the preachments of the professoriate, by the teachings of theorists, the swash of the penny-a-liners, the gyrations of the political medicine men, and the prophecies of the false astrologers, he swoons in his bewilderment and becomes oblivious to the real cause of his discontent, which is his inability to procure for a reasonable price and within his purchasing power the plain necessities of life to which he has been accustomed and where in thousands of cases the prices are absolutely prohibitory.

THE HIGH COST OF LIVING.

The high and the advancing cost of the necessities of life is the cause of 90 per cent of all the unrest in the Nation.

Deprivation of the masses is the cause of political ferment. The cry for bread unfailingly precedes the cry of revolution. The free distribution of corn among the plebians quelled many a crisis in Rome. So far in this country no one but the very poor and unfortunate are in want of bread, but conditions are becoming such that destitution can be seen already in the dress of the middle classes.

Practically the only tailor-made clothes now worn by the middle classes are those obtained before the war. In a mass meeting in Chicago the other day a man in a threadbare suit which he purchased new for $18 before the war said that for a new one like it $67 was demanded. He could not buy it, and was determined when his present rags fell from him he proposed to walk through the streets of Chicago naked.

Celluloid collars have been decreed for the middle classes, overalls are being put on, and soon there will be a demand for a shipment of wooden shoes from Holland.

The philanthropists now commend the cheaper cuts of meat to the "plain citizen."

If these high prices are the result of a course of conduct other than by reason of the uninterrupted law of supply and demand, it is the duty of the Government to investigate and regulate, and it is the sacred duty of those men who occupy the "seats of the mighty" in the business and financial world, to whom the preservation of the Government as established by the forefathers is of such moment, to back to the last sacrifice every attempt on the part of the Government to preserve the great middle classes, and all people for that matter, from exploitation and degredation.

The attempt, by the use of placards, billboards, paid writers, cartoonists, poets, professors, and all the avenues of publicity, to enveigle the masses into the idea that high prices have come to stay and, like death, are to be permanently endured is futile. It is equally unavailing to attempt to disseminate the false cry that the high cost of living is due to the excess-profits tax, lack of production, restriction upon immigration, the want of a Federal tax commission, or that the imposition of a consumption tax in lieu of income taxes, or the creation and financing of manufacturing plants by American money in Europe and other foreign countries employing cheap foreign labor to compete in the American market, will remedy the situation. Most of these suggestions come from the man with an ax to grind.

Neither will it do to lay the blame for the high cost of living upon the moderate people and to say to them, "It is all your own fault; you are extravagant buyers and foolish spenders." The common man pays no more than the price asked. He can buy no cheaper. If he wants a pair of shoes, he finds the price is $25, and he has the choice of taking them or letting them alone. All these hallucinations should be brushed aside.

THE INFLATION OF THE CURRENCY.

John Stuart Mill says:

That an increase in the quantity of money raises prices and diminution lowers them is the most elementary proposition in the theory of currency.

Not even the sky has been made a limit for the issuance of that kind of paper money known as Federal reserve notes. For 20 years gold and silver have increased rapidly enough to keep pace with a healthy growth without the issue of paper money by the banks. Coin, gold, and silver certificates, legal tender notes, national bank bills, and the new stock of gold from Europe gave us an ample supply of money of about $4,713,000,000. Then we adopted the Federal reserve banking act providing for a flexible or elastic currency which has been the means of issuing and floating of about $3,000,000,000 of new paper money by the 12 Federal reserve banks. Under the rule of Mr. Mill prices—not to the farmer but to the consumer—have had to advance to absorb this enormous and unwarranted increase of paper money.

The Federal reserve banks have issued more than four times over more paper money than the 7,800 national banks combined. How much longer will these bankers continue to issue paper money and cause prices to continue to soar higher and higher? You can not bring down prices and inflate the currency at the same time.

Take the case of the reserve bank at Chicago. While the people are endeavoring to reduce the high cost of living this one bank issued $86,458,875 additional paper money in six months ending January 1, 1920. How could a Federal reserve bank do this? Upon what is this money based? What is back of it? Gold 40 per cent, and the remaining 60 per cent is based not upon gold, silver, or precious stones but upon credit—that is to say, debts, particularly upon debts created in transactions involving the staples of life.

For instance, if you knew of an article which was getting scarce and by buying a large amount and withholding it from the market you could force the price up to a point where you could realize a big profit, you would drop around to your banker and inform him of your plan. If you are a good commercial risk, or will secure him with a lien on the article, he will take your note, say, for $100,000 and hand you over the money, which will enable you to hold the goods, after deducting the discount. This note is rediscounted by a Federal reserve bank, taken or sent by it, indorsed, to the Treasury of the United States, and the Comptroller of the Currency will give to the Federal reserve bank notes guaranteed by the Government.

The Federal reserve bank is protected by your signature and the articles. If you fail and the articles are lost while in the process of holding, the Federal reserve bank loses and makes good to the Government.

But, now, suppose articles or staples of life which make up 60 per cent of the basis upon which these Federal notes or paper money to the amount of the issue of three billions of dollars should be destroyed by a fire in one night. It would break the banks, of course, if they could not recover from the signers of the notes out of other property. The Government, having guaranteed the paper currency to the holders of it, would find that it had nothing to rely upon but the broken banks, and thus would be put upon the Government an obligation which it could not stand.

Right here comes in the connection between this inflated currency and the high cost of necessities of life, which, to the extent of 60 per cent, is the basis upon which this paper money rests. As a sudden fire would break the banker and ruin the Government, so any other loss by decay or reduction in price below the figure for which the hoarded articles were purchased would be injurious to the Federal reserve banker, and therefore his interest in maintaining high prices of the commodity stored.

A good example arises at this time. A few days ago there was not a pound of sugar to be had in Washington stores. Recently an item appeared in the financial columns stating that holders of sugar in New York were waiting for a price of 18¼ cents. The transaction is no doubt financed by the Federal reserve bank of New York which discounted and took the notes of the holder, either with or without the sugar as security, and delivered them to the United States Treasury and received Federal reserve notes for the same.

Here is an extract from an article in the morning paper:

Leon Israel & Bros., Wall Street brokers and importers, are charged with selling 500,000 pounds of sugar at 21.5 cents a pound which they bought at 14.6 cents. Israel is a director of the New York Office and Sugar Exchange. The firm has foreign branches and is said to have done a gross business of $25,000,000 last year. Israel tentatively pleaded not guilty when arraigned and was released in $1,000 bail.

What does that mean? How could Leon Israel & Bros. do business if they were not backed by some bank? What bank? The Federal reserve bank of the city of New York. They take their notes, and they put them up to the Treasurer, and the Treasurer issues the money founded upon nothing but speculation in sugar and other foodstuffs.

You may have a $5 reserve note now in your pocket, based upon this sugar transaction. Can you reasonably expect that when this money is based on sugar the price of sugar will naturally fall? The first holder may even sell his holdings to a second holder, who will again be financed by the Federal reserve bank. Our money system has created another formidable middleman—the holder.

One might say that the basis of this currency, the foodstuffs, is inflated by holding or hoarding it. That is a never-ending process. Every time an upward fluctuation of the market takes place a new issue of paper money appears. So we might, with reference to the paper money, reverse the statement of Mr. Mill to read with equal truth:

That a raise in prices increases the quantity of money and a lowering of prices decreases it.

An elastic yardstick of varying lengths would be a poor standard of measure, yet bankers by the permission of the Federal Reserve Board and contrary to the intention of Congress are using an elastic standard of value for their Federal reserve notes in issuing money based upon the hoarded necessities of life.

The elastic standard is stretched to the snapping point, where it is held. To prevent loss they are holding it taut rather than shorten it. How long can it be done? How much better to relieve the tension than to let it snap. Yet I have heard it said by reckless persons that a panic might be a good thing.

IMMEDIATE DEFLATION NECESSARY.

In order to deflate this currency it is not necessary for Congress to pass any additional legislation. It can be done by the bankers themselves and thus prevent the great upheaval which would be attendant upon a panic. This deflation should take place only gradually.

The Bankers' Statistics Corporation recommends as a remedy for the situation a maintenance of present prices and a raise all around to meet them. This would, of course, prevent banks and speculators from losing any money, but would require many years to establish an equilibrium and thousands of wage and salary earners would never in this life overtake the high cost of living.

Increasing the discount rates will not cause deflation, as is shown at the present time. Speculators rapidly accustom themselves to the advanced rate, increase the margin of their profits, and move increasingly forward. A law has been passed permitting a graduated and progressive discounting, but so far has been unavailing.

The sole method of relief is liquidation.

Let there be a gradual paying off of these loans, otherwise there remains nothing to do but to prohibit by law for a time the further issue of paper money. There ought to be a positive provision in the law prohibiting any Federal reserve bank from issuing any currency based upon speculative loans in the necessities of life.

The purpose of House resolution 476 is to proceed in a sane and safe way to investigate the whole field for the purpose of discovering the defects in the administration of the law and applying a remedy in the interest of the people as a whole.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHERWOOD].

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, on Tuesday, the 27th of April, the eloquent gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] paid a very beautiful tribute to Gen. Grant on the ninety-eighth anniversary of his birth. He was the eighteenth President of the United States.

That tribute was printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and brought a very interesting and valuable letter from a prominent ex-Confederate soldier of this city, and that is the occasion of my being on my feet.

We all concede that nothing new can be said of Gen. Grant. History and biography have been busy with his name and fame for over half a century, and history has said its last word. It was that crash of cannon shot against the walls of Fort Sumter in April, 1861, that made the wounded captain of the Mexican War, leading a modest life in Galena, Ill., the leading general of the Union Army and, at the end of eight years as President, the foremost man of all the world.

It is not great men who make the epochs of human history. It is great epochs that make great men. Had there been no Trojan war, there would have been no Homer. Had there been no conflict of the kings in the formation period of English literature, there would have been no William Shakespeare. Had there been no war of the American Revolution, there would have been no George Washington. Had there been no war in sixty-one and sixty-five, there would have been no Gen. Grant.

This letter is not only interesting but it has historical value. Let me read:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 29, 1920.

Hon. HATTON W. SUMNERS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have read with great emotion your speech in the House of Representatives on the anniversary of the birth of Gen. Grant. You eloquently uttered the feelings and sentiments of all old Confederate soldiers in regard to Gen. Grant. I have the honor of being one of them, having been a member of Company B, Second Maryland Infantry, McComb's Brigade, Gen. Harry Heath's Division, of A. P. Hill's Corps.

The Federals broke through Wilcox's Division of the same corps at Hatchers Run on the 2d day of April, 1865, and that morning we started on our retreat toward Appomattox Court House. We had marched seven days on the retreat, with a pint of raw corn issued to us for rations every day until the morning of the 9th of April, when, upon emerging from a skirt of woods upon an open field at the top of a gentle hill with a slight valley below us, we beheld the Federal line of battle drawn up upon the opposite hill with skirmishers advanced and our own skirmishers facing them, about 250 or 300 yards apart. We felt sure we were about to charge them when, to our amazement, we were given orders to stack arms. One of our men exclaimed, "We are going to surrender." Capt. John W. Torsch, who was commanding our regiment, all our field officers having been killed or wounded, promptly ordered him under arrest; but in a very little while the reality became known and within half an hour Confederate and Federal soldiers were all intermingled.

Not an insulting word was uttered upon either side, and in little groups they began discussing the different battles they had been in against each other, and the Federal soldiers freely admitted that we had given them hell in the most of them.

Gen. Grant ordered beeves from his own Army to be driven into our camp, and when they were butchered we cut slices of meat off the carcases, stuck them on the ends of our ramrods, thrust them in the fire, and ate the meat without any bread. The commissary wagons had not been able to keep up on the rapid march.

In a little while we saw a squad of horsemen coming from the Federal lines and saw that it was a general and his staff. It proved to be Gen. Lee coming from Gen. Grant's headquarters. He was in full-dress uniform, boots and spurs beautifully shined, and as erect on old Traveler as is his statue in Statuary Hall. A day or two afterwards we heard that Gen. Grant apologized to Gen. Lee for being in fatigue uniform, saying his headquarters wagon had not been able to keep up. When the men recognized Gen. Lee, both Confederates and Federals lined the sides of the road as he passed along with his hat lifted above his head, the Federal soldiers cheering him as lustily as the Confederates.

Now, Mr. SUMNERS, begging you to excuse me for having troubled you with this little narrative of a great event in history, which I have hastily jotted down from memory, "et quorum pars parva fui," I wish to express to you my thanks and appreciation for your eloquent speech on Gen. Grant's anniversary and subscribe myself,

Very truly, yours, A. W. NEALE.

[Applause.]

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. ANDERSON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 13870, the sundry civil bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 9228. An act to authorize the establishment of a Coast Guard station on the coast of Lake Superior, in Cook County, Minn.; and

H. R. 12869. An act for the construction of a bridge across the Pentwater River or Pentwater Lake, Mich.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:

H. R. 9369. An act to revise and equalize rates of pension to certain soldiers, sailors, and marines of the Civil War and the War with Mexico, to certain widows, including widows of the War of 1812, former widows, dependent parents, and children of such soldiers, sailors, and marines, and to certain Army nurses, and granting pensions and increase of pensions in certain cases;

H. R. 13253. An act to grant the consent of Congress to the Elmer Red River Bridge Co. to construct a bridge across the Red River;

H. J. Res. 301. Joint resolution to authorize the Secretary of War to grant revocable licenses for the removal of sand and gravel from the Fort Douglas Military Reservation for industrial purposes;

H. R. 10917. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the National Education Association of the United States," by adding thereto an additional section;

H. R. 12956. An act extending the time for constructing a bridge across the Bayou Bartholomew, in the State of Arkansas; and

H. R. 12610. An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. STEPHENS of Ohio, for 15 days, on account of important business.

FORTIFICATION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SLEMP. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 13555, the fortifications appropriation bill, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to all of the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Chair appointed the following conferees: Mr. SLEMP, Mr. FRENCH, and Mr. EAGAN.

MEMORIAL EXERCISES—THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE VAN DYKE.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Sunday, May 16, 1920, after the exercises in memory of the late Representative WILLIAM J. BROWNING, be set apart to pay tribute to the memory of Hon. CARL C. VAN DYKE, late a Member of this House from the State of Minnesota.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, May 3, 1920, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

SENATE.

MONDAY, May 3, 1920.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our constant need of Thy power and of Thy grace makes it impossible for us to forget Thy name in the great task which has been committed to our hands. We come before Thee consecrating this day to Thy service. We pray that this day may be Thy day, that Thou wilt lift us to Thy presence, that Thou wilt guide our hearts and minds in all knowledge and wisdom, that Thou wilt control us from evil tendencies in act and thought within us. Help us to express the divine idea as it is committed to us in the form of human life and government. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Friday, April 30, 1920, was read and approved.

COTTON IN STORAGE (S. DOC. NO. 263, PT. 2).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Director of the Census, transmitting, in response to a resolution of March 24, 1920, certain information relative to the number of bales of so-called unspinnable cotton, including gin cut, water packed, perished fiber, and linters, in public storage and at concentrating points, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the annual report of the Federal Trade Commission for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1919, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13555) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, and for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes," asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SLEMP, Mr. FRENCH, and Mr. EAGAN managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House insists upon its amendments to the bill (S. 1699) for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the Senate, agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. LEHLBACH, Mr. FAIRFIELD, and Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 9228. An act to authorize the establishment of a Coast Guard station on the coast of Lake Superior, in Cook County, Minn.; and

H. R. 12869. An act for the construction of a bridge across the Pentwater River or Pentwater Lake, Mich.

DECLARATION ON CHARGE OF FRENCH MILITARISM.

Mr. LODGE. I present a declaration which has been sent to me as chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, with the request that it be inserted in the RECORD of the proceedings of Congress. It is very brief, and it will take only a moment to read it:

"The undersigned share the regret expressed in the United States Senate at the reflections recently made by the President upon our ancient ally France who bore the brunt of the late war from the outset, as well as of previous assaults, and upon Italy, whose sacrifices in the late war entitle her to respect. Such public criticism of friendly and allied nations is not warranted and it affects adversely our relations with nations whose interest in peace is equal to our own. Precautions against the recurrence of armed invasions taken by the victims of repeated German aggressions are justified and the determining by them of what defensive precautions are dictated by experience is not a proper basis for denunciation."

Among the signers of the above declaration are the following:

"Chester H. Aldrich, architect, New York; Henry Morrell Atkinson, financier, Atlanta, Ga.; Joseph A. Blake, surgeon, New York; Mrs. Joseph A. Blake, Tarrytown, N. Y.; Charles J. Bonaparte, ex-United States Attorney General, Baltimore, Md.; John Jay Chapman, author, New York; Joseph H. I ask that the declaration be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that order will be made.

PETERSBURG, ALASKA, BOND ISSUE.

Mr. NEW, from the Committee on Territories, to which was referred the bill (S. 4286) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the incorporated town of Petersburg, Alaska, to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $75,000 for the purpose of constructing and installing a municipal electric light and power plant and for the construction of a public-school building," approved September 29, 1919, reported it without amendment.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. KENYON:

A bill (S. 4321) granting a pension to Millie S. Jones (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CALDER:

A bill (S. 4322) for the relief of Philip A. Hertz; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. LODGE submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $15,000 for the administration of the National Gallery of Art by the Smithsonian Institution, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SHEPPARD submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $356,700 for an aviation landing field and drill ground at Fort Bliss, Tex., etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

CONTROL OF MARKETS AND COMMODITIES.

Mr. KING. I submit the following resolution, and ask that it be read and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The resolution (S. Res. 355) was read and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, as follows:

Whereas doubts have been expressed as to the effectiveness of the Sherman Antitrust Act and acts supplementary thereto for the prevention and dissolution of corporations, combinations, trusts, and conspiracies to monopolize the trade in certain necessary commodities in commerce between the States: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be, and is hereby, requested to inquire into the question of the control of markets and commodities by trusts and monopolies and by conspiracies to hinder and restrain trade between the States, and to report to the Senate whether or not the Sherman Antitrust Act requires revision, alteration, or extension to make the same effective, and further to report to the Senate what additional legislation may be appropriate and necessary to liberate production, manufacture, and commerce from undue impediments and restraints.

RETIREMENT OF CIVIL-SERVICE EMPLOYEES.

On motion by Mr. STERLING, it was Ordered, That the bill (S. 1699) entitled "An act for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes," be printed showing the House amendments numbered.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13555) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, and for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes," and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the conference asked for by the House, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. SMOOT, Mr. KENYON, and Mr. OVERMAN conferees on the part of the Senate.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. WARREN submitted the following conference report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13677) making appropriations to supply a deficiency in the appropriations for the Federal control of transportation systems and to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 1.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 4, 5, and 6, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following "transferred from the appropriation made in paragraph (g) of the said section 204 and"; and the Senate agree to the same.

F. E. WARREN,
CHARLES CURTIS,
O. W. UNDERWOOD,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
JAMES W. GOOD,
J. G. CANNON,
JAMES F. BYRNES,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

THE CALENDAR.

The VICE PRESIDENT (at 12 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.). The morning business is closed.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10918) to provide revenue and encourage domestic industries by the elimination, through the assessment of special duties, of unfair foreign competition, and for other purposes. It is commonly known as the anti-dumping bill.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, there are three bills on the calendar providing for the coinage of 50-cent pieces, the bill (H. R. 12460) to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of the admission of the State of Maine into the Union, the bill (H. R. 12824) to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of the admission of the State of Alabama into the Union, and the bill (H. R. 13227) to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the three hundredth anniversary of the landing of the Pilgrims. These bills have been reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency favorably, and they have passed the House, and action on these measures is urgently demanded. I do not know whether they would be reached on the calendar to-day. They ought to be disposed of, and I ask unanimous consent that they may be taken up now in their order.

Mr. SMOOT. Some time before 2 o'clock, if we have not reached those bills on the calendar, I do not think there will be any objection to taking them up, but if we are going to take up the calendar under Rule VIII I think we had better begin with the first bill on the calendar.

Mr. McLEAN. I understand there is objection to my request?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The calendar will be proceeded with.

Senate resolution 76, defining a peace treaty which shall assure to the people of the United States the attainment of the ends for which they entered the war, and declaring the policy of our Government to meet fully obligations to ourselves and to the world, was announced as the first business on the calendar.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over.

The bill (S. 529) for the relief of the heirs of Adam and Noah Brown was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 600) for the relief of the heirs of Mrs. Susan A. Nicholas was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT and Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

The bill (S. 1223) for the relief of the owner of the steamer Mayflower and for the relief of passengers on board said steamer was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 174) for the relief of Emma H. Ridley was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1722) for the relief of Watson B. Dickerman, administrator of the estate of Charles Backman, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 168) to create a commission to investigate and report to Congress a plan on the questions involved in the financing of house construction and home ownership and Federal aid therefor was announced as next in order.

Mr. KENYON. I think the resolution submitted by the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER], which was passed by the Senate, practically covers the question involved in the bill, and I shall not ask to have it taken up.

Mr. SMOOT and Mr. OVERMAN. Let it go over under Rule IX.

Mr. KENYON. Let it retain its place on the calendar. I wish to investigate it further.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2224) to incorporate the Recreation Association of America was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1660) to provide a division of tuberculosis in and an advisory council for the United States Public Health Service, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 41) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the joint resolution go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

The bill (S. 2457) to provide for a library information service in the Bureau of Education was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

The bill (S. 131) to provide that petty officers, noncommissioned officers, and enlisted men of the United States Navy and Marine Corps on the retired list who had creditable Civil War service shall receive the rank or rating and the pay of the next higher enlisted grade was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 1448) for the relief of Jacob Nice was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

Senate resolution (S. Res. 172) for the selection of a special committee to investigate the administration of the office of the Alien Property Custodian was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over.

The bill (S. 2785) to provide aid from the United States for the several States in prevention and control of drug addiction and the care and treatment of drug addicts, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 51) directing the Court of Claims to investigate claims for damages growing out of the riot of United States negro soldiers at Houston, Tex., was announced as next in order

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2672) to carry into effect the findings of the Court of Claims in favor of Elizabeth White, administratrix of the estate of Samuel N. White, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1302) for the relief of John H. Rheinlander was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2444) to create the commission on rural and urban home settlement was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 3201) fixing the salary of the district attorney for the eastern district of New York was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is included in another bill. Let it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 3224) relating to the creation in the Army of the United States of the grade of lieutenant general was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The Senate resolution 215 providing that whenever the United States becomes a member of the League of Nations this Government should present to the council or the assembly of the league the state of affairs in Ireland and the right of its people to self-government was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the resolution go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

DEPORTATION OF ALIENS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6750) to deport certain undesirable aliens and to deny readmission to those deported.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That aliens of the following classes, in addition to those for whose expulsion from the United States provision is made in the existing law, shall, upon the warrant of the Secertary of Labor, be taken into his custody and deported in the manner provided in sections 19 and 20 of the act of February 5, 1917, entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens to, and the residence of aliens in, the United States," if the Secretary of Labor after hearing finds that such aliens are undesirable residents of the United States, to wit:

(1) All aliens who are now interned under section 4067 of the Revised Statutes of the United States and the proclamations issued by the President in pursuance of said section under date of April 6, 1917, November 16, 1917, December 11, 1917, and April 19, 1918, respectively.

(2) All aliens who since August 1, 1914, have been or may hereafter be convicted of any violation or conspiracy to violate any of the following acts or parts of acts, the judgment on such conviction having become final, namely:

(a) An act entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 15, 1917, or the amendment thereof approved May 16, 1918;

(b) An act entitled "An act to prohibit the manufacture, distribution, storage, use, and possession in time of war of explosives, providing regulations for the safe manufacture, distribution, storage, use, and possession of the same, and for other purposes," approved October 6, 1917;

(c) An act entitled "An act to prevent in time of war departure from and entry into the United States contrary to the public safety," approved May 22, 1918;

(d) An act entitled "An act to punish the willful injury or destruction of war material or of war premises or utilities used in connection with war material, and for other purposes," approved April 20, 1918;

(e) An act entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," approved May 18, 1917, or any amendment thereof or supplement thereto;

(f) An act entitled "An act to punish persons who make threats against the President of the United States," approved February 14, 1917;

(g) An act entitled "An act to define, regulate, and punish trading with the enemy, and for other purposes," approved October 6, 1917, or any amendment thereof;

(h) Section 6 of the Penal Code of the United States.

(3) All aliens who have been or may hereafter be convicted of any offense against section 13 of the said Penal Code committed during the period of August 1, 1914, to April 6, 1917, or of a conspiracy occurring within said period to commit an offense under said section 13, or of any offense committed during said period against the act entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," approved July 2, 1890, in aid of a belligerent in the European war.

SEC. 2. That in every case in which any such alien is ordered expelled or excluded from the United States under the provisions of this act the decision of the Secretary of Labor shall be final.

SEC. 3. That in addition to the aliens who are by law now excluded from admission into the United States all persons who shall be expelled under any of the provisions of this act shall also be excluded from readmission.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 1233) to repeal an act entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes," and the act amendatory thereof, was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that bill go over under Rule IX, Mr. President.

Mr. NELSON. I ask that that bill be placed on the calendar under Rule IX.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The bill (S. 3090) to repeal the espionage act was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. I also ask that that bill go to the calendar under Rule IX.

Mr. NELSON. I ask that the same order in regard to that bill be made as was made in reference to the bill preceding it on the calendar.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not desire that that bill shall go over under Rule IX, and I should like to have the Senator from North Carolina withdraw his request to that effect.

Mr. OVERMAN. Very well.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator's objection will carry it over, but I should like to have it retain its place on the calendar.

Mr. OVERMAN. I withdraw the request and merely ask that the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2707) for the relief of Ellen M. Willey, widow of Owen S. Willey, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that that bill be passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 848) to reimburse Isaiah Stephens, postmaster at McMechen, Marshall County, W. Va., for money and postage stamps stolen was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that that bill go over. I examined the report in that case some time ago, and it seemed to me there was no liability on the part of the Government.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA INCORPORATIONS.

The bill (S. 3066) to provide for the incorporation of cooperative associations in the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, reserving the right to object to the consideration of the bill, the title of which has just been stated, I desire to ask the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] whether or not, under the present general incorporation act of the District of Columbia, individuals may not incorporate for the purpose of carrying out the business provided for under the bill?

Mr. CAPPER. No; they can not. It is now necessary for such persons to go to some State and to secure a charter under State law. This bill is simply permissive; it merely gives to the citizens of the District of Columbia the same rights which are given in about 30 States of the Union, which permit incorporation under State laws. It simply proposes to confer on persons in the District of Columbia the same privilege.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will permit me, I desire to state that a subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary is now revising and codifying the general incorporation act or acts of the District of Columbia, and their purpose is to enlarge the scope of the existing law and more nearly to conform it to the best general incorporation acts obtaining in any of the States of the Union. The Judiciary Committee upon a number of occasions has had this question under consideration, and several instances have been called to the attention of the committee where it was apparent that there ought to be some emendation of the existing incorporation act. I think no one can object to this particular bill, but in view of the fact that the subcommittee, of which the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] is chairman, is considering this entire subject, and doubtless will report at a very early date a broad and comprehensive incorporation act, I ask the Senator from Kansas would he object to the postponement of the consideration of the bill for a little while until the subcommittee shall bring in their bill?

Mr. CAPPER. I was not informed that the Judiciary Committee were working on such a measure. I have no objection to the bill going over until they can make their report.

Mr. KING. Would the Senator object to having the bill referred to that committee, so that in the consideration of the entire subject they might have the Senator's bill before them?

Mr. CAPPER. I would not. I think probably it would be well to have the bill referred to that committee.

Mr. KING. I shall leave the request, if any shall be made, to the Senator from Kansas, because I desire to conform my conduct to his wishes.

Mr. CAPPER. I move that the bill (S. 3066) to provide for the incorporation of cooperative associations in the District of Columbia be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, which is now considering this whole question and preparing to frame a bill making provision for the whole subject.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MAJ. ELLIS B. MILLER.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1661) for the relief of Maj. Ellis B. Miller, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, commission Maj. Ellis B. Miller as a captain in the United States Marine Corps as of date of May 13, 1908, said commission to be in lieu of one dated May 13, 1919: Provided, That the pay and allowances accruing by reason of this act shall not exceed the difference between the pay and allowances of a captain and those of a first lieutenant in the Marine Corps from May 13, 1908, to June 8, 1909: Provided further, That the said Ellis B. Miller shall take rank on the lineal list of officers in the Marine Corps next after James K. Tracy, the officer who immediately preceded him on the list of first lieutenants on May 13, 1908.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to have the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] state just what this bill intends to do and why it should be passed.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I believe the bill will be better explained by reading the letter which is referred to in the report of the committee on the bill. I ask that it may be read at the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The letter was read, as follows:

[Second indorsement.]

JUNE 23, 1919.

From: The major general commandant.
To: Judge Advocate General.
Subject: Bill for relief of Maj. Ellis B. Miller, U. S. M. C.

1. A bill (S. 7106) similar to the attached bill was introduced into the Senate of the United States September 7, 1916, and upon being referred to this office by the department the following indorsement was placed thereon:

"* * * By act of Congress approved May 13, 1908, the Marine Corps was increased and the promotion of a number of officers was provided for, including then First Lieut. Ellis B. Miller."

In October and November, 1908, the examinations of the officers of the Marine Corps on duty in the Philippine Islands were held, under the provisions of Navy Department General Order No. 36, dated December 10, 1906, this being the order then in force there, no superseding order having been received. Lieut. Miller was the last officer examined in the Philippines, due to the remoteness of his station at Polloc.

On September 28, 1908, Navy Department General Order No. 76 was substituted for the one mentioned above. No copy of this order was received by the president of the marine examining board until after the completion of the examinations of all the officers in the Philippines due for promotion. The chief change in the procedure under the new order involved the raising of the requirements for promotion, so that a candidate was required to attain a mark of not less than 3.0 in each subject, instead of a minimum of 2.5 allowed by the old order. The examining board consisted of Majs. John A. Lejeune, Thomas C. Treadwell, and Melville J. Shaw. The findings and recommendations of this board in the cases of all candidates that appeared before it, except Lieut. Miller, were approved by the department and the candidates were promoted. The findings in the case of Lieut. Miller were disapproved on the ground that he should have been examined under General Order 76 instead of under the old order.

In February, 1909, Lieut. Miller was directed by cable to proceed to the United States and report at Washington for reexamination. The board before which he appeared in Washington did not recommend him for promotion on account of a recent report for debt made by Mr. F. J. Smith, a military tailor of Annapolis, Md., which report was made in January, 1909, after Lieut. Miller had been examined in Manila, found qualified, and recommended for promotion. As a result of this second examination, Lieut. Miller was suspended from promotion for one year, with a consequent loss of 14 numbers. He was again examined in 1910, found qualified, and promoted captain with rank from May 13, 1909, and to fill a vacancy which occurred June 8, 1909.

Col. Lejeune, who was president of the examining board which examined the officers on duty in the Philippines, states that the examination of Lieut. Miller was held under exactly the same conditions as those of the other officers whose boards were approved by the Navy Department, and that a number of those officers whose boards were approved received marks of less than 3.0 in some subjects. He also states that General Order No. 76, dated September 28, 1908, which raised the minimum passing mark, did not, through some mistake in transmission, reach the officers of the brigade in the Philippine Islands until February, 1909; that the board regarded Lieut. Miller as fully qualified to perform all the duties of the grade of captain, and he as president would have found him so qualified, and believes that the other two members of the board would also have found him qualified, even had his examination been conducted in accordance with the provisions of the later order.

This office is of the opinion that Capt. Miller is, in view of the circumstances above set forth, entitled to relief. It happens that he has now made his number as major, and in order that his position on the list of officers of the Marine Corps may be definitely set forth if Congress passes an act for his relief it is recommended that the department express its approval of the inclosed bill with an amendment thereto as follows:

"Provided further, That the said Ellis B. Miller shall take rank on the list of majors in the Marine Corps next after James K. Tracy, the officer who immediately preceded him on the list of first lieutenants on May 13, 1908. * * *"

2. In view of the fact that this officer has been permanently promoted to the grade of major, and temporarily to the grade of lieutenant colonel, it is recommended, in order that the desired result may be accomplished, that the bill be amended to read as follows, and that it receive the favorable consideration of the department:

"Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized to advance Ellis B. Miller 12 numbers on the lineal list of permanent majors in the Marine Corps, so that he will take rank next after James K. Tracy, the officer who immediately preceded him on the list of first lieutenants on May 13, 1908, and to advance him 12 numbers on the lineal list of temporary lieutenant colonels of the Marine Corps, so that he will take rank next after James K. Tracy.

"Provided, That said Ellis B. Miller shall be entitled to the difference in pay and allowances between the rank of captain and first lieutenant, United States Marine Corps, for the period from May 13, 1908, to June 8, 1909."

By order of the major general commandant:

CHAS. G. LONG.

A true copy.

C. B. CATES.
First Lieutenant, United States Marine Corps.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, in further explanation of the bill, I will say that Mr. Miller was a lieutenant of the United States Marine Corps and was in the Philippine Islands at the time of certain examinations. The mark which an officer must attain was raised during that time. He did not take the examination in the Philippines, but came back to the United States and took the examination here. He was not promoted at the time he should have been promoted because of a certain tailor's bill which he had not paid, and that is the real nut of the whole thing. He has been a gallant officer, and has now reached the rank of major, so that there should be an amendment to the bill. The commanding general has advised that this wrong to him should be righted. We have passed here, I think, a number of bills under similar circumstances, even in cases where drunkenness was charged, removing the defect in the officer's record and giving him his promotion. That is all there is to this case.

Mr. WARREN. What excuse was given for not paying the bill?

Mr. KENYON. That he was hard up, I presume, and the fact that the bill was rather pressed on him. I am not making any defense of his action in this regard; but he is a man with a family; he bought expensive uniforms, and the tailor had told him there would be no hurry about paying for them, and so the matter was allowed to run along for two or three years. However, the bill was paid years ago; but simply because of that one thing the Secretary of the Navy has advised against this bill. The committee have reported it unanimously. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. NEWBERRY], at that time Secretary of the Navy, was in favor of righting this wrong, and he reported the bill from the committee. That is all there is to it. This officer, however, now having reached the rank of major, the bill should be changed somewhat, and I offer an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the matter I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert the following:

That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized to advance Ellis B. Miller 12 numbers on the lineal list of permanent majors in the Marine Corps, so that he will take rank next after James K. Tracy, the officer who immediately preceded him on the list of first lieutenants on May 13, 1908, and to advance him 12 numbers on the lineal list of temporary lieutenant colonels of the Marine Corps, so that he will take rank next after James K. Tracy: Provided, That said Ellis B. Miller shall be entitled to the difference in pay and allowance between the rank of captain and first lieutenant, United States Marine Corps, for the period from May 13, 1908, to June 8, 1909.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 3109) to amend section 26 of the act approved July 17, 1916, known as the Federal farm-loan act, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1455) for the relief of John L. O'Mara was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2954) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Albert F. Smith, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3152) for the relief of George W. Mellinger was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1453) for the relief of Adolph F. Hitchler was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 1713) authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to appoint a commission to investigate and report upon the available sources of water supply for the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2822) making available additional moneys for the reclamation fund, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

J. B. WATERMAN.

The bill (S. 2554) for the relief of J. B. Waterman was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This bill has been heretofore considered in Committee of the Whole, and the amendment reported by the committee has been agreed to. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WAR WITH GERMANY.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 139) repealing the joint resolution of April 6, 1917, declaring a state of war to exist between the United States and Germany was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be passed over.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

The bill (S. 3746) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the next three bills—S. 3747, H. R. 6639, and H. R. 7775—are all omnibus pension bills, and I ask that they may go over, as the so-called Fuller pension bill takes care of most of these cases. If there is any action to be had upon the bills in the future, the cases not affected by the Fuller pension bill will have to be taken out of the omnibus bills and considered. Therefore I ask that those three bills may go over.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I simply desire to add to what the Senator from Utah has said that I am having all of these bills gone over for the purpose of eliminating therefrom all that would be covered by the pension bill which has just become a law. When that work is completed, I will select one of those bills and place upon it all of the other special bills, placing them all in a single omnibus measure.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. KING. Would it not be the appropriate thing to strike these bills from the calendar?

Mr. McCUMBER. Not at present. Let them remain until I have selected one of them for amendment in which to insert all of the others that are not taken care of by the so-called Fuller pension bill.

Mr. KING. Would it not be proper to move the indefinite postponement of these bills?

Mr. McCUMBER. No; not until we have segregated those that I wish to have passed. I can not tell which one contains the greater number of those special bills.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bills will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3395) to discontinue the improvement to provide a channel extending from the sea to the Charleston Navy Yard was announced as next in order.

Mr. DIAL and Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3396) to discontinue the construction of a dry dock at the navy yard, Charleston, S. C., was announced as next in order.

Mr. DIAL. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 285) authorizing the Subcommittee on Naval Affairs under resolution No. 62, agreed to June 6, 1919, to employ such counsel and clerical assistants as it may deem necessary, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, before the resolution goes over I should like to ask the Senator from Maine, if he is in the Chamber, if there is any necessity for this resolution remaining on the calendar? I understand that the examination has been proceeded with and virtually finished, and if that is the case this resolution ought to be indefinitely postponed. I ask that it go under Rule IX.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, it will be so ordered.

JOHN MURPHY.

The bill (S. 310) for the relief of John Murphy was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I will ask the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND] to explain the justice of this bill. The purpose, of course, is obvious.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I am very much interested in this bill, because I know the circumstances of the case and believe the passage of the bill to be thoroughly justifiable.

This man was charged with desertion. The committee looked over all the circumstances of the case and decided unanimously that it was an appropriate thing to do to remove this charge of desertion from his record. The facts are that he was ill and went to his home on leave, and when he returned to join his company it had moved away. He was prevented by prevailing high waters from reaching his company and returned home, having been in the hospital and at home for a long time, and very soon after that the war ended.

There was no intention upon the part of this man to desert. No one who ever knew him thought that such was the case. His neighbors, his associates in the war, and all others knew that he was keenly interested in his duties as a soldier and performed them all satisfactorily and patriotically. He is an old man, bedridden, nearly 80 years of age, and has rested under this accusation for all these years, and in my judgment it would be an act of simple justice and would do no harm to anyone to allow this correction to be made.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an inquiry?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Certainly.

Mr. KING. The Senator says this man was detained by reason of high water, so that he did not join his colors. Why did he not, as soon as the high water subsided, join the Army, either the company with which he was formerly identified or some other?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I will say to the Senator from Utah that the conditions down in southern West Virginia at that time were not as they were in many sections of the country. It was a very wild country; the activities of this company were far removed, and he was not near any of the active operations of our Army or any other. He was doing duty out on the Ohio River, and the company was removed, and the difficulty in ascertaining where his company was or where any of the operations were was exceedingly great. There was a lack of telegraphic communication and railroad communication, and he was up there in the mountains, and made an effort to rejoin his company, and was prevented from doing so.

Mr. KING. How long did this man serve in the Army?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The report of the committee will show the time. I do not remember exactly, but he served in the Army for a considerable length of time.

Mr. KING. I will ask that the report be read, still reserving the right to object; and if objection may not be made after the reading of the report, I shall object now.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The report shows that he was enrolled in October, 1862. He was admitted to the general hospital at Gallipolis, Ohio, in April, 1864, after having served for nearly two years, and was furloughed in June, 1864, and was prevented then from rejoining his company. His company remained in service until June, 1865.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, permit me to call the Senator's attention to the report:

Application for removal of the charge of desertion and for an honorable discharge in this case has been denied and now stands denied on the ground that the case is not covered by the provisions of the act of Congress approved March 2, 1889, the law governing the subject of removal of charges of desertion, for the reason that this soldier did not serve until May 1, 1865, and that it has not been established to the satisfaction of the department that he was prevented from completing his term of enlistment by reason of disability contracted in the line of duty.

In view of that report of The Adjutant General, I regret that I shall be constrained to object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (H. R. 5726) to fix the compensation of certain employees of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

SCHOONER "CHARLOTTE W. MILLER."

The bill (S. 2274) for the relief of the owners of the schooner Charlotte W. Miller was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the owners of the schooner Charlotte W. Miller, first injured and sunk by collision with the U. S. S. D–2 in the forenoon of Tuesday, July 31, 1917, about 2 miles east of Cornfield Shoal Lightship, in Long Island Sound, and subsequently, on the afternoon of said day and thereafterwards further injured so that she became a total loss, because the U. S. S. Ontario took charge of the sunken schooner, relieving the salvors of the owners then in charge thereof, and herself attempted to tow said sunken schooner to New London, Conn., for and on account of the injury to and loss of the said schooner and damages to the owners thereof, may be submitted to the United States District Court for the District of Rhode Island under and in compliance with the rules of said court sitting as a court of admiralty, and said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine and to render judgment thereupon upon the same principles and measures of liability and damages in like cases in admiralty: Provided, however, That the investigation of the said claim shall be made upon the following basis:

First. The said court shall find the facts attending the injury to and loss of the said schooner Charlotte W. Miller and damages to the owners thereof.

Second. If it shall appear that the responsibility therefor rests with the U. S. S. D–2 and the U. S. S. Ontario, or either, the court shall then ascertain and determine the amount which should be paid to the owners of the said schooner Charlotte W. Miller in order to reimburse them for the losses and damages so sustained, and shall render a decree accordingly.

SEC. 2. That should said decree be rendered in favor of the owners of the said schooner Charlotte W. Miller, the amount thereof shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. SMOOT. If the bill is to be considered to-day, I want to move to strike out section 2 of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. Strike out section 2, on page 2, in the following words:

SEC. 2. That should said decree be rendered in favor of the owners of the said schooner Charlotte W. Miller, the amount thereof shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. GERRY. I should like to ask the Senator from Utah his reason for moving to strike out section 2?

Mr. SMOOT. I know of no case in Congress where, when a claim is referred to the Court of Claims or any other court, an appropriation was made for an unknown amount at the time the reference was made. I will say to the Senator that we have stricken out a like section from every bill of a similar character which has passed at this session of Congress, except two. Two bills passed the Senate without notice being taken of the section carrying the appropriation, but on my request those bills were sent back to the Senate after they were enrolled and the change was made. No bill that has been passed finally has carried an appropriation.

Mr. GERRY. The Senator has no objection to the bill with that section stricken out?

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection to the consideration of the bill with section 2 eliminated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Utah.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JESSE L. CLAY.

The bill (S. 1003) for the relief of Jesse L. Clay was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 5, to insert a dollar mark before the numerals "1,013.56," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission is authorized and directed to pay to Jesse L. Clay $1,013,56 as reimbursement for all expenses incurred by or for him for or on account of hospital treatment, nurses' and doctors' services, and pay for all time lost from his regular employment as a machinist in the navy yard, Washington, D. C., as the result of a necessary operation performed immediately following an injury sustained while on duty and in the course of his employment, on May 16, 1916, such reimbursement and payment to be made from funds under the control of said commission under the act of September 7, 1916, notwithstanding the failure on the part of the injured employee to report the injury as required by the rules of the commission, of which rules he had no knowledge, and without requiring strict proof that the operation was the direct and necessary result of the injury so sustained.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM GORDON CORPORATION.

The bill (S. 2292) for the relief of the William Gordon Corporation was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I would be glad to have the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], who introduced this bill, offer some explanation as a reason for its passage. If it is merely to compensate the contractor because of the change in industrial conditions, it occurs to me that it would be wiser to attach it to some general bill, under which there would be an investigation of the entire subject. Reserving the right to object, I ask for an explanation of the bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

COMPENSATION OF INJURED EMPLOYEES.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 80) to correct an error in the wording of the appropriation of $71,000, made in the act approved July 9, 1918, and to authorize the Secretary of War to pay said sum to respective parties entitled thereto, was considered, and was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to pay or cause to be paid out of the $71,000 heretofore appropriated by the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919," approved July 9, 1918, the sum of $42,000 to the heirs, executors, or representatives, or parties entitled to receive same for the deaths of those ascertained and reported by the commission appointed under the terms of joint resolution of August 9, 1912, and that he be further directed to pay out of said $71,000 so appropriated the remaining sum of $29,000 to those wounded, or to their heirs or proper legal representatives, the said sums of $42,000 and $29,000 to be paid to the proper parties in the respective amounts as found and reported and set forth on page 20 of said House Document No. 1168, Sixty-second Congress, third session.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, this joint resolution was read in full when the calendar was under consideration some time ago.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution is in the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I remember it. At that time, Mr. President, I took occasion to criticize the awards which had been made covering this appropriation of $71,000 by a special examination. I find that the money has already been appropriated, and this is simply to amend the law, so that the awards may be paid in full. I am not going to object to the consideration of the joint resolution, but I hope that in the next examination which is made, where there is anyone hurt on the border, or anywhere else, there will not be a proposal to give the sum of $15,000 to a brother of the person hurt or killed by a citizen of a foreign country, when, if that same person, working for the Government of the United States, were killed in service, his estate would have received as compensation one year's pay.

As long as the appropriation is made, and the awards have been agreed to, Mr. President, I am not going to object, but if my attention had been called to it in the first place, when the appropriation was made, I certainly should have objected to any such amount.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OSCAR C. GUESSAZ.

The bill (S. 557) for the relief of Oscar C. Guessaz was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Oscar C. Guessaz, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $100, as reimbursement for a horse lost while serving in the military service of the United States on or about the 13th day of January, 1899, at Camp Columbia, near Habana, Cuba.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LAND FOR ARMY SUPPLY BASES.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 151) to permit the payment for certain lands whereon Army supply bases are situated, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I would like to have some explanation of the joint resolution. If it is to confirm some of the unwise selections made by the War Department, I am opposed to it.

Mr. SMOOT. Let it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be passed over.

GOVERNMENT PURCHASES OF GRAIN.

The bill (S. 3844) to provide for discontinuing the purchase and sale of grain by the Government, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, if this bill had been promptly passed by the Congress of the United States at the time it was reported great relief would have been afforded to people throughout the country. I fully realize that at this time there are only a few days left before the law will expire by limitation. So far as it affects the farmer, it will expire on the 31st of this month. I fully realize that so far as it affects the purchasers of wheat—the millers and the bakers—under existing law, they will have 45 days after the expiration of the law. I think it was a mistake of Congress not to pass the bill, because to-day, at a time when all the wheat has been disposed of by the farmers, it is bringing $3.35 in the market at Minneapolis. Since the bill was reported wheat has advanced 75 to 85 cents a bushel, and rye has advanced 50 to 60 cents a bushel. Of course it is all in the hands of speculators now, and the speculators are getting the benefit of it.

I shall not ask to have the bill considered to-day. I simply ask that it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

SALARIES OF ATTORNEYS AND MARSHALS.

The bill (S. 3430) fixing the salaries of certain United States attorneys and United States marshals was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I would like to ask the chairman of the Judiciary Committee if he desires to have this bill taken up for consideration at this time? I am opposed to the bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think the bill ought to pass. It is a bill recommended by the Attorney General, and with the exception of the Senator from Utah, reported unanimously by the committee. It is a bill to readjust salaries which ought to be readjusted, and I would like at some time to have it taken up.

Mr. KING. I dislike very much, of course, to interpose an objection to the request of my amiable and distinguished friend, but this is a bad time to begin increasing the salaries of the higher-paid officials of the Government. We have not enough time this morning to discuss the bill, so I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

LANDS IN HAWAII.

The bill (S. 3461) to provide for the exchange of Government lands for privately owned lands in the Territory of Hawaii was announced as next in order.

Mr. GRONNA. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

THE DYE INDUSTRY.

The bill (H. R. 8078) to regulate the importation of coal-tar products, to promote the establishment of the manufacture thereof in the United States, and, as incident thereto, to amend the act of September 8, 1916, entitled "An act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes," was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. That bill is the unfinished business and will come up at 2 o'clock, so I ask that it may go over at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

FEDERAL LIVE STOCK COMMISSION.

The bill (S. 3944) to create a Federal live stock commission was announced as next in order.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I assume that this bill could not be passed this morning if it were taken up. I want to say, however, that I hope the Senate will permit the bill to be taken up at an early date. It ought to be considered and it ought to be passed. I realize that some of those engaged in this particular business find fault with it, but if they can give no better arguments against it than the argument which I read in a circular issued by Swift & Co., it seems to me it is rather an argument in favor of passing the bill than an argument against it. I will ask to have it go over.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the Senator from North Dakota when he expects to move to take up the bill?

Mr. GRONNA. I have been conferring with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK], and we hope to have the bill taken up this week for consideration.

Mr. KENYON. I have been away and I did not know what the plan was, but I agree with the Senator that the bill should be acted on. So far as I am concerned, I shall object to any adjournment of this Congress until the bill is acted on.

Mr. GRONNA. I agree with the Senator.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 3928) relating to the ships acquired from Germany, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. NELSON. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 9281) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. May I ask my colleague if that is not included in the suggestion which he made?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; and the next bill on the calendar, H. R. 10515, also. I ask that the bills may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. They will go over.

The bill (H. R. 1853) to reimburse E. T. Thing and S. A. Thing for losses and damages sustained by them by the negligent dipping of their cattle by the Bureau of Animal Industry, Department of Agriculture, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT and Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

The bill (S. 3725) authorizing the Court of Claims to adjudicate the claim of Capt. David McD. Shearer for compensation for the adoption and use and acquisition by the United States Government of his patented inventions was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 1391) to add certain lands to the Sequoia National Park, Calif., and to change the name of said park to Roosevelt National Park was announced as next in order.

Mr. NUGENT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

The bill (H. R. 5218) to provide revenue for the Government and to establish and maintain the production of magnesite ores and manufactures thereof in the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. CURTIS. This bill and calendar Nos. 415, 440, and 441 are to be passed over. They are tariff bills and will be taken up later.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bills will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 160) to provide for the preservation and maintenance of the Joint Commission on Reclassification of Salaries was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 10074) to enlarge the jurisdiction of the Municipal Court of the District of Columbia and to regulate appeals from the judgments of said court, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

LAND IN SAN FRANCISCO.

The bill (S. 3995) providing for the relinquishment of certain-described property by the United States to the city and county of San Francisco, State of California, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to the property herein described is hereby relinquished to the city and county of San Francisco, a municipal corporation of the State of California; the said property being the four fifty-vara lots fronting 275 feet on the north side of Harrison Street between Spear and Main Streets, with a uniform depth of 275 feet as laid down on the official map of said city and county.

SEC. 2. That all acts or parts of acts in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. MAMIE DUFFER.

The bill (H. R. 1266) for the relief of Mrs. Mamie Duffer, of Shannon, Miss., was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] informed me this morning that if he was not in the Chamber when this bill was reached, he would like to have me suggest that the bill be indefinitely postponed, as a settlement has already been agreed to. In behalf of the Senator from Mississippi I make that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

EDWARD W. OWENS.

The resolution (S. Res. 334) referring the claims of Edward W. Owens and others to the Court of Claims was read and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the claims of Edward W. Owens and others (S. 2719), Julia Dezera Stewart (S. 2868), and Lawrence S. Vandall (S. 3582), now pending in the Senate, together with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same are hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911; and the said court shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of such act and report to the Senate in accordance therewith.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Orders of Business Nos. 440 and 441 are tariff bills and have been passed over. Nos. 444, 445, 446, 447, 448, and 449 are pension bills, and under the request of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] will go over.

IMPERIAL VALLEY, CALIF.

The bill (H. R. 12537) to provide for an examination and report on the condition and possible irrigation development of the Imperial Valley, in California, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to have an examination made of the Imperial Valley, in the State of California, with a view of determining the area, location, and general character of the public and privately owned unirrigated lands in said valley which can be irrigated at a reasonable cost, and the character, extent, and cost of an irrigation system, or of the modification, improvement, enlargement, and extension of the present system, adequate and dependable for the irrigation of the present irrigated area in the said valley, and of the public and privately owned lands in said valley and adjacent thereto not now under irrigation, which can be irrigated at a reasonable cost from known sources of water supply, by diversion of water from the Colorado River at Laguna Dam.

SEC. 2. That the said Secretary shall report to Congress not later than the 6th day of December, 1920, the result of his examination, together with his recommendation as to the feasibility, necessity, and advisability of the undertaking, or the participation by the United States, in a plan of irrigation development with a view of placing under irrigation the remaining unirrigated public and privately owned lands in said valley and adjacent thereto, in connection with the modification, improvement, enlargement, and extension of the present irrigation systems of the said valley.

SEC. 3. That the said Secretary shall report in detail as to the character and estimated cost of the plan or plans on which he may report, and if the said plan or plans shall include storage, the location, character, and cost of said storage, and the effect on the irrigation development of other sections or localities of the storage recommended and the use of the stored water in the Imperial Valley and adjacent lands.

SEC. 4. That the said Secretary shall also report as to the extent, if any, to which, in his opinion, the United States should contribute to the cost of carrying out the plan or plans which he may propose; the approximate proportion of the total cost that should be borne by the various irrigation districts or associations or other public or private agencies now organized or which may be organized; and the manner in which their contribution should be made; also to what extent and in what manner the United States should control, operate, or supervise the carrying out of the plan proposed, and what assurances he has been able to secure as to the approval of, participation in, and contribution to the plan or plans proposed by the various contributing agencies.

SEC. 5. That, for the purpose of enabling the Secretary of the Interior to pay not to exceed one-half of the cost of the examination and report herein provided for, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $20,000: Provided, That no expenditure shall be made or obligation incurred hereunder by the Secretary of the Interior until provision shall have been made for the payment of at least one-half the cost of the examination and report herein provided for by associations and agencies interested in the irrigation of the lands of the Imperial Valley.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am not going to object to the consideration of the bill at this time, but, merely for the record, I wish to say that if this project is undertaken it will mean the expenditure of at least $32,000,000, and I do not want the provisions in section 4 to be construed hereafter in any way as binding the Government of the United States to appropriate money which may be recommended by the Secretary of the Interior; in other words, the part of section 4 to which I have reference is as follows:

That the said Secretary shall also report as to the expense, if any, to which, in his opinion, the United States should contribute to the cost of carrying out the plan or plans which he may propose.

I am perfectly willing that the appropriation of $20,000 should be made to cooperate with the people of the Imperial Valley in making investigation as to just what should be done with the Colorado River, that at times threatens the Imperial Valley, but I do not want the passage of the bill in any way to be pointed to in the future as obligating the Government to pay any portion of the expenses of the project if it is recommended and undertaken. The reports may show conditions that would justify the Government in cooperating in subsequent improvements, but I do not want the provision referred to in this bill to be pointed to as the act of Congress obligating the Government to make any appropriation for the proposition.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I understand the Senator does not object to the passage of the bill; but, for the information of the Senate, I desire to say that the Secretary of the Interior—then Mr. Lane—reports favorably and calls our attention to the fact that in February, 1918, this district provided $30,000 toward a fund of $45,000 for a Federal survey of the proposed plan for an all-American canal bringing water from Laguna Dam to the Imperial Valley, and is asking that $20,000 be now appropriated.

In view of the conditions—

Quoting him—

regarding the possibility of passing an appropriation for construction of the works as presented by the committee, it seems to me that the best thing which can be done at the present time to advance the interests of this proposition, which I regard as meritorious, would be to appropriate further moneys for the necessary investigations which would be preliminary to construction.

So it is understood that this money is preliminary to construction; and, of course, Congress shall then determine what construction shall be made and what its contribution shall be.

This is one of the greatest projects proposed in the Southwest. The Government owns 250,000 acres in this, the most fertile valley in the world, whose fertility has been demonstrated by private enterprise. In fact, the Agricultural Department, I am told, warned the settlers from investing money there because, on analysis of the soil, it found it would be "unproductive." This was an error. The citizen proved its value by irrigation, and the Government has a real, direct interest in this work of reclamation.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator mean to make this speech with the idea of impressing upon the Senate that the Congress is going to appropriate $30,000,000 for this project?

Mr. PHELAN. Indeed, no.

Mr. SMOOT. Because if that is the case I do not want the bill to pass.

Mr. PHELAN. I merely wish the Senate to be informed of the object of a preliminary survey and what the department thought should be done to save this most fertile valley from destruction, including 250,000 acres of Government land. It is for Congress later to determine that, and it will be asked to cooperate.

The Colorado River hangs as a menace over this valley, which is 120 feet below the level of the sea, and there is an international question of river control involved. In fact the condition is unique; but this appropriation will inform Congress what should be done, if anything. That is the object of it. I am not raising any question now as to what shall be done in the future. I do not know that it would be fair to recommend that this appropriation be made unless Congress was informed that its object is to lay the foundation for the protection of the valley, including 250,000 acres of Government land, against the Colorado River. That is all that there is in the background.

Mr. SMOOT. I have been told by Mr. Davis, of the Reclamation Service, that he thinks if the so-called Smoot rural home bill becomes a law that private capital will develop the proposed project. The Senator knows that under the law to-day this examination would be made by the Reclamation Service, but Mr. Davis assures me that there is no money in the reclamation fund to undertake this work.

This is opening the door to a class of appropriations for the examination of reclamation projects, but it is of such a character that I felt perhaps it would be better that we should make an expenditure of $20,000 for the purpose. It is for that reason that I do not now object, but when we stop to think that the expenditure of $30,000,000 or $40,000,000, or likely more than $45,000,000 may be involved before the project is completed, in my opinion we should go a little slowly, for such an expenditure will take more than one-half as much as has been spent upon all present reclamation projects.

I wish to say to the Senator from California that we in Utah have some valleys which if water could be placed upon them would be as fertile as any land found in the Imperial Valley. However, I think the bill should be passed with the understanding which I have stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Chair understand that the Senator is still in favor of the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; let it be put on its passage, notwithstanding the statement of the Senator from California.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WALTER I. WHITTY.

The bill (S. 2989) for the relief of Walter I. Whitty was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that that bill go over.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Senator from Utah will withhold for a moment his request that the bill go over I hope that an explanation will enable me to procure its passage.

This bill was referred to the appropriate authorities in the War Department for a statement of facts and recommendations. The facts are somewhat fully set forth in the report of the committee, and I ask that the report may be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. SMOOT. I suggest to the Senator that the report be read.

Mr. ROBINSON. I would ask for the reading of the report, which states the facts fully, but I think I can state them with sufficient clearness and, perhaps, save a little time on the part of the Senate.

The beneficiary of this proposed legislation was transferred from the position of clerk in the Engineer Department at Little Rock, Ark., to the position of civilian clerk with the Expeditionary Forces effective July 21, 1917. He was so employed until his return to the United States on a surgeon's certificate of disability. It appears almost conclusively from the facts as stated by Gen. Kreger, assistant to the Judge Advocate General, incorporating a report on the case by the Chief of Engineers, that while serving as civilian clerk this man contracted very serious disability. The Acting Judge Advocate General made this statement in reference to the case:

3. It is assumed that Mr. Whitty was given the benefit of the usual regulation allowance of sick leave with pay, which may not exceed 30 days in any one calendar year. This is, of course, in addition to the regular allowance of annual leave, not to exceed 30 days per annum. When such leave allowances are exhausted, if the employee does not perform duty, pay must be stopped. This applies to civilian employees in the executive departments at Washington as well as to employees in the field service, including employees of the Engineer Department at large. The only provision for the relief of sick or disabled civilian employees other than the above-mentioned provison for sick leave is that contained in the injured employees' compensation act of September 7, 1916, which applies only to cases of personal injury, under which compensation is paid by the United States Employees' Compensation Commission.

Subsequently the Committee on Military Affairs addressed a second communication to the War Department, and the following information was called to the attention of the committee:

In view of the statement contained in the preceding indorsement of the Surgeon General concerning Mr. Whitty's physical condition, and of the further fact that, as stated, it is the opinion of the Surgeon General that the disability was incident to his service, and had a similar condition occurred in the case of an officer or an enlisted man it would have been considered in line of duty, favorable action is recommended on the foregoing bill for the relief of Mr. Whitty.

The statement of the Surgeon General referred to, in part, is as follows:

The disability was incident to his service, and if a similar condition had occurred in the case of an officer or enlisted man it would have been considered in line of duty.

In view of the facts in the case as set forth in the report, I ask the Senator from Utah if he does not feel justified in permitting the bill to pass?

Mr. KING. With the permission of the Senator——

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. KING. I desire to ask his view in regard to this situation which occurs to me. Does not the Senator think if this bill is passed it will be regarded as a precedent to reimburse, either by direct appropriation or by the granting of a pension, all civilian employees, clerks, and so on, who may have been in the Army?

Mr. ROBINSON. I will say to the Senator from Utah that similar legislation has heretofore passed. There are already such precedents existing. Of course, this would be an additional case, but it would hardly be regarded, in my opinion, as a precedent.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I regret to interpose an objection to any request made by the distinguished Senator from Arkansas, but I ask him to let this bill go over until the next calendar day.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well.

Mr. KING. So that I may have an opportunity to investigate and see just how far it will lead.

Mr. ROBINSON. I shall be very glad to do that. If the Senator feels that he would not be justified at this time in having the bill considered let it go over.

Mr. KING. If it will not establish a precedent which will be injurious to the Government in the future, I shall be very glad to have the bill passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

Mr. ROBINSON. I renew my request that the entire report of the committee be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The report submitted by Mr. KIRBY, April 3, 1920, from the Committee on Military Affairs, is as follows:

(Report to accompany S. 2989.)

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2989) for the relief of Walter I. Whitty, having considered the same, report favorably thereon with the recommendation that the bill do pass without amendment.

This measure was referred to the Secretary of War for report. Full information concerning the case was given by the assistant to the Judge Advocate General of the Army, Gen. Kreger, in a report to the Secretary of War on December 13, 1919. The report, which was the eighth indorsement in the case, reads as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, J. A. G. O., December 13, 1919.

To the SECRETARY OF WAR:

1. The inclosed bill, S. 2989, "for the relief of Walter I. Whitty," introduced in the Senate September 11, 1919, by Senator ROBINSON, has been referred to the War Department by the Senate Committee on Military Affairs with request that the committee "be furnished with any information relative to this measure in possession of the War Department." The bill authorizes the Secretary of War to pay to Walter I. Whitty—

"The sum of $125 per month for the period from July 11, 1918, the date upon which his compensation as a clerk in the Engineer Department of the United States Army was discontinued due to disability received in line of duty, until such time as the proper authorities may discharge him from Army General Hospital No. 26, or from such other hospital or institution under the supervision of the War Department to which he may be transferred."

It further provides for the payment to Mr. Whitty, by the United States Employees' Compensation Commission, for any partial or permanent disability resulting from the illness which necessitated his confinement in such hospital and to treat him as coming within the injured employee's compensation act of September 7, 1916 (39 Stat., 742).

2. A report from the Chief of Engineers on this case shows that Mr. Whitty was transferred from the position of clerk at $1,200 per annum in the Engineer Department at Large, Little Rock, Ark., to the position of civilian clerk at $1,400 per annum for duty under the chief engineer officer, American Expeditionary Forces, effective July 21, 1917, and that he was so employed up to the time of his being returned to the United States "on surgeon's certificate of disability." It appears that Mr. Whitty was placed in camp hospital No. 27, Tours, France, in May, 1918. The papers do not disclose when he was returned to the United States, but the Chief of Engineers states that—

"Upon his return to the United States (he) was ordered to the United States Army hospital at Fort Des Moines, Iowa, for treatment, from which hospital he was discharged October 24, 1919."

The Surgeon General reports that while it is not customary in the case of civilians to make notation on sick and wounded report as to whether or not the disability was incurred in line of duty, it is, nevertheless, the opinion of his office that in Mr. Whitty's case—

"The disability was incident to his service, and if a similar condition had occurred in the case of an officer or enlisted man it would have been considered in line of duty."

He quotes the medical record in Mr. Whitty's case as follows:

"May 4 to June 15, 1918, pleurisy, serofibrinous, right side, complication; empyema, right side. Operation—drained pleural cavity, and resecting 2 inches of eighth and ninth ribs posterior to axillary line, right side; anesthetic, ether, May 10, 1918. August 24 to September 14, 1918, empyema, right. October 11, 1918, to ——, empyema, right, flowing pleurisy, right, incurred in France about May 4, 1918. (Remaining in General Hospital No. 26, Fort Des Moines, Iowa, No. 1859.)"

3. It is assumed that Mr. Whitty was given the benefit of the usual regulation allowance of sick leave with pay, which may not exceed 30 days in any one calendar year. This is, of course, in addition to the regular allowance of annual leave, not to exceed 30 days per annum. When such leave allowances are exhausted, if the employee does not perform duty, pay must be stopped. This applies to civilian employees in the executive departments at Washington as well as to employees in the field service, including employees of the Engineer Department at Large. The only provision for the relief of sick or disabled civilian employees other than the above-mentioned provision for sick leave is that contained in the injured employees' compensation act of September 7, 1916, which applies only to cases of personal injury, under which compensation is paid by the United States Employees' Compensation Commission.

4. It is recommended that these papers be transmitted to the Senate Committee on Military Affairs.

E. A. KREGER,
Assistant to the Judge Advocate General.

In order to secure information from the War Department as to whether or not the department favored this measure, the clerk was directed to again take the matter up with the department and make inquiry with regard thereto. In a letter addressed to the clerk to the committee, Mr. J. B. Randolph, acting assistant and chief clerk of War Department, under date of March 16, 1920, expressed the department's approval of the measure as follows:

"The department is in receipt of your letter of the 12th instant, with which you inclosed a copy of Senate bill 2989 and correspondence with the department relative thereto.

"In the second paragraph of the indorsement of the Chief of Engineers of November 26, 1919, inclosed, he states:

"'In view of the statement contained in the preceding indorsement of the Surgeon General concerning Mr. Whitty's physical condition, and of the further fact that, as stated, it is the opinion of the Surgeon General that the disability was incident to his service, and had a similar condition occurred in the case of an officer or an enlisted man it would have been considered in line of duty, favorable action is recommended on the foregoing bill for the relief of Mr. Whitty.'

"The department concurs in the opinion of the Chief of Engineers."

LAND AT FORT BLISS, TEX.

The bill (S. 3139) for the purchase of land adjoining Fort Bliss, Tex., was announced as next in order.

Mr. WARREN. I ask that that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

MABEL L. NOBLE.

The bill (S. 3421) for the relief of Mabel L. Noble was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to redeem certificates of indebtedness of the United States of America No. 88817, denomination of $500, of the issue dated May 9, 1918, and maturing September 15, 1928, with interest at the rate of 4½ per cent from September 15, 1918, to September 15, 1928, in favor of Mabel L. Noble, of Somerville, N. J., without presentation of the certificate, the certificate of indebtedness having been lost or destroyed; but she shall first file in the Treasury Department of the United States a bond in the penal sum of double the amount of the principal and interest of the certificate of indebtedness of the United States of America in such form and with such securities as may be acceptable to the Secretary of the Treasury to indemnify and save harmless the United States from any loss on account of the lost or destroyed certificate of indebtedness hereinbefore described.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROOSEVELT 2-CENT COIN.

The bill (S. 3774) to authorize the coinage of a Roosevelt 2-cent coin was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there shall be coined at the several mints of the United States 2-cent pieces, of an alloy composed of 95 per cent of copper and 5 per cent of tin and zinc, in such proportions as shall be determined by the Director of the Mint, and of such size and weight as may be necessary to distinguish it from the 1-cent pieces of similar composition; and upon the 2-cent pieces, the coinage of which is hereby authorized, there shall be the following devices and legends: Upon one side there shall be the medallion of Theodore Roosevelt, with the dates of his birth and death, and with an inscription of the words "In God we trust," and upon the reverse shall be an inscription "E Pluribus Unum" and an inscription "United States of America" and a designation of the value of the coin.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee whether there is a unanimous report in favor of this bill?

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency does not seem to be present at the moment, but I will say to the Senator that the report is unanimous. I am a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator state whether or not there is a public necessity for this measure?

Mr. GRONNA. Of course, the Senator from Utah knows as much about that as I do, but I think there is a demand for a 2-cent piece. The Senator also knows there are other reasons why this measure should be passed.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, I do not wish to take the Senator from North Dakota from the floor, but I merely want to announce that I am here.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee whether or not the business needs of the country require this proposed law, and whether or not there is any utility in having a 2-cent coin?

Mr. McLEAN. It was represented to the committee that a 2-cent piece would be a real convenience at this time in making change. Transfers on the street railways in the city of Washington, for instance, cost 2 cents, and the fare has been raised to 8 cents. A 2-cent piece would easily be distinguished from any other coin, and the measure seems to me to be unobjectionable. As the Senator knows, a great many local fares are not in multiples of five, but at present the fare in many cases is either 7 or 8 cents, and a 2-cent piece would be a great convenience. It would be a little larger than the 1-cent piece, probably, and would be easily identified from that coin, so that there would be no trouble in distinguishing it. There seems to be no objection to the measure, and it was favorably reported from the committee.

Mr. GRONNA. Before the Senator from Connecticut came in I took the responsibility of saying that the report of the Committee on Banking and Currency on this measure was unanimous.

Mr. McLEAN. I know of no objection to the bill from any source, although the Secretary of the Treasury, to whom the bill was referred, opposed it on the ground that it might interfere with cash-register machines or some mechanical devices now in use. However, I wrote to the manufacturers of cash registers, and their reply was that they had no objection to the bill. So I know of no practical difficulty in the way of the coinage of the proposed 2-cent piece, nor do I think it will interfere with the business in any way.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me, if there is any real necessity, if there is any utility, and if the people want such a coin, I have no objection to the bill; but if it is merely for the purpose of commemorating the achievements of a great man who has departed I would be opposed to it, no matter who the man was.

Mr. McLEAN. I can only repeat what I have said to the Senator, that it was represented to the committee that the proposed coin would be a convenience at this time.

Mr. KING. My opinion—although, of course, it is not to be set up against the judgment of the chairman of the committee—is that there is no particular need for it, and that it will prove a disadvantage rather than an advantage.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, if I may interrupt the Senator from Connecticut, we all remember when we had a 2-cent copper coin and a 3-cent nickel coin, and I never really understood why they were discontinued. I think they were useful even at the time they were issued. There may have been some reason for discontinuing them, but as to that I do not know. I think, as my colleague has so well said, inasmuch as all over the country the ordinary price of a ride on a trolley car, which was formerly 5 cents, has now been raised to 7 cents or more, that the 2-cent piece would be a great public convenience. Whether or not it is a public necessity in the sense that we could not get along without it is a different question. I suppose we could get along on wampum if we had nothing else to use.

I should like to ask my colleague, while this matter is up, if I am correct in thinking that a bill of this kind was presented by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] providing for the recoinage of the 3-cent coin?

Mr. McLEAN. No; I think not. I think the bill to which my colleague refers was a bill for the coinage of 7 and 8 cent pieces.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Possibly. Well, that shows the same necessity.

Mr. McLEAN. The committee has not yet had any hearings on that bill or reached any conclusion in regard to it. I will say, however, that it is my opinion that the coinage of the 2-cent pieces will largely obviate the necessity for 7 and 8 cent pieces.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (H. R. 10918) to provide revenue and encourage domestic industries by the elimination, through the assessment of special duties, of unfair foreign competition, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 6238) to provide revenue for the Government and to establish and maintain the production of zinc ores and manufactures thereof in the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, that has been ordered to go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 4166) to provide for election contests in the Senate of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3763) regulating the disposition of lands formerly embraced in the grants to the Oregon & California Railroad Co. and Coos Bay Wagon Road Co. was announced as next in order.

Mr. GRONNA. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

CARIBOU NATIONAL FOREST.

The bill (H. R. 4311) to authorize the addition of certain lands to the Caribou National Forest was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments, on page 1, line 5, after the word "flow," to strike out "or regulation and improvement of the grazing thereon," and on page 2, line 23, after the word "That," to strike out "all lands embraced in any lawful application or entry pending at the date of the approval of this act be, and the same are hereby, excluded from the provisions of this act," and to insert "the inclusion of any of the aforesaid lands in the Caribou National Forest shall not affect adversely any valid application or entry pending at the date of the approval of this act," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That any lands within the following-described areas, found by the Secretary of Agriculture to be chiefly valuable for the production of timber or the protection of stream flow, may, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, be included within and made a part of the Caribou National Forest, Idaho, by proclamation of the President, said lands to be thereafter subject to all laws affecting national forests: Sections 26 and 27, township 9 south, range 46 east, Boise meridian; northwest quarter of section 1, all of section 2, east half of section 12, all of sections 13, 23, 24, 25, 26, 35, and 36, township 10 south, range 45 east, Boise meridian; all of sections 6, 7, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, and 35, township 10 south, range 46 east, Boise meridian unsurveyed; all of sections 1, 2, 11, 12, 13, 14, east half of section 23, all of 24, 25, and 36, township 11 south, range 45 each, Boise meridian; all of unsurveyed township 11 south, range 46 east, Boise meridian; all of section 36, township 12 south, range 45 east, Boise meridian; all of sections 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 29, 30, 31, 32, of township 12 south, range 46 east, Boise meridian, partly unsurveyed; all of sections 5 and 6, and north half of section 7, and north half of section 8, township 13 south, range 46 east, Boise meridian: Provided, That the inclusion of any of the aforesaid lands in the Caribou National Forest shall not affect adversely any valid application or entry pending at the date of the approval of this act.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

TRANSMISSION OF POISONS, ETC., THROUGH THE MAILS.

The bill (H. R. 9781) to amend section 217 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States," approved March 4, 1909, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments, on page 3, line 13, before the word "or," to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$10,000," and in line 14, before the word "years," to strike out "10" and insert "20," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 217 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States," approved March 4, 1909 (35 Stat. L., p. 1131), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 217. That all kinds of poison, and all articles and compositions containing poison, and all poisonous animals, insects, and reptiles, and explosives of all kinds, and inflammable materials, and infernal machines, and mechanical, chemical, or other devices or compositions which may ignite or explode, and all disease germs or scabs, and all other natural or artificial articles, compositions, or materials, of whatever kind, which may kill or in any wise hurt, harm, or injure another or damage, deface, or otherwise injure the mails or other property, whether sealed as first-class matter or not, are hereby declared to be nonmailable matter, and shall not be conveyed in the mails or delivered from any post office or station thereof, nor by any letter carrier; but the Postmaster General may permit the transmission in the mails, from the manufacturer thereof or dealer therein to licensed physicians, surgeons, dentists, pharmacists, druggists, and veterinarians, under such rules and regulations as he shall prescribe, of any articles hereinbefore described which are not outwardly or of their own force dangerous or injurious to life, health, or property: Provided, That all spirituous, vinous, malted, fermented, or other intoxicating liquors of any kind are hereby declared to be nonmailable, and shall not be deposited in or carried through the mails. Whoever shall knowingly deposit or cause to be deposited for mailing or delivery, or shall knowingly cause to be delivered by mail, according to the direction thereon or at any place at which it is directed to be delivered by the person to whom it is addressed, anything declared by this section to be nonmailable, unless in accordance with the rules and regulations hereby authorized to be prescribed by the Postmaster General, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than two years, or both; and whoever shall knowingly deposit or cause to be deposited for mailing or delivery, or shall knowingly cause to be delivered by mail, according to the direction thereon or at any place to which it is directed to be delivered by the person to whom it is addressed, anything declared by this section to be nonmailable, whether transmitted in accordance with the rules and regulations authorized to be prescribed by the Postmaster General or not, with the design, intent, or purpose to kill or in anywise hurt, harm, or injure another or damage, deface, or otherwise injure the mails or other property, shall be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than 20 years, or both.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator who reported the bill whether, in its consideration, the committee took into account the existing law dealing with the transmission of inflammable and explosive articles through the mail?

Mr. STERLING. I will say to the Senator that the object of this bill is to amend the existing law in that respect. It amends the law of 1909 relative to the transmission of poisonous matter through the mails and relative to the transmission of explosives, and so forth, through the mails. The proposed amendment is designed to give the Postmaster General some further power in regard to the regulation of the mailing of these articles.

The law as it stands contains this provision:

The Postmaster General may permit the transmission in the mails under such rules and regulations as he shall prescribe as to preparation and packing of any articles hereinbefore described which are not outwardly or of their own force dangerous or injurious to life, health, or property.

The United States district court has decided that the Postmaster General's power is limited to that of prescribing regulations in regard to the preparation and packing of any such articles, so that he can not discriminate as between persons who are licensed and persons who are not licensed, as druggists, physicians, and so forth, who are permitted to buy any of these articles.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will excuse me——

Mr. STERLING. Yes.

Mr. KING. What I had in mind was this: The Senator will recall that some time ago the Judiciary Committee reported a bill which, when it first reached the committee, made it a capital offense to deposit any explosives in the mail for the purpose of being transmitted through the mail with the intention of doing harm to any individual or for the purpose of killing any individual. As the Senator will recall, that bill, which was before the committee, after consideration was amended in some particulars not necessary now to recount. What I had in mind was whether this bill would be construed as mitigating the punishment provided in that bill or interfering with that bill and the statute of which it was amendatory.

Mr. STERLING. I could not say certainly as to that, but my impression is that it would not.

Mr. KING. The Senator will recall that that bill provided that the transmission through the mail of any bomb or explosive which was calculated to do bodily injury or to take the life of another constituted a very serious offense; and, as I recall, we provided that in the discretion of the court there might be life imprisonment instead of death. If this bill in any way would modify the provisions of that bill or come in conflict with it, it seems to me it ought to receive further consideration.

Mr. STERLING. I do not recall now the status of the bill to which the Senator from Utah refers. I recall that such a bill was before the committee, and that the committee did increase the penalty provided in that bill; but we have also increased the penalty provided in the House bill through the amendments reported by the Senate committee. Instead of fining the person $5,000, we have fixed the maximum fine which may be imposed at $10,000; and instead of the maximum imprisonment being fixed at 10 years, we have fixed the maximum at 20 years.

Mr. KING. I shall not object to the consideration of this bill; but I will ask the Senator, when the bill reaches conference, if it does, to examine that question, and, if it shall be found that there is a conflict, that the matter be brought to the attention of the Senate.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me——

Mr. STERLING. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. This bill does not materially change existing law. Most of it is a reenactment of the present statute. The only change in the law is in respect to one particular matter. The present law provides that the Postmaster General shall have the right to prescribe the manner in which explosives or other similar substances shall be packed in order to be mailable, and then it provides that druggists can ship their prescriptions, narcotics, and other remedies by mail. One of the courts held that that did not give the Postmaster General any authority except to prescribe the mode in which these explosives and poisons were to be packed. The principal object of this bill is to change that so that the Postmaster General can pass upon that question, instead of being limited merely to the mode in which the prescription or package shall be put up.

The only other amendment is in the last part of the bill, where the maximum fine is increased from five thousand to ten thousand dollars and the maximum imprisonment from 10 to 20 years. That amendment was made because in these cases the acts which are forbidden may result in death. If a man sends explosives through the mail with a malicious intent to do harm and it results in death, there ought to be a higher penalty; and this leaves the court to fix a higher penalty, which can go up to 20 years imprisonment or $10,000 fine, and anything less than that.

The main purpose of the bill is to get around the defect that was described in the decision of one of the Federal courts, and that is that the power of the Postmaster General, in connection with the mailing of these goods, is limited simply to prescribing the form in which the remedy or container is to be packed. Otherwise there is no change in the existing law.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the next to the last statement by the Senator confirms the apprehension which I expressed a moment ago. The bill which we reported from the Judiciary Committee some time ago dealt with the question of the depositing in and transmission through the mails of explosives which might result in death, and in that bill we fixed a penalty greater than this. This bill, though it is addressed to the emendation of a different statute from that which we formerly considered, prescribes a different penalty; and if it is passed subsequently to the other measure it would by implication repeal it, and I am afraid there is some incongruity between this bill and the one which we passed a short time ago. I should be glad if this matter could be allowed to go over, so that we can discover whether there is any inconsistency, whether this bill encroaches upon ground covered by the bill that we passed a short time ago.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over if the Senator objects.

Mr. STERLING. I hardly think the bill ought to go over on the suggestion made by the Senator from Utah, and I hope he will not object to its passage. My belief is that there is urgent need for the passage of this measure, so that the Postmaster General may make regulations that will be of some real value. The only regulations he can make now are those stated by the Senator from Minnesota, relating to the preparation and packing of these deleterious articles that may be sent through the mails. This bill allows him to go further than that, and allows him to permit the transmission through the mails of many of these substances through regularly licensed druggists, physicians, and others.

Mr. KING. I am not complaining about those provisions. I think there is a real necessity for something of that kind; but if this bill does interfere with the bill which we formerly passed in any particular it would seem to me that we ought to pause. If, however, the Senator will assure me that if this bill is passed now he will compare it with the other one before the conference agrees, if a conference shall be appointed upon the amendments, and that the matter will be brought back to the attention of the Senate in case there is a conflict, I shall not object.

Mr. STERLING. Certainly.

Mr. KING. But I shall rely upon the Senator to see that this bill does not interfere with the one which we passed some time ago.

Mr. STERLING. I shall be interested in comparing this bill throughout with the bill to which the Senator refers.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

WOMEN'S BUREAU.

The bill (S. 4002) to establish in the Department of Labor a bureau to be known as the women's bureau was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

Mr. KENYON. Of course, if the Senator from Utah objects to the consideration of the bill, I can not help it; but I wonder if he is very serious in his objection.

Mr. KING. There are too many bureaus now in the Government, and too many departments, for that matter. There is a plan on foot on the part of distinguished Republican Senators, for which I thank them in my own behalf, to reorganize and coordinate the departments and executive agencies of the Government. If the commission appointed for that purpose shall report the necessity of creating another bureau, I shall not object at all; but in view of the fact that there must be a reorganization of the executive departments of the Government, a reclassification of the bureaus, and a reassignment of executive agencies from one department to another, it seems to me we ought not to create any more bureaus now.

Mr. KENYON. I agree with the Senator about the work of this commission on reorganization, and I hope it may formulate a plan which will be helpful. But that is some ways off. I simply want to say that this bill was passed by the House with practically no opposition. It is one thing, I think, which the women of the country happen to be unanimously asking for.

Mr. WARREN. This is a Senate bill. The House has passed a similar bill?

Mr. KENYON. It has. This is the same as the bill which passed the House. If the Senator from Utah objects, I will not press it at this time, but later I shall move to take it up. It is one of the bills which should be acted upon before Congress adjourns.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

PENSIONS TO SOLDIERS OF SPANISH WAR, ETC.

The bill (H. R. 2) to pension soldiers of the War with Spain, the Philippine insurrection, and the China relief expedition was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I very much hope that the Senator from Utah will not insist on pressing his objection to the consideration of this bill. I think there are many reasons why it should be considered on its merits. There are personal reasons why I should like very much to have it considered, if the objections of the Senator from Utah are such that he can withhold them.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should be very glad to accede to the request of my friend, but the limited time this morning would not allow that full discussion and consideration of this bill which its merits and demerits require. We have been very generous. We passed a $75,000,000 appropriation bill the other day for pensions, and demands are here for one or two billion dollars more. Of course, when the Republicans are so anxious for economy I want to help them, and I object.

Mr. NEW. I give notice, then, that at the close of the morning business to-morrow I shall move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of this bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

MILITARY JUSTICE.

The bill (S. 64) to establish military justice was announced as next in order.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to state that that has been added to the Army reorganization bill, and I ask that the bill may go over without prejudice.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

AMENDMENT OF PENAL LAWS.

The bill (H. R. 7629) to amend the penal laws of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I may not have any objection to this bill after I have had time to consider it carefully. However, there are only a few minutes remaining of the morning hour, and I ask the Senator from Utah who reported the bill to let it go over for to-day.

Mr. KING. I have no objection if the Senator desires to have it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

JUDICIAL DIVISIONS IN ALASKA.

The bill (S. 4205) to amend section 4, chapter 1 of Title I, of an act entitled "An act making further provision for a civil government for Alaska, and for other purposes," approved June 6, 1900, as heretofore amended by section 2 of an act entitled "An act to amend section 86 of an act to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii, to provide for additional judges, and for other judicial purposes," approved March 3, 1909, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, the judicial district of Alaska consists of four divisions. The judges there have agreed on a change in the boundaries of some of the divisions, and the bill was prepared and recommended by the Department of Justice. It is a long bill, reciting those boundaries at length. That is all the bill involves, and it is what the Department of Justice and the judges recommend. So I ask that the bill may be put on its passage.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COMMEMORATION OF ANNIVERSARY EVENTS.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the consideration of the remaining bills on the calendar prior to No. 508, House bill 12460, be postponed until next Monday.

Mr. CURTIS. Is there anything that is very urgent about the bills in which the Senator is interested which makes him feel that they are more important than the measures which precede them on the calendar?

Mr. McLEAN. The bills in which I am interested authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of certain events. They passed the House, and there is an anxiety to get the Senate to pass them, because the events are now coming on—the hundredth anniversaries of the admission of Maine and Alabama into the Union, and the three hundredth anniversary of the landing of the Pilgrims.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none.

The bill (H. R. 12460) to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of the admission of the State of Maine into the Union was considered as in Committee on the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill (H. R. 12824) to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of the admission of the State of Alabama into the Union was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill (H. R. 13227) to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the three hundredth anniversary of the landing of the Pilgrims was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLAIMS OF COWLITZ INDIANS.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask unanimous consent that we now return to the consideration of Order No. 484 on the calendar, Senate bill 1521.

The bill (S. 1521) authorizing the Cowlitz Tribe of Indians, residing in the State of Washington, to submit claims to the Court of Claims was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, on page 2, line 3, after the word "adjudge," to strike out the following words: "the rights, both legal and equitable, of the said Cowlitz Tribe and of the United States in the premises, notwithstanding lapse of time or statutes of limitation. The suit or suits instituted hereunder shall be begun by the Cowlitz Tribe of Indians as parties plaintiff and the United States as the party defendant. The petition or petitions may be verified by the attorney or attorneys employed by the Cowlitz Tribe upon information and belief as to the facts therein alleged, and no other verification shall be necessary: Provided, That upon the final determination of such suit or suits the Court of Claims shall have jurisdiction to fix and determine a reasonable fee not to exceed 10 per cent of the recovery, to be paid to the attorney or attorneys employed by the said Cowlitz Tribe of Indians, and the same shall be included in the decree and shall be paid out of any sum or sums due said tribe," and to insert in lieu thereof the following: "all legal and equitable claims, if any, of said Cowlitz Tribe against the United States, and also any legal or equitable defense, set-off, or counterclaim which the United States may have against the said Cowlitz Tribe, and to enter judgment thereon, notwithstanding lapse of time or statutes of limitation; and the final judgment and satisfaction thereof shall be a full settlement of all claims of said Cowlitz Tribe against the United States. Such cause shall be commenced within three years after the passage of this act, and in such cause the said Cowlitz Tribe shall be party plaintiff and the United States shall be party defendant; and the petition setting forth the cause of said Cowlitz Tribe shall be verified by the attorneys employed by said Cowlitz Tribe to prosecute their claims under this act, under contract approved by the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs as provided by sections 2103 to 2106 of the Revised Statutes, upon information and belief as to the facts alleged therein, and no other verification to said petition shall be necessary," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That all claims of whatsoever nature, both legal and equitable, which the Cowlitz Tribe of Indians, residing in the State of Washington, may have against the United States, shall be submitted to the Court of Claims, with the right of appeal by either party to the Supreme Court of the United States for determination; and jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine any and all such claims and to render final judgment thereon.

The Court of Claims shall advance the causes upon its docket for hearing and shall have authority to determine and adjudge all legal and equitable claims, if any, of said Cowlitz Tribe against the United States, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

YANKTON TRIBE OF INDIANS.

The bill (S. 3716) conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to determine and report upon the interest, title, ownership, and right of possession of the Yankton Tribe of Indians to the Red Pipestone Quarries, S. Dak., was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction be, and it hereby is, conferred upon the Court of Claims to determine and report from the finding of facts reported by said court as authorized by section 22 of the act of April 4, 1910, the interest, title, ownership, and right of possession of the Yankton Tribe of Indians in and to the land known as the "Red Pipestone Quarries," described in said act of April 4, 1910.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to determine and report upon the interest, title, ownership, and right of possession of the Yankton Tribe of Indians, South Dakota, to the Red Pipestone Quarries, Minn."

CLAIMS OF NORTHERN ARAPAHOES AND NORTHERN CHEYENNES.

The bill (S. 3164) authorizing the Northern Arapahoe Tribe and the Northern Cheyenne Tribe of Indians to submit claims to the Court of Claims was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all claims of whatsoever nature which the Northern Arapahoe Tribe and the Northern Cheyenne Tribe of Indians may have against the United States, which have not heretofore been determined by the Court of Claims, may be submitted to the Court of Claims, with the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States by either party, for determination of the amount, if any, due said tribes from the United States under any treaties, agreements, or laws of Congress, or for the misappropriation of any of the funds of said tribes, or for the failure of the United States to pay said tribes any money or other property due; and jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims, with the right of either party to appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, to hear and determine all legal and equitable claims, if any, of said tribes against the United States, and to enter judgment thereon.

SEC. 2. That if any claim or claims be submitted to said courts they shall settle the rights therein, both legal and equitable, of each and all the parties thereto, notwithstanding lapse of time or statutes of limitation, and any payment which may have been made upon any claim so submitted shall not be pleaded as an estoppel, but may be pleaded as an offset in such suits or actions, and the United States shall be allowed credit for all sums, including gratuities, heretofore paid or expended for the benefit of said tribes or any band thereof.

The claim or claims of the tribe or tribes or band or bands thereof may be presented separately or jointly by petition, subject, however, to amendment, suit to be filed within five years after the passage of this act; and such action shall make the petitioner or petitioners party plaintiff or plaintiffs and the United States party defendant, and any band or bands of said tribes or any other tribe or band of Indians the court may deem necessary to a final determination of such suit or suits may be joined therein as the court may order. Such petition, which shall be verified by the attorney or attorneys employed by said Northern Arapahoe Tribe and the Northern Cheyenne Tribe, or either of them or any bands thereof, shall set forth all the facts on which the claims for recovery are based, and said petition shall be signed by the attorney or attorneys employed, and no other verification shall be necessary. Official letters, papers, documents, and public records, or certified copies thereof, may be used in evidence, and the departments of the Government shall give access to the attorney or attorneys of said tribes or bands thereof to such treaties, papers, correspondence, or records as may be needed by the attorney or attorneys for said tribes or bands of Indians.

SEC. 3. That if it be determined by the Court of Claims in the said suit herein authorized that the United States Government has wrongfully appropriated any lands belonging to the said Northern Arapahoe Tribe or the Northern Cheyenne Tribe of Indians, damages therefor shall be confined to the value of the said land at the time of said appropriation, together with interest at 3 per cent per annum, and the decree of the Court of Claims with reference thereto, when satisfied, shall annul and cancel all claim and title of the said Northern Arapahoe Tribe or Northern Cheyenne Tribe or any other tribe or band of Indians in and to said lands, as well as all damages for all wrongs and injuries, if any, committed by the Government of the United States with reference thereto.

SEC. 4. That upon the final determination of such suit, cause, or action the Court of Claims shall decree such fees as it shall find reasonable to be paid the attorney or attorneys employed therein by said tribes or bands of Indians under contracts negotiated and approved as provided by existing law, and in no case shall the fee decreed by said Court of Claims be in excess of the amounts stipulated in the contracts approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior, and no attorney shall have a right to represent the said tribes or any band thereof in any suit, cause, or action under the provisions of this act until his contract shall have been approved as herein provided. The fees decreed by the court to the attorney or attorneys of record shall be paid out of any sum or sums recovered in such suits or actions, and no part of such fees shall be taken from any money in the Treasury of the United States belonging to such tribes or bands of Indians in whose behalf the suit is brought unless specifically authorized in the contract approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior as herein provided: Provided, That in no case shall the fees decreed by said court amount to more than 10 per cent of the amount of the judgment recovered in such cause.

Mr. CURTIS. On page 3, line 21, the committee recommends striking out the words beginning with the word "together" and ending with the words "per annum." It is a provision allowing interest. It is not the policy of the Government to allow interest.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 3, line 21, to strike out the words "together with interest at 3 per cent per annum," so as to make the clause read:

Damages therefor shall be confined to the value of the said land at the time of said appropriation, and the decree of the Court of Claims with reference thereto, when satisfied, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OTTAWA AND CHIPPEWA INDIANS.

The bill (S. 3307) authorizing the Ottawa and Chippewa Tribes of Indians of Michigan to submit claims to the Court of Claims was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all claims of whatsoever nature which the Ottawa and Chippewa Tribes of Indians of Michigan may have against the United States may be submitted to the Court of Claims for determination of the amount, if any, due said tribes from the United States under any treaties, agreements, or laws of Congress, or for the misappropriation of any of the funds of said tribes, or for the failure of the United States to pay said tribes any moneys or other property due; and jurisdiction is hereby conferred on the Court of Claims, with the right of either party to appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States to hear and determine all legal and equitable claims, if any, of said tribes against the United States, and to enter judgment thereon.

SEC. 2. That if any claim or claims be submitted to said court, they shall settle the rights therein, both legal and equitable, of each and all the parties thereto, notwithstanding lapse of time or statutes of limitations, and any payment which may have been made upon any claim so submitted shall not be pleaded as an estoppel, but may be pleaded as an offset in such suits or actions, and the United States shall be allowed credit for all sums heretofore paid or expended for the benefit of said tribes or any band thereof. The claim or claims of said tribes, or band or bands thereof, may be presented separately or jointly by petition, subject, however, to amendment, suit to be filed within five years after the passage of this act; and such action shall make the petitioner or petitioners party plaintiff or plaintiffs and the United States shall be the party defendant, and any band or bands of said tribes the court may deem necessary to a final determination of such suit or suits may be joined therein as the court may order. Such petition which shall be verified by the attorney or attorneys employed by the said Ottawa and Chippewa Tribes of Indians of Michigan, or any bands thereof, shall set forth all the facts on which the claims for recovery are based, and said petition shall be signed by the attorney or attorneys employed, and no other verification shall be necessary; official letters, papers, documents, and public records, or certified copies thereof, may be used in evidence, and the departments of the Government shall give access to the attorney or attorneys of said tribes or bands thereof to such treaties, papers, correspondence, or records as may be needed by the attorney or attorneys for said tribes or bands of Indians.

SEC. 3. That upon the final determination of such suit, cause, or action, the Court of Claims shall decree such fees as it shall find reasonable to be paid the attorney or attorneys employed therein by said tribes under contract to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs as provided by existing law, and in no case shall the fees decreed by said court amount to more than 10 per cent of the amount of the judgment recovered in such cause, such fee to be paid from said judgment.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALLOTMENT TO MARY CRANE.

The bill (S. 4046) to cancel an allotment made to Mary Crane, deceased, embracing lands on the Winnebago Reservation, in Nebraska, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to cancel the restricted fee patent issued to Mary Crane (Ho tah kah win kaw), deceased Winnebago allottee, No. 43, on the Winnebago Reservation, in Nebraska, embracing the southwest quarter of the northeast quarter of section 20, township 26 north, range 9 east, sixth principal meridian, Nebraska, containing 40 acres.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALLOTMENT TO COMANCHE PESSA.

The bill (S. 4047) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to make an allotment to Pessa, a member of the Comanche Tribe of Indians in Oklahoma, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to make an allotment of 160 acres from the unallotted, unreserved, unappropriated, and undisposed of tracts within the former Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Indian Reservation in Oklahoma to Pessa, a dully enrolled and recognized member of the Comanche Tribe, who has not heretofore been allotted, but who is entitled to an allotment under the provisions of the act of Congress of June 6, 1900 (31 Stat. L., p. 676): Provided, That all acts of Congress inconsistent with making the allotment herein provided for are hereby amended accordingly.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ERROR IN INDIAN ALLOTMENT.

The bill (H. R. 9615) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to correct an error in an Indian allotment was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purpose of correcting an error made in the allotment on the public domain of Domatil E. Lafournaise, an Indian of the Turtle Mountain Band of Chippewas, whereby the same is in conflict with the allotment of Jenoir Brien, a member of the same band, and to clear title to the land allotted to Jenoir Brien, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to issue a patent in fee to lot 5 of the southeast quarter of section 6, township 159 north, range 103 west of the fifth principal meridian in North Dakota, in favor of Henry E. Thomas, holder of a deed to the allotment of Domatil E. Lafournaise (now Patnaude); said patent to issue upon the execution by Henry E. Thomas of a quitclaim deed in favor of E. L. Hugelen, purchaser of the allotment of Jenoir Brien, covering lot 3 of the same section allotted to Jenoir Brien and erroneously included in the allotment of Domatil E. Lafournaise.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LAND IN FORT BERTHOLD INDIAN RESERVATION.

The bill (H. R. 13139) for the sale of isolated tracts in the former Fort Berthold Indian Reservation, N. Dak., was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of section 2455 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as amended by the act of March 28, 1912 (37 Stats. L., p. 77), relating to the sale at public auction of isolated tracts of the public domain, be, and the same are hereby, extended and made applicable to lands within the portion of the Fort Berthold Indian Reservation, N. Dak., opened under the act of June 1, 1910 (36 Stats. L., p. 455): Provided, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to lands which are not subject to homestead entry: Provided, further, That purchasers of land under this act shall pay for the lands not less than the price fixed in the law opening such lands to homestead entry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLAIMS OF CROW INDIANS.

The bill (S. 192) authorizing the Crow Tribe of Indians, residing in the State of Montana, to submit claims to the Court of Claims, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments, on page 2, after line 6, to insert the words "within five years from the passage of this act"; on line 8, after the word "plaintiff," to strike out the word "and" and to insert in lieu thereof the word "against"; on line 11, after the word "Indians," to insert the words "under contract approved by the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in accordance with sections 2103–2106 of the Revised Statutes of the United States"; on line 19, after the word "recovery," to strike out the words "and in no case in excess of $25,000"; and on line 23, after the word "reside," to strike out the words "and the same shall be included in the decree," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That all claims of whatsoever nature which the Crow Tribe of Indians residing in the State of Montana may have or claim to have against the United States under any treaty or law of Congress, or for the misappropriation of any funds of the tribe, or the failure to pay any moneys when due shall be submitted to the Court of Claims, with the right of appeal by either party to the Supreme Court of the United States for determination, and jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine any and all such claims and to render final judgment thereon.

The Court of Claims shall advance the case or cases upon its docket for hearing, and shall have authority to determine and adjudge the rights, both legal and equitable, of the said Crow Tribe and of the United States in the premises, notwithstanding lapse of time or statutes of limitation. The suit or suits instituted hereunder shall be begun within five years from the passage of this act by the Crow Tribe of Indians as parties plaintiff against the United States as party defendant. The petition or petitions may be verified by the attorney or attorneys employed in said claim by the Crow Tribe of Indians under contract approved by the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in accordance with sections 2103–2106 of the Revised Statutes of the United States upon information and belief as to the facts therein alleged, and no other verification shall be necessary: Provided, That upon the final determination of such suit or suits the Court of Claims shall have jurisdiction to fix and determine a reasonable fee, not to exceed 10 per cent of the recovery, to be paid to the attorney or attorneys employed by the said Crow Tribe of Indians, who shall be a member or members of the bar in good standing of the highest court of the State, District, or Territory in which he or they reside, and shall be paid out of any sum or sums found due said tribe.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE DYE INDUSTRY.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is House bill 8078.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8078) to regulate the importation of coal-tar products, to promote the establishment of the manufacture thereof in the United States, and, as incident thereto, to amend the act of September 8, 1916, entitled "An act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes."

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Reading Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Cummins	Gronna	Keyes
Borah	Curtis	Hale	King
Brandegee	Dial	Harris	McLean
Capper	Edge	Henderson	McNary
Chamberlain	Elkins	Jones, Wash.	Nelson
Colt	Fall	Kendrick	New
Culberson	Gay	Kenyon	Nugent
Overman	Smith, Md.	Townsend	Warren
Pomerene	Smoot	Trammell	Watson
Simmons	Sutherland	Underwood	Wolcott
Smith, Ariz.	Thomas	Wadsworth

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CURTIS in the chair). Forty-three Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The Reading Clerk called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. MCCUMBER, Mr. PAGE, and Mr. REED answered to their names when called.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN, Mr. SWANSON, Mr. STERLING, Mr. CALDER, Mr. FERNALD, Mr. PHIPPS, and Mr. SHEPPARD entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The bill will be read.

The Reading Clerk read the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Finance with amendments.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the reading of the bill has been concluded?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Washington in the chair). The reading of the bill has been concluded except as to the portions which have been stricken out and the committee amendments, which are printed in italics.

Mr. THOMAS. May I ask the Senator having charge of the bill whether he desires that the amendments to the bill be considered seriatim?

Mr. WATSON. I think the best course to pursue would be first to consider the committee amendments.

Mr. THOMAS. There are some unimportant amendments in the bill.

Mr. WATSON. There are some unimportant amendments, and, in order to make harmonious the text, I wish to offer two or three amendments at this point, if the Senator will allow me.

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly. I simply rose to inquire of the Senator how he intended to proceed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 3, line 4, it is proposed to strike out "benzochloride" and in lieu thereof to insert the word "benzoylchloride."

Mr. WATSON. That is simply a correction of the spelling, I will say to the Senator from Colorado.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The next amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 6, line 11, after the word "That," it is proposed to strike out the words "on and after the day following the passage of this act."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, my attention was diverted for a moment, and I inquire how far the Secretary has proceeded with the reading of the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary has read all of the bill except the parts stricken out and the amendments of the committee, which are printed in italics; in other words, the Secretary has read all of the original bill.

Mr. WATSON. Then, I think, Mr. President, we might as well have the amendments read and considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The first amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 1, line 3, after the word "That," to strike out "title 5" and to insert "Title V."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on the same page, line 6, after the word "That," to strike out "on and after the day following the passage of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 1, before the word "or" to strike out "zylidin" and insert "xylidin"; and, in the same line, after the word "sulphoacid," to strike out "of" and insert "or."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 1, before the words "per cent," to strike out "40" and insert "15," so as to read "15 per cent ad valorem."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 10, before the word "suitable" to strike out "resorcin," and the comma, and insert "resorcin"; in line 11, after the word "its," to strike out

"salts" and the comma, and insert "salts"; in line 13, after the word "saccharin" to strike out "methylsalicylate, coumarin, and other flavors"; in line 16, before the word "indene" to strike out "coumarone" and insert "coumaron"; on page 6, line 2, after the word "indigo" to strike out "natural methyl salicylate or oil of wintergreen or oil of sweet birch; natural coumarin," and insert "adonite, arabinose, dulcitol, galactose, inosite, inulin, levulose, mannitol, mannose, melizitose, raffinose, rhamnose, sorbitol, xylose, and other of the higher saccharides required for scientific purposes"; and in line 9, before the words "per centum" to strike out "45" and to insert "30."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 14, after the words "duty of" to strike out "6" and to insert "2½"; in line 16, after the words "duty of," to strike out "7" and insert "5"; in line 23, after the words "duty of" to strike out "7" and insert "5"; on page 7, line 1, before the "cents" to strike out "7" and insert "5"; on the same page, line 12, after the word "That" to strike out the words "beginning six months" and to insert "on and"; in the same line, before the word "passage" to strike out "date of"; and in line 16, after the word "ingredients" to strike out "of" and insert "or."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 10, after the word "That" to strike out "all articles" and insert "any article"; in line 11, after the words "terms of" to strike out "paragraphs" and insert "paragraph"; and, in line 12, after the numerals "501," to strike out "and" and insert "or."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 16, after the word "That," to strike out "on and after the day when this act shall go into effect."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, after line 4, to strike out:

SEC. 503 (a). During the period of two years after the date of the approval of this act it shall be unlawful for any person or persons or corporation to import or bring into the United States, or any of its possessions, except under license previously obtained, as hereinafter provided, from the United States Tariff Commission, any of the products enumerated in section 500 of this act, or any product derived directly or indirectly from coal tar, including crude products and intermediate products, as well as dyestuffs, medicinals, and other finished products, and including mixtures and compounds of such products and other products.

To meet the reasonable expenses of the United States Tariff Commission in the execution of the duties imposed upon it by this act, the cost of maintenance of a suitable office at a place to be designated by the commission, the commission may charge a reasonable fee for the issue of each license. Should the moneys received from such fees in any year be less than the said expenses the deficiency shall be paid out of the appropriation for 'expenses of collecting the revenue from customs.'

SEC. 503 (b). The said United States Tariff Commission shall issue licenses to import for domestic consumption such of the products covered by section 503 (a) of this act, as may be unobtainable from domestic sources and also such and such only of the said products as may, though obtainable from domestic sources be unobtainable on reasonable terms as to price, quality, and delivery. The commission shall limit the issue of licenses to import any product as nearly as may be to the quantities required by the actual current needs of the consuming industries in the United States, having regard to the necessities of such industries as are unable to determine beforehand their requirements. Nothing herein contained shall authorize the commission to refuse a license to a manufacturer, person, or agent to import for actual use by the manufacturer a foreign dye when such domestic dye of equal quality is not immediately available for his use. The commission in passing upon applications for such licenses may regulate its own practice and procedure, but shall so regulate the same as to prevent all avoidable delay.

SEC. 503 (c). Any product described in section 503 (a) of this act which shall be imported into the United States or any of its possessions without license, as provided in said section 503 (a), shall be forfeited and shall be destroyed whenever and wherever found.

SEC. 503 (d). Any person subject to the jurisdiction of the United States who shall, either as principal or as accessory, import or attempt to import or aid in importing any product described in section 503 (a) of this act without license as therein provided shall be fined not exceeding $5,000 or the value of such product at the time of importation, whichever shall be greater, or shall be imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.

SEC. 504. Except as otherwise herein specially provided, this act shall take effect on the day following its passage.

And insert:

SEC. 504. That during the period of three years after the date of the approval of this act, except as hereinafter provided, no article enumerated in Group II or Group III of section 500 of this act shall be admitted to entry or delivered from customs custody in the United States or in any of its possessions unless the United States Tariff Commission shall determine that such article or a satisfactory substitute therefor is not obtainable in the United States or in any of its possessions on reasonable terms as to quality, price, and delivery, and that such article is required for use by an actual consumer in the United States or in any of its possessions.

SEC. 505. That under this act an article shall be deemed to be of reasonable quality if such article, in the judgment of the United States Tariff Commission, is capable of giving results in use substantially equal to a corresponding article of foreign origin.

SEC. 506. That under this act "reasonable terms as to price" for any article shall mean the lowest price or prices, for the time being, which, in the judgment of the United States Tariff Commission, shall be sufficient to insure the maintenance in the United States or in any of its possessions of the production of such article by an efficient plant operating on a substantial commercial scale.

SEC. 507. That under this act "reasonable terms as to delivery" shall mean delivery within such period as, in the judgment of the United States Tariff Commission, shall be a reasonable time of an amount of such article or articles, which, in said commission's judgment, shall be sufficient to supply the need of the consumer or consumers for a period of six months.

SEC. 508. That the United States Tariff Commission, in executing the duties imposed upon it by this act, may regulate its own practice and procedure and make all rules and regulations necessary and proper for the accomplishment of the purposes of this act: Provided, That no article enumerated in Group II or Group III of section 500 of this act shall be admitted to entry or delivered from customs custody in the United States or in any of its possessions in any case where the United States Tariff Commission shall determine that the actual consumer for whose use such article is intended has received or may obtain on reasonable terms as to quality, price, and delivery a six months' supply of such article: And provided further, That no article enumerated in Group II or Group III of section 500 of this act which may be useful both as a substitute for a domestic article and for some other purpose for which the domestic article is not adapted shall be admitted to entry or delivered from customs custody in the United States or in any of its possessions, except when the United States Tariff Commission shall determine that such article is imported for such other purpose.

SEC. 509. That the United States Tariff Commission shall have exclusive jurisdiction of the distribution among consumers in the United States and in its possessions of any of the articles which may become available to such consumers under Annex VI of section 1 of Part VIII of the treaty of peace with Germany submitted by the President on July 10, 1919, to the United States Senate.

SEC. 510. That, notwithstanding the prior termination of the present war, the provisions of the trading with the enemy act, approved October 6, 1917, and of any proclamation of the President issued in pursuance thereof, which prohibit or control the importation into the United States of dyes or other products derived directly or indirectly from coal tar, are continued for a period of 90 days, beginning with the date of the taking effect of this act. All individual licenses issued by the War Trade Board section of the Department of State prior to the expiration of said 90 days shall remain in effect and the importations under such licenses shall be permitted.

SEC. 511. That 90 days after the date when this act shall take effect the Secretary of State shall forthwith cause to be transferred to the United States Tariff Commission all papers, questionnaires, documents, books, and other records of the War Trade Board Section of the Department of State relating to the issuance of individual import licenses on articles enumerated in Group II and Group III of section 500 of this act.

SEC. 512. That for the purpose of enforcing the provisions of this act the United States Tariff Commission shall have the power to require, by order from time to time, from any persons engaged in the manufacture within the United States or in any of its possessions of any articles enumerated in Group II or Group III of section 500 of this act and who ship or deliver for shipment any such articles in interstate commerce, sworn statements showing their actual production, stocks on hand, contracts, or accepted orders for future delivery, and cost of production of such articles and price at which each article is offered for sale, together with a sample thereof, if desired, and any other information which the United States Tariff Commission may require.

The United States Tariff Commission shall also have power, through its duly authorized agents, to visit and inspect all factories and warehouses and books of record of persons engaged in the manufacture within the United States or in any of its possessions of any of the articles enumerated in Group II or Group III of section 500 of this act and who ship or deliver for shipment any of such articles in interstate commerce. The powers granted the United States Tariff Commission under Title VII of the act of Congress approved September 8, 1916, entitled "An act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes," shall furthermore be available for carrying into effect the provisions of this act.

The information thus secured shall not be matter of public record, but shall be for the confidential use of the United States Tariff Commission only, and shall not be published or revealed except in the form of totals, averages, or summaries which shall not disclose the operations of individual domestic manufacturers.

SEC. 513. That any person who refuses or fails to comply with any order of the United States Tariff Commission issued by authority granted in this act and who while so refusing or failing to comply ships or delivers for shipment in interstate commerce any of the articles enumerated in Group II or Group III of section 500 of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $100 per day until such order of the United States Tariff Commission shall be complied with.

SEC. 514. That any person subject to the jurisdiction of the United States who shall, either as principal or as accessory, enter or attempt to enter or aid in entering any article enumerated in Group II or Group III of section 500 of this act otherwise than as herein provided or otherwise than in compliance with the rules and regulations prescribed under the authority of this act, or who shall willfully misstate or misrepresent any facts to the said United States Tariff Commission shall be fined not exceeding $5,000 or the appraised value of such article in the United States at the time of importation, whichever shall be greater, or shall be imprisoned for not exceeding two years, or both; and the United States Tariff Commission may, in its discretion, refuse to permit any such person to make further entries of any of the articles enumerated in Group II or Group III of section 500 of this act.

SEC. 515. That the word "person" as used in this act shall include individuals, partnerships, associations, and corporations.

SEC. 516. That any article enumerated in Group II or Group III of section 500 of this act which the United States Tariff Commission shall find has been entered or delivered contrary to the provisions of this act, or which shall be abandoned as unclaimed, shall be destroyed under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

SEC. 517. That to meet all necessary expenses of the United States Tariff Commission in performing the duties imposed by this act, including rental of suitable quarters, the purchase of supplies and equipment, books of reference, law books, periodicals, and printing and binding, and the payment of personal and other services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere and traveling and subsistence expenses in the United States, together with all necessary traveling expenses and expenses for subsistence outside of the United States which shall not be restricted by the limitations of existing law, the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920.

SEC. 518. That it is hereby expressly declared to be the intent of the Congress in enacting this act to build up, develop, and protect the dyestuffs manufacturing industry in the United States and its possessions, and that each and every of the foregoing sections shall be so construed as to effectuate such intent.

SEC. 519. That except as otherwise herein specially provided, this act shall take effect on the day following its passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. THOMAS obtained the floor.

Mr. KING. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Frelinghuysen	McCormick	Smith, S. C.
Borah	Gay	McCumber	Smoot
Brandegee	Hale	Moses	Sutherland
Chamberlain	Harris	Nelson	Swanson
Culberson	Harrison	Nugent	Thomas
Cummins	Henderson	Page	Townsend
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Phelan	Underwood
Dial	Kellogg	Phipps	Wadsworth
Edge	Kendrick	Sheppard	Warren
Elkins	Kenyon	Simmons	Watson
Fall	Keyes	Smith, Ariz.	Wolcott
Fernald	King	Smith, Ga.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-seven Senators have answered to their names, not a quorum. The Secretary will call the names of absentees.

The Reading Clerk called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. CAPPER and Mr. RANSDELL answered to their names when called.

Mr. CALDER, Mr. SMITH of Maryland, Mr. COLT, Mr. FRANCE, Mr. POMERENE, and Mr. STERLING entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. MOSES. What is the present status of the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is in the Committee of the Whole, and the pending question is the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. THOMAS addressed the Senate. After having spoken, with interruptions, for about two hours,

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, has the Senator reached a point in his remarks where he can suspend for this evening?

Mr. THOMAS. I am entirely subject to the pleasure of the Senator who has charge of the bill.

Mr. WATSON. That is very kind of the Senator, but I do not desire to interrupt the continuity of his remarks.

Mr. THOMAS. I am perfectly willing to yield the floor until to-morrow if the Senator desires.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. WATSON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, May 4, 1920, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, May 3, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Infinite Spirit, our Father in heaven, out of the depth of the soul we cry unto Thee for renewed faith and confidence, inspiration, strength, courage; that with fidelity to truth we may hold our course to Thee as it has been revealed to us in all the ages of the past, by the thoughts and behavior of the good and the true, especially in holy writ by the prophets and seers, and in the life, character, and heroic example of the world's Great Exemplar, Christ the Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, Mr. FOCHT was granted leave of absence for the day, on account of the death of a friend.

ASSISTANCE TO THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask consideration of the privileged resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolution 526.

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary, pursuant to the resolution of the House of Representatives adopted March 4, 1920, be, and is hereby, authorized and empowered to employ such stenographic, clerical, and legal assistance, and such accountants, and to have such printing and binding done as it may deem necessary.

All expenses that may be incurred by said committee, including the expenses of said committee or any subcommittee thereof when sitting outside of the District of Columbia, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, on vouchers signed by the chairman of said committee, or by the chairman of a subcommittee, where such expenses are incurred by such subcommittee.

The committee amendments were read, as follows:

Page 1, line 4, after the word "stenographic," insert the word "and," and after the word "clerical," strike out the words "and legal," and after the word "assistance," in line 5, strike out "and such accountants," and in line 6, beginning with the line, strike out the words "and binding," and add, after line 13, the words "and approved by the Committee on Accounts, provided any such expenditures shall not exceed $500."

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, this is a resolution to provide funds for the Subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary that has in hand the sugar investigation under the resolution referred to. I have talked with the chairman of the subcommittee and he said that the amount named in this resolution would be ample for all their expenditures. There have been certain eliminations made in the original resolution and the committee amendments properly safeguard the measure, so there can be no objection raised.

Mr. GARNER. If the gentleman will yield, I think the Subcommittee on the Judiciary, as well as the Committee on Accounts, are to be congratulated for making an investigation of this kind with such far-reaching effect on such a small amount of money. This is the first political resolution I have heard which costs as little as $500, and I think you are to be congratulated.

Mr. IRELAND. I am fearful that the chairman of the committee, if he makes a very exhaustive examination, is going to come back and ask for more, will be forced to do so; but he said that this amount would be ample for the present.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IRELAND. I will.

Mr. GARD. Did the gentleman state that the chairman of the subcommittee stated that there might be necessity for further appropriation?

Mr. IRELAND. No; when I talked with him he was very confident this would be sufficient, but I am fearful if this investigation is extended he will want more later.

Mr. GARD. I understand that the resolution as amended by the committee, with the consent of the chairman, of the Subcommittee on the Judiciary, eliminates the employment of legal assistance?

Mr. IRELAND. It certainly does.

Mr. GARD. And limits the appropriation to $500?

Mr. IRELAND. Yes, sir; that is correct.

Mr. GARD. It takes out also the item for binding.

Mr. IRELAND. There appeared to be no necessity for that. I ask for the adoption of the amendments.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

RETIREMENT BILL.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, I ask to take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 1699, the retirement bill, to insist on the House amendments, and acceed to the Senate's request for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the clerks' retirement bill and insist upon the House amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Chair appoints the following conferees.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. LEHLBACH, Mr. FAIRFIELD, and Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, announced that the President had, on May 1, 1920, approved and signed bill of the following title:

H. R. 9369. An act to revise and equalize rates of pension to certain soldiers, sailors, and marines of the Civil War and the War with Mexico, to certain widows, including widows of the War of 1812, former widows, dependent parents, and children of such soldiers, sailors, and marines, and to certain Army nurses, and granting pensions and increase of pensions in certain cases.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 3239. An act to amend the Army appropriation act for 1920 so as to authorize travel allowances to persons discharged from disciplinary barracks and other places of confinement other than honorably, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY—REMOVAL OF AQUEDUCT BRIDGE.

The first business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 10328) to amend an act approved May 18, 1916, entitled "An act to provide for the removal of what is known as the Aqueduct Bridge, across the Potomac River, and for the building of a bridge in the place thereof."

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the bill just reported may be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed without prejudice. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Well, Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this bill has been retained on the Unanimous Consent Calendar now for several weeks, and I think if it is going to be passed this time it ought to go to the foot of the calendar, the same as other bills which, when they are passed numerically, are placed at the foot of the calendar. This is quite an important measure.

Mr. MONTAGUE. That is one reason I have asked that it be passed without prejudice. I have not heretofore asked that it be considered because of its importance, and for that reason I requested that it go over without prejudice. I do that after a conference with the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH].

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman have any serious objection to its going to the foot of the calendar?

Mr. MONTAGUE. No; not any very serious objection; and if the gentleman insists upon it I recognize his right to interpose objection.

Mr. WALSH. No; I will not make it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to passing the bill without prejudice? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the next bill.

CHANGING NAME OF SEQUOIA NATIONAL PARK, CALIF., TO ROOSEVELT PARK.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 5006) to add certain lands to the Sequoia National Park, Calif., and to change the name of said park to Roosevelt National Park.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask that this bill be passed without prejudice. The gentlemen interested in it are not present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent that this bill be passed without prejudice. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does the gentleman know that it is the purpose of the gentlemen to reconcile the differences which have existed apparently between the Department of Agriculture and the Department of the Interior?

Mr. SINNOTT. I think that is the purpose of the gentleman who introduced the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the next bill.

IRRIGATION EASEMENTS IN YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 12466) authorizing the granting of certain irrigation easements in the Yellowstone National Park, and for other purposes.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. I object.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I wish to explain its merits. I attempted to do so to the gentleman personally about the last unanimous-consent day, and he told me he would not be here and did not care to go into the matter. This is a bill of very great importance, affecting the interests of nearly 30,000 people, not only their individual properties but the food supply, as the construction of the reservoir as proposed will avoid a possible loss of ten or fifteen million dollars' worth of foodstuffs annually.

Mr. WALSH. I will reserve my objection.

Mr. SIEGEL. I am going to object anyway.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. SIEGEL. I propose to object anyway.

Mr. WALSH. Well, I am going to object anyway, but I will reserve the right to object.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. If the gentlemen do not wish to be informed about the bill, of course there is no use in discussing it.

Mr. WALSH. On what does the gentleman base his assumption that gentlemen are not informed about the bill?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Because the gentleman was not here when the bill was discussed two weeks ago for nearly an hour.

Mr. WALSH. That is a very slight basis, that because I was not here two weeks ago is a good reason for supposing that I have not given it attention since. The gentleman is not the only source of information on this measure.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Of course, that is true.

Mr. WALSH. I am reserving the right to object. The gentleman desired to submit certain information, which I would be very glad if he would do.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York object?

Mr. SIEGEL. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

SETTLEMENT WITH LESSEES, CAMP FUNSTON, KANS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3706) authorizing the Secretary of War to make settlement with the lessees who erected buildings on a five-year lease on the zone at Camp Funston, Kans., and for other purposes.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I do not see the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] here on the floor, and I ask that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

INVENTIONS, PATENTS, AND PATENT RIGHTS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 9932) authorizing the Federal Trade Commission to accept and administer for the benefit of the public and the encouragement of industry inventions, patents, and patent rights, and for other purposes.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. WALSH. Well, Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from California [Mr. NOLAN], if he is present, if it is intended that the Government should embark upon the policy of developing patents and inventions under the broad powers contained in this bill, collecting fees for royalties, and so on? I now am informed and understand the gentleman from California is unavoidably detained upon other important business, and during his absence I shall be compelled to object. I will ask that the bill be passed over without prejudice and go to the foot of the calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice and go to the foot of the calendar. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CLAIMS OF INDIANS RESIDING IN CALIFORNIA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 12788) authorizing any tribes or bands of Indians of California to submit claims to the Court of Claims.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Reserving the right to object, the bill seems to authorize almost anybody to bring a claim against the Government if he happens to be a resident of California now or in the past. That is a good place to reside. How many suits against the Government is it expected will be brought if this bill should become a law?

Mr. RAKER. One.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Well, if that is the case, the bill ought to be so drawn.

Mr. RAKER. If the gentleman will yield for a statement, I will say that there were originally 18 tribes or bands that had negotiated the treaties referred to in the report. There is another tribe with which a treaty was not had. They are in the northern part of the State. The court is given the power and authority and the department believes it would be better that one suit were brought to bring in all in one suit. In other words, some might sue and the rest would hold off. Now, the court can authorize and direct all to come in, and the whole matter is adjudicated in one petition. It saves litigation and it saves expense and trouble, and the Department of the Interior thought it would be better to do it that way than to attempt to put in the 18 tribes referred to here.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not know how many tribes or bands there are; 50 or 60——

Mr. RAKER. No; there are 18, as the report shows.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, no; I beg the gentleman's pardon. Eighteen does not include all the bands and tribes, if I am correctly informed. Can even 18 different tribes or bands bring one suit? If this gives authority to any band of Indians in California to bring a suit against the Government, of course that authority, if it is given and attorneys can find any possible chance to make a claim against the Government, will naturally encourage the bringing of suits that are not contemplated now at all.

Mr. RAKER. No. The purpose is not that.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I am talking about the effect, not the purpose in the gentleman's mind.

Mr. RAKER. I think the department officials and attorneys are all of opinion that we can get one litigation. It involves one question, primarily, and that is the right of the Indians to possession of these lands of which they were dispossessed, and the court will adjudicate that question in one case. It will save expense to the Government and expense to individuals, and that one question is all there is involved in the whole matter.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If one tribe of Indians brings a suit against the Government, how can some other tribe or band of Indians, relating to other lands entirely, be joined in the suit?

Mr. RAKER. This bill authorizes it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Where?

Mr. RAKER. I think in section 2:

> The claim or claims of the said tribe or any band thereof may be presented separately or jointly by petition, subject, however, to amendment, suit to be filed within two years after the passage of this act; and such action shall make the petitioner or petitioners party plaintiff or plaintiffs and the United States shall be the party defendant, and any band or bands of said tribes the court may deem necessary to a final determination of such suit or suits may be joined therein as the court may order.

I want to call the attention of the gentleman to this one matter, and I think I know what he wants. The question involved is as to the right of the Indians to the land at the time of the treaty between the United States and Mexico. Now, if the court decides that they had no title or right by such possession, then all the cases are ended; but it can all be brought in at once, and if the court determines that the Indians, by virtue of that possession, had a claim of right, then the court could only give them the amount provided in the bill, namely, 7,500,000 acres, and fix the price at not exceeding $1.25 an acre, so that the Government is protected. In addition to that the Indians are to be charged with the $4,000,000 and some odd that has been given them as gratuities; but this will adjust the question of their right to the land. After the treaties were entered into by them and after the Government of the United States obtained this territory, all of the land was taken from the Indians and disposed of like other public lands. Does that answer the gentleman's question?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Well, in the first place this bill authorizes any number of suits to be brought, notwithstanding the argument of the gentleman that only one suit will be brought. In the second place, if one suit should be brought by one tribe, and there should be a decision by the Court of Claims in favor of the contention of the gentleman, the other tribes could not be joined in that suit.

Mr. RAKER. Two years are given in which to commence the suit. I think it was and is the purpose of all concerned that this may be in one consolidated case. Even if by chance there should be two or three petitions filed, as the questions are similar, the court undoubtedly would consolidate the cases, and there would be only one case tried, thereby saving expense and trouble, and it would all be before the court at once, so that it would all be adjudicated at one time, to the end that there would be no aftermath when the matter was disposed of.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, well, there will be an aftermath long after the gentleman and I are dead unless the Indians get all the money they want, just as this comes up seventy-odd years after the cause of action arose. There will always be an aftermath as long as there are live attorneys and live Indians to bring claims against the Government on some plea or other.

Mr. RAKER. Of course, what I meant by "no aftermath" was that the whole question would be adjudicated in one consolidated case. While there is life there is hope, as there ought to be; but the purpose is to economize and consolidate and adjust this matter as speedily and economically as possible.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If that is the purpose, then the bill ought to require it.

Mr. RAKER. We think it does.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman knows that it does not require it.

Mr. RAKER. I can not conceive of any district court or any other court allowing separate trials. If there should be two or three petitions filed on this same subject, the court undoubtedly, under the law, would direct a consolidation, and there would be only one trial.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. How many bands of Indians have there been in California? Between 50 and 100, have there not?

Mr. RAKER. Different bands?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. This bill permits any one of them to bring a suit against the Government. If the gentleman wants to accomplish a certain purpose, why does he not draw a bill to accomplish that purpose?

Mr. RAKER. The department, after their investigation, say this is the most economical way to do it, and expeditious, as well as fair to the Government and all concerned.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I have not seen that statement from the department. I think the bill had better go over until the gentleman can assure us.

Mr. RAKER. I did not have that statement of the department put in writing, to bring it up here; but there are other bills allowing other tribes of Indians to bring suit, and this is modeled after those.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not recall any other bill, but I think if this is passed this will be a model which gentlemen from every other Indian State will follow, to introduce a blanket bill authorizing anybody in the State who happens to be an Indian to bring a suit against the Government, regardless of whether he has an actual claim or not. I think it is bad practice.

Mr. RAKER. One other question, and then I am through. Will the gentleman yield for one more statement?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Why, certainly.

Mr. RAKER. The report and record show that this is the only lot of Indians who have been so badly treated for whom provision has not been made.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is the statement which the gentleman makes, but he can not get the Indians in Washington, or Oregon, or Idaho, or Oklahoma, or Montana to agree to it.

Mr. RAKER. That is the statement in the record of the department.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, I have not read it that way, but it does not make any difference. That has nothing to do with the question. I think the gentleman had better ask to have this go over.

Mr. RAKER. Other bills just like this have passed. Why not allow this to pass?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. RAKER. I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be passed without prejudice.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. This is the third time I have seen this bill come up by unanimous consent.

Mr. RAKER. No; this is the second time.

Mr. CANNON. If it is passed without prejudice or goes to the foot of the calendar, what is the effect of that? Is there any other, more efficient way to postpone it for the session, and to keep people who are against it and would be here, from having to come here every Monday? I am asking for information.

The SPEAKER. The effect of passing it without prejudice is to leave it on the calendar, so that it will come up two weeks from to-day.

Mr. CANNON. What would prevent it coming up two weeks from to-day?

The SPEAKER. After it has gone off the calendar the second time it would not come up again.

Mr. CANNON. I think we had better get it in that condition.

Mr. RAKER. I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. CANNON. Objection has already been made. Did not the gentleman from Massachusetts object?

Mr. WALSH. The request has not yet been stated by the Chair.

Mr. RAKER. I am making the request that the bill may be passed and remain on the calendar.

Mr. WALSH. I do not think a measure as general as this is ought to even be held out and have sufficient approval by the House to permit it to remain on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent.

Mr. RAKER. I hope the gentleman will not object. This is the second time that the bill has been brought up. I may say that other bills not so meritorious as this bill have been passed. It has the approval of the Indian Committee, and the chairman has stated that it is one of the most meritorious bills that has been before the Indian Committee.

Mr. WALSH. There is nothing personal in my objection.

Mr. RAKER. I know there is not.

Mr. WALSH. But I do not want to have it understood that the House has given unanimous consent to establish any such policy as to permit blanket legislation of this character. Why does not the gentleman frame the legislation along the lines of other bills?

Mr. RAKER. It is framed on a line advantageous to the Government and advantageous to the Indians. It saves time and consolidates the matter better than any other bill.

Mr. MacGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, the regular order.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask that it remain on the calendar, to go to the foot of the calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks that the bill go to the foot of the calendar. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. I object.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may speak for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, what does the gentleman wish to speak about?

Mr. RAKER. I would like to speak for five minutes on the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

Mr. WALSH. Why does not the gentleman speak under a reservation on the next bill? The gentleman can get it without stopping the proceedings for this purpose. I regret that I shall be obliged to object. The gentleman can get five minutes on the next bill.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Dudley, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with amendment the bill (H. R. 9783) to provide a national budget system and an independent audit of Government accounts, and for other purposes, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 13555) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense for the armament thereof and for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses and had appointed Mr. SMOOT, Mr. KENYON, and Mr. OVERMAN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13677) making appropriations to supply a deficiency in the appropriations for the Federal control of transportation system and to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a joint resolution and bills of the following titles:

H. J. Res. 80. Joint resolution to correct an error in the wording of the appropriation of $71,000 made in the act approved July 9, 1918, and to authorize the Secretary of War to pay said sum to respective parties entitled thereto;

H. R. 12537. An act to provide for an examination and report on the condition and possible irrigation development of the Imperial Valley in California;

H. R. 9615. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to correct an error in an Indian allotment;

H. R. 12460. An act to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of the admission of the State of Maine into the Union;

H. R. 12824. An act to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of the admission of the State of Alabama into the Union;

H. R. 13139. An act for the sale of isolated tracts in the former Fort Berthold Indian Reservation, N. Dak.;

H. R. 13227. An act to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the three hundredth anniversary of the landing of the Pilgrims; and

H. R. 6750. An act to deport certain undesirable aliens and to deny readmission to those deported.

DISPOSITION OF CERTAIN OREGON LAND GRANTS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 9392) regulating the disposition of lands formerly embraced in the grants to the Oregon & California Railroad Co. and Coos Bay Wagon Road Co.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT] a question. Are the provisions in this bill in accord with the provisions of the water-power bill, or do they run counter to the provisions of that legislation?

Mr. SINNOTT. No; I think not. This bill is introduced at the request of the Interior Department. It relates to the disposition of land formerly embraced in the grant to the Oregon & California Railroad Co. of some 2,000,000 acres, and the Coos Bay wagon-road grant, involving some 90,000 acres of land, the title to which was revested in the Government. The Secretary of the Interior desires to have authority to sell the timber contained on the power-site withdrawal.

Mr. WALSH. I was referring more especially to the provisions of section 2, which deals with the water-power site and the damages which are to be awarded under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior. As I recall the water-power bill, the authority is vested in a board consisting of three Cabinet officers.

Mr. SINNOTT. There is a special reservation in the revesting act. The revesting act authorized the Secretary of the Interior to make withdrawals of land valuable for power-site purposes. The act also gives certain settlers who were upon the land in December, 1913, and have maintained their residence on the land from that date to the date of application preference rights of entry on the land.

Some of these settlers have been on the land since 1905, but under the act of revestment these settlers get no preference or any rights on the land withdrawn for power-site purposes. It has developed since the land was thrown open for entry that a few settlers were residing on the land that has since been withdrawn for power-site purposes. I think there are 11 in one land district and 7 in another land district.

Section 2 would give these settlers the right to enter the land on which they have been living for some time and which has been withdrawn for power-site purposes. If that land were hereafter needed for power-site purposes it may be taken from them on reimbursement for their improvements.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SINNOTT. Certainly.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. What does the language mean in reference to homes where it says that these entries or sales authorized by the proviso shall be subject to disposition as water-power sites? Is the land to be taken away from the men to whom it has been sold without compensation?

Mr. SINNOTT. The land would be taken away without compensation, but they would be reimbursed for improvements.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Upon what theory do we do it? If he owns the land we have no authority to take it away without compensation. If he does not own the land why should we pay for the improvements illegally put upon it?

Mr. SINNOTT. The improvements are not illegally put upon it. For a number of years before the title was revested in the United States they were there, relying on the original terms of the grant to the railroad company. The grant provided that the land should be sold at not more than $2.50 an acre to actual settlers. These settlers went on the land. The railroad company refused to sell them the land.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. But in section 1 of this bill it is provided:

That if a valid claim for a preferred right of homestead entry is shown to exist * * * it may be exercised therefor, as provided in section 2 hereof.

If a valid claim for a homestead entry exists, is not the man entitled to the land? Upon what theory could we take the land away from a man who has a valid claim for homestead entry and pay him nothing for that and then allow him for the improvements, and is it not sure that if we do that we will be very soon called upon to pay him for the land we have taken away from him?

Mr. SINNOTT. That is, a valid claim in accordance with the terms of section 5 of the revestment act. I appreciate the gentleman's criticism, and I think it is well taken, but that really is not a valid claim. It is a valid claim within the provisions of section 5 of that act, except that the valid claim would not apply to lands withdrawn for power-site purposes, although otherwise it would come within the provisions of section 5 of the revestment act.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. As I understand it, there are various homesteaders on some of this land which has been withdrawn for power-site purposes, and they can not get a patent to the land. Their homestead entries are not allowed, but if the land had not been withdrawn for power-site purposes, then their homestead entries would have been valid and allowed.

Mr. SINNOTT. That is correct.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I am not sure that the gentleman even would help those people out in this case. Under section 1 of this bill you have to have a valid claim for a preferred right of homestead entry. That must exist. I do not recall the exact terms in section 5 of the act of 1916.

Mr. SINNOTT. I have it here—

Provided further, That during the period fixed for the submission of application for entry under this section any person duly qualified to enter said lands, who has resided thereon to the same extent and in the same manner as is required under the homestead laws, since the 1st day of December, 1913, and who has improved the land and devoted some portion thereof to agricultural use, and who shall have maintained his residence to the date of such application, shall have the preferred right to enter the quarter section upon which he was so residing, whether said land shall be of class 2 or class 3—

And class 1 is the water-power withdrawal land—where such quarter section does not contain more than 1,200,000 feet, board measure of timber, and where the quarter section contains more than said quantity of timber, such person may enter a 40-acre tract or lot containing approximately 40 acres upon which his improvements, or the greater part thereof, are situated.

So that he gets under section 5 a preference right to class 2 and class 3 land.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is for timber land or otherwise, but not for water-power site land.

Mr. SINNOTT. Not for water-power site land.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Here is land reserved for water-power site purposes, and he has not any valid claim for homestead entry on land reserved for that purpose, and it would not be a valid claim if the land had been reserved for water-power site purposes. I do not know what the construction is——

Mr. SINNOTT. I think they would give a liberal construction to it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I think we ought to know something about how many of these people there are who went on these claims knowing that they were water-power lands.

Mr. SINNOTT. These men all went upon the land prior to withdrawal of the land as water-power site land, because they had to be on the land since December, 1913, and the act of revestment providing for water-power site withdrawals was passed in June, 1916.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. In respect to the form of the gentleman's bill, if he will permit, I have a suggestion to make. The proviso in section 1 reads:

That if a valid claim for a preferred right of homestead entry is shown to exist * * * or a preferred right of purchase or entry, * * * it may be exercised therefor.

The term "is shown to exist" is not made applicable to the language in line 7 "or a preference right of purchase or entry under section 3." It occurs to me that it ought to be transposed from where it is to come in at the end of line 8.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I do not quite follow the gentleman.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman means that either in the case of a homestead entry or a preference right of purchase it must be shown to exist.

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The language "is shown to exist" does not apply to the language "or a preference right of purchase or entry" the way the bill reads. I think the language "is shown to exist" ought to come in at the end of line 8, so that it would refer both to the preferred right of entry and also to the preference right of purchase or entry.

Mr. SINNOTT. I think that should be changed in that way.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. With respect to section 2, suppose a man is on this land and has made a homestead entry, has made improvements upon it. Section 2 undertakes to say that the Government may dispose of that land as a part of a water-power site and make compensation to the owner for actual damages caused by the loss of his improvements. When is that to be done? These water-power sites may not be disposed of for many years, I take it.

Mr. SINNOTT. It will not be until the disposition of the land for water-power purposes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Is the man to be allowed to retain this land for 20 or 30 years or maybe longer, having paid nothing for it, and keep on making improvements which the Government will have to recompense for?

Mr. SINNOTT. Oh, he pays $2.50 an acre for the land.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Where?

Mr. SINNOTT. Under the terms of the act of revestment.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not think he pays anything for it.

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes; $2.50 per acre. That is provided for in the act of 1916.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It is perfectly patent that the Government can not stand in the position of letting a homesteader pay $2.50 a acre for his land and then the next day take it away from him and pay him nothing for it.

Mr. SINNOTT. Well, that is the sole right that he gets under the act of revestment and in this bill.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I understand, but we all know what would happen in a case of that kind, and suppose he stays there and keeps on making improvements? It seems to me that he and the Government both ought to know something more about their rights. I do not see why the Government should give the right to a man to improve land, and he takes the chances on the value of the land, and having made large improvements on it the Government takes the chances on the improvement.

Mr. SINNOTT. Well, a person who gets a water-power license on the land will have to reimburse the man for any improvements that are damaged and the sole right the settler will get is to be reimbursed.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not know who will reimburse him for his damages, whether the water-power man or the Government; I take it that it will be the Government. The water-power bill may provide for that; I do not know.

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes; it does. This bill was drawn by the Interior Department, and we made no changes in it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I thought so. Unfortunately they have somebody up there who draws bills very carelessly at times.

Mr. SINNOTT. I think the bill will accomplish the desired purpose.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman permit a further question? Does the gentleman think that if this measure should become a law before the general water-power bill becomes a law that the operations of section 2 would not run counter to the provisions of the general water-power bill?

Mr. SINNOTT. The general water-power bill will not apply to these lands——

Mr. WALSH. Why not?

Mr. SINNOTT. Because these lands are embraced within a special act of Congress, and entry upon water-power sites is particularly excluded.

Mr. WALSH. I withdraw my reservation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I was unable to hear a part of the colloquy, and therefore beg the indulgence of the committee if I ask something of which the gentleman has spoken, either in reply to the gentleman from Illinois or the gentleman from Massachusetts. I take it from reading the report that this bill was prepared by the Department of the Interior?

Mr. SINNOTT. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. GARD. And introduced by the gentleman from Oregon or some one of his committee?

Mr. SINNOTT. I introduced it at the request of the Secretary.

Mr. GARD. The bill provides for three different changes. It first provides for power sites——

Mr. SINNOTT. For four.

Mr. GARD. Timberlands, agricultural lands, and fees; but what I want particularly to know is this: Section 2 provides that certain lands may be embraced in homestead entries as are provided for in section 1 of this bill. That is the provision which allows him to sell the land as power-site land in the same way he is now authorized to sell lands classified as timberlands.

Mr. SINNOTT. Well, not to sell the land but to give certain settlers who have been on the land, some of them for 20 years, a right to make entry upon the land withdrawn for power-site purposes. The Secretary mentions, at the bottom of page 2 of the report, that some of these settlers have been on the land since 1905, and upon the land which was subsequently, within the last two or three years, withdrawn for power-site purposes; and unless this amendment is enacted into law these men will lose their rights and lose their improvements.

Mr. GARD. As I see from the report, while this act is supposed to have control over some 450,000 acres, that already 112,000 acres have been classified and withdrawn as valuable for power-site purposes?

Mr. SINNOTT. There is something over 2,000,000 acres all told in both the grants revested by the Government.

Mr. GARD. What is the gentleman's interpretation—and this is particularly what I want to know—of this language in section 2: "That the lands embraced in homestead entries or sales authorized by the provision of section 1"?

The object of the bill is to permit the taking of the land for power-site purposes, is it not?

Mr. SINNOTT. That is one object of the bill.

Mr. GARD. Why does not the bill include compensation for the property taken, assuming that a man has lived on it a long time and has made a proper homestead entry, instead of damages for improvement, loss of improvement sustained, and the use of the land for power-site and water-power purposes? In other words, as I view this section 2 it provides that, notwithstanding the fact that a man has been on the land a long time and has made certain improvements, for power-site purposes they can come in and take his land and pay him only for the actual damages sustained on the loss of improvements thereon through the use of the land for water-power purposes.

Mr. SINNOTT. Of course, he would take it subject to that hazard, and he only gets the preference right knowing that hazard is hanging over him.

Mr. GARD. Would not that apply to entries already made? Would not the same provision apply to entries already made?

Mr. SINNOTT. No; there are no entries that have been made, because they have already been rejected, and no man can apply for the railroad land unless he has been living upon the land since December, 1913, three years prior to the passage of the act revesting title in the 2,000,000 acres.

Mr. GARD. Is there any provision contained in this bill or contemplated for the payment of compensation other than the loss of improvements?

Mr. SINNOTT. Only the loss of improvements.

Mr. GARD. And to how many cases is it supposed this will apply?

Mr. SINNOTT. As I remember the testimony when the act of revestment was passed there were just about 100 settlers, all told, upon the entire 2,000,000 acres. But the Secretary reports that there are 18 cases pending—11 in Roseburg district and 7 from the Portland district.

Mr. GARD. Can the gentleman advise me as to what is the purpose of the department in recommending the enactment of this particular act at this time, before the enactment of the water-power bill, on which the gentleman is a conferee?

Mr. SINNOTT. I did not think the water-power bill will apply to these preference rights.

Mr. GARD. Is this intended to take care of a local situation which must be covered by this bill?

Mr. SINNOTT. It is intended to take care of a local situation which must be covered by this bill.

Mr. RAKER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT] a question. He is a member of the committee, and he is familiar with the situation. I want the matter to be fully presented to the House. It is my purpose to assist, if I can. But I want to get this other matter before the House and draw a distinction between a man in Oregon and one in California. These men were on this land while it was in the possession of the railroad company, while it had patent, while the settler was occupying the land. Is that right?

Mr. SINNOTT. That is right.

Mr. RAKER. Then, under the decision of the Supreme Court and the revestment act, we allowed those who were on the land while it was in the private ownership of the railroad company to claim a preference right for homesteads if they were on before 1913?

Mr. SINNOTT. December, 1913.

Mr. RAKER. Yes. This shows that some of these men were on the land as far back as 1905, having a possessory right. Is that right?

Mr. SINNOTT. That is right.

Mr. RAKER. In Oregon a man can go along and get a right, and the Government protects him at this late date and gives him a preference right to the land in the first instance, and when it is revested and when it is withdrawn for power sites it still protects him and allows him to secure damages. But the poor unfortunate devil of an Indian, who has been robbed of his rights, when a Member in his behalf comes in here and presents a bill, with a unanimous report from the committee favorably upon it, he can not get consideration to go to the Court of Claims to have it adjudicated. You will not even give him the right to be heard, let alone the right to adjudicate in advance by the legislation that we enact. This bill says to the man in Oregon, "We are going to protect your prior occupancy, when you occupied it when it was private land; we reinvested it in the Government, and we are still going to protect you in your rights."

But in addition to that we find that 120,000 acres is valuable for power-site purposes, and we say, "We are going to protect you in that, and give you a preference right, and make the parties pay you for it." But you go to work and kick the unfortunate Indian off and rob him of that which you promised him he should live upon, and beat him out of 7,500,000 acres of land, and you will not even give him a right to file his claim in the Court of Claims, to the end that it may be adjudicated in the same suit and at the same time.

I want to tell you that it does seem to me to be peculiar that the unfortunate Indian has got into the position where he can not even present his claim to the Court of Claims, even when all the officers of the Department of the Interior have gone over the matter, after it has been fully presented to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and that committee has unanimously reported not that you give him anything, but that you simply authorize him to go into the Court of Claims and present his claim to that tribunal upon valid testimony, and that he might present his claim.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from California yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. RAKER. I yield.

Mr. GARD. In making the statement that the gentleman is making in criticism of the action of the House a little while ago, does the gentleman feel that this bill pending should be objected to?

Mr. RAKER. I am asking the question of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT], and he is a level-headed, clear-minded gentleman, supporting here a bill relating to the Oregon (Klamath) Indians, which has received the sanction of this House. I was just wondering why it was you could provide a preference right to-day, and then when you bring a matter up for the purpose of giving a party—an Indian in California—a right to go into the Court of Claims, it should not even be considered. I want to say to the gentleman from Oregon that I am in favor of his bill, and that I hope it will be enacted, but I can not help reverting to the fact that consideration was refused to the other bill, H. R. 12788, just objected to. I hope that the distinguished gentlemen who objected to the other bill will at least read the hearings and permit it to be considered by the House, so that it can go to the Court of Claims for adjudication.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the act approved June 9, 1916 (39 Stat. L., 218), revesting title in the United States to the lands formerly granted to the Oregon & California Railroad Co. remaining unsold July 1, 1913, and the act approved February 26, 1919 (40 Stat. L., 1179), authorizing the United States to accept from the Southern Oregon Co. a reconveyance of the lands granted to the State of Oregon by the act approved March 3, 1869, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to sell the timber on lands classified and withdrawn as power-site lands, in such manner and at such times as he is now authorized to sell the timber from lands classified as timberlands: Provided, That if a valid claim for a preferred right of homestead entry is shown to exist, in accordance with the terms of section 5 of said act of June 9, 1916, or a preference right of purchase or entry under section 3 of said act of February 26, 1919, for lands thus classified and withdrawn, it may be exercised therefor, as provided in section 2 hereof.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend by striking out on page 2, line 5, after the word "entry," the words "is shown to exist" and to insert the same words at the end of line 8.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MANN of Illinois: Page 2, line 5, after the word "entry," strike out the words "is shown to exist" and insert the same words at the end of line 8, page 2.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That the provisions of the act of Congress approved May 31, 1918 (40 Stat. L., 393), "to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to exchange for lands in private ownership lands formerly embraced in the grant to the Oregon & California Railroad Co.," as amended in section 4 of this act, shall be extended to the lands reconveyed to the United States under the term of said act of February 26, 1919, and authorize the exchange of lands embraced therein in like manner and for the same purpose.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend, in line 22, page 2, by striking out the figures "393" and inserting "593."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SINNOTT: Page 2, line 22, strike out the figures "393" and insert the figures "593."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk completed the reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. SINNOTT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

REIMBURSEMENT OF CERTAIN COUNTIES IN NEW MEXICO.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3867) authorizing the State of New Mexico to apply the proceeds of the grant to said State of 1,000,000 acres of land made by section 7 of the enabling act, June 20, 1910, for the reimbursement of Grant County, Luna County, Hidalgo County, Santa Fe County, and the town of Silver City, N. Mex.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. HERNANDEZ] for a little explanation of this measure. It seems that there has been a House bill which was more comprehensive than the Senate bill, and now the Senate bill comes over very much curtailed in language.

Mr. HERNANDEZ. According to the report of the Secretary of the Interior, this bill is similar to a bill introduced during the Sixty-fifth Congress. Its purport is the same. This is a bill to authorize the Legislature of New Mexico to pass upon this matter. The Federal Government does not assume any responsibility whatever in making these payments. The money is now in the treasury of the State to meet the payments provided for in the bill. The amount involved is close to $300,000. It all comes from the proceeds of the sale, rental, and lease of the lands granted to the State by the enabling act of 1910. The bonds mentioned in the bill have already been validated by act of Congress of 1897. Payment of this interest by these counties had been stopped by an action in the United States court for the district of New Mexico because the enabling act does not mention that interest.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HERNANDEZ. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Under the enabling act we gave the State a million acres of land.

Mr. HERNANDEZ. For this purpose.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Not for this purpose, but for other purposes, and prescribed what the proceeds should be used for.

Mr. HERNANDEZ. Yes; primarily for this purpose.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Well, I think not. If we now by legislation divert the proceeds of the land and allow the State to use the proceeds for the purpose indicated in this bill, will that be followed hereafter by some one from the State claiming that because we diverted the proceeds from what we originally intended therefore we ought to give the State more land?

Mr. HERNANDEZ. Oh, no; not at all.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Well, I want to be very sure that that is definitely in the RECORD; and even if it were in the RECORD I would not trust it, if it were some of the States out there that are making claims.

Mr. HERNANDEZ. The original grant was made for the purpose of paying these bonds that had been validated by act of Congress of 1897. The bonds have been taken care of by the States by the issuance of other bonds in their place. The interest attached to the bonds has been paid. Everything has been settled except the interest that the counties had paid up to the time that the bonds were validated by the act of Congress. There will be no claims against the United States for this purpose. The money is now in the treasury of the States, and this bill authorizes the Legislature of the State of New Mexico to thrash out the matter and settle it once and forever. In any event, the remainder of this money derived from the sale, rental, and lease of these lands, when this matter is settled, will go into the general county funds of the State of New Mexico, where it belongs and where it was intended to go after this matter was settled. I hope there will be no objection to it, because those counties are very much interested in having this matter settled by the next legislature in January. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object, I read from the report, which seems to be made upon different letters from the Secretary of the Interior, one dated February 18, 1920, and one dated February 12, 1919. I see that there is a finding by the Secretary of the Interior that no payment was ever made by Santa Fe County, either of principal or interest, and that in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior there is no recommendation of this sort of legislation, except such as may be said to exist inferentially by the language of Secretary Payne, the present Secretary, in which he says that he has no objection to interpose, provided it be shown to the satisfaction of the committee that this bill as passed by the Senate should be enacted into law. It does not so appeal to me, and I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. HERNANDEZ. I ask that the bill may retain its place on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Mexico asks unanimous consent that the bill retain its place on the calendar.

Mr. GARD. I have no objection to that being the continuing order. Heretofore it has been the order that such bills take their place at the foot of the calendar, but I have no objection.

Mr. WALSH. I think we ought to follow the custom and make the bill go to the foot of the calendar, unless some good reason to the contrary is shown.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the bill going to the foot of the calendar?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

CERTAIN BUILDINGS AT WATERTOWN, N. Y.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 13576) authorizing the Secretary of War to turn over to the Postmaster General without charge therefor a certain building, or buildings, now located at Watertown, N. Y.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, I ask that the bill be reported.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized in his discretion to turn over to the Postmaster General without charge therefor such buildings or parts thereof as may be desired by the Postmaster General and now located at Watertown, N. Y.; and the Postmaster General is hereby authorized to cause said buildings or parts thereof to be removed to Washington, D. C., and reassembled or reconstructed for the use of the Post Office Department on the tract of land adjoining the mail-equipment shops and which it proposes to purchase.

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] if there is any report from the War Department on this matter?

Mr. MADDEN. There is no formal report, but the Secretary of War suggested to the Postmaster General that he had this building, which is constructed partly of steel and partly of glass and is assembled in sections, for which building the department has no use, which he would be very glad to turn over to the Post Office Department for reerection as an equipment shop.

I wish to say in this connection that in the last Post Office appropriation bill the sum of $25,700 was appropriated to buy a piece of land adjoining the present equipment shop, on which the department has had an option for three years, and that that appropriation was made immediately available, and I understand that now the land has been purchased with the appropriation provided for, and if the Post Office Department can be given permission to accept this building and transport it and reerect it, it will give the department the facilities which it has long desired and needed and will make a very great saving to the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. WALSH. Under what authority will the Postmaster General bear the expense of taking down the building and moving it away?

Mr. MADDEN. I do not know that any special authority is granted in this bill.

Mr. WALSH. Might he not be held up on the ground that he has no authority to expend money unless the bill shall take care of it?

Mr. MADDEN. I think he stated that he has the means by which it can be done without a special appropriation.

Mr. WALSH. Is it intended to take down but one building?

Mr. MADDEN. A part of a building or such parts as he may need.

Mr. WALSH. The bill says buildings or parts thereof. He could clean off the whole reservation.

Mr. MADDEN. All he wants is a part of the building that he may need.

Mr. WALSH. I suggest that there had better be some authority in the bill for the Postmaster General to apply some of his funds toward the expense undertaken or he will not be able to remove it.

Mr. MADDEN. If the gentleman wishes to offer an amendment probably it will be acceptable.

Mr. HICKS. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, how much did these buildings cost the Government in the first place?

Mr. MADDEN. I do not know; they were munition buildings, but there is no further use for them now.

Mr. HICKS. Has the gentleman any information of how much it will cost to take them down, move them, and erect them in Washington?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes, $50,000; and it would cost more than $250,000 to erect the building that we ought to have; so we are not only utilizing the material that might otherwise be destroyed or go to waste, but we are saving the Treasury $200,000, and at the same time furnishing facilities by which the equipment shop of the post-office service may be conducted on a much more economical basis than it is now being conducted.

Mr. HICKS. That is the point I wanted to arrive at. From the statement of the gentleman from Illinois there will be a saving to the Government of the United States of practically $200,000 in money——

Mr. MADDEN. Two hundred thousand dollars in money besides the saving that will be made by the economies that will be introduced by the enlarged facilities afforded by the building.

Mr. HICKS. Would the gentleman have any objection to incorporating in the bill an amendment on the line suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. MADDEN. They are going to tear the buildings down anyway, and all the Post Office Department wishes is to take such parts of buildings that are to be taken down as will be necessary for this building here for the Postal Service. The Secretary of War is not only agreeable but anxious that the Postmaster General may utilize the material and save the money to the Government.

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object, the report says that the Secretary of War expressed a willingness to transfer without cost to the Post Office Department a building erected for war purposes at Watertown, N. Y. Was that in writing?

Mr. MADDEN. No; my information comes entirely from the Postmaster General, who, after consultation with the Secretary of War, told me the facts of the case, and I am simply repeating them.

Mr. GARD. The building at Watertown which they desire to knock down is a building capable of being knocked down and reassembled so that it could be used to advantage here.

Mr. MADDEN. It is a fabricated building made out of fabricated material put up in sections, and all you have to do is to take the sections down, put them on a car, transport them, and refabricate them.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to turn over to the Postmaster General without charge therefor such buildings or parts thereof as may be desired by the Postmaster General and now located at Watertown, N. Y.; and the Postmaster General is hereby authorized to cause said buildings or parts thereof to be removed to Washington, D. C., and reassembled or reconstructed for the use of the Post Office Department on the tract of land adjoining the mail-equipment shops and which it proposes to purchase.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MADDEN, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

GRANTING CERTAIN LANDS TO POCATELLO, IDAHO.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 2528) to grant certain lands to the city of Pocatello, State of Idaho, for conserving and protecting the source of its water supply and as a municipal park site.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object, this particular bill seems to be one of a series of bills which the gentleman from Idaho has been introducing here under the guise of protecting the water supply. I think this is the third one on the calendar of this kind in the last two months. How many more such bills has the gentleman?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I have no other bill of this character on the calendar, but we may have other bills, because as our towns develop and the people are able to put in a water supply they naturally ask for legislation of this character.

Mr. GARD. It is rather a careless form of legislative procedure—by unanimous consent to take up these questions and grant 2,880 acres, as in this particular instance. Unless it can be shown positively that these grants are necessary for the protection of the water supply, I should object. Of course, I realize that a water supply is essential to every community, whether it is a city or a town; they must have good water, but there has been so many of these bills that it has become a regular park parade of legislation for water-power protection.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. It is just as necessary to protect the water power of one town as another, and we have numerous towns developing in Idaho which require a water supply for domestic purposes.

Mr. GARD. But this seems to be a performance lately arrived at.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. No; this bill was introduced in the last Congress, but did not get through the Senate in time enough to be considered in the House.

Mr. FRENCH. If the gentleman will yield, the reason why this kind of legislation is necessary in these western States is because the Government owns the fee or title to this rugged land.

We are not able to go to the private owners and purchase their lands. More than that, the land is of a rough character, is practically worthless, and we must have it to protect the watershed. The title necessarily is in the Government. I would say that this land has been inviting public settlement for many years. It is close to the city, but people do not want it, because for any kind of farming purposes it is practically valueless. A price of $10 an acre was fixed on the land along about 22 or 23 years ago, when it was part of an Indian reservation. We then invited public settlement upon the payment of this amount per acre in addition to complying with the other provisions of the law, but people would not take the land. It was then reduced to $2.50 an acre, and still people would not take the land. It is practically worthless, and yet as long as it is public land the city has no security in attempting to make any provisions looking to the keeping of it policed, to the keeping of it cleaned, to the keeping of people from hauling dead animals or refuse of one kind or another and putting it on the property. It is desirable that it be turned over to the city, so that the city can exercise the functions necessary in protecting its water supply.

Mr. GARD. The city of Pocatello has no waterworks system at present?

Mr. FRENCH. Oh, yes; it does have; and some years ago there was a tract of land granted to the city to protect its water supply, but at that time the city had a population of 5,000 people and to-day it has a population of 15,000.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. The present reservoir is located on the public land under the right-of-way law. It was located by the company that established the waterworks, but the city has recently purchased the waterworks from the private individual or corporation, and now it desires to build an additional reservoir to store more water because of the rapid increase in population.

Mr. FRENCH. What I had in mind was that the land that had been granted to the city was for the watershed, not necessarily for the building of a reservoir. The city acquired from the Government some lands some years ago, when it was only a city of about five or six thousand population. It is very essential now, with a population of 15,000, that the city may have adequate protection and may preserve the health of the people. This is very vital.

Mr. GARD. The gentleman will tell me if I am mistaken in my statement of the situation. As I understand it, the city of Pocatello now has a municipally owned waterworks system?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. That is true; on a portion of this land; but the city desires to build an additional reservoir.

Mr. GARD. It formerly was under the control of some private water corporation?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Yes.

Mr. GARD. That sold it to the city of Pocatello?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Yes.

Mr. GARD. There is and has been existing a reservoir for the storage of water for the supply of the people of this town?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Yes; under the right-of-way law over the public land.

Mr. GARD. And now it is desired to have vested in the city as the owner, on the payment of $1.25 an acre, the 2,880 acres for the conservation and protection of the source of the water supply and as a municipal park site. Do they want it for a water supply or for a park?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. They want it for a water supply, but the land will have to be fenced, and the city desires of course to protect the surrounding land and will no doubt plant some trees to protect the soil against erosion.

Mr. GARD. How far is this place from the city of Pocatello?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. About a mile and a half. It is up on the mountain top just at the left of the city as you go westward.

Mr. GARD. It is not necessary that it be used for a municipal park site?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Oh, no.

Mr. GARD. Why not strike out the provision that it is for a municipal park site? It is a mile and a half up the mountain side, and nobody but a mountain goat or an aeroplane can get to it. I suspect that they are long on park sites out there and short on people.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. The reason that the words "for a municipal park" are placed there, as I say, is that the city desires to fence the land and improve it by the planting of trees and putting in grass to prevent erosion of the soil.

Mr. GARD. They can do that all right. I am in favor of protecting the water system if it is necessary to be protected. The gentleman from Idaho knows more about it than I do, but we ought to understand what we are doing. If it is necessary to protect the water system by the purchase of this land, I am willing to have that done, but I do not like to have attached to it the provision that it is to be established as a municipal park site.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I do not think there is any objection to striking out those words.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman move to strike out those words?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Yes.

Mr. GARD. Is the description of the land now in accordance with the request of the Secretary of the Interior, as contained in his letter of August 13, 1919?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Yes; it was checked over; and I shall offer an amendment to insert, after the word "State," in line 10, page 1, the words "containing 2,880 acres," so that there will be no doubt about the exact quantity of land desired.

Mr. GARD. If the gentleman will offer that amendment, I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to convey to the city of Pocatello, in the county of Bannock, and State of Idaho, certain adjacent public lands described as west half of section 2 and all of sections 3, 4, 9, and 10, or such portions thereof as said city may select, in township 7 south, range 34 east, Boise meridian, in said county and State, upon the payment of $1.25 per acre for the land selected, to have and to hold said lands for the conservation and protection of the source of the water supply of said city and as a municipal park site: Provided, That the grant hereby made is, and patent issued thereunder shall be, subject to all legal rights heretofore acquired by any person or persons in or to the above-described premises or any part thereof and now existing under and by virtue of the laws of the United States: And provided further, That there shall be reserved to the United States all oil, coal, and other mineral deposits that may be found in the lands so granted and all necessary use of the lands for extracting the same; and that the lands hereby authorized to be conveyed as hereinbefore set forth and all portions thereof shall be held and used by or for the said grantee for the purpose herein specified; and if the said lands shall cease to be so used they shall revert to the United States, and this condition shall be expressed in the patent to be issued under the terms of this act: And provided further, That said grantee shall within two years from the passage of this act make its selection and entry of the land and make use thereof for the purposes herein specified, and the grant herein is made upon the express condition that the mayor of the city of Pocatello shall, on or before January 10 of each year after the expiration of said two years, submit report to the Secretary of the Interior as to the use made of the land herein granted during the preceding calendar year, showing compliance with the terms and conditions stated in this act, and that in the event of his failure to so report, or in the event of a showing to the Secretary of the Interior that the terms of the grant have not been complied with, the grant shall be held to be forfeited, and the Attorney General of the United States shall institute suit in the proper court for the recovery of said lands.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to cause the east half of section 2, in township 7 south, of range 34 east, Boise meridian, to be surveyed, appraised, and disposed of under section 2381, United States Revised Statutes.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend by inserting after the word "State," in line 10, page 1, the words "containing 2,880 acres."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. SMITH of Idaho: Page 1, line 10, after the word "State," insert the words "containing 2,880 acres."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend, on page 2, line 2, by striking out the words "and as a municipal park site."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. SMITH of Idaho: Page 2, line 2, strike out the words "and as a municipal park site."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended to conform to the bill.

On motion of Mr. SMITH of Idaho, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

NEZ PERCE NATIONAL FOREST, IDAHO.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 9028) to authorize the addition of certain lands of the Nez Perce National Forest, Idaho.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would be glad to have the gentleman sponsor for the bill tell the House the necessity for the enactment of it, and then I may ask indulgence for some questions relative to the report.

Mr. FRENCH. When the forest-reserve policy was undertaken between 20 and 30 years ago the withdrawals were of a blanket character, and upon hasty examination certain sections here and there were omitted from the withdrawal. In some instances it was because it seemed mining activities justified it and other reasons operated to prevent lands from being included within the forest reserves in other parts. Now, this particular land has an acreage of approximately one and one-half townships and it was not included in the forest-reserve withdrawal at the time the withdrawal was made that surrounds the land, because mining activities were quite keen and the people desired that the area should not be included. Well, the mining situation has rather cleared up and, more than that, mining may proceed within forest reserves, and the land now is a menace to the adjacent lands.

I would say that this particular tract of land is entirely surrounded by forest reserve. Under the Interior Department, which department has charge of public lands, there is no systematic forest fire supervision. Under the Agricultural Department, which has charge of the forest reserve land, there is a systematic fire patrol service. This little tract of land has no supervision whatever from the standpoint of the Government on the forest fire question. It is a menace to the surrounding timber belonging to the Government by reason of the fact that it is not cared for and supervised. It is felt that it should be included within the reserve, that the Forest Service could maintain the patrols without any additional expense particularly, and supervise the area just as it supervises the area surrounding it, and from the standpoint of economy and efficiency it should be done. It has been open for public settlement all these years and settlers have acquired little land and that in itself is after all the final test in such a country as this that the lands are not very much sought after for any kind of purpose.

Mr. GARD. I am interested in the form of the bill since I note in the report on pages 2 and 3 of Secretary Lane where he says under date of July 25, 1919:

I am not advised as to the necessity of the proposed legislation. I have no definite information relative to the character of the lands; therefore I am not sufficiently informed concerning the advisability of reserving the lands for forest purposes to make a specific recommendation, but your attention is called to the report on said bill made by the Secretary of Agriculture under date of June 30, 1919.

The only reference I see to that report, which is not included in the present report, is that the last item in the report of the committee recites—

The committee deems it unwise to enact a bill in the phraseology suggested by the Secretary of Agriculture.

So I would be pleased to have the gentleman submit as to what was the report of the Secretary of Agriculture of the date of June 30, 1919, which evidently was adverse to the bill.

Mr. FRENCH. I wonder if my colleague, who was on the committee, would call to mind the particular phraseology that the Agricultural Department suggested in reference to the Nez Perce Reserves?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. The bill as introduced was identical with the bill suggested as I recall.

Mr. FRENCH. I would say this——

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. The last report from the department was November 29, 1919.

Mr. FRENCH. If the gentleman will notice page 1 of the bill he will see that the committee took notice of the position of the Secretary of the Interior by providing an amendment on lines 4 and 5 to the effect that the withdrawals, or rather the inclusion, of the land within the national forests should be the finding of both the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. GARD. That is the committee amendment. That does not give what I ask. What I asked about is this. There was also in the report of the Secretary of the Interior the statement that there was a report of the Secretary of Agriculture under date of June 30, 1919. Now, nowhere in this present report is there any reference or incorporation of that report. Now, on the last page, page 4, there is a finding by the present committee that it deemed it unwise to enact the bill in the phraseology suggested by the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. The reason for that is this, that the Department of Agriculture is anxious to have these forest reserves created and boundaries extended on their report entirely, and it has been the policy of the committee, following out the suggestion of the Secretary of the Interior, that these forest reserves should only have their boundaries widened after the Secretary of the Interior had been consulted.

Mr. GARD. There ought to be some definite plan adopted.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. We have got a definite plan and——

Mr. GARD. But here is evidence of the confusion between the Department of Agriculture and the Department of the Interior.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. That is nothing new; that is confusion that has existed for the last 10 years.

Mr. GARD. Possibly it has.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Because the public lands are under the Department of the Interior and the forest reserves are under the Department of Agriculture, and we have put on this amendment in order to force them to get together and come to some conclusion as to these boundary lines.

Mr. FRENCH. If the gentleman will notice the report, bottom of page 3 and top of page 4, he will see the identical language the Department of Agriculture suggested and the amendment that it would propose. The gentleman will see by looking over the language that it practically is the language in the bill with the exception that we have felt that both departments should be consulted in this matter rather than only one, and that latter idea has time and again been determined to be the attitude of the House, and I think largely on account of the gentleman from Ohio that both of these departments should be consulted.

Mr. GARD. I simply desire to know what was the agreed-upon procedure, so that we might have a form which we could follow.

Mr. FRENCH. That is the procedure agreed upon, so far as the principle is concerned.

Mr. GARD. Is there any protection in the bill? If there is, I see none. The bill is very short. Regarding that which is stated in the memorial of the Legislature of the State of Idaho in the second paragraph, where they say that, "Whereas said area is rich in timber, water power, minerals, forage, and game, and practically devoid of land having any possible agricultural value," is there sufficient protection of the Government in the bill as it is framed in the mineral resources of the land?

Mr. FRENCH. The bill, if it shall pass, will bring the land then under the general laws relating to the forest control of mineral lands or mineral lands within forest reserves. Oh, yes; that is fully taken care of by the general law.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LONGWORTH). Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any lands within the following-described areas found by the Secretary of Agriculture to be chiefly valuable for the production of timber or the protection of stream flow may be included within and made a part of the Nezperce National Forest by proclamation of the President, said lands to be thereafter subject to all laws affecting national forests:

North half of township 26 north, range 6 east; the south half of township 27 north, range 6 east; the southwest quarter of township 27 north, range 7 east; and the northwest quarter of township 26 north, range 7 east, Boise meridian.

With a committee amendment, as follows:

On page 1, line 4, after the word "Agriculture," insert the words "and Secretary of the Interior."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out from line 7 the word "Nezperce" and insert the words "Nez Perce." I assume that that is the correct spelling, for I notice that in the memorial of the State of Idaho, which was sent to Congress, it was so spelled. My recollection is that in the Agricultural bill it is carried with the same spelling. I would like to ask the gentleman from Idaho if that is the proper way?

Mr. FRENCH. I think that touching this particular forest reserve and its name the suggestion of the gentleman from Massachusetts is well made, and although the name is spelled both ways, I think his suggestion for this forest reserve is the correct spelling. There is a town in Idaho by the same name which is spelled exactly as it was spelled in the bill as I introduced it. The name is spelled in two ways. However, I notice the letter from the department, and the department refers to the spelling in the same way that the gentleman suggests.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WALSH: Page 1, line 7, strike out "Nezperce" and insert in lieu thereof "Nez Perce."

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, in the Postal Guide the word "Nezperce" is spelled as in the bill, as it is the policy of the Post Office Department to consolidate names of towns where two words or three occur and run them all together. But I think, in view of the fact that the Department of the Interior and the Department of Agriculture refer to the name as suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts, that his amendment should be accepted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the title be amended in accordance with the text.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the title be amended in accordance with the text. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

On motion of Mr. FRENCH, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

SIERRA NATIONAL FOREST, CALIF.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 2789) for the consolidation of forest lands in the Sierra National Forest, Calif., and for other purposes.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object, I note from the phraseology of this bill that it may be open to the objection that the gentleman who had charge of the last bill said had been removed when they included the Secretary of the Interior in the matter of the policy of these forest reserves and public lands now in forests.

The present bill which the gentleman from California [Mr. BARBOUR] has—S. 2789—provides that if, in the opinion of the Secretary of Agriculture, these lands are desirable for exchange, and so forth. Is it the gentleman's idea also that the Secretary of the Interior should have some supervisory interest in matters of this kind?

Mr. BARBOUR. They are national-forest lands, and for that reason would come under the Department of Agriculture and the jurisdiction of the Secretary of Agriculture. Of course, the Secretary of the Interior, as I understand the procedure, would accept title on behalf of the Government. But as to the value of the land to be exchanged and the determination of the question as to whether it would be for the best interests of the general public, that is left to the Secretary of Agriculture, because it is forest-reserve land and would come under his jurisdiction.

Mr. GARD. What is the difference between this bill that we now have before us and the bill affecting the use of the land in a former Indian reservation that we have just passed?

Mr. BARBOUR. I will state to the gentleman from Ohio that the lands that are affected by this bill are in isolated tracts, privately owned, the title to which was acquired prior to the establishment of the national forest reserves. These lands lie within the national forests, and it is desired by the Department of Agriculture to consolidate the national forest areas. For that reason it asks the authority and power to make exchanges in order to consolidate these areas in the Sierra National Forest.

Mr. GARD. Is there any limitation of the power of the Secretary of Agriculture to make these transfers or trades, as they may be called?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes. In this bill he is limited to accepting title to lands in the Sierra National Forest.

Mr. GARD. The gentleman will pardon me again, but how large a scope of territory does that include?

Mr. BARBOUR. I could not state offhand the number of acres, but it is quite a good-sized area. I suppose that probably, at a rough estimate, there would be a million and a half or two million acres; possibly not that much.

Mr. GARD. How much private land is there?

Mr. BARBOUR. The Secretary of Agriculture in his report does not state. He simply refers to the fact that there exists these small isolated tracts, which were acquired by the owners prior to the establishment of the national forest policy. They are in small areas. It is for the purpose of assisting in the administration of the forest reserve by facilitating enforcement of the fire-prevention regulations and the utilization of the grazing facilities that the Secretary desires that the lands should be consolidated into one compact tract.

Mr. GARD. Is it the purpose of this bill to make more compact the territory of the Sierra National Forest, and to take in small parcels of land now privately owned in exchange, by the giving of other parcels of land to the persons now owning the private tracts?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes. Under the language of the bill the Secretary of Agriculture could exchange lands in any national forest in the State of California for these tracts that are inside the present boundaries of the Sierra National Forest.

Mr. GARD. Under this bill he is not limited to exchanging lands within the Sierra National Forest.

Mr. BARBOUR. Do you refer to the lands which shall be given in exchange?

Mr. GARD. Yes; the lands to be given in exchange. The only limitation is that they must be lands within the national forests in California.

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes; that is the only limitation.

Mr. GARD. As may be determined by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. BARBOUR. That is the only limitation placed upon the exchange of the lands. This bill would authorize the Secretary to give in exchange for the Sierra Forest lands tracts of equal value within any national forest in California.

Mr. GARD. Is it necessary, in the gentleman's opinion, to include the Secretary of the Interior in that supervisory control, or should it be entirely vested in the Secretary of Agriculture?

Mr. BARBOUR. I do not think it is necessary to include the Secretary of the Interior, because, as I said before, the national forests are exclusively under the control of the Department of Agriculture, and this bill gives authority and power to the Secretary of Agriculture to determine the value of the lands to be exchanged and also the question of public policy. The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to pass upon all questions connected with these exchanges, and the only lands affected are those that are directly under his control and jurisdiction.

Mr. JUUL. I desire to ask the gentleman from California a question.

Mr. BARBOUR. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. JUUL. This grants rather broad powers to an executive officer. I want to ask the gentleman to what extent does he think it would injure his bill if the words in line 9 were changed from "equal value" to "equal acreage"? Under this bill he might trade 1 acre for 100 acres, or he might trade a thousand acres for half an acre.

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes; but the matter which will determine the advisability of the trade will be the value. You may have in one place a thousand acres of land that are not as valuable as 10 acres in another place, and in considering this matter we have found that you can not measure the comparative value of land in these exchanges by the area. The only practical way to make the exchange is upon a basis of the value of the land.

Mr. JUUL. How do you propose to arrive at the valuation? You say in the bill that the Secretary of Agriculture may exchange lands of equal value.

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. JUUL. Under your bill he may take a thousand acres of the public domain and swap them for one acre if he wants to.

Mr. BARBOUR. It must be of equal value.

Mr. JUUL. Who passes on that question?

Mr. BARBOUR. The Secretary of Agriculture, under the usual method of determining the value of forest areas.

Mr. JUUL. What is the method used for arriving at equal values? Here is a tract containing, let us say, some of your giant trees out there and now it is proposed to swap 10 or 100 or 1,000 acres.

Mr. BARBOUR. There are no giant trees in this area.

Mr. JUUL. I mention that just by way of illustration.

Mr. BARBOUR. There are experts connected with the Department of Agriculture who can go through these forest areas and tell you within a few dollars the value of the standing timber. As to grazing land, the value of that is very readily determined by the value of adjacent grazing land.

Mr. JUUL. You put a financial value on the land which you are going to trade?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. JUUL. And then put another financial value on the land which is to be taken in exchange?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. JUUL. It will be a question of swapping dollars for dollars?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes; at 100 cents on the dollar.

Mr. JUUL. I think it is pretty risky business.

Mr. McKEOWN. Reserving the right to object, this land that is to be exchanged is now under the Secretary of Agriculture, as being in the forest reserves. You are not going to take other public land, except that in the forest reserve, to exchange for these lands?

Mr. BARBOUR. That is all.

Mr. McKEOWN. What advantage will the Government gain by exchanging for these parcels in order to make compact the forest reserves in the Sierra National Forest if it permits the lands of other reservations to be taken? Will they reserve the lands in compact form, or will they allow the exchange of scattered lands?

Mr. BARBOUR. Oh, no; they will not do that. As I am informed, and also know the fact to be, in some of the forest areas in the United States there are lands down around the borders on the lower levels that are really not forest areas at all, but they have been included within the boundaries of our national forests. Now, those lands can be exchanged.

Mr. McKEOWN. And not break up the forests?

Mr. BARBOUR. Not break up the regularity of the boundary. There may be scattered timberlands on the border of these forest areas that can also be readily exchanged without breaking up the regularity and uniformity of the tract.

Mr. GARD. And the reason that the Secretary of the Interior is not included is because this is all under the exclusive control of the Secretary of Agriculture?

Mr. BARBOUR. All exclusively under the control of the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. GARD. Further reserving the right to object, I note from the report and the hearings on the bill that the acceptance of this land must be by the Secretary of the Interior, whereas the determination of public interest to be benefited thereby is vested entirely in the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. GARD. The report also says "in making such exchange for national forest land or timber given shall not exceed the equal value of land within the Sierra National Forest which the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to accept as such value may be determined by the Secretary of Agriculture." It would seem to me that the way you have provided for legal acceptance by the Secretary of the Interior that surely he should have equal voice with the Secretary of Agriculture in determining whether it would be for the public benefit.

Mr. BARBOUR. The reason for that provision is purely a technical one. The Department of the Interior is the department which has jurisdiction of the title of all public lands in the United States. It is for that reason that the Secretary of the Interior is mentioned in the bill as the one to accept title.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. Certainly.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Secretary Lane, in his report, says that if the passage of the bill is deemed advisable by Congress he would suggest that it be plainly indicated that the exchange is purely within the discretion of the Government and that therefore there be inserted after the word "authorized," in lines 3 and 4, page 1, the words "in his discretion."

Now, I may say that in nearly all the bills of this kind that clause has been inserted. I feel that the bill will not be harmed, and that the departments will work harmoniously together, and that the gentleman ought to be willing to adopt the suggestion of the Secretary of the Interior and amend the bill by inserting the words "in his discretion."

Mr. BARBOUR. That amendment is acceptable.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. If that goes in, I do not see that there can be any objection to the bill, and it makes it in harmony with the other bills of this kind.

Mr. GARD. If that language goes in—and I think it should—will it be necessary to include after the words "Secretary of Agriculture," in line 6, the words "Secretary of the Interior?"

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. No.

Mr. GARD. The gentleman from California will offer the amendment as suggested by the gentleman from Colorado, following the suggestion of the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes; I am perfectly willing to offer it.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. I will.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. As I understand the purpose of the gentleman from California, the purpose is to exchange these lands for such lands as are suited to agriculture.

Mr. BARBOUR. Not necessarily. I mentioned agriculture in connection with other purposes to which the land given in exchange might be put.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Would it not be best to include in your bill an amendment which would keep in control of the Government those lands suitable only for timber culture?

Mr. BARBOUR. That is the purpose of the bill, but I would not want to include an amendment to that effect. There might—and probably will—be lands suitable for forest purposes which would be received in exchange for agricultural lands, but I do not think it would be wise to limit in this bill the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture or the Secretary of the Interior. The character of the land varies, as the gentleman knows; some is rocky, some is forest land, and there is some meadowland. There are many kinds of land in our forest reserves.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. How many acres will be affected by this bill?

Mr. BARBOUR. I can not give the gentleman the exact acreage, but I can assure the gentleman that there will not be a large acreage, for the reason that these lands lie in isolated tracts and are privately owned. They are in tracts of 40 acres or 160 acres, and were acquired under the homestead laws prior to the establishment of the national forest reserve.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. I notice that the bill confines the land within the Sierra National Forest in California. What is the purpose of confining it exclusively to California?

Mr. BARBOUR. The lands that are to be given in exchange?

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Yes.

Mr. BARBOUR. All the land to be acquired under this bill is in the Sierra National Forest. The land that will be or can be given in exchange is land in the Sierra or other national forests in California, which, in the discretion of the Secretary, it is advisable to exchange.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. What is there in the bill which prevents the Secretary from buying pieces of land, the lands in other forests, and creating the condition which exists now?

Mr. BARBOUR. The provisions of the bill would prevent that. The purpose of the department is to consolidate these forest areas. They might trade a piece of land on the outskirts of another forest reserve, but they would not go into the interior.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield for me to make another suggestion?

Mr. BARBOUR. Certainly.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I may say that we have bills, some of which have passed the Senate and are now before the Public Lands Committee, providing for a general exchange of lands throughout all the forest reserves of the whole United States. We have never been able yet to pass a general bill of that kind. Various members have always opposed it, and thereby compelled us to pass individual local bills of this kind, which is entirely illogical and unnecessary. If we had a general law making general provisions for the exchange of all these lands we would avoid a lot of these little local bills. But we never could get unanimous consent, and we are compelled to do this piecemeal legislation in this way because this House has never seen fit to enact a general law on the subject, although, as I say, some such bills have gone through the Senate.

Mr. RAKER. Objection was made this morning to a bill which avoided piecemeal legislation. I had a bill which sought to consolidate matters all in one bill and objection was made to it, and now objection is made to this bill because it relates to one forest.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to ask the gentleman from California a question. Would the gentleman from California, if consent is granted—and I do not mean to put this as a condition to my consent—would the gentleman consent to an amendment in line 19, page 2, something like this: Provided the Secretary of Agriculture shall, after each exchange of land as provided for in this act, send a report to Congress showing in detail the acreage conveyed and the acreage received in exchange therefor. That would simply be placing on the Secretary of Agriculture the responsibility for having made the trade and have him make his report to Congress.

Mr. BARBOUR. I understand that the Secretary of Agriculture reports on all of those matters, anyway, but the objection to the gentleman's proposed amendment would be that if he made a small exchange of 5 or 10 acres he would immediately have to report to Congress, and Congress would not want to be bothered with those details.

Mr. JUUL. Then he could just dictate a letter to the Congress setting forth that he had conveyed a portion of the southeast quarter of section so and so in return for a portion of the northwest quarter of some other section.

Mr. BARBOUR. That may be true, but I think it is quite unnecessary.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the objection and shall offer an amendment when the time comes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized to accept on behalf of the United States title to any lands within the Sierra National Forest, Calif., if in the opinion of the Secretary of Agriculture the public interests will be benefited thereby and the lands are chiefly valuable for national-forest purposes, and in exchange therefor may give not to exceed an equal value of such national-forest land or timber or assignable certificates for timber within the national forests in California as may be determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, and in determining the relative values of the lands or timber to be exchanged, consideration shall be given to any reservations which either party may make of timber, minerals, or easements. Such assignable certificates for timber shall be issued under the authority of the Secretary of Agriculture, shall be for the agreed value of lands acquired, and shall be acceptable only at their face value when accompanying bids for the purchase of national-forest timber or in payment for national-forest timber in California when purchased under existing laws and regulations. Timber given in such exchanges shall be cut and removed under the laws and regulations relating to the national forests, and under the direction and supervision and in accordance with the requirements of the Secretary of Agriculture. Lands conveyed to the United States under this act shall, upon acceptance of title, become a part of the Sierra National Forest.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 1, after the word "timber," strike out the words "or assignable certificates for timber."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 3, after the word "agriculture," strike out the remainder of the line and lines 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, down to and including the word "regulations" in line 13.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, suggested by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR]:

Page 1, line 4, after the word "authorized," insert the words "in his discretion."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BARBOUR: Page 1, line 4, after the word "authorized," insert the words "in his discretion."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JUUL: Page 2, line 19, after the word "forest," insert: "Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture shall, after each exchange of land, as provided for in this act, send a report to the Congress showing in detail the acreage conveyed and acreage received in exchange therefor."

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane. The bill simply provides for the exchanging of these forest areas and provides the manner in which the exchange shall be made. This amendment would seem to direct the action of the Secretary of Agriculture, and direct him in the administration of his department.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from California can not get rid of my amendment in that manner. Here is a bill granting to the Secretary of Agriculture the power to trade lands owned by the United States. My amendment simply provides that when the Secretary has made the trade for the United States he shall report to the Congress what he has done.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JUUL. In just a moment. Before I go any further I want to raise the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of no quorum.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I think we ought to congratulate the distinguished gentleman from Illinois.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill was ordered to be read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BARBOUR, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

RIGHTS OF WAY FOR PUBLIC-ROAD PURPOSES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 9825) authorizing any land-grant railroad company, or its successors, to convey for public-road purposes certain parts of its right of way.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any land-grant railroad company, or any of its successors or assigns, is hereby authorized to convey to any State, county, or municipality any portion of its right of way, to be used as a public highway or street: Provided, That no such conveyance shall have the effect to diminish the right of way of said railroad company to a less width than 50 feet on each side of the center of the main track of the railroad as now established and maintained.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That all railroad companies to which grants for rights of way through the public lands have been made by Congress, or their successors in interest or assigns, are hereby authorized to convey to any State, county, or municipality any portion of such right of way to be used as a public highway or street: Provided, That no such conveyance shall have the effect to diminish the right of way of such railroad company to a less width than 50 feet on each side of the center of the main tract of the railroad as now established and maintained."

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment: On page 2, line 9, in the committee amendment, strike out the word "tract" and insert the word "track."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BARBOUR: Page 2, line 9, amend the committee amendment by striking out the word "tract" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "track."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BARBOUR: Page 2, line 9, strike out the period, insert a colon, and add: "Provided further, That in the event that any such railroad company and the appropriate public authorities fail to agree on a mutually satisfactory basis of compenstion for any portion of said right of way, such public authorities may proceed to acquire the same under the laws of eminent domain of the State in which such land is situated."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Speaker, I wish to state that this amendment is offered at the request of the California State Highway Commission. I have a telegram from the commission, and I also was interviewed by one of their engineers about a week ago. He stated to me that there are about 40 miles of the State highways in California that are on railroad rights of way under revocable licenses granted by the railroads companies to the public authorities. These licenses can be revoked at any time.

It has been suggested by the State Highway Commission and their representative that this amendment would be desirable for the reason that if in the future the railroad company should decline to convey any of these rights of way or grant permits for their use, then the proper State, county, or municipal authorities could go into court and condemn such rights of way under the law of eminent domain of the State in which such land is situated. They do not anticipate any difficulty of that kind. Their relations have been harmonious up to the present time, but it is simply a precautionary measure.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. What have we to do with the authority of the State to condemn under the power of eminent domain? The State controls that within its own boundaries, and the National Government, in my opinion, can neither give nor take away the power of the State to take property under the right of eminent domain. I doubt the advisability of Congress undertaking to confer upon the State of California or the local authorities power to condemn what may be public lands granted the railroads under the power of eminent domain, when the State has that authority, if it wishes to exercise it, and we have not got it.

Mr. BARBOUR. I will state to the gentleman that it has occurred to me——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Of course, the purpose of asking for the amendment is not the purpose of the gentleman, I take it; but it is probably the purpose of some one connected with the highway commission to hold a club over the railroads, and endeavor to force them to accept a settlement which the commission proposes. While it may be right, we have not the power to say whether the State shall condemn railroad land; that is for the State to determine.

Mr. BARBOUR. If the gentleman will yield, I will state I had not considered it in that connection. This amendment was suggested to me, and I have offered it; and it seems to me that if we authorize them to convey the land as provided in this bill, then the conferring of the additional right of eminent domain would follow.

Mr. SINNOTT. I think the courts have held, as to these rights of way granted to railroads, that they can not be alienated in any way, either under the right of eminent domain or by adverse user. And the courts have held so in the Northern Pacific Railroad cases; so before any right could be granted to a third party in that right of way they would have to get the consent of Congress.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Well, I see this bill does not affect the property of the railroad company, except where they have rights of way through public land; still, if the railroad has acquired a right of way through the public lands, I do not know whether we ought to permit the State to come along and condemn that for something else or not. I doubt that.

Mr. BARBOUR. That would contemplate payment to the railroad of the actual value of the land?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes; but we have not given these rights of way to the railroad companies for the purpose of sale. The Government gave the railroad company in certain cases the right of way through the public domain not for the purpose of selling it to somebody. I think it ought to receive more consideration——

Mr. JUUL. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield for a brief question? Does not the gentleman think that if we insert simply between lines 1 and 4 "without compensation" that that would then merely permit the railroad company to convey to the State without sale?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is practically what this bill does now; but that does not cover the case suggested by the gentleman from California.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. If the gentleman will permit a suggestion, the Union Pacific Railroad Co. for practically a thousand miles has 400 feet right of way, and in some cases, where they go through a narrow valley or over a mountain, there is no other way to get a right of way for a wagon road except over these rights of way, and that is entirely more than they have had any use for; and the Federal highway good roads bill will not spend money and they will not cooperate with the State in spending money on these public lands.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The Committee on the Public Lands has just reported a bill providing where any of these rights of way are given up that the land shall go to the owner of the property on each side.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. That bill has not passed.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, no; but it has been reported.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Let me say that bill does not go a quarter far enough. It does not provide, it seems to me, for any system that is workable. However, I have not made any opposition to it, but I may state the bill we have reported out is not going to get anywhere or accomplish anything, I am afraid.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Well, I do not know how many bills the Committee on the Public Lands has on this calendar, but there are a great many. I hope they will accomplish something if they are passed, but at times I think it would be wiser if they reported fewer bills and gave those they did report out more careful consideration.

Mr. BARBOUR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. BARBOUR. This bill does not intend to interfere with the railroad company's right of way, because it expressly reserves to the railroad company a right of way of 100 feet, or 50 feet on each side of the center of the main track.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That would not apply to the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. BARBOUR. No. But some of these rights of way are 200 or more feet.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The amendment says they may condemn the whole right of way as far as the track.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Speaker, I object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. EVANS of Montana. Mr. Speaker, I suggest it is too late; the bill is now under consideration.

The SPEAKER. The bill is now being considered by the House, and the question is on the amendment.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane to the bill.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The bill relates to the conveyance of public land by the railroad company, and the amendment is to give the State authority to condemn it under the right of eminent domain. It is not a germane amendment.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Speaker, a question, please.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JUUL. Does my objection to the consideration of the bill come too late?

The SPEAKER. It does. The House had already acted. The Chair thinks the point of order is well taken. As the Chair understands the bill, the bill simply provides that the railroad company shall make condemnation. The amendment, as the Chair understands it, is that in the event such railroad company can not agree as to compensation, the property may be acquired by eminent domain. The Chair does not think that is within the purpose of the bill, and the Chair sustains the point of order. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the title will be amended in accordance with the text.

There was no objection.

On motion of Mr. EVANS of Montana, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

TARGHEE NATIONAL FOREST.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 10434) to add certain lands to the Targhee National Forest.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, I have not had an opportunity to examine the bill carefully. Did the committee follow the suggestion of the Secretary of the Interior and amend the bill as recommended?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes; with the exception that the last two lines of the bill are retained, which are:

Provided, That this shall not affect any existing valid adverse claim hereto initiated.

Other than that the amendment was adopted in the language recommended.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Excepting that we inserted the words "with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior," in accordance with the policy adopted by the committee that both departments should be consulted when it is proposed to place lands in forest reserves.

Mr. FRENCH. Yes; I overlooked that.

Mr. WALSH. You have made it conform to the bill that we just passed with reference to the Nez Perce National Forest?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes; with the exception that the phraseology is a little bit different. But the spirit of it is exactly the same.

Mr. WALSH. Is it any broader in scope than the other bill?

Mr. FRENCH. Oh, no. The spirit of the two bills is exactly alike.

Mr. WALSH. The spirit of the bills may be the same, but does the phraseology fail to provide for the necessary protection to the interests of the Government?

Mr. FRENCH. Not at all. In the bill under consideration, on page 2, line 2, it says that the lands may be included within a national forest upon finding of the Agriculture Department, "with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior." In the other bill, as I recall it, it provided that when found satisfactory "by the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture." I say the phraseology is a little bit different, but the meaning is exactly the same.

Mr. WALSH. How long has it been since it required legislation of this sort? I thought the President would do this by proclamation.

Mr. FRENCH. About 10 or 15 years.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. There are only two or three States where the department has the authority under the general law to create forest reserves or extend the boundaries. About 10 years ago a law was passed that no additional forest reserves should be created or forest boundaries extended without the consent of Congress. The President may curtail the boundaries, but he can not extend them without legislation, excepting in a few States.

Mr. WALSH. That was one of the results of the Ballinger controversy, was it not?

Mr. FRENCH. No; I do not so understand. It was the result of a great deal of antagonism to the forest-reserve policy 15 years ago. It was a new policy, and the forest administration had not understood the wishes of the people, and the people did not articulate thoroughly with the forest policy, and there was a good deal of bitter feeling in the West on account of the extension of the forest reserves.

Mr. WALSH. I have no objection to this bill.

Mr. PARRISH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill what per cent of this land, if any, would be suitable for agriculture?

Mr. FRENCH. You might say that the whole of it is worthless for agricultural purposes, with the possible exception of grazing. It lies to the south side of the Bitterroot range of mountains and extends right to the crest of the mountains, and, as the gentleman can see, the total acreage is approximately two and one-half townships, so that there would be very little land that could possibly extend down into the valley enough to be valuable for any kind of agricultural use. As a matter of fact, it is not useful except for grazing purposes.

Mr. PARRISH. I understand this would include 46,000 acres?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. PARRISH. If this land is not included in the national forests, would it be likely that it would be filed on by the farmers and settlers that would go into that country?

Mr. FRENCH. I think the lands that are available for any satisfactory farming use have all been filed on, and there is very keen competition for all lands of that character. These lands have been inviting, as you might say, public settlement all these years. No one has filed on an acre of it, so far as I am aware, and if so, it is provided that the settler's interest may be taken care of. But they are essentially lands that are not fit for acquiring title to for agricultural character on account of their rugged, moutainous character.

Mr. PARRISH. In case this land is included in the park, how much expense does that entail on the Federal Government? Are they not a source of expense to the Government when they are put into a park?

Mr. FRENCH. On the contrary, the forest reserves are a source of profit to the Government. That profit is derived in part from the sale of timber and in part from moneys received from the leasing of the lands for grazing purposes.

Mr. PARRISH. I understand they get money for the grazing.

Mr. FRENCH. Yes. Last year the profit was in excess of $2,000,000 from grazing.

Mr. PARRISH. Which would yield to the Government the greatest income on the land, to seal it up in these parks or forest reserves and hold it and let the Government get the benefit of the grazing rentals or leave it open for the public to file on, taking into consideration the expenses incurred in the care and maintenance of the national forests?

Mr. FRENCH. Unquestionably to include it within the national forests, because I think these lands are not available for any kind of farming purposes other than grazing.

Mr. PARRISH. Is it because of insufficient rainfall?

Mr. FRENCH. No; on account of their high, rugged, mountainous character. As I said, they extend to the very peak of the Bitterroot Mountains.

Mr. PARRISH. How much land is there now in the national forest reserves in the State of Idaho?

Mr. FRENCH. Does the gentleman mean what is the area?

Mr. PARRISH. Yes; how many acres?

Mr. FRENCH. Stating it not in acres, but in area of the State, I would say approximately 30 per cent of the State is within national forests.

Mr. PARRISH. I just wanted to get that information. I did not intend to object.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to have from the gentleman from Idaho a statement concerning the proviso at the bottom of page 2:

Provided, That this shall not affect any existing valid adverse claim heretofore initiated.

How many privately established claims are there now in this tract?

Mr. FRENCH. I am not aware that there is one, but the gentleman will understand that sometimes claims may be initiated of which the department is not aware until some weeks later. The entries are made in the local land office, and sometimes mining entries are initiated through local offices in the counties, but the department here will not be advised of them until some time later. I do not think the language is essential, because I think we could not take away from the settlers anything that belongs to them. Nevertheless, since the phrase was used in the bill as submitted to me, I did not change it, and the committee did not change it.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. RAKER. I hope the gentleman will revise his statement as to the effect of the bill, because they have held, in all the decisions setting aside these forest reserves, that homesteads and desert-land claims and other claims can not be consummated if the department desires to prevent it.

Mr. FRENCH. If that is true, it is worse than I thought it was, and the language ought to be in the bill.

Mr. RAKER. Certainly it ought to be in the bill. By all means it should not be left out.

Mr. GARD. I am not complaining of the language. What I was trying to get at was as to whether there had been any claims established within the limits of Targhee National Park by persons now living on them or operating on them?

Mr. FRENCH. I doubt if there are any such claims at all.

Mr. GARD. Does the gentleman know?

Mr. FRENCH. No. A right of that kind might have been initiated this morning at the local land office, and the department here would not be advised of it until sometime later.

Mr. GARD. Is there no visible, physical evidence of the establishment of a claim, so that one can see it?

Mr. FRENCH. Why, certainly.

Mr. GARD. How many of these are there?

Mr. FRENCH. I would not have any means of knowing that right now, and the department does not know of any of these claims. This is one of those catch-all phrases that is always inserted in these bills when we think there is a chance of land being acquired by private ownership, in order to protect rights which may have been initiated.

Mr. GARD. I am interested in this phase of the matter: There is a possibility of people owning lands adjacent to these forest reserves desiring the extension of the forest reserves, because that pactically amounts to permissive use to those owning and occupying the adjoining lands of the forest reserves for their own purposes without any compensation.

Mr. FRENCH. No; on the contrary, I would say that at the present time, the lands being public lands, the settlers have the unlimited use of those lands for grazing purposes without paying any fees.

Mr. GARD. Yes; but subject, of course, to the purchase of the land by some one.

Mr. FRENCH. No; the lands are not subject to purchase. They may be acquired in certain ways under the public-land laws.

Mr. WELLING. Homesteaded.

Mr. FRENCH. But only isolated tracts could be purchased, and these lands would not come within the description of isolated tracts.

Mr. GARD. But they may be acquired under the provisions of the homestead law?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes; that is true.

Mr. GARD. But when they become a part of the national forests that proposition is, of course, eliminated.

Mr. FRENCH. Not altogether, for the reason that the law provides that lands available for agricultural purposes within forest reserves may be acquired. The burden of proof, however, is on the entryman, and not always then does the department recognize the entry. It has it within its discretion to approve or disapprove of the application.

Mr. JUUL. If the gentleman from Ohio has finished, I desire to ask the gentleman from Idaho a question.

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. JUUL. To what extent will the nationalization of this forest mountain land interfere with the educational system out in that country? Suppose in the immediate vicinity there are high schools. Will the nationalization of this forest land deprive the neighboring tax-leving body of the power to levy the taxes essential to the carrying on of educational matters?

Mr. FRENCH. No, not at all. These lands to-day can not be taxed.

Mr. JUUL. Let me make clear what I mean. Suppose you take half a township and place it in the forest reserve. The remaining half of the township is in private ownership and is subject to taxation. To what extent would the taking of the half of the township and placing it in the forest reserve increase the amount of money which the citizens in the remaining part of that township would have to pay?

Mr. FRENCH. Of course, if the lands that were taken were taxable lands, it would diminish the tax receipts; but here is a case where the lands are not subject to taxation at the present time, because they now belong to the Federal Government.

Mr. JUUL. I understand that; but if it is possible to settle them, and if they were settled, they would pay taxes. You now propose to nationalize a portion of these lands. The settlers upon those lands would have to pay their share of taxes, would they not?

Mr. WELLING. If they were lands suitable for settlement, the gentleman would not want them included in the forest reserves.

Mr. JUUL. If they were used as grazing lands they would be taxable.

Mr. WELLING. No; not if they were public lands.

Mr. JUUL. You could not settle them, and the people who owned the remaining portions of the township would have to bear the burden.

Mr. FRENCH. If the gentleman will yield, the way that question is working out is that a certain percentage of the receipts of the forest land, in order to meet the very objection the gentleman raises, is to-day distributed to the counties and States where the lands are located. So that takes care of the situation.

Mr. JUUL. I thank the gentleman for the information.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all unappropriated public lands within the following described townships are hereby added to and made a part of the Targhee National Forest, and hereafter all laws and regulations affecting national forests shall be applicable thereto: Township 13 north, ranges 32 and 33 east, and township 12 north, ranges 31 and 32 east, Boise meridian: Provided, That this shall not affect any existing valid adverse claim heretofore initiated.

With the following committee amendment:

Amend page 1 by striking out all of lines 3 to 8, inclusive, and all of line 9 to the proviso, and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"That all unappropriated public lands within the following described areas, found by the Secretary of Agriculture to be chiefly valuable for the production of timber or the protection of stream flow, may, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, be included within and made a part of the Targhee National Forest, in Idaho, by proclamation of the President, said lands to be thereafter subject to all laws affecting national forests: Sections 1, 2, 3, 4, 9 to 16 inclusive, 21 to 28 inclusive, 34, 35, 36, township 12 north, range 32 east, all township 13 north, range 32 east, all township 13 north, range 33 east, all of Boise meridian and base."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend, on page 2, line 11, by striking out the word "this" and inserting the words "the provisions of this act."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RAKER: Page 2, line 11, after the word "that," strike out the word "this" and insert "the provisions of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FRENCH, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ABANDONED PORTIONS OF RIGHTS OF WAY GRANTED TO RAILROAD COMPANIES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 9899) to provide for the disposition of abandoned portions of rights of way granted to railroad companies.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object, as I read this bill granting the disposition of abandoned portions of rights of way granted to railroad companies, it is intended to provide for an automatic forfeiture, or for the automatic readjustment of title and possession, so that it places the ownership either in the municipality, if the grant is to any city or town, or the ownership of a number of people who may be without the limits of the municipality or corporation. I would be glad to hear some statement from the gentleman in charge of the bill.

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. Mr. Speaker, the bill was originally drawn so as to have an automatic disposition of these lands, but the committee has submitted amendments to which I agree, that the forfeiture or abandonment shall be determined either by a decree of court or an act of Congress, the title to go to the party who owns the subdivision or the municipality in cities or towns. I see no objection to these amendments. I think they are essential, that the abandonment should be determined by a decree of court or an act of Congress, especially in view of the fact that the Supreme Court held in the Northern Pacific case that when a railroad is granted land for right of way it is taken out of the public-lands status, and the railroad company can not convey it, but that it reverts back to the Government. I may say as to the purpose of the bill, that we have in our State—and I presume other States the same—pieces of land, rights of way where the railroad company have relocated their lines and abandoned parts of their right of way, whence the right of way under the court decision reverts to the Government.

There are two statutes already covering this same subject, one in 1906 and another in 1909, but these acts were present in their character and do not operate on these rights of way that have been abandoned since their passage.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Will the gentleman permit a suggestion?

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. Certainly.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. There are a great many rights of way throughout the mountains that were located under the right-of-way acts of 1891 or 1875, and when they came to build the road they did not in all cases build it on the right of way but subsequently straightened the track so that it would run straight. On the Denver & Rio Grande Railroad there are 10 or 12 miles where they went away up into the canyon and back again that has not been used for 30 years, and yet there is no way that the people can get any title to it. There is one man who has a homestead on it who is paying taxes on that land. As a matter of fact, there is no way that a man can get title to that land.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Why can not they get title to the land? It is Government land.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. No; it is not.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. We have plenty of law forfeiting such land.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. It would take an act of Congress to forfeit it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Not at all; there is a general law.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I beg the gentleman's pardon. There is no law which restores to the Government these rights of way; they are still held by the railways. They do not officially abandon them, but they still hold them.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman can not get me to agree that there is no law now that when the Government grants the right of way to a railroad and it does not use it for 30 years that it is not forfeited to the Government.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. It takes some evidence to support it and a decree of the court. You have to have some legal proceeding in order to forfeit it. You can not automatically say that a company has abandoned property simply because it does not use it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman from South Dakota yield?

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. I will.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Suppose the railroad company chooses to change its line of tracks upon which it has a considerable piece of property used for station purposes, yards, and so forth. Is there any reason why we should give all that to somebody who purchased the adjoining land and paid nothing for it? It might be valuable property.

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. I think that with the amendment here the rights of the railway company are absolutely protected. The owner must go into court, and the court, if there were valuable properties or buildings upon them, would protect them. So far as the question asked a moment ago, that there are methods by which this land can be obtained, as I said before, there were two acts passed, one in 1906 and one in 1909, covering this same subject, but those acts operate on abandonments that had taken place up to that time and not since that time. Under the decision of the Supreme Court in the Northern Pacific case against Newton, One hundred and ninetieth United States, this land when the railway company abandons it is in the same status of public unoccupied land. The railway company has only what is called a base or qualified fee. The railroad company can use it for railroad purposes as long as it sees fit, but when it abandons it it goes back to the Government and the railroad company has no right to convey it, nor any ownership therein.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I understand that and fully agree with the gentleman, notwithstanding the statement of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR], who in this case was wrong; but the courts do not decree in any case, by the way, that the railroad has abandoned the property, except upon action instituted by the Government, so that does not amount to very much anyway; but suppose the railroad company does absolutely forfeit its rights, as it may in some cases, where it owns a large amount of property for station and yard purposes. Is there any reason why that should be turned over to the adjoining property owner for nothing?

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. In that event I should assume that the railroad company would likely remove its improvements. The purpose of the bill is not to deprive the railroad company of improvements that it has placed on the land.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I was not speaking of improvements. I was speaking of the land.

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. Then the purpose of the bill is that it should go to the party who filed upon it and became the owner of the subdivision, and his heirs and assigns. For example, as I say, we have in our State a school section——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman uses the term "his heirs." The language of the bill, by the way, is "his heir or its heirs." I confess I do not know what "its heirs" means.

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. It speaks of corporations in there.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. But corporations do not have heirs.

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. The gentleman is correct about that.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That, however, is easily corrected.

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. It should be "his heirs."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. No; it should be "his heirs" where it says "his heir," and "heirs" should be stricken out after the word "its." But I was just wondering whether any consideration had been given to the matter, and I have not received the information. There are many cases where railroad companies acquire a considerable amount of property for yard purposes and various station purposes. On some of these railroads they do change the routes sometimes by eliminating a considerable amount of detour. Somebody may have acquired this land adjoining. They have not paid for the land that the railroad company intended to use, and is it quite fair to say we give it to them? As far as the ordinary right of way is concerned, I do not raise any question about it.

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. Let me say to the gentleman that in that event, if they have acquired the land under a land grant, the railroad company could not make any disposition of that land. They could make no use of it except for railroad purposes, and they could not sell it or transfer it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I understand; but that is not my question. Is there any reason why we should give it to somebody because that somebody bought some other land from us?

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. Why should we not give it to the man who has filed on it?

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. Yes.

Mr. SINNOTT. Is not this the situation? The right of way——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I am not speaking of the right of way.

Mr. SINNOTT. But I want to develop the idea. The right of way was granted to the railroad company. Some one gets a patent from the Government for that particular quarter section of land through which the railroad right of way runs. Upon the abandonment of that right of way by the railroad company the person who is the grantee from the Government for the entire tract of land becomes the owner of the abandoned right of way.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is like the ordinary case of a highway anywhere that is abandoned. Ordinarily the adjoining property owner owns to the center of the right of way, or would take it if it is vacated. That is not always the case, because I signed a lease this morning myself to give somebody the property where a street had been vacated. What I ask is this: If a railroad company owns a considerable amount of land at some point for yard and station purposes and it abandons that part of the route because it relocates, is there any reason why we should give that land to somebody just because that somebody bought the adjoining land?

Mr. SINNOTT. The only person who would get it is some one who has received the property from the Government subject to right of way or the easement of the railroad company under this bill.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, no; that is not the case. He has not bought it subject to the easement of the railroad company at all. If that were the case it would not take a law on the subject. The man would have it as soon as the railroad company abandoned it. This is to have the Government donate the land to the adjoining owner, and I can see that probably no great harm will come from that ordinarily in respect to farm lands so far as the ordinary right of way is concerned; but this land may be valuable village or city land. The Government may own a yard or station property in a place where it is valuable, and you propose to say that because somebody owns a lot adjoining that, they shall get possession of what may be ten times the value of the land that they have in front of them.

Mr. SINNOTT. The person who gets it is the person to whom the title of the United States may have been or may be granted.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh no; not at all. It may be assigned. It may be a city lot and the railroad company sometimes changes its route through cities.

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. Has the gentleman in mind the amendment suggested on line 8, page 2:

except lands within a municipality the title to which, upon forfeiture by abandonment, as herein provided, shall vest in such municipality.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Well, I do not think——

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. The committee put in that amendment for that purpose.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Well, it is still giving it away.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. But the Government has already given it to the railroads.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes; but the railroads abandoned it, and the Committee on the Public Lands, I regret to say, instead of going on the policy always to try to conserve the interests of the Government, wherever they can find a chance to give away lands of the Government never miss a chance to recommend it [laughter], and so here is one.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. They have been paying taxes on this land for a good many years.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, the railroad company has paid the taxes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object, it seems to me, from a reading of the report, that this part which provides for the automatic transfer and vesting of land which really belongs to the United States, because somebody happens to own contiguous thereto a tract of land in a part of the country outside of municipality, is going a little too far in the matter of vesting title without any procedure under the laws of the United States, and therefore I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

The SPEAKER. Objection is made, and the Clerk will report the next bill.

ENLARGING BOUNDARIES OF THE OREGON NATIONAL FOREST.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 2792) to enlarge the boundaries of the Oregon National Forest.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this a bill to take care of some scenery along the Columbia Highway and the purpose of enlarging this reserve in the State of Oregon? Is that the sole purpose?

Mr. SINNOTT. Upon the north and west of this Oregon forest reserve is this 14,000 acres, which they desire to have added to the rest of it to lessen the fire risk. This 14,000 acres, a part of it, lies along the Columbia Gorge, along the line of the railroad, and fire frequently catches from the operations of the railroad and burns from there into the forest reserves. In a part of this land is Larch Mountain, where the Forest Service at the present time has a lookout which commands the Bull Run Reserve and the balance of this Oregon forest reserve, amounting to about 1,000,000 acres. The waters which supply Multnomah Falls and Oneonta Gorge are also in this area desired to be taken into the forest reserve. I think the gentleman saw Multnomah Falls when he was in Oregon. They are falls of nearly a thousand feet high. They are right in the heart of the Cascade scenery.

Mr. WALSH. Well, I know the gentleman is very interesting thus far, but I do not see any great need for this legislation.

Mr. SINNOTT. Well, the cut-over lands, according to the report of the officials of the Forest Service on these lands, are a constant fire menace. The cut-over lands lie between——

Mr. WALSH. What is going to prevent its being a fire menace if it goes into the forest reserve?

Mr. SINNOTT. Well, it will receive the protection of the Forest Service and the scattered lands in private holding will be consolidated. The Government will have its lands consolidated and the fire protection will be taken care of much more economically than they have under the present situation.

Mr. WALSH. This will prevent certain lumber-logging corporations from deforesting the slopes of the large mountains?

Mr. SINNOTT. That is one of the objects of it.

Mr. WALSH. Well, I thought that the policy of the committee and the people of those States was to keep the lands out of these forest reserves and permit them to be acquired by private ownership?

Mr. SINNOTT. Well, that is true as to purely agricultural land, but where the land has actual value for forest purposes we are adding to the forest reserves all the time.

Mr. WALSH. This is some 14,000 acres?

Mr. SINNOTT. Some 14,000 acres.

Mr. WALSH. Well, I am not inclined to object to this bill, although I think it has become too free to add lands to forest reserves out in these Western States. I should like to see the Government let go of them all [applause]—that is, a great portion of it—and permit the States to attempt the handling of those things. It is very peculiar that some of these Western States are not deemed competent to manage their affairs along this line. I shall not object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I ask the gentleman's attention to section 2, and I have no purpose of objecting to the bill—page 2. I think after the word "empowered," in line 6, the words "in his discretion" should be inserted.

Mr. SINNOTT. I have no objection to inserting that.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman offer that as an amendment?

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the boundary of the Oregon National Forest, in the State of Oregon, is hereby changed to include the following lands, subject to all the laws and regulations governing the national forests: Township 1 south, range 6 east, section 6; that part of township 1 north, range 6 east, lying south of the Columbia River not now included in said forest; township 2 north, range 6 east, all of sections 34, 35, and 36 south of the Columbia River: Provided, That this action shall, as to all lands which are at this date legally appropriated under the public-land laws or reserved for any public purpose, be subject to and shall not interfere with or defeat legal rights under such appropriation, nor prevent the use for such public purpose of lands so reserved so long as such appropriation is legally maintained or such reservation remains in force.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and empowered, upon the recommendation of the Secretary of Agriculture, to exchange, upon the basis of equal value, nonmineral lands or timber belonging to the United States in the Oregon National Forest for privately owned lands lying within the exterior limits of the Oregon National Forest, and that upon the consummation of such exchanges the lands deeded to the United States shall become parts of the Oregon National Forest, and the Secretary of the Interior shall issue patents to the selected lands.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, in accordance with my understanding with the gentleman from Ohio, I move to amend on page 2, line 6, by inserting after the word "empowered" the words "in his discretion."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 6, after the word "empowered," insert the words "in his discretion."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SINNOTT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

RIGHTS OF WAY TO RAILROAD COMPANIES.

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House bill, No. 9899, to provide for the disposition of abandoned portions of rights of way granted to railroad companies, the one just objected to, may retain its place on the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 9899 be allowed to retain its place on the Unanimous Consent Calendar. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Well, I think it should go to the foot of the calendar.

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it will go to the foot of the calendar.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

SALE OF ISOLATED TRACTS, OREGON & CALIFORNIA RAILROAD GRANT LANDS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 13389) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to dispose of at public sale certain isolated and fractional tracts of lands formerly embraced in the grant to the Oregon & California Railroad Co.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object, what I want particularly to know concerning the bill is in respect to the communication of Secretary Payne, on page 2 of the report, wherein he calls attention to the fact that the provisions of the Revised Statutes are extended only to a certain class of lands, whereas in this bill it is sought to include matters not contained in that class.

Mr. HAWLEY. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I did not quite understand the gentleman's query.

Mr. GARD. In the letter of Secretary Payne it is stated that, under the present provisions of the Revised Statutes, substatutes are extended by this bill only to lands of class 3, and it is suggested that on lines 10 and 11 it includes certain matters not included within the statutory provisions of class 3. That is in the last paragraph of Secretary Payne's letter.

Mr. HAWLEY. I will say to the gentleman that I think that is taken care of on page 2 by the striking out of certain language in line 2. Does that meet the gentleman's objection?

Mr. GARD. I do not know. I am asking the gentleman.

Mr. HAWLEY. The bill is intended to apply only to agricultural land consisting of small fragments of sections or irregular tracts too small for the homesteader to take as a homestead. They will be purchased by homesteaders who own the adjoining lands and desire to obtain them to extend their homesteads. This will provide a market for otherwise unsalable land.

Mr. GARD. What is the scope of the land denominated as "lands classified as agricultural land"? How much is that?

Mr. HAWLEY. That description applies to all land classified as agricultural and which does not have more than 1,200,000 board feet to the quarter section.

Mr. GARD. How large are these small isolated tracts supposed to be?

Mr. HAWLEY. I think none of them would run over 60 acres. There might occasionally be one of 80 acres, low in agricultural value, and chiefly valuable for grazing purposes.

Mr. GARD. What I want to arrive at is this, although I can not express it accurately: Is there any definite number of acres described as land which is being classified as agricultural land?

Mr. HAWLEY. No. The act disposing of the Oregon and California grant provided that these lands should be classified by the Department of the Interior, and this was recently done. A very considerable acreage was classified as agricultural. There has been settlement and sale of lands all through the tract, which left in many places small areas. They can not be disposed of under the law of 1916 except as agricultural lands. They are unsalable except to homesteaders residing near them. This bill is to extend the opportunities of sale so that these tracts can be disposed of and the Government obtain the money from them anticipated by the act.

Mr. MILLER. They are unsalable because of their small acreage?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes; because of the small acreage. No one can make a home on them.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of section 2455, Revised Statutes, be, and the same are hereby, extended to class 3 of the lands formerly embraced by what are known as the Oregon and California railroad grants, title to which was revested in the United States under the provisions of the act approved June 9, 1916 (39 Stat. L., p. 218): Provided, That no sales hereunder shall be made for less than $2.50 per acre, and the appraised value of the timber on the land where such land is not classified as agricultural land, nor until such lands shall have been subject to homestead entry for a period to two years: Provided further, That the proceeds of such sales shall be applied in the manner prescribed in said act of June 9, 1916 (39 Stat. L., p. 218).

With a committee amendment, as follows:

On page 2, line 2, strike out the words "where such land is not classified as agricultural land."

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I just want to have a little time on the amendment. How many acres would each individual be able to acquire under this bill? Does the gentleman from Oregon know?

Mr. HAWLEY. From the letters I have received from settlers who desire to obtain them, I judge the largest acreage that has been suggested is a 40-acre tract.

Mr. RAKER. I rose on that very question.

Mr. HAWLEY. There are very few of those. Most of them are smaller.

Mr. RAKER. Does not the gentleman think that to avoid any possibility there ought to be a proviso, "after two years," and then say, "not exceeding 40 acres to any one person"?

Mr. SINNOTT. There is a limitation in the Revised Statutes.

Mr. RAKER. What is it?

Mr. SINNOTT. One hundred and sixty acres. That would be the limitation.

Mr. RAKER. I realize that.

Mr. SINNOTT. Of course, the other land has to be occupied before this can be sold in these small tracts.

Mr. RAKER. I am seeking information. Of course, as a matter of fact, most of these tracts are isolated, so that if you allowed a man to get 160 acres you practically take up all the land there is.

Mr. SINNOTT. You take up all the isolated tracts in that section of the country. It is a rugged, mountainous section. If under 160 acres a man may get a very poor piece of land.

Mr. RAKER. This is the whole grant?

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Which commences in the northern part of California and runs up to Washington?

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes. Those are the culls.

Mr. RAKER. This is not culls?

Mr. SINNOTT. Oh, yes, it is.

Mr. RAKER. This is segregated as "agricultural land."

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. HAWLEY. It is for the benefit of the Government to have the tracts sold, even if in larger areas than 40 acres. For instance, you may have a 60-acre tract that is so isolated that the Government could never sell it except to the settler; and, second, the buyer here must not only pay what the settler pays, but he must pay more, because he must pay the price for any timber there may be on it.

Mr. RAKER. I understood this was open to the homestead settler.

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. And the man has to pay $2.50 per acre for it?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. There is no question about that?

Mr. HAWLEY. No.

Mr. RAKER. What I rose for was to ask the gentleman if he thought 160 acres was too large an amount and whether this ought to be restricted to 40 acres to any one person?

Mr. HAWLEY. So far as I know, I have no objection to limiting it to a certain area, but it ought to be larger than 40 acres. I am afraid that to limit it would operate to the disadvantage of the Government.

Mr. RAKER. No; it can not; but I will not be particular about it. I will ask the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT] what he thinks about it?

Mr. SINNOTT. I do not think it should be limited. It would limit the man and it would also limit the Government. The Government will get more for 160 acres than it will for 40 acres.

Mr. RAKER. It gets the same price, $2.50 an acre.

Mr. SINNOTT. Theoretically, yes; but a man will not take 40 acres of land.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman thinks the limitation ought not to be applied?

Mr. SINNOTT. I think it ought not.

Mr. HAWLEY. Let us have a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 2, line 4, strike out "to" and insert "of."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

PURCHASE OF CERTAIN LANDS BY THE CITY OF MYRTLE POINT, OREG.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 10285) to authorize the purchase by the city of Myrtle Point, Oreg., of certain lands formerly embraced in the grant to the Oregon & California Railroad Co. and revested in the United States by the act approved June 9, 1916.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object, how far from the city of Myrtle Point is the land which that city desires to obtain for the purpose of protecting its water supply?

Mr. HAWLEY. I think it is some 5 or 6 miles. The city owns its own water system, and owns a part of this watershed already. It has a plant constructed on the watershed and a pipe line to the city, and these two tracts, one of 80 acres and the other of 40 acres, are now in the midst of the present holdings of the city. They desire to add them to their present holdings for the better protection of their water supply.

Mr. GARD. How large an acreage of protection for the water supply have they now?

Mr. HAWLEY. It would be only a guess on my part, but if I remember rightly, it exceeds 1,000 acres, and they are acquiring other lands from private owners by private sale.

Mr. GARD. What is the source of the water supply?

Mr. HAWLEY. Mountain streams.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior shall be, and is hereby, authorized to issue a patent to the city of Myrtle Point, Oreg., for the following-described lands, being a part of the lands revested in the United States by the act of Congress enacted June 9, 1916 (39 Stat., p. 218), to wit: The south half of the southeast quarter of section 11, the east half of the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section 11, and the north half of the northwest quarter of the northwest quarter of section 13, all in township 29 south, range 12 west, of the Willamette meridian, in the State of Oregon; on condition that the said city first shall pay to the United States, when said lands are subjected to disposition under said act of revestment, the sum of $2.50 per acre for all of said lands and the appraised price of the timber on all such lands as may be classified as timberlands.

Mr. PARRISH. I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking the gentleman in charge of the bill if he does not think the mineral-reservation clause that has gone on a number of bills similar to this should be put on this bill?

Mr. HAWLEY. I have no objection; but there is no mineral there.

Mr. PARRISH. We can not tell. There might be oil or gas or other minerals that are valuable in territory which now seems very unpromising which may later develop into productive territory.

Mr. HAWLEY. This is very near the summit of the coast range of mountains. I have no objection to the mineral-reservation clause going in, but it is unnecessary, because there is no mineral at all there.

Mr. PARRISH. Have there been any tests made?

Mr. HAWLEY. That portion of the State has been very thoroughly prospected for copper, gold, silver, and other minerals, but there has never been any mining in this section. I have, however, no objection to the clause being inserted.

Mr. PARRISH. I offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER. There is a committee amendment to this section, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Strike out of line 9, page 1, and line 1, page 2, the words "the east half of the southwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 11."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 1, after the word "and," strike out "the north half of."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. PARRISH] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. PARRISH moves to amend page 2 at the end of line 9 by inserting the following: "Provided, That there shall be reserved to the United States all oil, coal, and other mineral deposits that may be found in the lands so granted and all necessary use of the lands for extracting the same."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk completed the reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

RAILROAD DEFICIENCIES—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. GOOD presented the following conference report for printing under the rule:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13677) making appropriations to supply a deficiency in the appropriations for the Federal control of transportation systems and to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 1.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 4, 5, and 6, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "transferred from the appropriation made in paragraph (g) of the said section 204 and"; and the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13677) making appropriations to supply a deficiency in the appropriations for the Federal control of transportation systems and to supply urgent deficiencies in certain other appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report as to each of the said amendments, namely:

On Nos. 1 and 2, relating to the paragraph authorizing deductions from the amount found due from the United States to certain short-line railroads, the sums found due by those railroads to the United States: Strikes out the language, inserted by the Senate, requiring the sums found due the United States to be deducted from the amount of the "deficit or decrease" of the operating income of the railway; and inserts the language, proposed by the Senate, making clear that the sums deducted as due the railway administration shall be credited to the proper appropriations for the railway administration.

On No. 3: Inserts the paragraph, proposed by the Senate, authorizing and directing the Auditor for the Navy Department to pay the San Francisco Bridge Co. the sum of $128,260.60 appropriated in the deficiency act approved March 6, 1920.

On Nos. 4, 5, and 6, relating to the Senate: Inserts the appropriation of $7,500 to pay the widow of Hon. John H. Bankhead, late a Senator from the State of Alabama, and inserts the paragraph appropriating $16,990.95 for repairs, improvements, equipment, and supplies for Senate kitchens and restaurants.

DONATION OF G. A. R. HALL IN BEDFORD, TAYLOR COUNTY, IOWA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 9944) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to accept on behalf of the United States the donation by Sedgwick Post, No. 10, Grand Army of the Republic, of its memorial hall property in Bedford, Taylor County, Iowa, for Federal building purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, this seems to be a very patriotic act. I should like to ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER], who introduced the bill, if this building is entirely suitable for post-office purposes? I assume that the gentleman is familiar with it.

Mr. TOWNER. I will say to the gentleman that a preliminary inspection was made by the order of the Postmaster General and a special inspector was sent for that purpose. He finds that the property is situated in the most desirable part of the town. That I know. I think it is the most desirable location in town and one of the most desirable properties in town, worth a good deal of money. It is at the intersection of two principal business streets and has an alley in the rear. The ground-floor room is much larger than immediate needs render necessary.

Mr. WALSH. There is no heating plant in it.

Mr. TOWNER. There is not a heating plant in it except a temporary arrangement.

Mr. WALSH. The Grand Army Post desires to reserve the right to the second story, which I presume will not interfere with the operations of the postal business?

Mr. TOWNER. Not at all. The lower part to be occupied by the post office is now rented and has been rented for a number of years at quite a large rental. The post originally was a post of 400 or 500 members. It is now down to about 25. The post is in good financial condition. It does not need the rent which they now receive, and while there is enough left of them to take some action they desire to convey it to the United States for post-office purposes. The report of the inspector says:

> The offer seems to be made in a spirit of genuine patriotism and is a most generous one. If Congress grants authority for its acceptance, I would suggest that arrangements be made to supply the post with heat and light on the second floor without charge and for the erection of a suitable bronze tablet on the side of the building.

Mr. WALSH. This carries no authorization for installing a heating plant?

Mr. TOWNER. No; the Post Office Department says that will be entirely unnecessary for the present. When it is necessary it will not require any special appropriation, because it will be done under the general power of the department to provide for light and heat of the post offices then in use.

Mr. WALSH. That would be done by the Treasury Department, I take it.

Mr. TOWNER. Yes; on the recommendation of the Post Office Department. The Postmaster General in his recommendation for acceptance says:

> The offer is a most generous one, and I would therefore suggest that you look into the matter with a view to recommending to Congress the enactment of necessary legislation to permit of the acceptance of the site and building.

Mr. WALSH. That is what he stated to the Treasury Department. What did the Treasury Department say about that?

Mr. TOWNER. The Treasury Department made no recommendation for acceptance except in drawing up the bill, saying that it had received a communication from the Post Office Department and recommending that the legislation which the Postmaster General suggested should be in the form which they required, and which I have followed in preparing the bill. I presume that amounts to a recommendation on the part of the Treasury Department.

Mr. WALSH. I want to congratulate the distinguished gentleman from Iowa in having a post composed of these worthy veterans who are inspired by patriotic purposes to make this most generous offer to their Government. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the reservation of the objection.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that there can be no question about the entire good faith and generous intent and purpose of the offer. The offer is not made with the intention of escaping any liability; they have ample funds and would receive a large rental for the lower story, which is to be occupied by the Post Office Department, if they retained the building.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, eventually what is this gift going to cost the Government? What is it going to require the Government to expend?

Mr. TOWNER. Nothing, except the necessary repairs, for a large number of years.

Mr. BLANTON. It is such an extraordinary thing to find individuals or a combination of individuals so patriotic that they are giving something to the Government, it causes us to be a little inclined to look a gift horse in the mouth.

Mr. TOWNER. I agree with the gentleman, and this offer seemed to be very surprising to the Post Office Department and other officials of the United States.

Mr. BLANTON. There is nothing underneath it or behind it that we do not understand?

Mr. TOWNER. Nothing at all. I can say that to the gentleman without any reservation whatever. There can be no possible selfish motive on the part of this G. A. R. post, which is receiving a large rental for use of these premises, and which they would continue to receive as long as the post might exist. I will say that its members desire to take this action while there is enough of them left so that it could receive respectful consideration. I presume out of 400 or 500 members of this post there are not more than 25 living.

Mr. GARD. I notice the report says that the post office at this place is now paying $650 a year for rental, and that the only thing necessary to make this a suitable post-office building is a new concrete floor and a heating plant. I think the gentleman is to be congratulated on having these individuals for constituents, and they are to be commended for their generous and patriotic offer.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to accept on behalf of the United States at any time after January 1, 1920, the donation by Sedgwick Post No. 10, Grand Army of the Republic, of its memorial hall property in Bedford, Taylor County, Iowa, for Federal building purposes; being the east 29 feet of lot 8, block 11, original town of Bedford, at the southwest corner of Main and Water Streets, together with the two-story and basement building, 29 by 81 feet, outside measurement, now situated thereon; that said property shall be used and operated as are other public buildings, and that the annual appropriations for the general maintenance of public buildings under the control of the Treasury Department shall be construed to be available for use in connection with said property as for other buildings under said department.

That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to permit said post and the Sedgwick Post Women's Relief Corps No. 82, to continue to occupy the second floor of said building until such time as said post dissolves; such occupancy to be without charge for rent, water, heat, or light, which are to be included in such free use.

And that a suitable bronze tablet commemorative of this gift shall be furnished and placed on the exterior of said building at the expense of the United States.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the bill by striking out, on page 1, line 5, the language "at any time after January 1, 1920."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. MANN of Illinois: Page 1, line 5, after the word "States" strike out the words "at any time after January 1, 1920."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. This language would have been and was proper in the bill when it was introduced, but as it is after that date now it is no longer necessary to have that language remain in the bill. I want to say that I think we ought to express our hearty appreciation and thanks for the tender of this gift by these old soldier boys out in Iowa.

It is not only a generous contribution to the Government, but it was a fine thing to think of at a time when nearly everyone in the country is wondering how we can raise more money by taxes on the part of the Government officials, and how we can escape the payment of taxes on the part of the individual. These people in their old age, filled with enthusiasm for the Government which they saved during the Civil War, now give us an opportunity to express our appreciation of the nobility of their souls. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand a division. I think we ought to show that this is passed unanimously.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 37, noes 0.

So the bill was passed.

COURTHOUSE AND JAIL AT CORDOVA, ALASKA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 12437) to authorize the expenditure of the sum of $100,000, heretofore appropriated for the erection of a United States post office, courthouse, and jail at Cordova, Alaska, by the act approved March 4, 1913, for the erection of a United States courthouse and jail at Cordova, Alaska.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I do not think we ought to permit this to pass at this time. It carries considerable appropriation for a post-office building in Alaska, and I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made, and the Clerk will report the next bill.

Mr. GRIGSBY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill retain its place on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Massachusetts reserve his objection until the gentleman from Alaska can make a statement about the bill?

Mr. WALSH. Certainly.

Mr. GRIGSBY. Mr. Speaker, this bill does not carry any appropriation whatever. The $100,000 was appropriated in 1913, but could not be used for the purpose appropriated because it was inadequate. The original bill provided for the construction of a post office, courthouse, and jail. The Supervising Architect, however, reported that by dispensing with the post-office part of the building the money was adequate for a courthouse and jail, which were very badly needed. It would be the first public building for seven years constructed in Alaska. It is not a new appropriation at all.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit me, I was absent on account of illness at the time this bill was considered in the committee and am not entirely familiar with the details, but we have not reported a bill carrying any appropriation at this session, and it is not the purpose of the committee to do so. But I am sure that this bill was reported by the committee with the understanding that it does not involve any appropriation. I have been absent all day in conference with the representatives of the Senate on the omnibus pension private bills that are pending, and I am glad to say that we have just finished our labors and have taken care of many old soldiers and their widows and helpless children.

Mr. WALSH. How did it come to be appropriated for a post office in 1913 or 1914 and that now they want to have it used for a courthouse and jail?

Mr. LANGLEY. The gentleman from Alaska [Mr. GRIGSBY] can answer that better than I can.

Mr. WALSH. It seems to me that the committee that made the original appropriation should have the information about the matter.

Mr. LANGLEY. I was not on the committee when the 1913 bill was passed.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Does not this simply mean that it will be necessary in the near future to make another appropriation of $100,000 for a post office?

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly.

Mr. LANGLEY. I am not sure about that.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANGLEY. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Are the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] and the gentleman from Alaska [Mr. GRIGSBY] aware that in the sundry civil appropriation bill, which is now under consideration in the House, the policy is maintained of not making appropriations at present, with the condition of the Treasury what it is, for the construction of new buildings, regardless of auhorizations in the past?

Mr. LANGLEY. Yes; and I do not think this bill violates that policy, as it does not authorize the appropriation of any money for a public building.

Mr. GRIGSBY. I will state to the gentleman that this money has already been appropriated.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I understand; but it has not been expended. It is in exactly the same condition that any building is where an authorization has been made and no appropriation has been made. They can not expend it there without an appropriation, and they can not expend it here without this legislation. The Committee on Appropriations, in view of the existing condition of the Treasury, has adopted the policy of not providing money for new public buildings, although they have been authorized and in some cases contracts have been entered into. Whether that will be the policy of the House I do not know, but in view of that policy adopted by the committee, ought we to make an exception in this case? We will undoubtedly be asked to make exceptions in the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. ELLIOTT. I was presiding over the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, I think, when this bill was considered, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] being sick and unable to attend. As I remember the bill, they asked for permission to cut out a part of the Government activities there.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The law originally provided for a post office, courthouse, and jail combined, with an appropriation of $100,000. They claim now, in the first place, that they can not build it for the $100,000, and, in the second place, that it is not a proper place for a courthouse, anyway. It does not make much difference where you put a jail. So they want to spend the money for a jail and courthouse. I think that is perfectly legitimate, but that is not the question with me. I have no doubt they need the jail and the courthouse, and I have no doubt they need the post office, though I do not think they need it half as badly as they need a new post office in the city of Chicago, and we are not asking an appropriation at this time for that purpose.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Alaska yield?

Mr. GRIGSBY. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Is there a site provided for this proposed building?

Mr. GRIGSBY. Yes. This town has donated the site.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. In a place where they do not want it.

Mr. WALSH. On a hillside.

Mr. GRIGSBY. As I understand it, the appropriation has been made; it is not simply an authorization.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. And all that is desired is to have the law amended so that you can build a courthouse and jail.

Mr. WALSH. And get another hundred thousand dollars for a post office.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. That is a matter for the future.

Mr. WALSH. This should have been gone into at the time the original appropriation was asked for. They should have known where the site was, whether it was too steep to climb up to or climb down from the post office, and I do not think we ought now to authorize it.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. As I understand the site is suitable for the courthouse and jail, and they need the courthouse and need the jail——

Mr. WALSH. They probably need the jail, but they have to use a derrick to get there.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. And they have the money on hand.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. GRIGSBY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill just considered may retain its place on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alaska asks unanimous consent that the bill referred to may go to the foot of the calendar.

Mr. WALSH. Go to the foot of the calendar?

Mr. GRIGSBY. I asked that it retain its place on the calendar.

Mr. WALSH. If the gentleman will ask that it go to the foot of the calendar I will not object.

Mr. GRIGSBY. I will modify my request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to its going to the foot of the calendar? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE RED RIVER BETWEEN TEXAS AND OKLAHOMA.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 13590) granting the consent of Congress to Sid Smith, of Bonham, Tex., for the construction of a bridge across the Red River between the counties of Fannin, Tex., and Bryan, Okla.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to Sid Smith, of Bonham, Tex., and his successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Red River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, from a point on its south bank northeast of Elwood, Fannin County, Tex., to a suitable point on the north bank of Red River lying in a northerly direction from said beginning in the county of Bryan, in the State of Oklahoma, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

NATIONAL REDWOOD PARK.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was (H. Res. 159) to direct the Secretary of the Interior to report upon the suitability, location, cost, if any, and advisability of securing a national redwood park.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman if the Secretary of the Interior has exclusive jurisdiction over forest reserves?

Mr. LEA of California. I think the Department of Agriculture has exclusive jurisdiction over the forest reserves and the Secretary of the Interior has jurisdiction over the parks.

Mr. WALSH. This would be treated differently from forest reserves if this tract was acquired?

Mr. LEA of California. Yes; so I understand.

Mr. WALSH. The same as the Yellowstone, the Yosemite, and these other parks?

Mr. LEA of California. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, directed to investigate and report to the House of Representatives as to the suitability, location, cost, if any, and advisability of securing a tract of land in the State of California containing a stand of typical redwood trees of the species "Sequoia sempervirens" with a view that such land be set apart and dedicated as a national park for the benefit and enjoyment of the people of the United States and for the purpose of preserving such trees from destruction and extinction, and also as to whether or not the whole or any part of such lands or the purchase price thereof would be donated to the United States, and the probable cost of maintaining such lands as a part of the national park system.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Page 1, line 4, after the word "tract," insert "or tracts."

The question was taken and the amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

CLAIMS OF OSAGE NATION OF INDIANS.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 6221) conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment in the Osage civilization-funds claim of the Osage Nation of Indians against the United States.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the Osage Tribe of Indians against the United States for moneys due, arising out of the sale of Osage lands under the treaty of September 29, 1865, proclaimed January 21, 1867 (14 Stats. L., p. 687), shall be submitted to the Court of Claims, with the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States by either party, for the amount due or claimed to be due said tribe from the United States for the misappropriation of any of the funds of the said tribe, or for the failure of the United States to pay the tribe any money due under said treaty; and jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine, as right and justice may require, and as upon a full and fair arbitration, the claim of said tribe against the United States, notwithstanding lapse of time or statutes of limitation, and also any legal or equitable defense, set-off, or counterclaim, including gratuities, which the United States may have against said Osage Tribe, and to enter judgment thereon: Provided, That if it be found that the United States Government has wrongfully appropriated any part or parcel of the lands or the funds of said Osage Tribe of Indians, judgment for damages in respect thereto, if any, shall be confined to the value of the land, or the amount of funds, at the time of said appropriation, together with interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum thereon to the date of the decree of the Court of Claims rendered in respect thereto, less any legal or equitable set-offs or counterclaims, including gratuities, which the United States Government may have against the said Osage Tribe of Indians. The judgment of the Court of Claims in this matter rendered, when satisfied, shall annul and cancel all claims and title of said Osage Tribe in and to said lands and funds, as well as all other matters and things adjudicated and authorized to be adjudicated by the Court of Claims, as herein provided. Such action in the Court of Claims shall be presented by a single petition, to be filed within two years after the passage of this act, making the United States party defendant, and shall set forth all the facts on which the Osage Tribe of Indians bases its claim for recovery; and the said petition may be verified by the authorized attorney or attorneys of the tribe, employed under contract approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior, as provided by law, upon information or belief as to the existence of such facts, and no other statements or verifications shall be necessary. Official letters, papers, reports, and public records, or certified copies thereof, may be used as evidence. Whatever moneys may be found to be due the tribe under the provisions of this act, less attorney's fees, shall be segregated and placed to the credit of the individual Indians: Provided further, That the Court of Claims shall decree such fees as the court shall find to be reasonable to be paid to the attorney or attorneys employed by the tribe, and in no case shall such fees exceed the amount stipulated in the approved contract nor amount to more than 10 per cent of the amount and value of the judgment recorded in said cause.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, has consent been granted for the consideration of this measure?

The SPEAKER. Oh, yes; consent has been granted and the bill has been read.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, when this bill passes I am going to ask unanimous consent to return to the bill that was passed this morning on the Unanimous Consent Calendar authorizing the California Indians to commence necessary action to present their rights to the Government in the Court of Claims, so that both matters may be proceeding along about the same time.

Mr. MILLER. And, Mr. Speaker, there is a bill pending for Indians west of the Cascade Mountains in the State of Washington and that will be included along with this.

The bill was ordered to be read the third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] The Chair is of the opinion that there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOWARD. Had the Speaker announced the result of the vote on this bill before the gentleman made his point of no quorum?

Mr. WALSH. What if he did?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not see that that makes any difference. The gentleman moves that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. WALSH) there were—ayes 6, noes 21.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 219, nays 52, answered "present" 10, not voting 145, as follows:

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, did the gentleman from Florida, Mr. CLARK, vote?

The SPEAKER. He did not.

Mr. LANGLEY. I voted "yea," but I have a general pair with the gentleman from Florida, and I wish to withdraw my vote and vote "present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present.

On motion of Mr. HASTINGS, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

NATIONAL BUDGET SYSTEM.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 9783) to provide a national budget system and an independent audit of Government accounts, and for other purposes, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection; and the Speaker announced as the conferees on the part of the House Mr. GOOD, Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas, Mr. MADDEN, Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee, and Mr. GARNER.

BOARD OF VISITORS, NAVAL ACADEMY.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints on the Board of Visitors at the Annapolis Naval Academy in place of Mr. KELLEY, of Michigan, resigned, Mr. PETERS, of Maine; in place of Mr. VARE, of Pennsylvania, resigned, Mr. LUFKIN, of Massachusetts; and in place of Mr. KETTNER, of California, resigned, Mr. MONTAGUE, of Virginia.

The Clerk will report the next bill on the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

REFUND OF DUTIES COLLECTED ON FIELD KITCHENS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 6171) to authorize the refund of duties collected on field kitchens imported during the year 1916.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of this bill?

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I realize the patriotic purpose which impelled the donors of the field kitchens to buy these kitchens for the use of the training camps at a time when the War Department did not have them, and I am indeed sympathetic with the purpose of the bill, to refund the amount paid by them for duties from Canada into the United States. But what I want to ask is, How is the refund to be made?

The bill provides that the refund is to be made to the donors. In this instance I take it that there may have been a number of donors, since these kitchens were purchased by public subscription and sent down to a place in Illinois. Is there not considerable difficulty in returning the money to the donors and subdividing it so that it can be returned?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is the proposed amendment. It seemed to me that the language in the original bill was better than that in the amendment.

Mr. BRITTEN. That was the proposed committee amendment, of course.

Mr. GARD. Yes; but the difficulty, as I view it, is in the practical application of it to the donors. If there is some association or company or some person who furnished these kitchens, then this bill can be so amended as to direct the refund of the money to such person or such company or association.

Mr. BRITTEN. "The proper parties in interest" is the language employed in the bill originally.

Mr. GARD. Yes; "the proper parties in interest" is better, I think.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That would have to be shown by proof to the Treasury Department. It is not shown here.

Mr. BRITTEN. I agree with the gentleman that the bill as originally presented is better than as amended by the committee.

Mr. GARD. I say, if the parties at interest are capable of being recognized, that is a much better phrase than the word "donors," in my opinion. By whom were these kitchens furnished?

Mr. BRITTEN. I have in mind a particular kitchen which was furnished by Col. McCormick, of the Chicago Tribune, and probably a few friends. The kitchens cost some $2,000 apiece. There may have been two, three, or more kitchens furnished to the National Guard and taken to the Mexican border at a time when the War Department had not sufficient equipment to take care of the troops. In the first instance a duty was charged when a rolling kitchen was brought over the line from Canada. This bill seeks to refund the duty. It is a small item.

Mr. GARD. I say I am in sympathy with the purpose of the bill. I suggest that it should be changed so that payment can be made to the proper person. The committee recommends the striking out of the words "proper parties in interest" and the words "by popular subscription." Does the gentleman think that is necessary?

Mr. BRITTEN. Personally I do not think it is; but it is barely possible that the committee may have had some hearings on this bill of which I am not aware.

I will say to the gentleman that this bill as originally introduced by me was prepared by the Treasury Department, and introduced just as it was received.

Mr. GARD. I think the phrase "proper authorities in interest" is much better than the word "donors."

Mr. BRITTEN. So do I.

Mr. GARD. Is there anyone here representing the Committee on Claims?

Mr. BRITTEN. I do not see the chairman of the particular subcommittee of the Committee on Claims present at this moment.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. I yield to my colleague [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, these were donations made to buy kitchens.

Mr. BRITTEN. No; the donations were of the kitchens themselves.

Mr. CANNON. Donated to the Army. There were many hundreds of millions of dollars donated by the patriotic men and women of the United States for the benefit of the soldiers, God knows how much through the Red Cross and the Salvation Army. I am afraid this is a dangerous precedent to make. It seems to me the legal obligations that we are running up against, patriotic many of them, would mount up into the billions.

Mr. BRITTEN. These patriotic people donated portable kitchens to the Army.

Mr. CANNON. What is the difference?

Mr. BRITTEN. On those kitchens, which they bought in Canada, the United States Government exacted a duty, and this merely returns the duty to the parties who purchased the kitchens and donated them for this purpose.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, well, it is the same thing.

Mr. BRITTEN. It is not comparable to an ordinary contribution to some charitable association or in a war-relief direction.

Mr. CANNON. It was a donation of something that the Army needed, and there were drives made all over the United States.

Mr. GLYNN. If the gentleman will allow me, these donations were not to the Army. They were donations of field kitchens to the National Guard when they went down to the Mexican border in 1916.

Mr. CANNON. They were in the service of the United States.

Mr. GLYNN. It was before the war. These were National Guardsmen and not any part of the Army.

Mr. CANNON. But they were in the service of the United States.

Mr. BRITTEN. I am sure that this bill does not attempt to cover anything that can be compared with an ordinary contribution. When the kitchens were brought into this country from Canada the Government assessed a duty on them.

Mr. CANNON. What is the difference between donations of dollars, donations of clothing, and the hundreds of millions—I was going to say billions—of dollars that were donated by the patriotic people? Now, here comes a bill to establish a precedent to pay back something to somebody who patriotically donated field kitchens, on which you say they paid a duty when the kitchens were imported. If you should carry out that same principle, you would have it on all imported articles. I do not know how much is involved in this——

Mr. BRITTEN. Probably a few hundred dollars.

Mr. CANNON. A few hundred dollars! Many millions of dollars will be involved in it if you enter upon this policy.

Mr. BRITTEN. But, my dear sir, this is money that went directly into the National Treasury. It did not go to any organization.

Mr. CANNON. It does not make any difference where it went. They donated it. The money went into the National Treasury.

Mr. BRITTEN. They did not donate this money. It was an assessment on the part of the Government, of a duty on these kitchens that were imported from Canada.

I am, indeed, sorry that I can not agree with my distinguished colleague, and can not possibly see a parallel case in the one he has just mentioned.

Naturally, duties are assessed on many characters of importations, and to say that a refund of duties paid on rolling field kitchens, which were contributed to the Army, would be establishing a dangerous precedent, is beyond my comprehension. The failure of the House to pass this bill will mean direct taxation on public spirit, direct taxation on patriotism, direct taxation on humanity, and a suggestion that the National Treasury itself should benefit in real hard money, because the War Department was not in a position to provide the simple necessities of an unimportant campaign.

Mr. Speaker, it would be parallel to suggest to a patriotic citizen that the Government would accept and allow the importation of a very necessary piece of field equipment, provided the donor of that equipment would also pay a cash bonus into the National Treasury. Neither the Treasury Department nor the War Department desire to retain the duty which has been collected from public-spirited citizens whose first thought was the welfare of the men who were going to the front, and I shall be ashamed to tell my friends in Chicago that a Congress which is appropriating billions has refused to do this simple justice.

The amount of money involved is so small that it is hardly worth talking about, but I was quite sure that my bill, which was made to remedy a wrong, would meet with unanimous approval of the House.

Mr. CANNON. There was a duty on wool. God knows how the women knit. God knows how they bought and paid for the wool to knit. This establishes a precedent that we ought not to establish, and therefore I object to the consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The Clerk will report the next bill.

LANDS WITHDRAWN UNDER THE RECLAMATION LAWS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 795) to provide for the disposition of public lands withdrawn and improved under the provisions of the reclamation laws, and which are no longer needed in connection with said laws.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is another one of these blanket bills. I should like to have the gentleman in charge of it give a little explanation of the great urgency for a bill so general in its character.

Mr. RAKER. The Congress on February 2, 1911, passed a law authorizing the sale of lands that the Reclamation Service had purchased for the purpose of conducting their operations on reclamation projects. This bill authorizes the Reclamation Service to dispose of the land that was withdrawn, that is still owned by the Government, but which the Reclamation Service improved in its use in constructing the reclamation project, which land at this time is not necessary for the project any longer. The Government has expended large sums of money. The parties desire the land, and the purpose is to appraise it and sell it at public auction or to the highest bidder.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The law which we did pass authorized the Reclamation Service to sell land no longer needed, which has been acquired under the reclamation act?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I take it that it was the thought of Congress—I remember the bill and I know that was my impression at that time—that that covered all the lands that they had.

Mr. RAKER. That was the idea of the department and the House.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. But it has been held since then that that only referred to land which had been purchased?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. And not to land which had been withdrawn for reclamation purposes?

Mr. RAKER. That is a clear presentation of the matter.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. And this is simply to authorize the selling of land no longer needed, which has been withdrawn?

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman has clearly stated the matter before the House.

Mr. WALSH. Who made that ruling?

Mr. RAKER. The Secretary of the Interior. While it is under the Reclamation Service the Secretary of the Interior, of course, has the final determination of what shall be done.

Mr. WALSH. How did it happen that the land is no longer needed?

Mr. RAKER. In a number of instances on projects where the land was withdrawn they have constructed buildings and made improvements and done many things in connection with the land.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That was while the work was being constructed.

Mr. RAKER. Yes. Private individuals desire to purchase the property after full appraisal and the Government gets back the money and places it in the reclamation fund.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Certainly.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Are the methods and machinery provided in the bill for the sale of the property the same as in similar laws?

Mr. RAKER. Identical.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior any public lands which have been withdrawn for or in connection with construction or operation of reclamation projects under the provisions of the act of June 17, 1902, known as the reclamation act and acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, and which have been improved by and at the expense of the reclamation fund for administration or other like purposes, are no longer needed for the purposes for which they were withdrawn and improved, the Secretary of the Interior may cause said lands, together with the improvements thereon to be appraised by three disinterested persons to be appointed by him and thereafter sell the same, for not less than the appraised value, at public auction to the highest bidder, after giving public notice of the time and place of sale by posting upon the land and by publication for not less than 30 days in a newspaper of general circulation in the vicinity of the land, not less than one-fifth the purchase price shall be paid at the time of sale, and the remainder in not more than four annual payments with interest at 6 per cent on deferred payments.

SEC. 2. That upon payment of the purchase price the Secretary of the Interior is authorized, by appropriate patent, to convey all the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to said lands to the purchaser at said sale subject, however, to such reservations, limitations, or conditions as said Secretary may deem proper: Provided, That not over 160 acres shall be sold to any one person, and if said lands are irrigable under the project in which located they shall be sold subject to compliance by the purchaser with all the terms, conditions, and limitations of the reclamation act applicable to lands of that character: Provided, That the accepted bidder must, prior to issuance of patent, furnish satisfactory evidence that he or she is a citizen of the United States.

SEC. 3. That the moneys derived from the sale of such lands shall be covered into the reclamation fund and be placed to the credit of the project for which such lands had been withdrawn.

With the following committee amendments:

On page 1, line 5, change the word "or" where it occurs the second time in said line to "of."

On page 1, line 8, after the comma, insert the words "which are not otherwise reserved."

On page 2, line 8, after the word "centum," insert the words "per annum, payable annually."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. RAKER, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

DISPOSITION OF CERTAIN GRAZING LANDS IN UTAH.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3016) to authorize the disposition of certain grazing lands in the State of Utah, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That so much of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1905 (public, No. 212), as limited the sale of Indian lands in the former Uintah Indian Reservation, in Utah, remaining undisposed of five years from the taking effect of the act to disposition in tracts of not more than 640 acres to any one person be, and the same is hereby, repealed, and such lands shall remain subject to disposition as provided by law, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That where the validity of purchases heretofore made under the act of March 3, 1905, have been or may hereafter be questioned in any departmental or court proceeding on the ground that a larger area than 640 acres has been directly or indirectly acquired by one person or corporation, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized, in his discretion, to accept a reconveyance of the lands involved in such proceeding and to repay to the purchaser or his assigns the purchase money paid therefor, or to validate, ratify, and confirm such sales, or to examine and determine the present value of said lands and upon payment by the patentee or purchaser or his assigns of the difference between the amount heretofore paid and such ascertained value, to validate, ratify, and confirm such sales.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 4, strike out the word "limited" and insert in lieu thereof the word "limits."

Page 1, line 4, after the word "the," insert the word "future."

Page 2, line 6, after the word "discretion," strike out the following: "to accept a reconveyance of the lands involved in such proceeding and to repay to the purchaser or his assigns the purchase money paid therefor or."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WELLING, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. SUMMERS of Washington, for 10 days, on account of urgent business.

To Mr. DENISON, for two weeks, on account of sickness in his family.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow. I do this at the request of members of the majority and minority of the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object, is this request made in pursuance of the request of the members of the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

BRIDGE ACROSS SABINE RIVER, NEAR ORANGE, TEX.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 13724) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Sabine River at or near Orange, Tex.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to this bill and am willing that it should be passed, but I would like a ruling of the Chair whether it has been on the calendar a sufficient length of time. It was placed on the calendar April 30.

The SPEAKER. It has not.

Mr. WALSH. Then I ask unanimous consent that it may be considered now.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Orange Chamber of Commerce, its successors and assigns, be, and they hereby are, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Sabine River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation at or near the city of Orange, Tex., in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that in line 4, where it says "its successors and assigns be and they are hereby are," should read "be and it hereby is authorized to construct." I move, in line 4, ot strike out the word "they" and insert the word "it," and in the same line strike out the word "are" and insert the word "is."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. GARD: Strike out, in line 4, the word "they" and insert the word "it," and in the same line strike out the word "are" and insert the word "is."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BOX, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.) the House, under its previous order, adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, May 4, 1920, at 11 o'clock a. m.
